The term monasticism refers to any number of traditions and systems of religious life. The institutions of monasticism are of ancient and medieval origins and were established to govern and regulate the ascetic and social conditions of such a life, whether lived in common or in contemplative solitude.

The rise and development of Christian monasticism grew out of the work of St. Anthony and the origin of anchoritism, the contribution of PACHOMIUS and the rise of CENOBITISM, and the life of the DESERT FATHERS. These developments occurred in SYRIA, PALESTINE, and Cappadocia; in CONSTANTINOPLE; and in the West.

Background. The primitive Church, as a minority group and a community bearing witness to faith in Christ, felt so strong in its creative newness and eschatological hope that it was, while being in the world, aware of not being of the world, of being a community of "saints." VIRGINITY was held in high regard, and among the poor classes the sharing of goods was relatively easy. Normally, the tendency toward encratism did not harden into doctrinal opposition to marriage or the social order of the day. Its source was the GOSPEL, and it was not linked with a Manichaean DUALISM or a scorn for created things.

Contacts with Gnostic currents, with the philosophical attitudes of STOICISM and PLATONISM, and with the Eastern religions were inevitable and fruitful, though they proved dangerous at times. Such contacts clearly did not go to the root of the movement, as WEINGARTEN claimed in his outmoded theories regarding the pagan recluses of the Serapeum. The foreshadowings of Christian institutions are to be sought in Israel. Desert spirituality, as expressed in the lives of the prophets ELIJAH, Hosea, and JOHN THE BAPTIST, was certainly in line with monasticism and had a considerable literary influence on its development.

The ESSENES of the QUMRAN COMMUNITY near the Dead Sea and of Alexandria, of whom the description by PHILO JUDAEUS is in part interpretative, bear a resemblance to the monks of the later monasteries that flourished in the same territory. There is no evidence, however, of direct historical continuity between the two groups. It is probable that the Judeo-Christian communities, which were profoundly stamped with the tradition of the "poor of Yahweh," transmitted their sentiment to the churches of Syria and perhaps to those of Egypt. Such sentiments are not, however, characteristic of the churches in the Greek stream of culture that are relatively better known.

Early in the third century, the Christian scholar and theologian ORIGEN gave expression to an ascetic and mystical ideal that contained elements of both GNOSTICISM and Greek philosophy and was destined to have extensive influence on the Church's future. In particular, his combination of a scriptural exegesis based on the belief in various levels of meaning of a given text with an anthropology consisting of levels of spiritual progress would prove fruitful for monastic spirituality in both the East and the West. During the years when Christianity was making peace with the Roman Empire and receiving the masses into its communion (but lowering its moral level), a powerful ascetic movement began to manifest itself. This movement comprised a purely evangelical society on the fringes of the populated world, but it occasionally opposed itself to the Church hierarchy and gave rise to unorthodox sects.

More often, however, ecclesiastical authority was respected by its saintly founders, and the movement became an institution within the Church. It initially took the form of anchoritic societies, and later it developed into cenobitism and the founding of the LAURA. A Marxist interpretation would describe this evolution as a seizure by the hierarchy of a popular revolutionary force, and this would not be an entirely false view. Like primitive Christianity itself, monastic asceticism is a historical movement that transformed the ancient world and helped to create the medieval society. Monasticism provided a spiritual aristocracy, and these scions of a new elite preserved a notable part of the ancient culture. Once in existence, however, the monastic institutions were not always faithful to their original inspiration.

St. Anthony and Anchoritism. St. ANTHONY OF EGYPT (c. 250–356) was the son of Coptic peasants who became the "father of the monks," though he proved to be the model, not the founder, of monasticism. According to his biographer, he retired to a retreat outside his native village at 20 years of age and died there when he was 105. However, the chronology of the period seems confused, and the beginning of the Egyptian anchorite movement should be dated closer to the year 300 than to 270. The first documentary (papyrus) evidence of the ANCHORITES is supplied by the entourage of Meletius of Alexandria, a rival of ATHANASIUS. It dates from c. 335. The Life of Anthony, written by Athanasius of Alexandria around 357, stresses Anthony's austerity, the evangelical inspiration of his renunciation, his fight against the demons, and his zeal for orthodoxy. The demonology seems to be an accommodation to popular concepts, and the attention given to his orthodoxy apparently stems from the concern of the biographer to strengthen the bonds between the hierarchy and monasticism. One thing is certain: Athanasius's own difficulties with the imperial authorities during the Arian controversies strengthened his alliance with the monks.

The impressions of a witness so close to the monastic movement, though not a part of it himself, must be compared with the authentic letters of Anthony. These letters have called into question the traditional view of Anthony as a simple and unlearned peasant, showing him instead to have been versed in the Originism characteristic of the Alexandrian theological tradition. In his retreat in the desert, between the Nile and the Red Sea, Anthony enjoyed an enormous prestige because of his lofty and well-balanced ideal of asceticism and solitary contemplation, as well as his gift of discernment of spirits. A number of disciples began to imitate him, living in solitude, separated by great distances, and coming to him at long intervals for counsel.

Pachomius and Cenobitism. Farther to the south, at TABENNISI and Pebou in the THEBAID, a younger contemporary of Anthony, PACHOMIUS, who had become a monk around 313, began organizing cenobitic communities that, in his lifetime, included several thousand brothers, not counting convents of women. Endowed with an instinctive understanding of human nature but no philosophical training, this Copt founded monasteries that he divided into houses in which men lived a disciplined life in common, performed remunerative work, and practiced individual poverty and detachment in essential matters. These practices were alternated with judiciously organized prayer. Pachomius had many visions of an apocalyptic type, and despite the profound respect he displayed toward ecclesiastical authority, trust in his charismatic gifts gradually brought him into opposition with the hierarchy (at the Synod of Latopolis), though not with Athanasius, in whom distance fostered comprehension.

Pachomius's successors, Orsiesi and Theodore, did not enjoy the outstanding prestige their master had acquired for himself, but they are attractive figures. The rules and the vitas forming the Pachomian legacy are partly their work. By a strange turn of history, these unsystematized rules, which are nevertheless rich in experience, had only a limited influence in the East. However, they reached Italy (in a Latin translation by St. JEROME) and exercised a profound influence there.

Desert Fathers. Ammonas, a disciple of Anthony, was named bishop of OXYRHYNCHUS by Athanasius, probably to ensure proper control and supervision of the masses of monks then multiplying in the region. He showed unusual mildness and forbearance toward those among them who were public offenders, maintaining the brothers in stability and coping with the problems occasioned by the charisms of the Spirit and revelations of heavenly mysteries. Ammonas is to be distinguished from Ammon, the founder of the monastic colonies of Nitria and the Cells, who was also acquainted with Anthony, though he died before him. This Ammon had initially lived in virginal matrimony with his wife, a practice that recalls an archaic rule of Christian family asceticism and that, it is astonishing to note, was not condemned, judging from available sources. In the great desert of Scete, a little to the south, MACARIUS THE EGYPTIAN (d. c. 390) collected fewer disciples but achieved a more perfect and tranquil solitude. Although Anthony and Pachomius remained laymen, the settlements of Nitria and the Cells and, eventually, Scete had their own church and clergy.

Like Anthony and Pachomius, these monks supported Athanasius in his difficulties with ARIANISM and the civil authority. Athanasius, for his part, made their merits known in the West. MELANIA THE ELDER, with RUFINUS OF AQUILEIA and other Romans, visited them, and on settling in Jerusalem they devoted themselves to imitating their ascesis, their knowledge of scripture, and their Origenism. Around the year 382, EVAGRIUS PONTICUS provided the monks with the spiritual and intellectual legacy of the Cappadocians—he learned the monks' ascetical "alphabet" and profited from the treasures of psychological insights acquired by their long silences. Shortly after his death in 399, a quarrel broke out among his friends and disciples, the Origenists, and the anthropomorphites. Archbishop THEOPHILUS OF ALEXANDRIA interfered ruthlessly and achieved control of the monastic groups, but not without damage to their gnosis and culture.

The main sources of information regarding this development bear the stamp of the crisis, although the traditions on which they are founded are considerably anterior to it. Of these documents, some were written for the edification of outsiders, such as the Historia Monachorum, produced around 400 in the monastery of the Mount of Olives, and the Historia Lausiaca of PALLADIUS, published around 420. Both documents reflect the spirit of EVAGRIUS PONTICUS (c. 345–399) in a popular coloration. For the internal use of Western monasticism, another thoroughly Evagrian author, John CASSIAN, wrote his memoirs in the form of Institutes and Conferences. The mention of these works in the BENEDICTINE RULE ensured that the Egyptian monastic tradition, as interpreted by Cassian, would influence the development of religious life in the West. For the internal use of Eastern monasticism that had become anti-Origenist, various collections of APOPHTHEGMATA PATRUM, or Sayings of the Fathers were compiled. These were brief and charismatic replies to problems of the spiritual life.

The proper use of these various sources requires an acquaintance with the literary genres that evaluate each according to its individual worth. Traditional views have often succumbed to the temptation of evaluating them by the criteria of HAGIOGRAPHY, but rationalistic criticism, both Catholic and non-Catholic, has not always understood the monastic ideal or sufficiently recognized the gospel legacy and the freedom of spirit that characterized this literature. External witnesses provide some aid in discerning and interpreting the facts, although the authors of these literary sources were themselves often the willing victims of the mirages of the desert. More recently, unpretentious evidence, though badly transmitted by the copyists, has been rediscovered and edited from Eastern versions that were strictly contemporary and addressed to the monks themselves. These notices are of the greatest documentary value, and they make it possible to get behind the unsatisfactory syntheses that have hitherto supplied information on the origins of monasticism. They are furnished in the writings of Athanasius, SERAPION, Anthony, Ammonas, and Arsenius. In the effort to give an accurate picture, René Draguet and Jean-Claude Guy have called attention to the value of the collections of apothegms. However, their value is still to be clarified.

Syria and Palestine. In an attempt to achieve a further understanding of the extent of the monastic beginnings, it must be remembered that the eastern provinces of the Roman Empire had easy commerce with one another. The primitive Gnostics and the Manichaeans of Syria and Egypt, for example, were in close contact. In the third century, the ascetic movement in Mesopotamia was perhaps more advanced than that of any other part of the East. The name "abbot" is evidently of Syriac origin, and "monk" may likewise have had an ambitious and Gnostic meaning linked with the Monogenos, the Only Son of God, although this interpretation and etymology is contested. It was certainly not current in the fourth century, when monachos had the simpler meaning of "solitary" (i.e., celibate).

Syria took longer than the West to react against the encratism of TATIAN and eliminate his influence. In certain quarters, baptism was understood as an engagement involving continence, although the marriage of catechumens (those preparing for baptism) was not condemned—and the catechumens did amount to a sizable group. In the fourth century, baptism did not exclude marriage, but within the communities there was a fervent nucleus, the Sons of the Covenant (b ᶜnai qᵉyāmā), who preserved virginity and were more or less ministers of divine worship. They formed the humblest rank of the clergy and lived in a clerical family or among the clergy. The rules concerning these persons were specified only slowly. The "Covenant" was the acceptance of the New Testament, concluded by baptism, not a vow or an evangelical counsel. No major figure appeared among them in the fourth century—APHRAATES and St. EPHREM THE SYRIAN were exemplars rather than pioneers.

Under the Egyptian influence, it seems, a current of anchoritism manifested itself in that part of the Orient around the year 360. Numerous solitaries escaped all organized discipline, preferring to wander in wild and desert places, leading a primitive and eccentric life. Saints EPIPHANIES OF CONSTANTIA and Ephrem the Syrian testify to the existence of lawless groups called Messalians (Syriac for "those who pray"), who rebelled against any work under the pretext that they had to consecrate themselves to perpetual prayer. They had a scorn for worldly goods and were more a scandal than an edification. Some, for all their oddity, did attract veneration, however. Their achievements are described by THEODORET OF CYR in his Religious History. Of special note was Simeon the Stylite (d. 459), who lived in a basket between heaven and earth on a column more than sixty feet high. But great numbers, either spontaneously or under the influence of the episcopate, came to accept the way of life implicit in Basilian cenobitism. Their most notable centers were located near the Persian border, in Edessa, Amida, and Tur Abdin. From there, a missionary monasticism spread over the southern part of ARMENIA and GEORGIA and characterized the eastern missions of the Persian Church.

The Syrian monastic world had its counterpart in the deserts of Judea and the hermitages of Sinai, which had close contacts with Egypt, as well as a special character because of the sacred memories of the Holy Land. The spoudaei (zealots) attached themselves primarily to the holy places and provided them with protection and divine worship. Foreign pilgrims entered their ranks, often after having visited Egypt. In the fourth century, particularly, they had many Latin visitors, including Saints Jerome and Paula, the two Melanias and Rufinus, John Cassian, and Aetheria. Jerome embroidered or invented local traditions of his Life of Malchus and Life of Hilarion (he did the same for Egypt in his Life of St. Paul First Hermit). The characteristic form of Palestinian monasticism centered around the laura, where the individual ascetics lived a more regulated common life than was usual in the Egyptian model. The same process was later repeated among the Cappadocians, Armenians, and Georgians. The recognizable Syrian type is sometimes clothed with a Hellenistic veneer, especially when the subjects were men in the cities. Such was the case with DIODORE OF TARSUS and John CHRYSOSTOM at Antioch.

Cappadocia and Messalianism. The eastern part of Asia Minor came under the influence of Syria. At the Council of GANGRA (341) the Arianism of court bishops clashed with an ascetic movement led by EUSTATHIUS, the future bishop of Sebaste. He was reproached for breaking up homes, misleading children, emancipating slaves, and departing from the obedience of the clergy to live independently in sectarian fashion. When he became bishop, Eustathius annoyed the extremists among his own disciples, including Aetios, by preserving ecclesiastical discipline and organizing a hospice, for this was interpreted as a compromise with the goods of this world. Intellectuals of great families, such as Basil of Caesarea and GREGORY OF NAZIANZUS, rallied to his ideal. They managed to combine asceticism with obedience to the ecclesiastical hierarchy and integration into the local church, especially through charitable undertakings. The result was a stable and balanced cenobitism, more thoroughly communitarian than that achieved by Pachomius. Gregory of Nazianzus preferred a more inward and contemplative life, and he exercised considerable influence on Evagrius Ponticus, who was later to come to Scete through the influence of Melania the Elder.

After the death of Basil in 379, his brother, GREGORY OF NYSSA, and his disciple AMPHILOCHIUS OF ICONIUM maintained contact with the ascetic movement in the hope of spreading their mystical ideal to the whole Church. However, they were soon faced with extravagances among the followers of Eustathius and did not succeed in controlling them. After 383, Bishops Letoios of Melitene, Amphilochius, and then Flavian of Antioch, in succession, took the initiative in condemning Dadoes, Sabas, Adelphios, Hermas, Simeon, and other leaders of the movement. This episcopal intervention was no doubt provoked by previous experience. The ascetics claimed they were in communion with the Church, and strategy of the bishops was aimed at getting them to express openly their ideas on inner sanctification by the Holy Spirit and the devices of the demon—conceptions that were dangerous for the sacramental structure of the Church.

To discredit these sects, the bishops linked them with the anarchic Messalians, despite the differences between the two groups. Their spiritual teaching has survived in the homilies improperly attributed to Macarius the Egyptian, and the Liber graduum, a Syriac work, is closely allied to them. These writings are certainly susceptible of an orthodox interpretation, and traditional support can be found for them, but they contain the theses condemned by the anti-Messalian councils. These condemnations and the polemic by DIADOCHUS OF PHOTICE or MARK THE HERMIT did not prevent them from having a beneficent influence on Byzantine mysticism. They reached the West at a comparatively late date, during the crisis that was caused by the Franciscan FRATICELLI and during the beginnings of PIETISM and METHODISM.

Constantinople. In the capital of the later Roman Empire, monasticism established itself around 380. Its original contacts were with Syria, but it manifested an Egyptian influence after the Origenist monks were expelled by Theophilus of Alexandria (around 400). The Lives of Hypatius (d. 446) and Alexander the Acoemete (d. c. 430) bear witness to this movement, although the latter is somewhat in the tradition of the Messalians and gives evidence of conflict with Church discipline. The disciples of John Chrysostom are known through a collection of the letters of NILUS OF ANCYRA (d. c. 430) and the works of Mark the Hermit. In the second half of the century, Daniel the Stylite (d. 493), an imitator of St. Simeon, was already playing a role in the capital.

Early Western Monasticism. The first centers of monasticism in the West were formed as a result of the exile of Athanasius in Rome, Trier, northern Italy, and Aquileia. The social structure of the Christian communities differed considerably from that of Egypt, but the Life of Anthony readily set the tone for men coming to the movement from higher society. A typical trait of Western monasticism was its penetration into the clergy in the service of the local churches. It is noticeable from the time of EUSEBIUS OF VERCELLI (d. 371), who, on his return from exile in the East, brought back the idea of a community life for his clergy. The idea was later put into practice by Ambrose of Milan and AUGUSTINE. The support of bishops, themselves often chosen from among the monks, played a significant role in the spread of monasticism in the West. Of particular significance was the monastic movement associated with the Islands of Lérins in the Bay of Cannes. A series of monastic bishops from this community helped to diffuse the monastic ideal throughout southern Gaul.

In northern Italy, MARTIN OF TOURS was trained in the monastic ideal before founding Marmoutier (372) in western France and becoming the model monk bishop of Gaul. After the death of Pope DAMASUS (384), monasticism temporarily lapsed into disfavor in Rome, although Jerome successfully discredited its adversaries Helvidius and Jovinian. Also significant in Rome was the development of an urban monasticism, centered around the liturgical service in the churches of the city. In Spain during this period, PRISCILLIANISM proved to be an analogous movement, but its orthodoxy was suspect and its principals were persecuted by the episcopacy. In Africa, outside the zone of influence of Augustine, modern historians see traces of Messalianism, perhaps derived from the East. Marxist historians such as Theodora Büttner have linked monasticism with the Donatist movement of the Circumcellions, who rebelled against the social system and went about the countryside violently imposing their religious opinions. The phenomenon is interesting for the light it sheds on one milieu of the origin of monasticism.

Jerome, Rufinus, Evagrius, and others had translated the Eastern monastic texts into Latin at an early date. At the beginning of the fifth century, Cassian, in Provence, brought a new influx of Eastern traditions, with the avowed aim of reforming Gallic monasticism. The Latin genius was to multiply these monastic rules based on the original ideals as it assimilated the barbarians. Finally, Benedict of Nursia joined the Eastern tradition coming from Cassian through the Rule of the Master with the Western genius of Augustine in a synthesis that shaped monastic life in the West. By way of Gaul, particularly, was to be born the early Irish monasticism that was later to bring the gospel and culture back to the Continent.

Conclusion. Monasticism was a development of primitive Christian asceticism along various lines; the anchoritic and cenobitic types were not the original nucleus, but rather successful forms on which others patterned themselves. The early monastic movement included both men and women, though the women are represented more by literature about them than by them. The monks had their own culture independent of the classical world of antiquity, often arising from local popular traditions, whether Coptic or Syriac. The monks brought the Church an ideal of asceticism, forms of prayer such as the use of the Psalter, a rich experience of inwardness, and new literary forms. The movement became a triumphant power that, despite its resistance to cultural change, was to give a distinguishing character to the Middle Ages.

The Benedictines. St. Benedict of Nursia (480–550) prays with his monks. THE ART ARCHIVE/ABBEY OF MONTEOLIVETO MAGGIORE SIENA/ALFREDO DAGLI ORTI\THE PICTURE DESK, INC.

SEE ALSO ARIANISM; MANICHAEISM; MONASTICISM, EARLY IRISH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Alfred Adam, "Grundbegriffe des Mönchtums in sprachlicher Sicht," Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte 65 (1953–54): 209–239.

Ivo Auf Der Maur, Mönchtum und Glaubensverkündingung in den Schriften des hl. Johannes Chrysostomus (Fribourg 1959).

Amand Boon, ed., Pachomiana latina (Louvain 1932).

Louis Bouyer, "The Spirituality of the New Testament and the Fathers," translated by Mary P. Ryan, in History of Christian Spirituality (New York 1964).

Theodora Büttner and Ernst Werner, Circumcellionen und Adamiten (Berlin 1959).

Henry Chadwick, "Enkrateia," in Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum, edited by Theodor Klauser (Stuttgart 1962), 5:343–365.

Derwas Chitty, The Desert a City: An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire (Oxford 1966).

García M. Colombás, El Moncato primitive, vol. 1 (Madrid 1974).

Patrice Cousin, Précis d'histoire monastique (Paris 1956).

H. Dörries, "Urteil und Verurteilung," Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche 55 (1964): 78–94.

Hermann Dörries, Erich Klostermann, and Matthias Kroeger, eds., Die 50 geistlichen Homilien des Makarios (Berlin 1964).

René Draguet, ed., Les Pères du désert (Paris 1949).

René Draguet, "Une lettre de Serapion de Thmusi aux disciples

d'Antoine (A.D. 356) en versios syríaque et arménienne," Le Muséon 64 (1951): 1–25.

Marilyn Dunn, The Emergence of Monasticism: From the Desert Fathers to the Early Middle Ages (Oxford 2000).

André-Jean Festugière, ed., Historia monachorum in Aegypto, Subsidia hagiographica 34 (Brussels 1961).

André-Jean Festugière, ed., Les Moines d'Orient (Paris 1961–1965).

Denys Gorce, Saint Jérôme et la Lectio Divina (1952).

Jean Gribomont, "Le Monachisme au IVe s. en Asie Mineure," in Studia patristica (Berlin 1957) 2:400–415.

Jean Gribomont, "Le De Instituto Christiano et le Messalianisme de Grégoire de Nysse," in Studia Patristica (Berlin 1962) 3:312–322.

Antoine Guillaumont, Les "Kephalaia gnostica" d'Évagre le Pontique et l'histoire de l'origénisme chez les Grecs et chez les Syriens (Paris 1963).

Antoine Guillaumont and Claire Guillaumont, "Démon, 2. Évagre le Pontique," in Dictionnaire de spiritualité ascétique et mystique, edited by Marcel Viller et al. (Paris 1932–1995), 4: 1731–1744.

Jean-Claude Guy, Recherches sur la tradition grecque des "Apophthegmata Patrum" (Brussels 1962).

Jean-Claude Guy, "Le Centre monastique de Scète dans la littérature du Ve siècle," Orientalia Christiana Periodica 30 (1964): 129–147.

François Halkin, ed., Sancti Pachomii vitae graecae, Subsidia hagiographica 19 (Brussels 1932).

William Harmless, Desert Christians: An Introduction to the Literature of Early Monasticism (New York 2004).

Winifred Kammerer, A Coptic Bibliography (Ann Arbor, Mich. 1950).

Franz Klejna, "Antonius und Ammonas: Eine Untersuchung über Herkunft und Eigenart der ältesten Mönchsbriefe," Zeitschrift für katholische Theologie 72 (1938): 309–348.

Eric Klosterman and Heinz Berthold, eds., Neue Homilien des Makarius Symeon (Berlin 1961).

L.Th. Lefort, ed. and tr., Les Vies coptes de Saint Pachôme et de ses premiers successeurs (Louvain 1943).

L.Th. Lefort, ed. and tr., Saint Athanase: Lettres festales et pastorales en copte, 2 vols. (Louvain 1955).

L.Th. Lefort, ed. and tr., Oeuvres de S. Pachôme et de ses disciples, 2 vols. (Louvain 1956).

L.Th. Lefort, "L'homélie de S. Athanase des papyrus de Turin," Le Muséon 71 (1958): 5–50, 209–239.

Edward E. Malone, The Monk and the Martyr (Washington, D.C. 1950).

Robert T. Meyer, ed. and tr., Palladius: The Lausiac History, Ancient Christian Writers, 34 (Westminster, Md. 1965).

Francis Xavier Murphy, Rufinus of Aquileia (Washington, D.C. 1945).

Francis Xavier Murphy, A Monument of Saint Jerome (New York 1952).

J.R. Palanque, G. Bardy, and P. de Labriolle, eds., The Church in the Christian Roman Empire, translated by Ernest C. Messenger, 2 vols. in 1 (New York 1953).

Gregorio Penco, Storia del monachesimo in Italia (Rome 1961).

Gregorio Penco, "Saint Martin et son temps," Studia anselmiana 46 (1961): 67–83.

Gregorio Penco, "La composizione sociale delle comunità monastiche nei primi secoli," Studia monastica 4 (1962): 257–281.

F. Nau, ed. and tr., Ammonas, successeur de Saint Antoine, Patrologia orientalis 11 (Paris 1915).

Samuel Rubenson, The Letters of St. Antony (Lund 1990).

Serapion of Thmuis, "Les Apophtègmes des moines d'Egypte," Académie Royale de Belgique: Bulletin de la classe des lettres 47 (1961): 134–149.

Basilius Steidle, ed., Antonius Magnus Eremita, Corpus scriptorum Christianorum orientalium 38 (Paris-Louvain 1956).

Giuseppe Turbessi, Ascetismo e monachesimo prebenedettino (Rome 1961).

Arthur Vööbus, A History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient, 2 vols. Corpus scriptorum Christianorum orientalium 184, 197 (Louvain 1958–1960).

Helen J. Waddell, tr., The Desert Fathers: Translations from the Latin (New York 1936; reprint, Ann Arbor 1957).

André Wilmart, "Macarius," Revue d'ascétique et de mystique 1 (1920): 58–83.

Rev. Jean Gribomont OSB
Docteur en philologie et histoire orientales
Prior, Pontifical Abbey of St. Jerome, Rome, Italy

Rev. Placid D. Solari OSB
Abbot, Belmont Abbey

Belmont, North Carolina (2010)

II. MEDIEVAL MONASTICISM (600–1500)

From the sixth through the eighth century, Western monasticism was not organized into an order, nor did it have a common rule. Eastern, Celtic, and Benedictine elements combined to form various rules (20 such mixed rules were in use in Gaul alone around the year 600). Over the course of the seventh century, these rules incorporated ever larger portions of the Rule of St. COLUMBAN and the Benedictine Rule. Some Continental monasteries—such as LUXEUIL and FLEURY in Gaul, and BOBBIO and the restored Abbey of MONTE CASSINO in Italy—came to adopt the Benedictine Rule as their norm of monastic life. As for England, the monastic allegiance of AUGUSTINE OF CANTERBURY and his fellow monks sent by GREGORY I the Great to convert England is unknown. By the second half of the sixth century, the Benedictine Rule was known in Northumbria, perhaps through the work of Wilfrid of York and Benedict Biscop.

The late seventh- and eighth-century Anglo-Saxon missionaries to the Continent were all Benedictine, and their many monastic foundations—for both men and women—were likewise Benedictine. The work of BONIFACE, followed by the encouragement and legislation of CHARLEMAGNE and his successors, made the Benedictine Rule obligatory for all monks and nuns under Carolingian authority. However, the monks and nuns in Celtic lands and in Visigoth Spain held fast to their own patterns of monastic living for several more centuries. It was during this period as well that the monastic movement in the West became largely clerical, owing to developments in Eucharistic theology and in the role of the monk in feudal society.

The Carolingian Era. The BENEDICTINES were the missionaries and the teachers in the Carolingian era who made the CAROLINGIAN RENAISSANCE a reality. Their mission work to the Danes, Swedes, and Norwegians continued into the tenth century, as did their mission to the western Slavs and Hungarians. At home, the monks labored in the school and SCRIPTORIUM, writing theological, hagiographical, and historical works, and they managed the abbey lands. But all this extramonastic activity provoked protests by BENEDICT OF ANIANE. Under his leadership, the monastic Synod of Aachen in 817 decreed the elimination of extern work, the lengthening of the DIVINE OFFICE, common monastic customs or regulations for all monks, and regular VISITATION of all monasteries. From this time until the twelfth century, almost all monks in Europe were Benedictine, but most of this legislation remained largely a dead letter until Cluny adopted parts of it in the tenth century.

The decay of Carolingian authority in the state—and the subsequent decentralization—paved the way for feudalism and made the abbey a feudal fief. The ABBOT thus became a feudal lord, with all the attendant privileges and obligations. The contemporary invasions of NORMANS, Hungarians, and Saracens destroyed many abbeys, especially in France and Italy. However, observance in the monasteries in German lands east of the Rhine generally remained good, and they were able to play a leading role in Church and state affairs under the Saxon and Salian rulers of the tenth and eleventh centuries.

Cluniac Reform. Monastic renewal in the West began with the foundation of CLUNY in 910. This French abbey was fortunate in its saintly, capable, and long-lived abbots: ODO OF CLUNY, MAJOLUS, ODILO, HUGH OF CLUNY, and PETER THE VENERABLE. Under these men, Cluny—which was exempt from all secular and spiritual authority except that of the pope—created a centralized "Order" of Cluny. All member monasteries were under the direct authority of the abbot of Cluny, all vows were made to him, and all superiors were appointed by him. Monks were not to be primarily missionaries or teachers, manual labor was curtailed, and the Divine Office was to be longer and more solemn.

The spirit of reform was, however, not exclusive to Cluny. Other centers grew up in Flanders and northern France under GERARD OF BROGNE near Liège, in Lorraine under JOHN OF GORZE at Metz, in Germany at HIRSAU, as well as in southern France, Italy, and Spain. The English revival was the work of the monk bishops DUNSTAN OF CANTERBURY, ETHELWOLD OF WINCHESTER, and OSWALD OF YORK. Their program for English Benedictinism was outlined in the Regularis Concordia.

New Monastic Orders. The number of monastic foundations grew steadily. The great churchmen between the tenth and the twelfth centuries—the so-called Benedictine centuries—were monks, and as bishops and popes they successfully spearheaded the struggle of the Church for freedom from secular authority. Centers of monastic renewal emphasizing the eremitic and contemplative ideals of early monasticism were created by Romuald at CAMALDOLI, PETER DAMIAN at FONTE AVELLANA, and at VALLOMBROSA by JOHN GUALBERT in the eleventh century. In 1084, BRUNO OF COLOGNE set up the first Carthusian hermitage at La Grande Chartreuse, thus founding an order that by the fifteenth century would include over 190 charterhouses throughout Europe, all faithful to the ideals of the founder. Other Benedictine-based reform groups, each with its own set of ideals, were founded in the eleventh and twelfth centuries: GRANDMONT, Sauve Majeure, CHAISE-DIEU, FONTEVRAULT, and SAVIGNY.

The most important twelfth-century foundation, and the professed rival of Cluny, was the CISTERCIAN ORDER. Its founders, ROBERT OF MOLESME and STEPHEN HARDING, stressed a stricter interpretation of the Benedictine Rule, setting out their ideals and constitutional structure in the Charta caritatis. Their original program was purely contemplative and ascetic, with an emphasis on silence, poverty, and manual labor. But since they could not abolish the idea of the monk priest, they were soon obliged to turn the heavy manual work over to lay brothers, whose industry and skill created the great Cistercian abbey estates.

Constitutionally, the Cistercians safeguarded the autonomy of every abbey, and the necessary unity in the order was achieved by means of annual general chapter meetings and visitations. The growth of the order was unparalleled in monastic history. Candidates flocked to the new foundations, and many older Benedictine monasteries joined the new order. By 1300 there were about 700 monasteries for men and a larger number for CISTERCIAN NUNS. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX was in great part responsible for the initial growth of the order. His European reputation placed it in the midst of Church and state affairs, his energy inspired the Second Crusade, and three Cistercian archbishops were the religious leaders of the Third Crusade. Cistercian monks soon served as diplomats and in the Roman Curia. They headed the mission to the ALBIGENSES and converted the pagans of Prussia and the Baltic area.

However, tensions arose in the order even before the death of Stephen Harding. A rivalry between the abbot of CÎTEAUX and the daughter houses threatened to become chronic, and distant abbeys tended to go their own way. The practice of COMMENDATION, the Black Death, the WESTERN SCHISM, the Hundred Years' War, and the Hussite Wars all had their repercussions. Changes in administration and papal legislation were of some help, but attendance at the general chapters kept falling off from the second half of the fourteenth century onward, so that in the years of religious crisis it was rare if even 30 abbots attended the annual gathering.

The Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries. The general monastic picture of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries was uninspiring. Some abbeys retained a high level of regular observance—the "Orders" of the CELESTINES, of Sylvestrine, and of Olivetan Benedictines founded in this era still survive. Most monastic foundations, however, were in spiritual doldrums. Leadership in Christian scholarship had passed to the universities and dedicated religious vocations gravitated to the MENDICANT ORDERS.

The reasons for this decline in monastic life were varied. Many abbeys were too much involved in secular affairs, some had become rest houses for members of the nobility, and others had purposefully limited the number of monks so that the professed monks would have more income. The Hundred Years' War often forced monks to live outside their cloisters, while the Black Death and the pernicious commendatory system were causes of decline over which the monks had no control. The abbatial office and that of other monastic officials were treated as benefices. Frequently, the sense of personal poverty all but vanished, and the reform efforts of higher ecclesiastical authority availed but little. The decrees of the Fourth Lateran Council (1215) and the efforts of Popes HONORIUS III, GREGORY IX, and BENEDICT XII all failed to overcome the general inertia and the opposition of the local ordinaries.

The Fifteenth Century. Eventually, effective revival came from within the Benedictine family with the birth of the late medieval congregations, especially the highly centralized congregations of St. Justina of Padua and PANNONHALMA in Hungary. Other congregations preserved the autonomy of the member abbey but placed it under the supervision of the general chapter and its officials. Many abbeys joined the congregations of KASTL, MELK, BURSFELD, or WINDESHEIM in German lands, Valladolid in Spain, and CHEZAL-BENOÎT in France.

The ideal monk of these monasteries was pious and book-loving, and his cell was the nursery of fifteenth-century humanism. These monks loved the Benedictine Rule, but the spiritual doctrine taught by the great abbots of the new congregations, such as John Rode, Luigi Barbo, García de CISNEROS, and Johannes TRITHEMIUS, was that of the DEVOTION MODERNA.

SEE ALSO CAROLINGIAN REFORM; CLUNIAC REFORM; CRUSADES; GREGORIAN REFORM; HOSPITALLERS; AND HOSPITAL SISTERS; LATERAN COUNCILS; MILITARY ORDERS; MONASTERY, DOUBLE; PREMONSTRATENSIANS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Christopher Brooke, The Age of the Cloister: The Story of Monastic Life in the Middle Ages (Mahwah, N.J. 2003).

Edward C. Butler, Benedictine Monachism: Studies in Benedictine Life and Rule, 2nd ed. 1924 (repr. New York 1961).

Franz Dölger, "Mönchtum, christliches" in Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche, edited by Josef Höfer and Karl Rahner, 10 vols., 2nd ed. (Freiburg 1957–65), 7: 544–548.

Karl Suso Frank, "Mönchtum: II christliches" in Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche ed. Walter Kasper, 11 vols., Freiburg 1993–2001, 7:399–405.

Kassius Hallinger, Gorze-Kluny, 2 vols. (Rome 1950–1951).

Noreen Hunt, Cluny Under Saint Hugh (London 1967).

David Knowles, The Religious Orders in England, 3 vols. (Cambridge, U.K. 1948–1960).

David Knowles, The Monastic Order in England: A History of Its Development from the Times of St. Dunstan to the Fourth Lateran Council, 940–1216, 2nd ed. (Cambridge, U.K. 1962).

C. H. Lawrence, Medieval Monasticism: Forms of Religious Life in Western Europe in the Middle Ages, 3rd ed. (Harlow, England 2001).

Louis Lekai, The Cistercians: Ideals and Reality (Kent, Ohio 1977).

Raphael Molitor, Aus der Rechtsgeschichte benediktinischer Verbände, 3 vols. (Münster 1928–1933).

Gregorio Penco, Storia del monachesimo in Italia (Rome 1961).

Philibert Schmitz, Histoire de l'ordre de Saint-Benoît, 7 vols. (Maredsous, Belgium 1942–1956).

Herbert Brook Workman, The Evolution of the Monastic Ideal From the Earliest Times Down to the Coming of the Friars (London 1913).

Rev. Victor Joseph Gellhuas OSB
Monk of St. Benedict's Abbey
Professor of History, St. Benedict's College, Atchison, Kansas

Rev. Placid D. Solari OSB
Abbot, Belmont Abbey
Belmont, North Carolina (2010)

III. MODERN MONASTICISM (1500–1960)

Like so much of the Catholic Church's renewal in the sixteenth century, monasticism looked to the Council of TRENT for new impetus. Prior to the council, there had been some efforts at reform (e.g. Valladolid in Spain, St. Justina in Italy, Melk and Bursfeld in the German-speaking territories), but these were minimal in terms of their ability to mobilize a widespread movement of Benedictine reform throughout Europe. By the time of the Council of Trent's opening, the monasteries of England had already been effectively closed by virtue of the dissolution of the monestaries under HENRY VIII. The disparate character of the monastic life throughout Europe was therefore in need of unification.

This need was met by canon eight of the council's last session, which required all monasteries to ally themselves as members of a particular monastic congregation. Although an effort was made to preserve the traditional monastic autonomy of each house, the implementation and enforcement of conciliar decrees frequently fell to the local bishop. Monasteries of women were to remain under the jurisdiction of the HOLY SEE or the local bishop. The minimum age for profession of monks was sixteen, while monastic women could make perpetual profession only after they had reached twenty-one years of age. The vow of poverty forbade personal ownership and landholdings, which was a blow against the commendam practice of previous centuries. The most important decree for the success of the reforming spirit stated that all exempt monastic houses were to affiliate with a congregation, with general chapters and regular visitations.

The response to the Tridentine decrees varied according to the locale. The Congregation of Santa Justina in Italy, once affiliated with the ancient Abbey of Monte Cassino, became the Cassinese Congregation. It grew in number in the years following Trent, with fourteen new monasteries entering the congregation in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. A number of bishops and cardinals from this congregation emerged as leaders of the Church. In 1566 the Portuguese Congregation of Lusitanian was established, modeled on the already existent Valladolid Congregation. In Austria, the restored Congregation of Melk was reestablished in 1617. The old German Bursfeld Congregation expanded as the Swabian Congregation (1603), the Congregation of Strasbourg (1623), the diocesan Congregation of Salzburg (1641), the Bavarian Congregation of the Holy Angels (1684) and the Congregation of Augsburg (1685).

Under Einsiedeln Abbey, the Swiss Congregation was formed in 1602, and the Congregation of the Presentation was founded in the Netherlands in 1628. The reformed congregation of Valladolid in Spain was extended in the sixteenth century to Mexico and Peru with the missionary ventures to the New World. Another Portuguese Congregation of Brazil was formed in 1582. The English Benedictine Congregation was formally established in exile on the continent in 1619.

Perhaps the most influential of the new congregations were found in France. The Congregation of St. Vanne, formed in 1604, was modeled on the Cassinese Congregation, and under Didier de la Cour it spread throughout France, gaining a reputation for scholarly work. Even more of a commitment to intellectual life was rendered by the Congregation of St. Maur, formed in 1621. Noted for its house at St. Germain-des-Prés in Paris, the MAURISTS flourished throughout the following century, producing such eminent scholars as Gregory Tarrisse, Luc d'Archery and Jean MABILLON.

New congregations of women in France included the Catherine de Bar's Perpetual Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament and the Congregation of Calvary from Fontevrault. In the seventeenth century, reformed abbesses renewed the monastic life at places such as MONTMARTRE, Val-de-Grace and Saint-Paul-les-Beauvais. By 1660 there were 18,000 Benedictine nuns in France, about twice the number as there were in 1600. Also in France the English Benedictines in exile at Douai and Cambrai found in Dame Gertrude MORE and others a rich vein of spiritual writing to help them in their own renewal. The Congregation of Kulm under Magdalene Morteska helped to lead reform efforts in German-speaking lands.

Another arm of reform came from the Cistercian branch of monasticism. The TRAPPISTS (the Order of Cistercians of Strict Observance) under Abbot Armand de RANCÉ received papal approval in 1678, and papal approval was given to the Congregation of Mechitarists, a group that represented the ancient traditions of Eastern monasticism, in 1712.

Apart from the spiritual vein of renewal, Benedictine monasteries were in the forefront of spreading the best baroque standards of art, architecture, and music. The Austrian, German, and Swiss monasteries were especially noteworthy in this enterprise.

Secularization. By the 1700s, however, the monastic order was again being threatened by elements of the ENLIGHTENMENT, monarchical government, and secularizing influences. The Enlightenment critique of the Catholic Church included the monasteries, which it identified with the ancien régime. The anticlerical and Masonic literature of the century reflected this, as did the policies of the secularizing governments of Austria (1750 to 1790) and the Czarist regime in Russia and Poland.

In the second half of the eighteenth century the first dissolutions of French monasteries took place, culminating in the complete suppression of all monastic houses at the time of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. The September Massacre and many other bloody reprisals against the Church by the revolutionary government included Benedictines as their victims. In the last decades of the century, Emperor JOSEPH II of Austria suppressed numerous Benedictine abbeys in Austria, Bohemia, Hungary, and areas of Poland. Monasteries in the Netherlands and Switzerland were forced to close their doors in 1796. The Napoleonic Wars increased the threat to Benedictine life. Throughout Italy, Prussia, Silesia and Germany, countless monasteries were secularized by governments unfriendly to any form of organized religious life. In Spain, the monasteries were suppressed by Joseph Bonaparte in 1809. By 1810, it was said there were fewer monasteries in existence in western Europe than at any time since the age of St. Augustine.

The Nineteenth-Century Revival. Even as the monastic order in Europe reached its nadir at the beginning of the 1800s, indicators of rebirth were evident. In 1802 the suppressed abbeys of Hungary formed a new congregation out of the royal monastery of Pannonhalma. English monks who had fled from the French oppression founded abbeys at AMPLEFORTH in 1802 and DOWNSIDE in 1814. Benedictine nuns from Cambrai in France did the same, establishing communities at Colwich in 1795 and later founded the monastery of STANBROOK. In Bavaria, King Ludwig I restored the Abbey of METTEN (1830) and the Benedictine convent of Eichstätt, which was in turn to become influential in shaping other Bavarian abbeys into the Bavarian Congregation. Both the renewed English Congregation and the Bavarian and Austrian monasteries were very much engaged in the education of youth.

The real germ of the nineteenth-century revival, however, was to be found in France. In 1833 a diocesan priest, Prosper GUÉRANGER, founded an abbey at the ancient monastic site of SOLESMES. Modeled on the medieval ideal of Cluny and a return to ancient monastic sources, Solesmes became a center of liturgical life and scholarship. The founding of this abbey marked the beginning of the French Congregation (now known as the Solesmes Congregation) and gave birth to other foundations at Ligugé and Marseille. Solesmes also helped to found the Sisters of St. Cecilia under Cecile BRUYÈRE, which was essentially a companion reform to that of the monks. Another French diocesan priest, Jean-Baptiste MUARD, founded an abbey at Pierre-qui-vire in 1850 that incorporated elements of strict observance and missionary activity. In France, the Benedictine Nuns of the Heart of Mary (Pradines), the Benedictine sisters of the Poor (Solesmes), the Adorers of the Heart of Jesus (Montmartre), and the Congregation of Missionary Benedictines (Ligugé) also emerged at this time.

In Italy, Pietro Casaretto transformed SUBIACO into a reform center in 1851, and he then went on to form the Subiaco Congregation. This congregation absorbed abbeys across the European continent and was known for its missionary impulse. It was this congregation, through the labors of the Spanish Benedictines Joseph Serra and Rosendo Salvado, that brought a Benedictine presence to the Australian continent, along with the work of English Benedictines.

Another branch of the nineteenth-century revival came from the foundation at BEURON in the Black Forest. Two German brothers, Maurus and Placidus WOLTER, founded Beuron in 1863. Modeled in many aspects on Solesmes, the Beuron Congregation was influential in a return to the sources of monastic life and a concentration on liturgical renewal. Indeed, the abbeys of MAREDSOUS and Mont César in Belgium, both centers for the liturgical movement, formed part of the Beuronese Congregation, as did the German abbey of MARIA LAACH. A Beuronese monk, Andreas Amrheim, was to found the Congregation of St. Ottilien (1884), which had a missionary orientation. Allied to the monks of St. Ottilien were the Benedictine missionary sisters of Tützing.

The missionary thrust of the nineteenth-century revival was a pronounced part of its impetus. In addition to sending monks to Africa, Australia, and South America, this was the time when monasticism came to North America. The most forceful figure in this venture was Boniface Wimmer, who became archabbot of the monastery of the ST. VINCENT ARCHABBEY in Pennsylvania (1846) and spearheaded the birth and growth of the American Cassinese Congregation. Swiss monks made similar foundations at ST. MEINRAD ARCHABBEY in 1854 and Conception in 1871, and there were large numbers of Benedictine sisters from monastic houses in Germany and Switzerland who accompanied them.

Part of the motivation of these monks was the pastoral care of German-speaking immigrant Catholics in North America. The monasteries established schools and seminaries, and the monks entered into parochial ministry. The monks were followed quickly by Benedictine women from Bavarian and Swiss monasteries. The first group arrived from Eichstätt under the leadership of Sister Benedicta Riepp in 1852. Since American bishops wanted religious women in schools and hospitals, the Benedictine nuns who established monasteries in North America lost the right to solemn vows. After a long and tenacious struggle, they were eventually able to reclaim their monastic identity through the establishment of monastic congregations of pontifical right in the twentieth century.

The fruits of this revival were seen not just in rapidly expanding numbers but also in a more centralized structure. Under Pope LEO XIII there was a revival of the monastery of Sant'Anselmo in Rome as a central house of studies, as well as an attempt to organize a confederation of Benedictine congregations of monks. A Congress of Abbots was held in 1893, at which the position of Abbot Primate was created to constitute a more unified Benedictine character. Among new congregations added in the first part of the twentieth century were the Belgian Congregation (1920), the Austrian Congregation (1930) and the Bohemian Congregation of St. Adalbert (1945).

Pope Leo XIII had also sought to bring together the various traditions of the Cistercian reform in 1892. Differences in monastic observance and national congregations precluded such a union, however. The Holy See ultimately recognized two branches of the Cistercians, including houses of men and women: the Order of Citeaux, generally known as the the Common Observance, and the Order of Cistercians of the Strict Observance, popularly known as Trappists.

Many Church leaders, as well as liturgical and spiritual writers, reflected the revitalized monasticism of the early twentieth century. Cardinals Francis GASQUET, Giusseppi DUSMET and Jean Baptiste PITRA epitomized the scholarship of the Benedictine revival. Such writers as Lambert BEAUDUIN, Bernard Botte, Cuthbert BUTLER, John CHAPMAN, Columba MARMION and Germain MORIN served as examples of the fruits of a return to scriptural and patristic sources. The growth in numbers was paralleled with a growth in physical plants, especially in Europe and North America.

The twentieth century was not without its challenges to monasticism, however. The punitive legislation passed by governments of Germany, France, and Italy at the end of the nineteenth century slowed the progress of monasticism in those countries. Even more devastating were the two world wars that marked the first half of the century. The devastation of so much of the monastic patrimony of Europe during those wars was reflected in the destruction of the Abbey of Monte Cassino by Allied bombers and the wholesale loss of life and property experienced by many monastic houses, to say nothing of the loss of priceless manuscripts and books in monastic libraries.

The period after World War II resulted in another resurgence of monastic growth, however, especially in the United States. There was a strong contemplative movement that accompanied the popularity of the best-selling autobiography of Thomas MERTON, a Trappist monk from the Abbey of Gethsemane in Kentucky. Growing numbers flocked to Cistercian houses, while new communities of Benedictine men and women turned away from traditional apostolic works of education and pastoral work and became centers of prayer and liturgical life.

The twentieth century did see the political persecution of Benedictines in various parts of the world. Monks from Silos Abbey were expelled from Mexico in 1913, and the monks of the Abbey of Pueyo suffered a collective martyrdom in 1936 during the Spanish Civil War. Benedictines were also driven from mainland China after WORLD WAR II. With the suppression of monastic houses in Communist territories, there was an increased emigration of monks from eastern Europe and Asia to other countries.

There was also a strong missionary thrust, this time directed toward Latin America, Asia, and Africa. By the 1950s there were thriving Benedictine communities in Argentina, Mexico, Vietnam, India, Morocco, Madagascar, while a number of Benedictines served as bishops in missionary countries.

SEE ALSO AFRICA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; BENEDICTINE ABBEYS AND PRIORIES IN THE U.S.; BENEDICTINES, ENGLISH; LATIN AMERICA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; MONASTIC SCHOOLS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Antonio Linage Conde, San Benito y los Benedictinos, vols. II-I–VI (Braga, Portugal 1993).

Ephrem Hollermann, The Reshaping of a Tradition: American Benedictine Women, 1852–1881 (Winona, Minn. 1994).

Ann Kessler, Benedictine Men and Women of Courage: Roots and History (Yankton, S.D. 1996).

David Knowles, Christian Monasticism (New York 1969).

Joel Rippinger, The Benedictine Order in the United States (Collegeville, Minn. 1990).

Philibert Schmitz, Histoire de l'Ordre de Saint Benoît, 7 vols. (Maredsous, Belgium 1942–1956).

Rev. Joel Rippinger OSB
Sub-prior
Marmion Abbey, Aurora, Illinois

Rev. Placid D. Solari OSB
Abbot, Belmont Abbey
Belmont, North Carolina (2010)

IV. CONTEMPORARY MONASTICISM (1960–2009)

The decade of the 1960s was marked not only by the decisive event of VATICAN COUNCIL II (1962 to 1965), but also by another intense period of monastic renewal. This was accomplished through a full spectrum of changes, including structural changes in the constitutions of Benedictine congregations, the introduction of the vernacular in the liturgical prayer of communities, the changed patterns of ministry or apostolic work taken on by many communities, a comprehensive re-evaluation of monastic spirituality as it came to terms with the modern world, and new challenges that came through interacting with that world.

Significant changes in communities of men included the abolition of the distinction between choir monks and lay brothers and the uncoupling of the monastic profession and the priesthood. These changes have led to an increased emphasis on the value of the monastic vocation. At the same time, this period initiated a time of marked demographic change, with decreased numbers from Benedictine houses in Europe and North America and increased numbers from Africa, India and South America. The significant rise in the number of monks and nuns in non-Western cultures has given rise to a fruitful reflection on the authentic inculturation of traditional monastic life in these cultures.

Contemporary Monasticism. Abbot Melvin bows his head with others during vespers at St. Mary's Church. Newark Abbey celebrated its 150th anniversary in 2007. © ARISTIDE ECONOMOPOULOS/STAR LEDGER/CORBIS

The conciliar call for all religious to return to the sources of their charism led to a flowering of new monastic scholarship at this time. Benedictines such as Jean LECLERCQ, Adalbert de Vogüé, and Cypriano Vagaggini led a new wave of Benedictine scholars who were intent upon distilling the best of the Benedictine tradition of scholarly work and extending it to a wider readership. The Pontifical University of Sant'Anselmo in Rome offered an international venue for this to take place, particularly with its Liturgical Institute and its Monastic Institute. Centers for study and publishing in other parts of the monastic world, such as Collegeville, Minnesota, in the United States, also attracted large numbers of Benedictine students and scholars.

Benedictines exercised considerable leadership in renewal efforts in the period after Vatican II. The American Benedictine Rembert Weakland, who was elected as abbot primate in 1967, did much to promote the renewal of liturgical life. He also broadened contacts with houses of Benedictine women and supported the growing influence of monasticism in Third World countries. In the Roman Curia, Cardinal Augustine Mayer played a significant role under Pope JOHN PAUL II in expediting the religious renewal of communities of consecrated life, and he later served as liaison with the Society of St. Peter. Cardinal Basil HUME, a monk and abbot of Ampleforth Abbey before being named archbishop of Westminster, was widely recognized as a spokesman and spiritual figure of influence in the European Church.

The Benedictine order itself was enlarging its membership during this period. By the 1970s, the Vallombrosan (1966), Camaldolese (1966), Olivetan (1960), and Sylvestrine (1973) branches of Benedictinism had entered the Benedictine Confederation. There was now a Slavic Congregation, formed in 1969, and the Benedictine houses of Latin America formed the Cono-Sur Congregation in 1976. This was also a time of marked growth in non-Catholic Benedictine houses. The Anglican and Lutheran churches witnessed a renewed growth of monastic communities in their denominations, and there was a concerted effort to engage in dialogue with non-Christian monastics. The Bangkok Conference of 1968, at which Thomas Merton suffered his unexpected death, was one of these.

The work of the English Benedictine Father Bede GRIFFITHS and Henri le Saux in India signaled an entirely new ground for combining elements of Hindu practice with Catholic monasticism. A number of organizations, such as the North American Board for East-West Dialogue and the Monastic Interreligious Dialogue, actively sought to carry on the exchange of ideas between Catholic monks and those of other faiths. Examples of Benedictine monasteries in the forefront of ecumenical work included Chevetogne in Belgium and Bose in Italy. The popularity of the Benedictine-based ecumenical monasticism of Taizé also achieved unprecedented attention. The attention came from a clear message of the spiritual life of the monastic tradition presented in a new way that crossed confessional lines. Large numbers of people, especially youth, from diverse religious traditions, or none, were attracted to Taizé and to programs held elsewhere by the monks of Taizé.

The missionary impulse was alive and well during this period. The decade of the 1960s had seen an unprecedented commitment of monastic personnel in Latin America. Although a number of foundations did not pass the test of time because of local political instability and a dearth of indigenous vocations, many Benedictine foundations became integral parts of the local Church in Latin America. Africa and Asia also saw a renewed Benedictine growth in the last years of the twentieth century.

The decades at the end of the twentieth century witnessed the return of a more vibrant monastic life to countries that had long suffered from political oppression under Communist rule. This was the case in Vietnam following that nation's difficult period of war and internal discord. It was especially so in the countries of eastern Europe after the fall of Communism in 1989. Many of the restrictions formerly imposed on monastic houses in Poland, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia were lifted. In countries such as Lithuania, Slovakia, and the Czech Republic an entirely revitalized form of monastic life was nurtured with the help of material and human resource from monasteries of the Free World.

A variety of experiments in monastic life were part of the postconciliar period. There were new efforts at both an urban monasticism and a return to eremitical life. The CHARISMATIC RENEWAL movement of the 1970s found its way into a number of Benedictine houses, notable the monastery of Our Lady of Guadalupe in Pecos, New Mexico. The 1980s and 1990s were marked by the genesis of a number of new monastic communities of men and women whose common heritage was a return to traditional practices, characterized by a full round of the Divine Office, use of the full religious habit, and a more cloistered existence. A number of communities divested themselves of active apostolic ministries and became centers for prayer and retreats during this period, and there was a flowering of new forms of monastic art, architecture, and music.

Monasticism was distinguished much more by its international character and its pluralism in the last decades of the twentieth century. New technologies expedited an ease of communication among far-flung monasteries, and these advances were buttressed by frequent encounters and personal exchanges among monastics of different houses—both between members of the different monastic orders and between monastic men and women. Another prominent feature was the surge in growth of lay associate or oblate programs, in which many committed laypeople, both Catholic and non-Catholic, affiliated themselves with particular monasteries. Monastic practices such as lectio divina also became accessible to a wider public, and a renewed interest in monastic spirituality was generated in the entire Church.

There was a decline in the number of monastic men and women between 1965 and 2009. In 1965 there were over 12,000 monks and over 23,000 Benedictine women throughout the world, but in 2009 there were 7,558 monks and 4,492 Benedictine women (Catholic Almanac 2010, p. 467, 487). However, the variety of women's congregations had grown to sixty-three, and there were eighty-two congregations or independent abbeys of men. In addition, the numerical decline was less than that suffered by other major religious orders during the same period. These figures pointed to a vitality and diversity in the monastic order at the beginning of the third millennium that was very much in keeping with the Benedictine charism.

SEE ALSO BENEDICTINES, OLIVETAN; BENEDICTINES, SYLVESTRINE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Antonio Linage Conde, San Benito y los Benedictinos, vols. II-I–VI (Braga, Portugal 1993).

Ann Kessler, Benedictine Men and Women of Courage: Roots and History (Yankton, S.D. 1996).

David Knowles, Christian Monasticism (New York 1969).

Joel Rippinger, The Benedictine Order in the United States (Collegeville, Minn. 1990).

Philibert Schmitz, Histoire de l'Ordre de Saint Benoît, 7 vols. (Maredsous, Belgium 1942–1956).

Rev. Joel Rippinger OSB
Sub-prior
Marmion Abbey, Aurora, Illinois

Rev. Placid D. Solari OSB
Abbot, Belmont Abbey
Belmont, North Carolina (2010)

V. EASTERN MONASTICISM UNTIL 1453

Byzantine monasticism is not divided into specialized orders and congregations, as it is in the West, nor does it have an organized unity. The conciliar and imperial legislation on the matter is summary, and the Rule of St. Basil is but a monument of experience and tradition, without any legal binding force. In addition to cenobitism, there have been various forms of the eremitic life. Since the ninth century, anyone (often it was a layman) founding a monastery drafted the typikon (rule) of his house to his own taste.

It is almost impossible to make a list of the early monasteries, since many were only precariously maintained hermitages. Nonetheless, in 1953 Raymond Janin created a catalog of 325 monasteries that existed in the city of Constantinople, though several of these may be duplicates, since monasteries changed names over the course of time. A similar list covering the remainder of the empire is in preparation, and when completed it will furnish a precise basis for general study. This survey is limited to a brief chronological survey of the most significant events.

Egypt and Palestine. The initial period has been treated separately (see section I above), for it is of cardinal importance, and the innovations of that time spread rapidly throughout the Christian world. From the end of the fourth century on, Egypt was more isolated, except for the group at Nitria known from the Apophthegmata Patrum. In the south, in the White Monastery, SHENOUTE OF ATRIPE (d. 466) and Besa (d. after 474) were personages well known from their Coptic works, but they had almost no influence outside of Egypt. In the north, which was troubled very early by MONOPHYSITISM (except among the Pachomians of Canopus, the bulwark of the Chalcedonian patriarchs), the development of monasticism ran closely parallel with that of the East, although no figures of the first rank were produced there. Syria also was hard hit by Monophysitism, except for the monasteries of St. Simeon and of St. Maron. The Plerophoriae of John Rufus (see Patrologia orientalis, vol. 8), written shortly after 512, and the Lives of the Eastern Saints (see Patrologia orientalis, vols. 17–19) of JOHN OF EPHESUS (d. 586) give a picturesque description of them. Spiritual writers such as PHILOXENUS OF MABBUGH were already outside the mainstream of Byzantine tradition by this time.

The most active monastic center in the fifth century was Palestine, which attracted vocations from everywhere. The Monophysite centers there were moderate and highly cultured, and the highest traditions of the Egyptian desert from the fourth century were maintained. Representative authors inspired by the works of EVAGRIUS PONTICUS include Abbot Isaias (d. 488),

St. Basil the Great (c. 329–379). An 18th century painting in the Dominican Monastery in Dubrovnik depicts St. Basil, Dubrovnik's protector and Patron Saint. © JONATHAN BLAIR/CORBIS

Peter the Iberian (d. 488), and John and Barsanuphius, along with their disciple Dorotheus of Gaza (d. after 560). The PSEUDO-DIONYSIUS probably belongs to this group as well. There were Chalcedonian lauras along the Jordan and in the Dead Sea region, but the monks here were less well read and perhaps more austere. CYRIL OF SCYTHOPOLIS (late sixth century) has provided excellent biographies of several of them, including EUTHYMIUS THE GREAT (d. 473), SABAS (d. 532), and Theodosius (d. 529). Monasticism, in penetrating this region, led to a violent crisis of Origenism from about 540 to 552. With the assistance of JUSTINIAN I, the mischief was brutally extirpated. Around 600, the most vital center of orthodox monasticism shifted to Sinai, where Justinian had built a fortified monastery. The Ladder of Paradise by JOHN CLIMACUS (c. 579–649) synthesizes the whole of this ascetic and mystical tradition.

Constantinople. In the Byzantine capital, the monks maintained the Chalcedonian tradition with vigor, notably the Acoemeti and the monks of the monastery of Dalmatos. With the Christological crisis, the monks of the East adopted extremist positions. The crisis concerned the interpretation of the nature of the final restoration of all things in Christ and the process of divinization of believers. It was based on interpretations of the writings of the third-century Alexandrian theologian Origen in the extreme form connected with the writings of Evagrius. They did not hesitate, for example, to withdraw from the jurisdiction of their bishops, often at the invitation of a neighboring bishop. It is understandable that the Council of CHALCEDON (451), inspired by the Robber Council of EPHESUS (449), should have taken measures to put the monks under the charge of the bishops, and that Justinian should have legislated to the same effect (Corpus iuris civilis, Novellae, ed. R. Schoell and G. Kroll, 5, 133).

Nevertheless it was the power of the monks, the goad of the masses, that was responsible for the creation of an independent Jacobite Church, which often backed linguistic and ethnic groups striving for autonomy. The unwillingness of such groups to compromise was only rarely (e.g., in Palestine) mollified by a literary culture. The monks' work of evangelization on the fringes of Christendom in ARMENIA, GEORGIA, and ARABIA, to say nothing of the Persian form of monasticism, (which had already been cut off from the Byzantine world) deserves to be stressed.

The Middle Byzantine Period. The Persian invasion, and later the Arab conquest, split the Eastern provinces and Egypt from the empire, so that Monophysite monasticism became isolated and disappeared from Byzantium. Some orthodox monks fled to Byzantium and the Western provinces, bringing some manuscripts with them. The times were not favorable for great literary works but only for spiritual FLORILEGIA. In 692 the Council of Trullo tried to work out monastic legislation. Soon, however, the crisis over ICONOCLASM, which was in part a military and imperial reaction against the influence and wealth of the monks, aggravated the situation and culminated in a persecution between 754 and 764. Some colonies of hermits—itinerant, poor, and little organized—nevertheless continued to exist, notably on Mt. Olympus in Bithynia.

Studite Foundations. The monks Plato and THEODORE (a future Studite) withdrew with his male relatives to Mt. Olympus at the end of the eighth century. They took in hand a strict cenobitic reform based on the writings of St. BASIL and Palestinian monasticism, first in the monastery of the Saccudium, and later, in 709, in the STUDION monastery in the capital itself. Strong in their moral authority, they were often vigorous opponents of the emperor and his patriarch. Their poverty and work, their copying of manuscripts (with the spread of the new minuscule script), and the number of monks (more than 700) all prove the value of this reform, which opened the most splendid period of Byzantine monasticism. Sumptuous foundations began to multiply, and libraries were created in them, bringing together treasures of Christian literature that have since enriched Paris, Rome, and Moscow. The most vital monastic centers, such as northern Italy, Mount ATHOS, and Russia, were profoundly marked by the Hypotyposis of the Studites.

The persecutions of the second iconoclast crisis (814–843), served only to give the Studites the prestige of confessors. The Synod of Constantinople held in 861 endeavored to prevent both the abuses attendant on the increase of foundations and the authoritarian interference of the founders in the life of the communities. A three-year novitiate was therefore imposed. This was also the age in which the distinction between the "minor habit," signifying a less demanding form of life devoted to manual labor, and the "angelic habit," a higher rank reserved to those who gave themselves exclusively to prayer, came to be widespread. The distinction seems to have originated in Palestine in the seventh century, and it finally came to be accepted, despite the long opposition of the Studites. This acceptance can be interpreted as both a reaction against legislation and an effort to safeguard the spiritual character of monasticism (that of the angelic habit).

In the tenth century, Mount Latros housed a number of flourishing monasteries. In 956, St. ATHANASIUS the Athonite founded the cenobitic monastery of Lavra at Mount Athos, which until then had been a peninsula of hermits. Other large houses of Slavs, Georgians (Iviron), and even Latins would soon follow, and Christodoulos (d. 1101) founded an important monastery on Patmos.

Mystic Revival and Hesychasts. The most remarkable event of eleventh-century Eastern monasticism was undoubtedly the appearance of a mystic revival led by Symeon the New Theologian (d. 1022), who came from the Studite tradition but was dissatisfied with the overly disciplinary and exterior conceptions of holiness that had developed over time, even in the most reformed type of cenobitic life.

As opposed to the ancient anchorites, the Hesychasts of the school of Symeon lived and worked in communities. However, they championed a demanding conception of union with God, in line with the teaching of St. Anthony, the Apophthegmata, Dorotheus, and the Messalians—who stressed the importance of the cell, silence, and reading. Peace and silence were obviously thought of preeminently as interior dispositions involving the elimination of distraction with a view to pure prayer. But the insistence on the psychological experience of the union with God, and on pneumatism, led Symeon—and even more so his disciple and biographer NICETAS STETHATOS (d. c. 1080)—to reserve the direction of souls and teaching to those who had had charismatic spiritual gifts, at the risk of disqualifying the hierarchical power. The Byzantine tradition had generally confided the direction of consciences to the monks, even those who were not priests, but this was now formulated as a doctrine. The spirituals provoked a reaction, doubtless excessive, against Michael Psellus and the claim of the lay philosophers to teach in the Church. Nicetas Stethatos, furthermore, was among the anti-Latin polemicists in 1054.

The Late Byzantine Period. The thirteenth century, which saw the conquest of Constantinople by the Crusaders, was a time of ruin and decline, but also of renewal. In the fourteenth century, the Hesychast tradition found its greatest Doctor in Gregory PALAMAS. Western authors who have studied this period and made scholarly and doctrinal contributions concerning it often adopt a hostile attitude toward Palamas because of his opposition to Thomism. His distinction between the incommunicable essence of God (to save his transcendence) and his communicable uncreated operations (to safeguard mystical "Taboric" illumination) appears strange to the scholastic mind, but it eventually became the accepted doctrine in Byzantium (after violent controversies), and it is a most felicitous characterization of the soul of Byzantium.

The HESYCHASM of Mount Athos included a psychophysical method of meditation. This approach involved the continual repetition of the JESUS PRAYER while fixing the gaze on a point of the body, in rhythm with one's breathing, in order to make the spirit descend into the heart. This technique, which used to be ridiculed, attracted the attention of twentieth-century psychologists, and the importance it ascribes to the body no longer seems unjustified. It should not in any case be considered more than a method for concentrating attention.

The Turkish invasion soon put an end to monasticism at Constantinople itself. Mount Athos, Patmos, and the monasteries of the Meteora in Thessaly, St. Sabas, and Sinai maintained flourishing Greek monastic republics, while the Slavic world took up the tradition and extended it.

Recruiting people to the monastic life has become very difficult in the East, for a modern ideal of culture and social action has not readily assimilated the traditions of monasticism or those who incarnate them. But it appears that the Western world is beginning to appreciate the human and Christian treasure of Hesychasm and ascetic contemplation.

SEE ALSO BASILIAN MONASTICISM; BASILIANS (BYZANTINE); CRUSADES; HESYCHASM; ICONOCLASM; JACOBITES (SYRIAN); MARO OF CYR, ST.; MARONITE CHURCH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Donald Attwater, A List of Books about the Eastern Churches (Newport, R.I. 1960).

Heinrich Bacht, "Die Rolle des orientalischen Mönchtums in den kirchenpolitischen Auseinandersetzungen um Chalkedon (431–519)," in Das Konzil von Chalkedon: Geschichte und Gegenwart, 3 vols., edited by Aloys Grillmeier and Heinrich Bacht (Würzburg 1951–1954), 2:193–314.

Hans-Georg Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich 1959).

Louis Bouyer, "La Spiritualité byzantine," in La Spiritualité du moyen-âge, edited by Jean Leclercq, et al. (Paris 1961).

Louis Brhéhier, Le Monde byzantin, 3 vols. (Paris 1947–1950).

Albert Champdor, Le Mont Sinaï et le monastère Sainte-Catherine (Paris 1963).

Chrusostomus Dahm and Ludger Bernhard, Athos, Berg der Verklärung (Offenburg 1959).

Richard M. Dawkins, The Monks of Athos (New York 1936).

Hippolyte Delehaye, "Byzantine Monasticism," in Byzantium: An Introduction to East Roman Civilization, edited by Norman H. Baynes and H.St.L.B. Moss (Oxford 1948), 136–165.

Irénée Doens, "Monastères orthodoxes en Grèce," Irénikon 34 (1961): 346–392.

R.M. French, The Eastern Orthodox Church (New York 1951).

Antoine Guillaumont, Les "Kephalaia gnostica" d'Évagre le Pontique et l'histoire de l'Origénisme chez les Grecs et les Syriens (Paris 1963).

Angel Santos Hernández, Iglesias del Oriente, 2 vols. (Santander 1959–1963), vol. 2, Repertorio bibliografico. For bibliography, see Byzantinische Zeitschrift and Orientalia Christiana periodica 25 (1959): 451.

Raymond Janin, Les Églises et les monastères, vol. 3 of La Géographie ecclésiastique de l'empire byzantin (Paris 1953).

E. Kadloubovsky and G. E. Palmer, trs., Writings from the Philokalia on Prayer of the Heart (London 1951).

Jacques Lacarriére, Men Possessed by God, translated by Roy Monkcom (New York 1964).

Jules Leroy, Monks and Monasteries of the Near East, translated by Peter Collin (London 1963).

Clément Lialine, "Monachisme orientale et monachisme occidental," Irénikon 33 (1960): 435–459.

Sydney Loch, Athos: The Holy Mountain (New York 1957).

Placidus de Meester, De monachico statu iuxta disciplinam Byzantinam (Vatican City 1942).

Otto Friedrich August Meinardus, Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Desert (Cairo 1961).

Jean Meyendorff, Introduction à l'étude de Grégoire Palamas (Paris 1959).

Le Millénaire du mont Athos, 963–1963: Études et mélanges (Chevetogne, Belgium 1963–1964).

Donald M. Nicol, Meteora: The Rock Monasteries of Thessaly (London 1963).

On the Invocation of the Name of Jesus, By a Monk of the Eastern Church (London 1950).

Orthodox Spirituality: An Outline of the Orthodox Ascetical and Mystical Tradition, By a Monk of the Eastern Church (London 1945).

Demosthenes Savramis, Zur Soziologie des Byzantinischen Mönchtums (Leiden 1962).

Rudolf Schoell and Wilhelm Kroll, eds., Corpus iuris civilis: Novellae (Berlin 1954).

Nicole Thierry and Michel Thierry, Nouvelles églises rupestres de Cappadoce (Paris 1964).

Leo Ueding, "Die Kanones von Chalkedon in ihrer Bedeutung fur Monchtum und Klerus," in Das Konzil von Chalkedon: Geschichte und Gegenwart, edited by Aloys Grillmeier and Heinrich Bacht (Würzburg 1951–1954), 2:569–676.

Rev. Jean Gribomont OSB
Docteur en philologie et histoire orientales
Prior, Pontifical Abbey of St. Jerome, Rome, Italy

Rev. Placid D. Solari OSB
Abbot, Belmont Abbey
Belmont, North Carolina (2010)

VI. EASTERN MONASTICISM SINCE 1453

The importance of the study of Eastern monasticism was stressed by Pius XII when he spoke to the participants of a congress on Eastern monasticism in Rome in 1958. He pointed out that the Eastern monastic institutions are the basis for all other forms of Christian monasticism.

Forms and Terminology. The anchoritism begun by St. Anthony of Egypt (d. 356) was subjected to a critical reappraisal by St. Basil the Great (d. 379) in his rule. From that time, the ideal of cenobitism (common life) prevailed widely in the Orient as well. But the tendency toward a solitary life was never completely extinguished. Solitude (eremia) was considered indispensable for hesychia (internal tranquility), a word that developed into a whole ascetical program called Hesychasm, which was one of the most important currents of Byzantine spirituality.

Some forms of solitary life were austere and even extreme. Besides stylites and recluses (both of whom were numerous, especially in Syria), there were boskoi, or shepherds, who roamed freely over the deserts, nourishing themselves on herbs—whence came the name herbivori, given them by St. EPHREM THE SYRIAN. St. NILUS OF ANCYRA considered xeniteia, the life of pilgrims in a strange land, the most difficult. The desire for complete isolation, even in the midst of people, urged the saloi (in Slavic, jurodivyje) to feign eccentricities, even insanity, out of love for Christ; they were numerous in Syria and Russia.

Basilian cenobitism reached its perfection in the Studion monastery of Constantinople, whose typikon, or rule, became the model for other foundations. But in reality not all monasteries succeeded in full observance. The idiorrhythmic type of monasticism, an imitation of the ancient colonies of the fathers of the desert, was gradually introduced. Accordingly, the monks live in groups under a superior, but obedience is limited to matters of external regulation. Individual monks retain their own personal property and enjoy considerable freedom. Of the 20 principal monasteries of Mount ATHOS, nine are of this kind. The structure of this monastic republic reveals other types of monastic life still found in the East. The sketai (sketes) are dependent on larger monasteries and consist of a group of isolated houses. Small groups of anchorites live in the asketikai kalybai. A hesychasterion is the dwelling of a solitary hermit. Kellia are small, separate, rural habitations where individual monks live under the direction of an older monk. Kathismata are hermitages that are better equipped, and thus suitable for a retired bishop and the like. On Mount Athos there are also gyrovagi or kabiotai (wanderers) who do not belong to any monastery. Palestine was famous for its lauras, a type intermediate between anchoritism and the cenobitic life. A dependent pustyň, or hermitage, was often attached to the Russian monasteries.

In the monastic legislation of the East, both civil and ecclesiastical authority had a part. Such legislation is found, for example, in the canons of the Council of Chalcedon (451), the Council of Trullo (691), the Council of NICAEA II (787), and the First and Second Photian Councils of Constantinople (867, 879). The code of Theodosius (d. 450) contains prescriptions for monks that were developed further by Justinian (d. 565) in his Codex and Novellae, and by Emperor Leo VI (d. 913) in his Basilika and Novellae. In the ninth century the custom of formulating a particular rule (typikon) for each newly founded monastery began. In more recent times, the Holy See issued the motu proprio Postquam Apostolicis Litteris for Catholic religious of the Eastern rites on February 2, 1952.

Despite the multiplicity of forms, Eastern monasticism possesses a unity rooted in the common ideal of all Christians, namely the salvation of one's soul. The monk, according to the concept of Basil and others, is none other than the Christian who takes the gospel seriously, with all the consequences. Thus, in the Orient, the ideal of perfection and monastic asceticism are considered identical.

Since it is not possible to give a detailed account here of all Eastern monasteries, some of the principal centers of Eastern monastic life are discussed briefly below.

Egypt. The separation of the Egyptian Church from the Catholic Church, the invasion by the Muslims, and cultural isolation have reduced to a handful the number of existing monasteries, which in the golden era of Egyptian monasticism had numbered in the hundreds. Four of these are situated in the valley of Wadi Natrun, near the modern highway that leads from Cairo to Alexandria. Deir Amba Maqār is the monastery of MACARIUS THE EGYPTIAN; it was founded on the site of the hermitage of this patriarch of monasticism in the Scetic Desert. Though destroyed several times, it became the seat of the Coptic patriarch in the sixth century, and in the ninth century it was surrounded by the kind of walls that later characterized all Egyptian monasteries.

Deir as-Surjān, the monastery of the Syrians, was founded in the eighth century by the Syrian Tekrit for the monks of his nation. It became celebrated for its Syriac manuscripts, many of which were carried off in the eighteenth century to the Vatican Library, while others went to the British Museum in the nineteenth century. In the fourteenth century a plague killed most of the monks. The chronicle of the monastery speaks of only 43 monks in 1516, of whom 25 were Copts. Eventually, the administration came completely under the Copts. Deir Amba Bishāj, the monastery of the Abbot Isaias (a contemporary of Macarius), was reconstructed in the fourteenth century. Deir al-'Adrā (Baramus, or monastery of the Romans), was founded, according to legend, either by the sons of Valentinian I (d. 375) or by St. Arsenius.

In the eastern desert, about 40 miles from the Red Sea, stands Deir Mār Antūnius, the monastery of St. Anthony of Egypt. This is the location of the tomb of the saint, who spent his last years in a cave on Mount Kolzim. Ten miles from the Red Sea is Deir Mār Būla, the monastery of St. Paul of Thebes, which was built in the fifth century and reconstructed in the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries. Almost abandoned is the monastery of Deir Samūil in the valley of Kalamon, southwest of Medinet el Faijum. Founded by the Monophysite monk Samuel in the seventh century, it was reconstructed in 1899 by monks who had been forced to flee from Deir al-'Adrā.

The Coptic monastery that presents the most modern aspect is that of Deir al-'Adrā (Al-Muharraq), some 20 miles northwest of Mafalut and reconstructed in the sixteenth century as a palace. Near Sohag are the famous monasteries of Shenoute of Atripe—Deir-el Abjad (White monastery) and Deirel'Achmar (Red monastery)—but they are now in ruins. The same is true of the monastery of St. Epiphanius near Luxor and that of St. Simeon near Aswan. Since the coming of Islam, monasteries for women have been limited to the city of Cairo, where even in the twelfth century there was a foundress named Saijida Tarfa. Some of these convents still function; the largest of them is Deir Abū Sefein.

Ethiopia. The history of Ethiopian monasticism has not yet been studied sufficiently. All Ethiopian monasteries recognize the abbot of Dabra Libānos as their head. At this great monastery, to the north of Addis Ababa, the abbot has the title of etshage and has jurisdiction also over the secular clergy. The greatest number of monasteries is in the north of Ethiopia and in Eritrea. Among them is the notable Dabra Bizan, which had great importance in the fourteenth century. In central Ethiopia the principal monastery is Dabra Dimā (Mount Calvary), which has an attached school. In the south the only important one is Dabra Wagag in Assabot. Monastic communities for women are found at times within the confines of the greater monasteries, but in separate buildings, as at Dabra Libānos. Ethiopian monasticism has extended to other countries, including Egypt, Palestine, Lebanon, Cyprus, and Italy, where St. Stephen's Church in Rome is the ancient seat of the Ethiopian College.

Sinai and Palestine. On the Sinai Peninsula near Faran, there was a large colony of monks of the monastery of Raithu. In the eighth or ninth century, the episcopal see of Faran was transferred to the monastery of St. Catherine below Mount SINAI, which enjoyed the protection of the Muslims, Venetians, and the popes because it was the goal of pilgrims from both East and West.

Greek monasteries in Palestine were numerous in the days of the Byzantine Empire. There were also Latin monasteries at Bethlehem and on Mount Olivet. In the Middle Ages the Benedictine monastery at Jerusalem, Sancta Maria Latina (where the discussions concerning the FILIOQUE began) was still extant. The Georgians enjoyed special protection from the mamelukes, who allowed them to construct Georgian monasteries even in the late Middle Ages. The Armenians, in the beginning, were associated with the Greek monasteries, but they soon constructed their own. There are testimonies concerning three monasteries of the Caucasus Albanians. The Copts and Ethiopians also established themselves in the Holy City. In the nineteenth century there was a strong influence of Russians in the Holy Land, and some of their convents for women still function.

Syria. After a notable flowering in the early centuries, Syrian monasticism went into rapid decline. The ruins of Qalat Sem'an around the column of St. Simeon STYLITES (d. 459) reveal large monastic constructions. This place was the object of veneration for Monophysite pilgrims. Almost by way of opposition, the orthodox pilgrims hastened to the column of another of the stylites, St. Simeon the Younger (d. c. 592), on the Mount of Miracles near Antioch. The monasteries on this hill were the scene of bitter conflicts between the Greeks and Georgians in the Middle Ages. Opposite the Mount of Miracles was Black Mountain, a monastery founded in the eleventh century, in which the canonist, Nikon of the Black Mountain (d. c. 1088), lived for some time.

The plains of Iran offered many "deserts" for anchorites from the fourth century on. In the fifth century, an Egyptian named Eugene (Awgin) started a cenobitic monastery modeled on the type founded by St. PACHOMIUS. The Persian monks often occupied themselves with the care of souls. The disciples of St. MARO OF CYR (d. c. 410), who was born near Apamea in Syria, imigrated to Lebanon. The Maronite monks settled chiefly in the "Holy Valley" called Qadisha (extending from the Cedars toward Tripoli) which became filled with hermits and monasteries for both men and women. Several religious orders still work among the Maronites, including the ANTONINES, the Missionaries of Kraim, and various congregations of sisters.

Armenia. Monasticism appeared in Armenia in the fourth century and reached its greatest development between the ninth and the fourteenth centuries. In all of old Armenia, the number of monasteries was approximately 2,000. In the present-day region of Vaspurakan there were nearly 189 monasteries, while Sünik had 150, Artzakh had 126, Karin had 116, Airarat had 52, Turuperan-Taron had 48, and Cilician Armenia had 62. There were a large number of monks here: The monastery of the Mother of God in Karmruk had 300, that of St. John the Baptist in Klagh had 400, and Tathéw, in the time of its glory, had 500. Many of these monasteries still existed before World War I, but they were later abandoned as a result of persecutions. Among the Catholic Armenians, there are two branches of the MECHITARISTS, monks who have motherhouse at Venice, Italy, and Vienna, Austria, and who conduct schools, printing presses, and missions in the Near East.

Georgia. Monasticism in eastern Georgia was initiated by the "Syrian Fathers." In the second half of the sixth century it developed in the western part, especially in Tao-Klargeti (Turkey) in the Čoroki River basin. The monastic center called the Georgian Sinai arose there. Its founder was the archimandrite Gregory of Khanzta (d. c. 861). When he arrived, the only monastery in this region was Opiza, but Gregory founded his monasteries of Khanzta and then Shatberdi, which was not far from Artanugi, the capital of Klargeti. In time, the foundations multiplied, and from these monasteries there emerged the 12 monasteries called (in Georgian literature) simply Atormetni These were founded no later than the ninth century. From Tao-Klargeti came the founders of Iveron on Mount Athos. Some Georgian monks also founded monasteries in Syria, Palestine, and Mount Sinai.

Balkan Countries. Modern Greece has 175 male monasteries but they are sparsely populated. In the famous Meteora complex, only three monasteries are inhabited. Female religious are more numerous here and include those occupying the convent on the island of Tenos near the Marian sanctuary. The community called Zoe (or the Brotherhood of Theologians), founded in 1907, follows the model of modern Latin congregations and engages in works of the apostolate.

In Yugoslavia the first center of monasticism was located around the lake of Ochrid in the ninth century, and the golden period here was in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. The Serbian lauras—also called "imperial" monasteries—enjoyed special privileges. In 1939 there were 166 Orthodox monasteries, with 540 monks, in Yugoslavia. The most famous monasteries are Krushedol (near Karlovtsy), Studenitsa (the Serbian Westminster Abbey), Mileshovo, and Gratchanitsa. In 1197, St. Sava founded the monastery of Chilandari on Mount Athos for his fellow countrymen.

In Romania, monasticism diminished rapidly in the nineteenth century. Statistics for 1857 showed 10,000 monks, but in 1867 there were only 4,851, and in 1893 there were but 2,654. Nuns are more numerous, especially in the convent of Hurezu in the Carpathians. In Bulgaria as well, in the period after World War II, nuns adapted themselves better to difficult circumstances than did the monks. The most important of the male monasteries are in Rila, Batchkovo, Trojan, Pomorie, and Preobraženski.

Russia. Traces of monastic life are found in Russia from the very beginning of Christianity until the end of the tenth century. These were small foundations established by princes, in imitation of the monasteries of Byzantium. In contrast, the famous laura of Pechersky arose, as its chronicle narrates, solely by "the fasts and tears" of the monks. St. Anthony (d. c. 1073) and St. Theodosius (d. 1074) are venerated as its founders. Anthony was a solitary of the type of the Egyptian anchorites and became a monk on Mount Athos. After returning to Kiev, he took up his abode in a cave cut out of a hill. His disciple Theodosius, when he became hegumen (superior), built cells for monks above the cave and sent one of the monks to Constantinople to bring back the rule of the famed Studion monastery in order to introduce the cenobitic life. The Pechersky laura was several times reduced to ruins by the Tartars, but it was reconstructed and became a religious and cultural center. As such, it was a place of pilgrimage frequented by the Russian people. After 1917 it was transformed into an antireligious museum. The monastery was reopened in 1946, but it closed again some time later.

After the Mongol invasion, a new center of religious life arose in the middle of the fourteenth century in the "desert" of the virgin forests of the north, which in the following centuries were populated by hermits. The initiator of this movement was St. SERGIUS OF RADONEZH, who founded the monastery of the Holy Trinity in the province of Moscow. This monastery was closed after the Russian Revolution of 1917, but it was later reopened. Sergius began as an anchorite, but in founding his monastery he introduced the cenobitic rule of the Studites. His laura became the center for other foundations—toward the south in the environs of Moscow, and toward the north in the forests beyond the Volga, in the area called the Russian Thebaid (because of its numerous hermitages and monasteries). Among the more famous of these founders were St. Cyril of Beloozero (d. 1427) and Paul of Obnora (d. 1429). Along the shores of Lake Kuben arose monasteries in imitation of those of Mount Athos, especially that of "Spasso-Kamenny," constructed on rock in honor of the Transfiguration. The monks penetrated even to the Nordic islands of Solovki. Led by St. Sabatios (d. 1435) and St. Zosimus (d. 1478), they established a monastery that became a center of missionary activity and, subsequently, a military fortress.

The second half of the fifteenth century brought a decline in religious discipline to numerous monasteries that had become rich and influential. Trouble arose in the form of heresy and state opposition, but monastic reformers also appeared. The more important of these were Saints Nilus Sorsky (d. 1508) and Joseph Volokolamsky (d. 1515). Nilus promoted a semi-eremitical life in which a few monks in isolated huts (skete) lived lives of extreme poverty, hard work, and prayer. Nilus's monastic rule (ustav) is an ascetic instruction on prayer and control of the affections. He came under the influence of the Hesychastic spirituality of Mount Athos. More than external works, he stressed the internal struggle against evil thoughts.

The ideals of Nilus's contemporary, Joseph, were different. His rule, Duchovnaja gramota, outlined an ideal of cenobitic discipline under obedience to a superior and following a stable rule of life that regulated each moment of the day. The principal virtue of the monk was the perfect observance of assigned duties and the renunciation of one's own will and independent thoughts. The spirit of Joseph's rule prevailed in the Russian monasteries, which later became schools and centers of cultural activity, and often of politics as well. But the defects of this rigid traditionalism and attachment to external formalism brought about a new decadence. A kind of fusion between these two opposing tendencies is found in the rule of St. Cornelius (d. 1537), the founder of a cenobitic monastery in the forests of Komel. His disciples founded the monasteries of the northern Russian regions.

A breath of new spirit was felt in the Russian monasteries with the appearance of the starchestvo in the eighteenth century. The staretz (literally, "old man") was a spiritual father and a guide of souls who, even though not a priest, attracted people to himself because of his experience in the spiritual life, his special gifts, and, above all, his discernment of spirits. The founder of this spiritual renaissance was Paissy Velitchkovsky (d. 1794). While on Mount Athos, he immersed himself in ascetic Greek literature. He went to Moldavia (to Dragomirna, and later to Sekul and Niametz) and organized the translations of spiritual books from the Greek and Latin. Among these books was the Philokalia of NICODEMUS THE HAGIORITE.

The startzy of the monastery of Optina made this center near Kozelsk well known. Here lived Leo Nagolkin (d. 1841), who was especially beloved by the local people. His successor, Marcarius Ivanov (d. 1860), was in contact with the intellectual and literary leaders of Russia of his time. Ambrose Grenkov (d. 1891), a disciple of Macarius, is described by Fëdor DOSTOEVSKI in The Brothers Karamazov. Seraphim of Sarov (d. 1833) led the austere life of a recluse before becoming famous in all of Russia as a thaumaturge, mystic, and director of souls. In 1914, Russia had 1,027 Orthodox monasteries (550 of men and 477 of women), with a total of 94,599 religious (21,300 monks and 73,299 nuns).

In the Ukraine, monastic life was initiated with the laura of Pechersky, which was affiliated with the Russian Orthodox Church. Ukrainian monasticism received a new impetus after its union with the Catholic Church in the Union of Brest in 1596. The Basilian Order of St. Josaphat played a significant role in the subsequent development of the religious life. In Galicia, around the year 1900, a congregation made up of simple peasants appeared. Metropolitan Andriĭ SHEPTYTS'KI gave them, in 1906, a rule modeled on that of the ancient Byzantine rule, and they adopted the name Studites. The first hegumen, or superior was Father Clement Sheptyts'kĭ, the brother of the metropolitan. They were later dispersed, but a small group remains in the West.

SEE ALSO BASILIAN MONASTICISM; BASILIANS (BYZANTINE); CRUSADES; HESYCHASM; ICONOCLASM; JACOBITES (SYRIAN); MARO OF CYR, ST.; MARONITE CHURCH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nabia Abbot, The Monasteries of the Fayyūm (Chicago 1937).

Garabed Amadunì, "Le Rôle historique des hiéromoines arméniens," in Il monachesimo orientale Orientalia Christiana Analecta 153 (Rome 1958) 279–305.

N. Arsenev, "Das Mönchtum und der asketischmystische Weg in der Ostkirche, besonders in Russland," in Der Christliche Osten (Regensburg 1939) 151–210.

Marcu Beza, The Rumanian Church (London 1943).

Robert P. Casey, "Early Russian Monasticism," Orientalia Christiana periodica 19 (1953) 372–423.

Enrico Cerulli, "Gli Abbati di Dabra Libanos, capi del monachismo etiopico, secondo la 'lista rimata'" Orientalia 12 (1943) 226–53; 13 (1944) 137–82; 14 (1945) 143–171.

Enrico Cerulli, "Il monachismo in Etiopia," in Il Monachismo Orientale, Orientalia Christiana Analecta 153 (Rome 1958) 259–278.

Maria Cramer, Das christlichkoptische Agypten einst und heute (Wiesbaden 1959).

Pierre Dib, "Maronite (Église)," Dictionnaire de théologie catholique, edited by Amann Vacant, et al., 15 vols. (Paris 1903–50), 10.1:1–142.

Irénée Doens, "Monastères orthodoxes en Grèce," Irénikon 34 (1961) 346–392.

Hugh G. Evelyn-White, The Monasteries of the Wâdi 'n-Natrûn, 3 vols. (New York 1926–1933).

Andre Guillou, "Le Monastère de la Théotokos au Sinaï," Mélanges d'archéologie et d'histoire 67 (1955) 217–258.

Ernst Honigmann, Patristic Studies (Vatican City 1953).

Harry Middleton Hyatt, The Church of Abyssinia (London 1928).

Ivan Kologriwof, Essai sur la sainteté en Russie (Bruges 1953).

J. Lacombe, "Réorganisation de l'Église serbe," Échos d'Orient 29 (1930) 360–363.

David Marshall Lang, Lives and Legends of the Georgian Saints (London 1956).

Clement Lialine, "Érémitisme En Orient," in Dictionnaire de spiritualité ascétique et mystique: Doctrine et histoire, edited by Marcel Viller, et al. (Paris 1932–), 4.1:936–953.

Derek H. Matthews and Antonio Mordini, The Monastery of Debra Damo, Ethiopia (Oxford 1959).

Otto Friedrich August Meinardus, Monks and Monasteries of the Egyptian Deserts (Cairo 1961).

Il Monachesimo orientale: Atti del convegno di studi orientali, Orientalia Christiana Analecta 153 (Rome 1958).

De Lacy O'Leary, The Ethiopian Church (London 1936).

Jean Olphe-Galliard, "Les Formes du Cénobitism" and "Valeur Ascétique du Cénobitism," in Dictionnaire de spiritualité ascétique et mystique: Doctrine et histoire, edited by Marcel Viller, et al. (Paris 1932–), 2.1:404–416.

Oriente Cattolico (Vatican City 1962). Special topics: "Egypt." (Sacra Congregazione Per Le Chiese Orientali 1974), 91–117.

Malachia Ormanian, The Church of Armenia (London 1955).

Oswald Hutton Parry, Six Months in a Syrian Monastery (London 1895).

Clemens Pujol, De religiosis orientalibus ad normam vigentis iuris (Rome 1957).

Hyacinth Louis Rabino, Le Monastère de Sainte-Catherine du mont Sinaï (Cairo 1938).

Ioannes Rezáč, De monachismo secundum recentiorem legislationem Russicam, Orientalia Christiana Analecta 138 (Rome 1952).

N.F. Robinson, Monasticism in the Orthodox Churches (London 1916).

Marie J. Rouët de Journel, Monachisme et monastères russes (Paris 1952).

Igor Smolitsch, Leben und Lehre der Starzen (Vienna 1936).

Igor Smolitsch, Das altrussische Mönchtum (Würzburg 1940).

Igor Smolitsch, Russisches Mönchtum (Würzburg 1953).

Thomas Špidlík, "Éremites: En Orient," in Dictionnaire d'histoire et de géographie ecclésiastiques, edited by Alfred Baudrillart, et al. (Paris 1912–) 15: 766–771.

Thomas Špidlík, Joseph de Volokolamsk: Un Chapitre de la spiritualité russe, Orientalia Christiana Analecta 146 (Rome 1956).

Matthew Spinka, A History of Christianity in the Balkans (Chicago 1933).

Günther Stökl, "Zur Geschichte des russischen Mönchtums," Jahrbuch für Geschichte Osteuropas 2 (1954): 121–135.

Michael Tarchnišvili, "Il monachesimo georgiano nelle sue origini e nei suoi primi sviluppi," Orientalia Christiana Analecta 153 (1958) 307–319.

E. Tisserant, "Église Nestorienne," in Dictionnaire de théologie catholique, edited by Amann Vacant, et al., 15 vols. (Paris 1903–50), 11.1:157–323.

Siméon Vailhé, "Répertoire alphabétique des monastères de Palestine," Revue de l'Orient Chrétien 4 (1899): 512–542; 5 (1900): 19–48, 272–292.

Marcus Antonius Van Den Oudenrijn, Eine armenische Insel im Abendland (Venice 1940).

Arthur Vööbus, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient, 2 vols. Corpus scriptorum Christianorum orientalium 184, 197 (Louvain 1958–1960).

Arthur Vööbus, ed., Syriac and Arabic Documents Regarding Legislation Relative to Syrian Asceticism (Stockholm 1960).

Rev. Thomas Špidlík SJ
Professor of Eastern Spirituality
Pontifical Oriental Institute, Rome, Italy

Rev. Placid D. Solari OSB
Abbot, Belmont Abbey
Belmont, North Carolina (2010)

MONTI, LUIGI MARIA, BL.

Known also as Aloysius Maria Monti; lay religious, founder of the Congregation of the Sons of the IMMACULATE CONCEPTION; b. July 24, 1825 at Bovisio, Diocese of Milan, Italy; d. October 1, 1900, in Saronno, Varese, Italy; beatified November 9, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Luigi Maria Monti was the eighth of eleven children whose father died when Luigi was twelve years old. To support his mother and younger siblings, Monti learned the trade of wood carving and opened a shop to sell his crafts. After hours, he gathered craftsmen and farmers at his shop to form a prayer group known as the Company of the Sacred Heart of Jesus; the locals called them the Company of Friars. In addition to praying together, this group dedicated itself to living simply and ministering to the poor and sick. They also sought to draw those who had fallen away from the Church back to the dynamism of a living faith. Though not at the time a member of any religious order other than the informal group he assembled in his shop, Monti made a private vow to be consecrated to God when he was twenty-one years old. In 1851, suspected of subversive political activity by townsfolk and the parish priest, members of the group were jailed by the occupying Austrian forces for ten weeks.

Monti drew great inspiration from the Virgin Mary. Beginning in 1851, he spent six years as a novice with the Sons of the Immaculate Mary, studying nursing and ministering to cholera victims. He struggled for many years to discern his specific calling, experiencing long periods of emptiness and confusion. In 1877 Monti founded his own order, the Congregation of the Sons of the Immaculate Conception, whose ministry it was to serve the most desperately ill. Its members willingly walked into the worst of epidemics, working in places that others dared not go and offering their own beds to the sick and dying. Luigi founded small communities throughout this northern region. The men served in hospitals and as traveling nurses to scattered, impoverished farmers. Later, they expanded their mission and founded orphanages. As superior general of the congregation, Monti wrote a rule of life in which ordained and lay brothers shared equally in the rights and responsibilities of the order, a new model of community not characteristic of the consecrated life of that time.

Monti's work required not only courage but perseverance over the course of many years. During times of distressing spiritual darkness, he took encouragement in a vision he had of Jesus and Mary telling him: "Luigi, much indeed will you still have to suffer; other varied and greater battles will you face. Be strong; you will emerge victorious from everything; never lacking to you will be our powerful help. Continue the way you began."

Monti died at the age of seventy-five, nearly blind, completely worn out, and still working for the congregation he founded. Though he was never ordained a priest, he was known as "father" by all those who knew him. In 1961 the healing of Giovanni Luigi Lecle, a farmer from Bosa, Sardinia, was attributed to "Father" Luigi Maria. At his BEATIFICATION Mass in 2003, Pope John Paul II said of Luigi Maria: "For all believers, he is an example of faithfulness to God's call and to the proclamation of the Gospel of charity. He is a model of solidarity towards the needy and of their affectionate entrustment to the Immaculate Virgin."

Feast: October 1.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; SAINTS AND BLESSEDS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Holiness Amid Trials Shines Forth from the New Blesseds," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition, 46 (November 12, 2003): 8–9.

John Paul II, "Beatification of Five Servants of God: Feast of the Dedication of the Lateran Basilica" (Homily, November 9, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20031109_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 16, 2009).

Terry H. Jones, "Blessed Luigi Maria Monti," Patron Saints Index, available from http://saints.sqpn.com/blessed-luigi-maria-monti (accessed November 16, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Luigi Maria Monti (1825–1900)," Vatican Web site, November 9, 2003, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20031109_monti_en.html (accessed November 16, 2009).

Elizabeth L. McCloskey
Ph.D. Candidate
School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

MONTOYA, LAURA, BL.

Founder of the Missionaries of Mary Immaculate and St. CATHERINE OF SIENA; b. May 26, 1874, in Jericó, Antioquia, Colombia; d. October 21, 1949, in Medellín, Colombia; beatified April 25, 2004, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

The second of three children born to Juan de la Crux Montoya and Dolores Upegui, Laura Montoya was only two years old when her father was killed while defending his country, leaving the family in extreme poverty. Feeling orphaned after being sent to live with her grandmother, Montoya began to seek refuge in her relationship with God. This relationship matured as she grew older, and she was especially nourished by meditation on sacred Scripture and the Eucharist.

Though she had no previous formal education, Montoya began training to become an elementary school teacher, and received high marks. When she started teaching in Antioquia, she did not limit her lessons to purely academic subjects, but sought to infuse GOSPEL teaching and Christian values into the classroom. This work became intertwined with her growing desire for the religious life. Her hopes were to become a cloistered Carmelite nun, but she also yearned to spread the Gospel to those who had never known Jesus Christ. She left herself open to following God, ready to renounce her dream if it was His will.

Her evangelization project is best known for its ministry to the Indian populations in South America. She became "an Indian among Indians," recognizing the Indians' inherent human dignity at a time when many did not consider them in these terms. On May 14, 1914, Laura Montoya left Medellín with four other young women to live among the native Indians. She ignored the criticism of the nonindigenous population, and her group became known as the Missionaries of Mary Immaculate and St. Catherine of Siena.

Mother Laura composed several writings for her daughters, outlining their call to serve God among the Indians, as well as to live a life that achieved a proper balance between apostolic and contemplative life. She died on October 21, 1949, in Medellín after a long and painful illness. Her missionary sisters currently work in nineteen countries throughout the Americas, Africa, and Europe.

At the HOMILY of her BEATIFICATION, Pope John Paul II noted that "with deep faith, unlimited hope and great love for Christ," Montoya "sought her own sanctification beginning with love for the Heart of Christ and fidelity to the Church. In this way she lived the motto which she left to her daughters: 'Charity to the point of sacrifice and perseverance until death.'"

Feast: October 21.

SEE ALSO COLOMBIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; LATIN AMERICA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; MISSION IN POSTCOLONIAL LATIN AMERICA; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six Servants of God," (Homily, April 25, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20040425_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 16, 2009).

Carlos E. Mesa, La Madre Laura: Misionera (Medellín, Colombia 1986).

Carlos E. Mesa, Laura Montoya: Una antorcha de Dios en las selvas de América. (Medellín, Colombia 1999).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Laura Montoya Upegui (1874–1949)," Vatican Web site, April 25, 2004, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20040425_montoya_en.html (accessed November 16, 2009).

Alexander Andujar
Alumnus
Saint Leo University (2010)

MONZA, LUIGI, BL.

Parish priest of the ARCHDIOCESE of Milan, founder of the Little Apostles of Charity and La Nostra Famiglia ("Our Family" Association) for disabled children; b. Cislago (Varese), Italy, June 22, 1898; d. Lecco, Italy, September 29, 1954; beatified April 30, 2006, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Luigi Monza was born in northern Italy to a poor farming family. His childhood was marked by hard physical labor during the day and sleepless hours studying during the night. When Monza was a teenager, his father suffered a serious accident, leaving him disabled and bedridden. Because of his father's injury, the family's struggle for daily survival was even more pronounced than for other poor families. Monza entered the seminary at age eighteen but was not ordained a priest until September 1925, when he was twenty-seven, due to the need to help his family and his service in WORLD WAR I (1914–1918).

As a parish priest, he modeled his work after the evangelizing of early Christians. At the HOMILY announcing Luigi Monza's BEATIFICATION in 2006, Cardinal Dionigi Tettamanzi noted that Don Luigi advocated "the ideal of charity of the early Christians, who transformed the world with their courageous and joyful witness of love." Just as the early Christians were persecuted, Luigi Monza was accused of plotting against the local magistrate of Benito Mussolini's fascist regime and was imprisoned for four months shortly after his ordination, which was in 1925. After his imprisonment, he continued his parish work.

In each parish, Don Luigi sought to create communities modeled on the social ideals of the early church, with each Christian committed to the work of serving and loving others: "Christians, each of you must become an artist of souls, and we must paint the beauty of Jesus not on canvas but in souls" (quoted in EWTN 2006). Because holiness is God's work and not the work of any individual, Don Luigi believed holiness was not an impossible ideal, but was "for all times and all places, all states and conditions of life."

In 1937 Don Luigi founded the Secular Institute of the Little Apostles of Charity, a community of consecrated women who would seek to bring the "zeal of the first Christian community" to society. From this group emerged La Nostra Famiglia, or the "Our Family" Association, which was created to meet the needs of disabled and disadvantaged children by promoting their rehabilitation and their dignity. The work of the Little Apostles of Charity, whom Luigi Monza called upon to share the love of Christ with the same fervor as the first Christian community, expanded throughout Italy and into other parts of the world, including Sudan, Brazil, Ecuador, China, Morocco, and Palestine. Although Luigi Monza died of a heart attack in 1954, the continuing work of the Little Apostles of Charity and La Nostra Famiglia is consistent with his notion of the Church not as crusade or patronage or power, but as greatness in service.

Feast: September 29.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Associazione La Nostra Famiglia, "Il Fondatore," available from http://www.lanostrafamiglia.it/fondatore.php (accessed November 16, 2009).

"Beato don Luigi Monza," available from http://www.donluigimonza.it/ (accessed November 16, 2009).

Eternal Word Television Network (EWTN), "Biographies of New Blesseds—2006" (reprinted from L'Osservatore Romano), April 30, 2006, available from http://www.ewtn.com/library/MARY/bios2006.htm (accessed November 16, 2009).

Terry H. Jones, "Blessed Luigi Monza," Patron Saints Index, available from http://saints.sqpn.com/saintl2v.htm (accessed November 16, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Luigi Monza (1898–1954)," Vatican Web site, April 30, 2006, available (in Italian) from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20060430_monza_it.html (accessed November 16, 2009).

Elizabeth L. McCloskey
Ph.D. Candidate
School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

MORE, SIR THOMAS, ST.

Lord Chancellor of England and eminent humanist; born London, February 7, 1477; executed for high treason, London, July 6, 1535. Canonized 1935; made "Patron of Statesmen and Politicians" in 2000.

The exact date of More's birth has been the subject of much discussion, but the latest summation of the evidence (Marc'hadour 1977, pp. 34–41) indicates that 1477, not 1478, is most probably correct. More came from a solidly prospering London family, "not famous, but of honest stock," as he says in his epitaph. His father, John More (d. 1530), was a rising member of the legal profession who seems later to have exerted no little pressure on his son to take up a similar career. More was educated at St. Anthony's school in Threadneedle Street, where Nicholas Holt was master, until he was about twelve, when his father procured his appointment as a page in the household of Cardinal John MORTON, Archbishop of Canterbury and Henry VII's Lord Chancellor. In addition to being an expert canon lawyer, Morton was an astute and flexible politician who had helped to overthrow Richard III and bring Henry VII to the throne. In both his Richard III and Utopia More paid fine tribute to his old patron, and it is indeed difficult to overestimate the importance of the training he received from him. It was while serving in Morton's household that More, according to William Roper, his son-in-law and first biographer, "would suddenly at Christmastide sometimes step in among the players, and never studying for the matter, make a part of his own there presently among them, which made the lookers-on more sport than all the players beside" (Roper [1557] 1935, p. 5). The anecdote reveals More's natural talent for adopting a role, and his tendency toward entering into a situation while yet remaining curiously detached from it. Even when he was only twelve, the world was for him a stage, an insight that must have been appreciated by Morton when he predicted that his young page would prove "a marvelous man" (Roper [1557] 1935, p. 5).

Student Years. The best dates for More's service with Morton are 1489 or 1490 to 1492. In 1492, through Morton's influence, he matriculated at Canterbury College, Oxford, where he remained until 1494. Little is known about More's Oxford years; although he did remark later on the poor student fare, he was always attached to university life and it was perhaps at Oxford that he first met John COLET, William Grocyn, and Thomas LINACRE, all senior members in the circle of English humanists that More later adorned so brilliantly.

In 1494, probably because of parental pressure, More left Oxford to begin the study of law at New Inn. He transferred to Lincoln's Inn on February 12, 1496, and thereafter rose steadily through the ranks of his profession. Yet as More continued his legal studies in London, other interests constantly engaged his attention. It is here that one finds emerging, for the first time in the historical record, some indication of the intense spirituality that was later so fundamental a feature of his personality. Strongly influenced by Colet's purity of life, he seriously considered the possibility of a career in the Church. For about four years (probably 1500 to 1504) he lived with or near the Carthusian monks at the London Charterhouse, where he began the practice, continued throughout his life, of daily prayer, Mass, and penance (such as wearing a hair shirt). More's nature, however, as he gradually discovered for himself, was to seek God through and in the world, not by retiring from it.

Marriage and Early Career. About November 1504 he married Jane Colt, the oldest daughter of John Colt of Netherhall, Essex. Four children were born to them before Jane's death in the summer of 1511: Margaret (1505), Elizabeth (1506), Cecily (1507), and John (1509). By September of 1510, when he became under-sheriff of London, More's competence as a lawyer was beyond question, and his income increased accordingly. Within six weeks of his first wife's death, he married Alice Middleton, a widow some years older than himself, who proved a good stepmother to his children. The family continued to live at The Barge in Bucklersbury until 1524, when More built his "Great House" at Chelsea. Meanwhile, More's oratorical talent, his skill at the bar, and his reputation for justice and fairness brought him a host of clients. He championed the cause of the citizens on many occasions and often represented the guild companies of the city in both domestic and foreign affairs. By 1515 HENRY VIII, whose coronation in 1509 had been hailed by More in a series of Latin poems, had become fully aware of the young lawyer's talents. More's first royal mission, the famous "Utopian embassy" to the Low Countries, followed (between May 7 and October 25, 1515). More had been abroad before in 1508 for a few weeks (in Louvain and Paris), but this was his first real introduction to the international circle of humanists that revolved around the ubiquitous Erasmus. In Flanders, More met Peter Giles and Jerome Busleyden and formed lasting friendships with both. From August 26 to around December 20, 1517, he was again abroad conducting commercial negotiations, and it is about this time that he is first spoken of as in the King's service. It was not until June 21, 1518, however, that he received his first stipend as a royal counselor. On July 23 of that year, he resigned as under-sheriff of London.

Erasmus and the London Humanists. It was during these years that More firmly established himself as a leader among the group of humanists whose activities were then based in London. ERASMUS visited England first in 1499, and he and More immediately became friends. More's first literary works (see below) date from that period, and it was most probably about 1501 that he delivered his lectures on St. Augustine's City of God at Grocyn's church (St. Lawrence's), London. Subsequent visits by Erasmus (1505–1506, 1509–1514), who was rapidly acquiring an international reputation, cemented the friendship between him and More, a bond playfully alluded to in the title of The Praise of Folly (Encomium Moriae), which Erasmus composed at More's house in 1509. More for his part was no doubt instrumental, with Colet, in directing Erasmus toward the great tasks of biblical and patristic scholarship that were to become his life work. Yet Erasmus himself often lamented that More—"England's only genius"—had of necessity to devote so much time to his legal work that little room was left for literature. For most of his life More was to feel this tension between, on the one hand, the literary studies and spiritual devotions so dear to his heart, and, on the other, the endless round of legal business or royal missions.

During these years, More translated Lucian, The Life of Pico della Mirandola, and well over a hundred Greek epigrams on a wide variety of subjects. He wrote his Latin and English versions of The History of King Richard III, which deeply influenced the young SHAKESPEARE, as well as a collection of Latin poems that were unusually original in their treatment of complex political themes, such as political sovereignty and the nature of the best sort of government.

Family Life, Role as Educator. More's devotion to his family is evidenced in many ways, but especially in the letters written to his children and Lady Alice. In a letter to his daughter Meg around 1518, More wrote, "I would make a sacrifice of wealth, and bid adieu to other cares and business, to attend to my children and family" (Selected Letters, p. 109). More considered the education of his children to be of major importance, and Erasmus reported in 1521 that More helped change Erasmus's views on the education of women. More hired tutors and personally supervised their instruction so that his three natural and two adopted daughters could have the same Oxford-level education as he had received. More wanted an education for his children that would furnish them "for the whole scope of human life—which is to have a sound mind in a sound body" (Selected Letters, p. 149). More's views on education are expressed most clearly in his letters to Gonell (1518), to Oxford (1518), and to Dorp (1515), and in his defense of philosophy and liberal education against Martin Luther's criticisms (e.g., Dialogue Concerning Heresies 1.23) (Complete Works, vol. 6, pp. 128–132).

The King's Service. There is every indication that More reached his decision to enter Henry's court only after long and perhaps agonizing meditation. The arguments for and against royal service are dramatized in the first book of Utopia (1516), but More's final choice seems to have been motivated by a call of duty, especially given Thomas WOLSEY's apparently earnest efforts to obtain a universal peace, and given the promise of other English humanists then serving in Henry VIII's court. These included Bishop TUNSTALL, Richard Pace, and Thomas Linacre. More would be able as a member of the council to give advice that, if it did not lead to good, might yet avoid what would otherwise be very bad. Nevertheless, his role as a champion of the people, which had just been illustrated by his intervention on their behalf in the May Day riots of 1517, was of necessity diminished. In addition, the precious time that he had snatched from his legal work for literary study was lost.

More's activities during the next twelve years (1518–1529) centered on the life of the court. He proved an extremely able member of the council, acting on occasion as a secretary who transmitted reports to or from Wolsey and the King, participating in discussions with foreign ambassadors, attending on Henry at such grand events as the Field of the Cloth of Gold in June 1520, and undertaking still another royal mission in 1521 to pursue commercial negotiations with the Hanse diet. Honors were quickly thrust upon him. On May 2, 1521, he became undertreasurer and was knighted. In Parliament, where he had previously served in 1504 and 1510, he was chosen in 1523 Speaker of the House of Commons, in which capacity he gave the first address ever recorded in defense of free speech. The next year saw him appointed high steward of Oxford University, and in 1525 he accepted the same position for Cambridge, becoming also, in October of that year, chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. During the 1520s too, More participated in the campaign against Lutheran literature, which was beginning to flood England. In 1523 he had written against Martin LUTHER on the King's behalf; and on March 7, 1528, he was authorized by Cuthbert Tunstall, Bishop of London, to read Protestant books in order to refute them in English. From 1529 until early 1533 More gave much of his time to this polemical work against William TYNDALE, Simon Fish, Robert Barnes, and other early English Protestants.

Henry VIII's "Great Matter." By the time More's controversial English-language writings began to pour from the press, signs of change were beginning to appear in England. Henry VIII had consulted More as early as 1527 with regard to his proposed divorce from CATHERINE OF ARAGON, and after a long study of the problem, More had told the king that he could not support his case. Henry then promised to use other men in dealing with his "great matter," as it now came to be called. More thus remained aloof from the long series of negotiations that began in earnest after Wolsey's great embassy to France, with More in his entourage, in the summer of 1527. When Henry's case finally came to trial in the summer of 1529, with Lorenzo CAMPEGGIO and Wolsey serving as papal judges, More was in France negotiating the Peace of Cambrai (during August) with his friend Tunstal. The London trial ended in a stalemate when Campeggio prorogued the court. Wolsey, unable to gratify the King's wishes, was in disgrace (Chambers, pp. 232–34).

Lord Chancellor. More returned to England at the end of August. On October 25, 1529, he replaced Wolsey as Lord Chancellor, and shortly afterward he wrote to Erasmus: "I realize that this post involves the interests of Christendom." What those interests were he revealed on November 3 in his opening speech to the famous Long Parliament (1529–1536), in which he criticized Wolsey's wars of aggression as working against the "unity and quiet of Christendom" while neglecting "reform in church and state"—wars that Henry VIII had himself championed from his earliest days as king (Guy, p. 113). Peace and unity within Christendom and within England were More's greatest concerns, as he expressed in the epitaph for his tombstone, which he wrote and had chiseled in stone by June 1533, within a year of his resignation. In what R.W. Chambers called a "brief biography" that "summarized the whole meaning" of More's career (Guy, p. 233), More gave special emphasis to the role he played in achieving peace within Christendom: "In that place [Cambrai, France] he witnessed, in the capacity of ambassador, to his great joy, the renewal of a peace treaty between the supreme monarchs of Christendom and the restoration of a long-desired peace of the world" (Selected Letters, p. 181). Then immediately follows a prayer, italicized and placed as a separate paragraph in the text, and indented on his tombstone: "May heaven confirm this peace and make it a lasting one" (Selected Letters, p. 181).

More's two-and-a-half-year tenure in the realm's highest office has been the subject of much controversy. More staunchly opposed what he called "seditious heresy," a grave danger to peace that he saw evidenced in the slaughter of 60,000 to 100,000 peasants in Germany during the summer of 1525 (Complete Works, vol. 7, p. 149; vol. 8, pp. 29–33; vol. 9, p. 162; vol. 6, pp. 369–72). But More's major responsibilities as Lord Chancellor were judicial, and as legal historian John Guy has shown, More handled in Chancery an average of 912 cases per year as compared to an annual average of 535 cases that the industrious and innovative Wolsey handled. Although more than 4,000 cases, on file in the Public Record Office, were tried during his tenure, most attention has focused on More's political involvements during his thirty-one months in office. As it became increasingly obvious that Henry would break with Rome to wed Anne Boleyn, More's counsel was sought less and less. On May 15, 1532, the clergy made a formal submission to the King; the next day More resigned, pleading ill health, which was in fact true.

Retirement and a New Danger. For the year after his retirement, More was able to live at Chelsea, in relatively modest circumstances, continuing those devotional and ascetic practices that he had loved throughout his life. A new danger arose, however, which led More to publish his Apology (April 1533) and The Debellation of Salem and Bizance (October 1533) within six months of each other. Their success in countering Henry VIII and Cromwell's political scheme may have been the ultimate reason for the decision to imprison More in early 1534. Of course, he was also absent from Anne's coronation on June 1, 1533, telling his friends that though he "might be devoured, he would never be deflowered" (Roper [1557] 1935, p. 59).

The new danger was Cromwell's plan to use parliamentary statutes to make the Church subordinate to the English government's jurisdiction. The groundwork was prepared, most likely by seventy-two-year-old Christopher St. German, in an anonymous publication by the King's printer titled A Treatise Concerning the Division between the Spirituality and the Temporality. This book accused the Church of causing division and unrest in England, and its anonymous author called for giving the government authority over the Church as a means to achieve peace. Taking advantage of the alleged anonymity of St. German, More wrote a devastating critique of Henry and Cromwell's most important propagandist, referring to the author as the "Pacifier," while showing that he intended the very opposite (Complete Works, vol. 9, p. xl). In September 1533, St. German published his response, Salem and Bizance. More considered this second anonymous work (also published by the King's printer) so threatening that in October he published a 230-page reply: The Debellation of Salem and Bizance. In January, King Henry began insisting that More be imprisoned.

More knew indeed what was in store for him; the recently discovered fact that his Treatise on the Passion, once thought to have been written after his imprisonment, was begun in early 1534 indicates the foresight with which he was preparing himself. Pressure was soon generated from the royal court to make him acquiesce in the King's new title as head of the Church. Given More's European reputation and his position as the most prominent layman in the realm, it was impossible for Henry to proceed without his submission. Various attempts were made by Thomas CROMWELL, the King's new minister, to implicate him in treasonable activities, but More resolutely refuted these charges. The affair of Elizabeth BARTON, the so-called "Holy-Maid of Kent" who had seen visions prophesying ruin for Henry, and who was executed in April 1534, was used against More by Cromwell—but More quickly pointed out that he had refused to discuss the King's business with her.

On April 12, 1534, More was cited to appear before the commissioners at Lambeth to swear to the Act of Succession and to take the Oath of Supremacy. More was willing to accept the succession but refused the oath. On April 17, together with Bishop John FISHER, he was committed to the Tower.

Trial and Execution. More's real trial then began in earnest, although the formal legal proceedings against him were not conducted until July 1535. For about a year his family was permitted to visit him, and he was allowed to have writing materials and books. It was at this time that he wrote his spiritual masterpiece, A Dialogue of Comfort against Tribulation. But when Cromwell and Thomas CRANMER's interrogations began on April 30, 1535, these privileges were gradually withdrawn. The separation from his wife and children was one of More's greatest agonies, and it was made all the more poignant by the fact that they did not seem to understand the reasons for his refusal to take the oath—and, before his conviction, More swore that he would reveal his conscience to no one. Thus he consistently denied, during his interrogations, that he had acted maliciously in refusing to answer. Again and again efforts were made to entrap him either into submission or into uttering words that could be construed as treasonable. But More was too expert a lawyer and too resolutely confirmed in his knowledge of himself to be caught by such ruses. Finally, on July 1, 1535, he was convicted of treason on the perjured evidence of Sir Richard Rich, who had recently been made the King's General Solicitor. When the verdict was delivered, More at last uttered his mind in a great speech, declaring that he had all the councils of Christendom and not just the council of one realm to support him in the decision of his conscience. He was returned to the Tower until July 6, when, about 9 a.m., he went to his death. Henry had commuted his sentence (hanging, drawing, and quartering) to beheading. Throughout his imprisonment, More bore with notable patience not only his isolation and cold, damp conditions, but also kidney stones and often severe leg and chest cramps. More died on the scaffold, after jesting with his jailer and his executioner, affirming that he died "the king's good servant, and God's first" (Harpsfield, p. 266). Simply put, his death resulted directly from his belief that no lay ruler could have jurisdiction over the Church of Christ.

More's Relics and Acknowledged Saintliness. After his execution More's head replaced that of Fisher (executed on June 22) on London Bridge. It was later preserved by his daughter, Margaret, and now lies in the Roper vault at St. Dunstan's, Canterbury. His body was buried in the chapel of St. Peter ad Vincula in the Tower. A number of More's possessions (listed in T.E. Bridgett's Life) have been at Stonyhurst College, although the most valuable ones, such as More's seal as undersheriff

Sir Thomas More's Fairwell to His Daughter. More was martyred on July 6, 1535. He was accused of high treason against the King of England. © FINE ART PHOTOGRAPHIC LIBRARY/CORBIS and a gold reliquary cross, are now on loan to the British Museum. The Eyston-More family (East Hendred, Wantage, Berkshire) possesses More's staff and drinking cup. His hair shirt is held in Syon Abbey by the Bridgettine Nuns in South Brent, Devon, for the Diocese of Plymouth. More's Book of Hours, into which he wrote an English prayer while imprisoned in the Tower, is in the Beinecke Library at Yale University; the autograph manuscript of his Expositio Passionis, his most substantial literary relic, is in the library of the Royal College of Corpus Christi, Valencia, Spain.

More's death was lamented throughout Europe, and so powerful was the memory of his personality that a whole school of biographers wrote his life in the late sixteenth century. His saintliness was affirmed by this group, but the movement toward canonization was long and arduous, for his cause was linked with that of other English martyrs from the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, and Elizabeth I. In 1640 Pope Urban VIII created a commission to study evidence on these martyrs, but it was not until 1855 that the cause was brought forward by Canon John Morris as postulator. Leo XIII beatified More on December 29, 1886. In the early 1930s more than 170,000 signatures were gathered requesting canonization from Pius XI. The movement culminated with a papal decree of February 10, 1935, which dispensed with the proved miracles required in the canonical procedure; canonization took place on May 19. More is commonly adopted as the patron of Catholic lawyers and of university students, but on October 31, 2000, in response to a worldwide petition, John Paul II issued a proclamation naming More the patron of statesmen and politicians.

Afterfame. A vital part of the influence of St. Thomas More came through the school of More. A significant part of the thought and letters of the early Tudor period bears the impress of More's ideas and character and, after 1535, reflects the widening significance of his life and action and eventual martyrdom. It is in and through such diverse men as John HEYWOOD, William RASTELL, and Sir Thomas Elyot that the influence of More—a force as yet unmeasured in any fullness—is initially to be detected. Yet the influence of More and his afterfame are scarcely to be separated, and both must be studied together with his literary name.

Utopia. More's most famous work is the Utopia (1516), which has been a model or ultimate source of innumerable utopias and dystopias, from Francis Bacon's New Atlantis (1626) to those of Aldous Huxley and George Orwell in the twentieth century. It was written during the closing sessions of the Fifth Lateran Council (1512–1517) and published on the eve of Luther's posting of his ninety-five theses. Utopia draws upon More's experience as a young devotee of classical and other studies at Oxford and in London, as a law student in Lincoln's Inn, and, after several years living among the London Carthusians, as a father and husband, as a practicing lawyer who lectured in the Inns and achieved preeminence as legal counsel for the city of London, as a skilled arbitrator, and as one experienced in trade and diplomatic missions. But above all Utopia is a humanistic work that manages to subsume interests that in lesser minds might have been compartmentalized; its larger meaning is best appreciated when considered in relation to humanistic grapplings with the pressing problems of political theory and government. Utopia is written in that form closest to the humanist's mind and heart, the dialogue, in imitation of Plato, Cicero, and Augustine. In book 1, Raphael Hythloday argues for the failure of contemporary England against the backdrop of debate with Thomae Mori about whether a humanist should serve his prince. Hythloday's dramatic monologue in book 2 arises as his last argument in that debate. Utopia is presented as a real country, and its geography and political and social organizations are tersely described; its educational and religious practices and beliefs are then presented in greater detail. After touching on such matters as household management, conduct of war, social customs, education, and religion, Hythloday vehemently argues that private property, money, and ultimately pride are the root of social ills. The narrator (More) then briefly concludes by indicating that he considers many of Utopia's customs and institutions to be absurd, and that many features are to be wished for rather than expected. This humanistic dialogue has occasioned literary judgments that range from considering Utopia a jeu d'esprit (thus failing to understand its context and to appreciate its underlying seriousness) to literal readings by Kautsky and others who, failing to understand its form and tone, saw the work as a proclamation of revolt against medieval feudalism or nascent bourgeois materialism and as a program for socialistic measures, communism, or the like. As yet, no critical consensus has emerged.

Utopia. This woodcut image, dating back to 1518, depicts St. Thomas More's idea of Utopia.

Other Latin Works. In order to appraise More's reputation on the Continent as one of the foremost Latinists of his century, his other Latin writings, in particular his Latin poems, his translations of Lucian, his Ricardi Tertii, his Latin letters, and his De Tristitia Christi must be included with his acknowledged Latin masterpiece, Utopia. Such an overview would establish his rank with BEDE, JOHN OF SALISBURY, and later John MILTON, as one of the greatest Latinists in the long range of English literary history.

More's English Writings. More's works in English also have served as models. More is credited as the inventor of such terms as utopia, ignominy, pretext, accelerate, accommodate, anxiety, and luster, and recognized for having given new forms or metaphorical meanings to hundreds of other words, such as integrity and culture. His biography of Richard III has been called the first English historical work to be written after classical modes and models—and thus the first humanistic English history. It is a great achievement, in both its Latin and English versions, and the simultaneous composition of such a literary work in two languages is itself rare. More's biography of Richard shaped Shakespeare's dramatic rendering, and has controlled the English conception of this monarch down to contemporary times. The controversial writings, largely in English, have yet to be studied fully and in depth, despite the extensive commentary in the Yale Complete Works; similarly, much work remains to be done if we are to understand their influence on later writers of the Reformation. Such books as John JEWEL's Apology (1562) inevitably look back to More's work, as does much of Richard HOOKER, and the controversy between More and St. German is recapitulated in the controversy between Cosin and Morice in the 1590s. Even now, it is difficult to appreciate how much of later Tudor controversies was fought on ground chosen or seized by More and Tyndale.

A significant part of the afterfame of More has been, appropriately, in the theater, although only two plays about More are at all well known. Much critical attention has been given to the Elizabethan play Sir Thomas More, because it seems that Shakespeare is one of the five London playwrights who collaborated on this wholly praiseworthy presentation of More, a presentation that was never approved by Queen Elizabeth I's government censor. Robert Bolt's A Man for All Seasons has eclipsed all earlier attempts to put Thomas More on the stage and has had a remarkable success in the theater and as a school text since its London production in 1960. A film version of Bolt's play, released in 1966, was honored with six Academy Awards.

Feast: June 22.

SEE ALSO ACT OF SUPREMACY (1534); ANGLICANISM; CHURCH AND STATE; CHURCH AND STATE (CANON LAW); ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES, MARTYRS OF; ENGLAND, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; GELASIUS I, POPE, ST.; HENRY VIII, KING OF ENGLAND; MORE, SCHOOL OF; UTOPIA AND UTOPIANISM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The fifteen-volume edition of the Yale Complete Works of St. Thomas More (New Haven and London 1963–1997), together with Elizabeth Rogers's Correspondence of Sir Thomas More (Princeton, N.J. 1945) and Selected Letters, rev. ed. (New Haven 1967), are now the standard works for scholars. The sixteenth-century biographies of the More school include William Roper's The Lyfe of Sir Thomas Moore [sic], Knighte, edited by Elsie Vaughan Hitchcock (London [1557] 1935); Nicholas Harpsfield's The Life and Death of Sir Thomas More, edited by Elsie Vaughan Hitchcock and R.W. Chambers (Oxford, U.K. [1557] 1932); the anonymous "Ro. Ba."'s Lyfe of Syr Thomas More, Sometymes Lord Chancellor of England, edited by Elsie Vaughan Hitchcock and Philip E. Hallett (London [1598] 1950); Thomas Stapleton's The Life and Illustrious Martyrdom of Sir Thomas More, translated by Philip E. Hallett (London [1588] 1928); and Cresacre More's The Life of Sir Thomas More, edited by Joseph Hunter (London 1828). The first of the modern biographies is T.E. Bridgett's Life and Writings of Blessed Thomas More (London 1891). Major biographies of the twentieth century include R.W. Chambers's Thomas More (London 1935) and Peter Ackroyd's Thomas More (London 1998). The religious elements in More's life are emphasized in E.E. Reynolds's Saint Thomas More (New York 1953) and The Field Is Won (London 1968), Andrés Vázquez de Prada's Sir Tomás Moro (Madrid 1963), Gerard Wegemer's Thomas More: A Portrait of Courage (Princeton, N.J. 1995), and James Monti's King's Good Servant but God's First (San Francisco 1997). The More iconography is excellently handled in Stanley Morison's The Likeness of Thomas More, edited by Nicolas Barker (New York 1964). The most comprehensive bibliography for the early period is R.W. Gibson's St. Thomas More: A Preliminary Bibliography (New Haven, Conn. 1961). For works after 1750, see Frank and Majie Padberg Sullivan's Moreana (Kansas City, Mo. 1946), Michael D. Wentworth's The Essential Sir Thomas More: An Annotated Bibliography of Major Modern Studies (New York 1995), and Albert J. Geritz's Thomas More: An Annotated Bibliography of Criticism, 1935–1997 (Westport, Conn., and London 1998). The periodical Moreana. (1963–) published in Angers, France, devotes its triannual issues to new work on More and his circle. For his public career and for a response to criticisms leveled against More, see John Guy's Public Career of Thomas More (Brighton, U.K., and New Haven, Conn. 1980) and his Thomas More (Oxford, U.K., 2000), as well as Gerard Wegemer's Thomas More on Statesmanship (Washington, D.C. 1996). Other important works are: E.E. Reynolds's The Trial of St Thomas More (London 1964), edited by Richard Standish Sylvester, Germain Marc'hadour's Essential Articles for the Study of Thomas More (Hamden, Conn. 1977), J.J. Scarisbrick's Henry VIII (London 1968), Richard Rex's Henry VIII and the English Reformation (London 2006), Brian Gogan's The Common Corps of Christendom: Ecclesiological Themes in the Writings of Sir Thomas More (Leiden, Netherlands 1982), and Germain Marc'hadour's The Bible in the Works of St. Thomas More, 5 vols. (Nieuwkoop, Netherlands 1969–1971).

Richard Standish Sylvester
Associate Professor of English
Yale University

Richard J. Schoeck
Professor of English, St. Michael's College
University of Toronto

Gerard B. Wegemer
Professor, Department of English
University of Dallas (2010)

MOREAU, BASIL ANTHONY, BL.

Religious founder; b. Laigné-en-Belin (Mayenne), France, February 11, 1799; d. Le Mans (Sarthe), France, January 20, 1873; beatified by Pope BENEDICT XVI, September 15, 2007.

Basil Antoine Marie Moreau was born into a large and pious family, the son of a country wine merchant. After attending the local College of Château-Gonthier, he studied at St. Vincent's Major Seminary in Le Mans. After his ordination in 1821, he served in the Diocese of Le Mans before spending a year at St. Sulpice Seminary in Paris. It was there that he built the relationships that would have a great impact on his future.

His time in Paris was cut short when he was called home in 1823. At that time he was put to work in St. Vincent's Major Seminary as professor, vice-rector, and spiritual director. He also taught philosophy at the minor seminary in Tessé.

Moreau played a leading role in the movement to restore freedom for Catholic education in France by weakening governmental monopoly in the field. The Auxiliary Priests of Le Mans came to exist for this cause by the vision of Fr. James Francis Dujarié. The group's mission was strengthened by Moreau's organizational efforts in 1833. In 1835 he was asked by Bishop Jean-Baptiste Bovier to assist the Congregation of the Brothers of St. Joseph, a community of teachers also started by Dujarié. By 1837 Moreau decided to combine the two orders into one brotherhood, establishing the Congregation of Holy Cross. He often found himself in disagreement with Bouvier regarding the congregation's direction and administration, which may explain why Rome did not recognize it until 1854, after Bouvier's death.

In 1841 Moreau founded the MARIANITES OF HOLY CROSS. The order for women was established to provide domestic services for the schools run by the Holy Cross Congregation. Eventually, the scope of their work broadened to include missionary work in the United States and Canada, where they established high schools and colleges, including the University of Notre Dame. The Congregation of Sisters of the Holy Cross and of the Seven Dolors, which developed from the Marianites, also regard Moreau as their founder.

He is also the founder of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd in Le Mans. He was deputed by Bishop Philippe-Marie-Thérèse-Guy Carron to establish a convent there, and it was made official on May 3, 1833. This project involved him in controversy with St. Maria de Sainte Euphrasie PELLETIER regarding its dependence on the community in Angers.

The college that he opened in Le Mans, even before the Falloux Law, was one of the first Catholic colleges to receive full teaching rights. Moreau started other colleges throughout France and published pedagogical works. His love for missions led him to extend the work of his religious foundations to Italy, Poland, India, Canada, and the United States. Dissension within these foundations clouded his last years.

He died in 1873 and was buried in the cemetery at Sainte-Croix until 1983, when his remains were transferred to the church of the Holy Cross motherhouse. The cause for his BEATIFICATION was introduced in 1946, and it was considered by the Vatican's Congregation for the Causes of Saints in 1955. The miracle attributed to his INTERCESSION took place in 1948, when a Canadian woman, suffering from pleuritis of one lung, was healed. The Decretum super scripta in Moreau's beatification process was issued in 1961. On April 12, 2003, Pope JOHN PAUL II declared him Venerable. His beatification Mass took place on September 15, 2007, at St. Julian Cathedral in Le Mans. The homily, delivered by Cardinal José Saraiva Martins, stressed Moreau's missionary activity and the good works of the orders he established.

Feast: January 20.

SEE ALSO DIRECTION, SPIRITUAL; HOLY CROSS, CONGREGATION OF; HOLY CROSS, CONGREGATION OF SISTERS OF THE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Bl. Basil Anthony Mary Moreau (1799–1873)," L'Osservatore Romano (September 19, 2007): 10.

Étienne Catta and Tony Catta, Basil Anthony Mary Moreau, translated by Edward L. Heston, 2 vols. (Milwaukee, Wis. 1955).

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Rito di Beatificazione del Venerabile Servo di Dio Basilio Antonio Maria Moreau, Sacerdote E Fondatore Della Congregazione Della Santa Croce, Omelia del Cardinale José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, September 15, 2007, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20070915_beatif-moreau_it.html (accessed November 9, 2009).

Gerald M.C. Fitzgerald, C.S.C., Juxta Crucem: The Life of Basil Anthony Moreau (New York 1937), reprinted in 2008.

Gary MacEóin, Father Moreau: Founder of Holy Cross (Milwaukee, Wis. 1962), reprinted in 2007.

Very Rev. Edward Heston CSC
Procurator and Postulator General Congregation of Holy Cross, Rome, Italy

Sheila Marie Kirbos
Independent Researcher
Silver Spring, Md. (2010)

MOTHER TERESA OF CALCUTTA, BL.

Baptized Gonxha (in English, Agnes) Bojaxhiu, foundress of the MISSIONARIES OF CHARITY, teacher, social worker, Nobel Peace Prize laureate; b. Shkup, Albania, in the Ottoman Empire (now Skopje, the capital of the Republic of Macedonia), August 26, 1910; d. Calcutta (Kolkata), India, September 5, 1997; beatified October 19, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Gonxha Bojaxhiu was one of five children of a middle-class family. Her father Nikola, a grocer, died in 1919, and her mother, Dronda, in 1968. At the age of eighteen, Gonxha joined the Sisters of Loreto with the intention of serving in the missions. En route to India, she spent two months in Ireland, studying English. When she entered the novitiate in 1929 at Darjeeling in the foothills of the Himalayas, she became known as Sr. Teresa. Professed in 1931, she was sent to teach at St Mary's School for Girls in Calcutta.

On September 10, 1946, while riding the train to Darjeeling, Sr. Teresa experienced "a second calling," a vocation to serve the poor of Calcutta. In August 1948, she left the Sisters of Loreto with the blessing of her superiors and the permission of the archbishop of Calcutta to live in the slums of Matijhil. She donned the sari and applied for citizenship in her adopted country. Teresa's initial effort was to organize dispensaries and outdoor schools where she fed, clothed, and taught poor children. The women, including some of her former students whom she enlisted as volunteers to assist in the work, became the nucleus of the Missionaries of Charity. In 1950 the order received canonical approval from church authorities.

In 1952 Mother Teresa opened the first of many hospices for the dying. In 1957 she founded a leper colony called Shanti Nagar (Town of Peace) near Asansol, India. Under her guidance, the Missionaries of Charity established numerous centers, where they ministered to the aged, lepers, cripples, AIDS victims, and the dying. In 1963 the Indian government gave her the Padmashri (Lord of the Lotus) Award for her services. As the Missionaries of Charity expanded their ministry to other countries, Mother Teresa's reputation spread throughout the world. In recognition of her work, Pope PAUL VI awarded her the first Pope JOHN XXIII Peace Prize in 1971, and she received the Nobel Prize for Peace in 1979. Upon accepting the Nobel honor, she said, "I choose the poverty of our poor people. But I am grateful to receive [the Nobel] in the name of the hungry, the naked, the homeless, of the crippled, of the blind, of the lepers, of all those people who feel unwanted, unloved, uncared-for throughout society, people that have become a burden to society and are shunned by everyone."

The sisters continued every six years to reelect her as major superior until early 1997 when, because of her rapidly failing health, they acceded to her wish to step down. In March they elected Nepal-born Sr. Nirmala to head the order. Surrounded by sisters of the community, Mother Teresa died peacefully on September 5, 1997. On September 13, they buried her in a simple white marble tomb in the motherhouse of the Missionaries of Charity. In reminiscing about Mother Teresa some weeks after her death, Pope John Paul II, who had met with her on several occasions, said, "I hope she will be a saint." Eighteen months later, he dispensed with the normal five-year waiting period and allowed the archbishop of Calcutta to initiate the formal process for BEATIFICATION. The rite took place on October 19, 2003.

Critics argue that Bl. Mother Teresa's charitable work was motivated by a desire to control the poverty community and increase the Roman Catholic constituency; some controversy surrounds a miracle attributed to her intervention. However, the elevation of a woman who lived her faith and beliefs proudly and in full view of the international community was greeted with almost universal approval by Roman Catholics. Indeed, she is considered a devoted advocate for the poor and powerless by many outside the faith.

Introducing her at the United Nations in 1985, Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuéllar called her "the most powerful woman in the world." Pope John Paul II said Bl. Mother Teresa was a reminder that "the evangelizing mission of the Church passes through charity" and that she "had chosen to be not just the least but to be the servant of the least." Referring to a years' long test of her faith, the pope noted that the "harsh spiritual trial led her to identify herself more ... closely with those whom she served each day." He encouraged the faithful to "follow generously and courageously in the footsteps of this authentic disciple of Christ" and reminded them that "on the path of charity, Mother Teresa walks at your side."

The Poorest of the Poor. Bl. Mother Teresa, a 1979 Nobel Peace Prize recipient, is shown here holding a young boy from a Catholic orphanage in Calcutta. © BETTMANN/CORBIS

Feast: September 5.

SEE ALSO India, Christianity in; Religious (Men and Women).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

James Brooke, "Mother Teresa Is Honored at U.N Ceremony," New York Times, October 27, 1985, available from http://www.nytimes.com/1985/10/27/world/mother-teresa-is-honored-at-un-ceremony.html (accessed October 6, 2009).

Eileen Egan and Kathleen Egan, eds., Blessed Are You: Mother Teresa and the Beatitudes (San Francisco 1992).

Christian Feldman, Mother Teresa: Love Stays, translated by Peter Heinegg (New York 1998).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Mother Theresa of Calcutta: World Mission Sunday" (Homily, October 19, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20031019_mother-theresa_en.html (accessed October 5, 2009).

John Paul II, "Address of John Paul II to the Pilgrims Who Had Come to Rome for the Beatification of Mother Teresa" (October 20, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/speeches/2003/october/documents/hf_jp-ii_spe_20031020_pilgrims-mother-teresa_en.html (accessed October 6, 2009).

Mother Teresa, "Nobel Lecture," Nobel Foundation Web site, December 11, 1979, available from http://nobelprize.org/nobel_prizes/peace/laureates/1979/teresa-lecture.html (accessed November 22, 2009).

Mother Teresa, Mother Teresa: Come Be My Light—The Private Writings of the "Saint of Calcutta," edited by Brian Kolodiejchuk (New York 2007).

Malcolm Muggeridge, Something Beautiful for God: Mother Teresa of Calcutta (New York 1971).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Mother Teresa of Calcutta (1910–1997)," Vatican Web site, October 19, 2003, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20031019_madre-teresa_en.html (accessed October 5, 2009).

Kathryn Spink, Mother Teresa: A Complete Authorized Biography (San Francisco 1997).

Rev. Berard L. Marthaler OFMConv
Professor of Religious Education
The Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C.

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York, New York (2010)

Axis Leaders. Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini are shown here riding together in a car in Munich, Germany, 1940. NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION (NARA)

MUSSOLINI, BENITO

Italian prime minister and Fascist leader; b. Predappio, Italy, July 29, 1883; executed in Milan on April 28, 1945.

When Benito Mussolini appeared on the Italian political scene in the early years of the twentieth century, public debate still revolved around issues left unresolved by the risorgimento, the process of national unification that led to the forcible seizure of ROME by the Italian army on September 20, 1870. With that seizure, the city that had been the capital of the Papal States for nearly a thousand years became the capital of the newly independent Kingdom of Italy. Protesting that he was a prisoner in the VATICAN, Pope PIUS IX (1846–1878) refused to recognize the Italian state, called the occupation of Rome an act of depredation, and urged Catholics to boycott the Italian state. Italian patriots saw the situation differently, however. For them, the occupation was an act of liberation that gave the new nation its natural capital.

For both sides, however, more was at stake than territory. The international role of the Church, the right of free speech, freedom of religion, financial compensation for seized property, payment of clerical salaries, the validity of religious marriages, clerical access to the classroom, and the role of religious instruction in public education were also a part of what came to be known as the ROMAN QUESTION. This debate roiled Italian politics for almost sixty years, before being settled under the one-man rule of Benito Mussolini.

The Young Mussolini. There was little in Mussolini's family background to suggest his eventual rise to prominence and power. He was born on July 29, 1883, in the village of Predappio, in the Romagna region of northern Italy, into a family of modest means. His father, Alessandro Mussolini (1854–1910), was a blacksmith by trade and a political radical active in the politics of the Romagna region. His mother, Rosa Maltoni (1858–1905), an elementary school teacher and observant Catholic, provided economic security and bourgeois respectability. Benito was an intelligent and inquisitive child, but he was not a good student.

When he was nine, Mussolini's parents transferred him from the school where his mother taught to a public school in the nearby town of Predappio, where his unruly behavior landed him in frequent trouble. He was then sent to a school run by the Salesian fathers in the town of Faenza, but the move only made matters worse. The boy resented the strict discipline, found the classes boring, and was humiliated for having to take his meals at a table set aside for the lowest-paying students. A knife attack on a fellow student led to his expulsion. He fared better at a secondary school in Forlimpopoli, which he attended from 1894 to 1901, when he graduated with respectable grades and a diploma as an elementary school teacher.

After landing a precarious job as a substitute teacher, Mussolini caused a scandal by carrying on an affair with a married woman. He left the teaching profession for good in June 1902. The following month he left for Switzerland, where he led a hand-to-mouth existence until December 1904, when he returned to Italy to fulfill his military obligation. It was in Switzerland that he discovered his talent as a public speaker and organizer by proselytizing for the Socialist Party among Italian emigrant workers. He also read widely, addressed rallies, wrote for radical publications, and registered as a student at the University of Lausanne. He registered as a student in the faculty of social sciences but attended classes only sporadically. He did sit in on several lectures delivered by the renowned sociologist Vilfredo Pareto (1848–1923), whose critique of liberal politics made a lasting impression on the young radical. Of more immediate use was the relationship that he struck up with the Russian socialist Angelica Balabanoff (1878–1965), who helped him find work, introduced him to other activists, and served as a political mentor.

The leftist politics of the young Mussolini were a mixture of the old and the new. The new themes were those of wealth redistribution and class warfare embraced by the Italian Socialist Party, to which the young man felt irresistibly drawn. The older themes were legacies of the Risorgimento, including anticlericalism. Mussolini's first public speech, delivered in February 1901, was mostly a diatribe against the clergy. In 1903, living in Switzerland in self-imposed political exile to avoid the Italian military draft, Mussolini often ridiculed religion and belief in the existence of God as popular superstitions. In 1909 he published a serial novel titled Claudia Particella, l'amante del cardinale (Claudia Particella, the Cardinal's Mistress), which revisited the well-worn cliché of clerical sexual misbehavior. In 1913 he published a more ambitious historical study entitled Giovanni Huss il veridico (John Huss the Truthful), which condemned the papacy for its persecution of the medieval Czech religious reformer.

Unlike the free thinkers and Freemasons who made anticlericalism their ideological weapon of choice, Mussolini turned quickly toward trendier intellectual concerns. Friedrich Nietzsche's writings made a strong impression on him, as did those of Georges Sorel and the revolutionary syndicalists intent on reviving the flagging revolutionary élan of socialism. The image that he cultivated as a new type of revolutionary leader paved the way for his move toward the top of the Partito Socialista Italiano, and in 1913 he was appointed editor of the party's national newspaper Avanti! A year later, Mussolini greeted the outbreak of World War I as a potentially liberating event. But because he was at odds with the party line, which favored Italian neutrality in the conflict, he was expelled from the party. He then launched his own newspaper Il Popolo d'Italia, and he campaigned for Italian intervention, promising "War Today, Revolution Tomorrow."

Mussolini was also at odds with the Catholic hierarchy and Pope BENEDICT XV (1914–1922), who spoke out against Italian intervention in the war. Mussolini refrained from attacking the pope while Italy remained neutral, on the grounds that the pope was only doing his Christian duty by calling for peace, but he took a different approach once Italy went to war in May 1915. From then on, he called on all Italians, socialists and Catholics included, to support the war effort. In August 1917 the pope proposed a peace plan that was similar in many ways to U.S. President Woodrow Wilson's Fourteen Points, and he condemned the war as a useless slaughter. In response, Mussolini denounced the pope as deceitful, pro-Austrian, and anti-Italian. His conversion to nationalism was thus complete.

Il Duce and the Settlement of the Roman Question. In the immediate postwar years, it was Pope Benedict's encouragement of the Catholic-based Partito Popolare Italiano that incensed Mussolini. The new party was both anticommunist and antifascist, but Mussolini dismissed it as a leftist party in disguise. He avoided attacks on Benedict's successor, however. Pope PIUS XI, elected in 1922, was more pastoral and less sympathetic to the Partito Popolare than his predecessor. Mussolini now argued that FASCISM was not inherently antireligious, anticlerical, or anti-Catholic. He understood that ending the conflict with the Church would make both him and fascism more acceptable. Both sides feared the spread of communism and the rising power of the Soviet Union. Negotiations with the HOLY SEE began soon after Mussolini was appointed prime minister in October 1922. As a token of good intentions, the new government authorized the introduction of religious instruction in elementary schools. In 1923 the regime came to the rescue of the financially troubled Banco di Roma, partly owned by the Vatican.

Mussolini's personal life also needed attention. In December 1925 he and Rachele Guidi (1892–1979) celebrated a Catholic marriage, after having cohabited for many years. They already had three children and would go on to have two more. Mussolini was always deferential toward his wife and cared for his children, but behind the image of the devoted family man he continued to indulge in numerous extramarital affairs. Political circumstances required that he be seen as a model paterfamilias, for the regime was embarking on its policy of promoting large families, with Catholic approval. Pius XI reciprocated politically with shows of public deference, referring to Mussolini as a man sent by divine providence, and by disavowing the Partito Popolare, which disbanded in November 1926.

The full seizure of power by Mussolini (who became known as Il Duce, or "the leader") and the Fascists in 1925 and 1926 was the premise for the final settlement of the Roman Question. The LATERAN PACTS that were signed in Rome on February 11, 1929, by Mussolini and Cardinal Pietro GASPARRI, the papal secretary of state, consisted of a treaty and a concordat. In the treaty, the Italian government recognized Roman Catholicism as the sole religion of the state, the sovereignty of the pope with full territorial rights over VATICAN CITY, freedom in international relations (with a proviso that the Holy See must not intervene in international disputes involving secular matters), and freedom for clergymen in the exercise of religious activities. The Holy See acknowledged that the Roman Question was settled and recognized the independence of the Kingdom of Italy under the rule of the House of Savoy, with Rome as its capital. The financial clauses of the treaty settled all outstanding obligations of the Italian state toward the Holy See for the sum of 750 million lire in cash and one billion lire in state bonds.

The concordat reiterated that Catholic clergy enjoyed full freedom in the sphere of religion, gave civil validity to religious marriages, acknowledged the indissolubility of matrimony, confirmed clerical access to public school classrooms, and recognized the legitimacy of CATHOLIC ACTION in pursuit of religious and nonpolitical goals. Catholic Action was an organization of laypeople committed to spreading Catholic values. It was particularly active and successful in organizing youth groups, which were also a primary target of the regime.

A Tense Partnership. The official settlement of the Roman Question did not mean that all causes of friction between the Church and the Fascist regime were eliminated. The settlement undoubtedly played a role in the overwhelming popular vote in support of the regime in the plebiscite of March 1929, but not everyone was happy with the agreements. Anticlerical liberals and fascists, always numerous, complained that the government had conceded too much. The Catholic press retained considerable freedom, to the annoyance of anticlericals and of Mussolini himself.

Most troubling was the unresolved issue of the Church's role in youth education. After unusually harsh exchanges in the press, the government ordered the dissolution of all Catholic youth organizations on May 30, 1931. In response, on June 29, 1931, the pope issued the ENCYCLICAL Non abbiamo bisogno, which vehemently denounced the totalitarian doctrines and policies of the Fascist regime as incompatible with Catholic teachings and policies, called the charges that Catholic Action engaged in covert political activities mendacious, and warned that the wrath of God was to be feared more than the wrath of man. It was a stunning attack that left Mussolini publicly speechless and silent, and it may have persuaded him to come to terms. The crisis was resolved within months, and the Catholic youth groups were restored on condition that they avoid political activities. The issue surfaced again in 1938, however, and Pius XI intervened once again to save Catholic Action, which survived to become the training ground for many of the Christian Democratic leaders who held the reins of power after the fall of Mussolini.

There were also foreign policy implications to the settlement that became evident in the 1930s. Colonial expansion and the pursuit of Italian dominance in the Mediterranean found broad support in the Vatican and among the Italian religious hierarchy, as did Italian intervention on General Franco's side in the Spanish Civil War. Fear that a communist regime might take root in Spain is often mentioned as a reason for that intervention, but it is more likely that Mussolini was worried by the prospect of having another hostile power to contend with in the Mediterranean, and that the pope was truly alarmed by the evidence that the elected popular front governments in power in Spain would condone anticlerical measures, including the persecution of the clergy and the faithful.

However, agreement on specific foreign policy initiatives took second place to the concern that the Fascist regime was becoming increasingly totalitarian, and that by taking on the trappings of a civil religion it was promoting a system of values incompatible with the spirit of Christianity and the teachings of the Church. The regime's growing demands on the education, leisure time, and workplace activities of ordinary Italians were a major cause of concern. A simultaneous cause for concern was the alliance between Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany that developed after 1935. Although the clash of 1938 between the Vatican and the Fascist regime was precipitated by Pius's desire to defend Catholic Action, these deeper fears were very much part of the background. Pius XI did not mince words: In public and private statements, he hinted broadly that if the Fascists persisted in their attacks he would excommunicate Mussolini and the entire regime.

Alliance with Nazi Germany and World War II. Mussolini backed away from a break over Catholic Action, but he held his ground when the pope expressed displeasure with the racial policies that the regime adopted in 1938. Catholic anti-Judaism was based on religious considerations, not the biological ones of Germanic provenance that distinguished the legislation of 1938. Pius XI had denounced the Nazi myths of blood and soil in the 1937 encyclical Mit brennender Sorge, and he was preparing a similar public denunciation of Fascist racialism when death overtook him in 1939. In quashing that protest upon becoming pope, PIUS XII (1939–1958) embarked on the path of diplomatic accommodation with the regime for which he has been censured severely.

In seeking accommodation, Pius XII may have wanted to avoid a break with the regime and the consequent Fascist reprisals against religious organizations. His background in diplomacy predisposed him to seek negotiated solutions rather than to issue fulminations in the manner of his predecessor. If he was hoping for a negotiated understanding, however, the gambit failed. By 1939, Mussolini was not in an accommodating mood. He had come to believe in the myth of his own political infallibility, confided only in himself, and brooked no interference from anyone, particularly in matters of foreign policy, on which he was wholly fixated.

When Germany, France, and Great Britain went to war over Poland in September 1939, Pius XII appealed to Mussolini in a private letter, adopting a tone of paternal concern for the well-being of the Italian people and asking that Italy be kept out of the conflict. Mussolini was not moved by the pope's appeal. He was not ready to intervene, however, but would not give assurances for the future. He argued that international peace must be based on just relations among states, and that Italy must be prepared to act as events unfolded. Unlike in 1914 when debate over intervention was rampant, in 1939 and 1940 there was little public debate over the issue of intervention. The decision to intervene was entirely Mussolini's, based on his calculation that Italy must join the fight before the Germans won a complete victory and Italy was left without a seat at the peace table and a claim to a share of the spoils of war. When parish priests were instructed to speak for peace from the altar, Mussolini fumed that he would soon rid himself of both king and pope for their obstructionism. Italy's declaration of war on June 10, 1940, ended the debate.

Little came of attempts to have the Holy See play the role of mediator to end the fighting. U.S. President Franklin D.Roosevelt's special envoy, Myron C. Taylor, visited the Vatican in September 1942, and made it clear that any cessation of hostilities must be based on the unconditional surrender of the Axis powers. Mussolini, meanwhile, would not deal with the Holy See because he feared that Adolf HITLER might resent such initiatives, and because he resented the growing popularity of the Catholic Church among Italians, who looked to the Church for guidance when the fortunes of war began to turn against the Axis nations. His appointment of his son-in-law, Count Galeazzo Ciano (1903–1944), as ambassador to the Holy See in February 1943 suggests that he may have been trying to open a personal channel of communications with the Vatican, but nothing came of the move.

In the last year of his life, Mussolini sought the comforts of religion from a simple priest, but he regarded the papacy as an enemy. His last contact with the Catholic hierarchy occurred on April 25, 1945, when he approached Milan's Cardinal Ildefonso SCHUSTER (1880–1954) in an unsuccessful effort to negotiate a cease-fire with the Italian Resistance movement. Resistance fighters captured him on April 27 while he was trying to escape with a German army convoy headed for Germany. Also captured was his last mistress, Clara Petacci (b. 1912), who was executed with him by firing squad on April 28, 1945. The next day their bodies, and those of other Fascist leaders, were hung head down from a girder in a Milan gas station and left exposed to public fury.

Pius XII won popularity by speaking out for peace while the government spoke only of war, and by encouraging the clergy to aid the victims of the Fascist regimes. His failure to publicly denounce Fascist atrocities, particularly his silence when German troops rounded up the Jews of Rome in October 1943, has been the subject of much debate. However one may judge his behavior on this issue, Pius XII and the papacy gained moral stature in the eyes of the Italian people from 1943 through 1945, when their country was an international battlefield and the scene of civil war. That the Church gained credibility in those years as an institution capable of leading the country toward a new form of politics owes much to the prestige of Pius XII. In view of what happened after the war, the Church's gain in stature may well be the most significant legacy of the failed experiment in coexistence between Mussolini and the Catholic Church.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RISORGIMENTO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Alcorn, ed., "Symposium on Pope Pius XII and the Holocaust in Italy," in Journal of Modern Italian Studies 7, no. 2 (2002): 215–268, with contributions by John Alcorn, Frank J. Coppa, Alexander De Grand, Ronald J. Rychlak, and Susan Zuccotti.

Daniel A. Binchy, Church and State in Fascist Italy (London 1941).

Emilio Gentile, "New Idols: Catholicism in the Face of Fascist Totalitarianism," in Journal of Modern Italian Studies 11, no. 2 (2006), 143–170.

Peter C. Kent, The Pope and the Duce: The International Impact of the Lateran Agreements (New York 1981).

Giovanni Miccoli, I dilemmi e i silenzi di Pio XII (Milan 2000).

Meir Michaelis, Mussolini and the Jews: German-Italian Relations and the Jewish Question in Italy, 1922–1945 (Oxford, U.K. 1978).

John F. Pollard, The Vatican and Italian Fascism, 1929–1932 (Cambridge, U.K. 1985).

Pietro Scoppola, ed., La Chiesa e il fascismo: Documenti e interpretazioni (Rome 1971).

Susan Zuccotti, Under His Very Windows: The Vatican and the Holocaust in Italy (New Haven, Conn. 2000).

Roland Sarti
Professor Emeritus, Department of History
University of Massachusetts, Amherst (2010)

MUTTATHUPANDATHU, ALPHONSA, ST.

Baptized Anna and called Annakutty, also known as Sister Alphonsa of India, Alphonsa of the Immaculate Conception, Alphonsa of Bharananganam; mystic, virgin of the Syro-Malabar Poor Clares; b. August 19, 1910, Arpukara, India; d. July 28, 1946, Bharananganam, India; beatified at Kottayam, archdiocese of Changanacherry, Kerala, India, by JOHN PAUL II, February 8, 1986, together with Blessed Kuriokose Chavara, the first Indians raised to the altars; canonized October 12, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Annakutty was the fourth child of Joseph Muttathupadathu and his wife Mary, who died shortly after her daughter's birth; the family ensured Annakutty was well educated in preparation for a good marriage. Recognizing her vocation to religious life, Annakutty rejected her suitors and disfigured herself with fire so that she would be unmarriageable. Thereafter, she was permitted to join the tertiary Clarist sisters in their convent at Bharananganam (Pentecost 1927). With the veil of the postulant, she received the name Alphonsa of the Immaculate Conception (August 2, 1928). She became a novice on August 12, 1935, and made final vows the following year. Throughout her life she endured repeated illness and physical pain, but received the consolation of mystical union. She possessed the gift of prophecy and experienced a vision of Saint THÉRÈSE OF LISIEUX.

Alphonsa's death after a prolonged illness went almost unnoticed. However, when miracles were granted to Alphonsa's beloved schoolchildren through her intercession, her tomb at Bharananganam became a pilgrimage site. The diocesan process for her beatification began on December 2, 1953, and a miracle wrought through Alphonsa's intercession was approved on July 6, 1985.

Pope Benedict XVI approved St. Alphonsa for canonization on June 1, 2007. The fifty-five-year process of her canonization was then completed just over a year later on October 12, 2008, when she was officially named a saint. The ceremony was widely attended and included a notable fifteen-member Indian delegation led by labor minister Oscar Fernandes (1941–). In his homily the pope praised St. Alphonsa's "heroic virtues of patience, fortitude, and perseverance in the midst of deep suffering."

The official miracle credited to the saint and approved by the VATICAN involved St. Alphonsa's intercession in the miraculous healing of an infant with a clubfoot in 1999. Because of this and other similar miracles, St. Alphonsa is generally regarded as a special intercessor for prayers regarding sickness, deformity, bodily ailments of infants, and the death of parents.

St. Alphonsa was the second person of Indian origin to be canonized, and she was the first Indian woman to be elevated to the status of sainthood. Today her tomb at Bharananganam remains a pilgrimage site, and miracles continue to be attributed to her intercession. Her remains are preserved at a chapel adjacent to St. Mary's Forane church in the Diocese of Palai.

Feast: February 8.

SEE ALSO POOR CLARES; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SYRO-MALABAR CHURCH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis (1986): 306.

Benedict XVI, "Cappella Papale per la Canonizzazione dei Beati: Gaetano Errico (1791–1860), Maria Bernada (Verena) Bütler (1848–1924), Alfonsa dell'Immacolata Concezione (Anna Muttathupadathu) (1910–1946), Narcisa de Jesús Martillo Morán (1832–1869)," (Homily, October 12, 2008) Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2008/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20081012_canonizzazioni_it.html (accessed October 16, 2009).

Corinne Dempsey, Kerala Christian Sainthood: Collisions of Culture and Worldview in South India (Oxford 2001).

Ferdinand Holböck, New Saints and Blesseds of the Catholic Church: Blesseds and Saints Canonized by Pope John Paul II During the Years 1979–1983, translated by Michael J. Miller (San Francisco 2003).

L'Osservatore Romano, Eng. ed. 7 (1986): 6–7.

John Paul II, "Beatification of Father Kuriakose Elias Chavara and Sister Alfonsa Muttathupandathu," (Homily, February 8, 1986), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/1986/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_19860208_stadio-kattayam_en.html (accessed October 16, 2009).

T.T. Mundakel, Saint Alphonsa (2008).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Alphonsa of the Immaculate Conception (1910–1946)," Vatican Web site, October 12, 2008, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2008/ns_lit_doc_20081012_alfonsa_en.html (accessed October 16, 2009).

Chacko C. Poriyath, Alphonsamma: Agnisnanathinte Vishudha Sakshyam (New Delhi 2004).

Katherine Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

A. J. Kim
Graduate Student, School of Theology
and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America,
Washington, D.C. (2010)

N

NATO, PAPAL REACTION TO

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) is a military alliance formed April 4, 1949, in response to fears of a possible Soviet attack on Western Europe. Therefore, papal attitudes toward NATO during the period of the Cold War necessarily reflected their reactions to COMMUNISM and the Soviet Union. In the post–Cold War period, the papacy has also responded to NATO's activities in the Balkans.

Popes PIUS XI and PIUS XII, like their twentieth-century predecessors, were vehemently opposed to communism, an atheistic ideology that they considered not only a menace to Church doctrine, institutions, and community but a threat to Christian civilization in general. When Poland was threatened with Soviet invasion in 1920, Achille Ratti, the papal representative to Warsaw and the future Pope Pius XI, refused to flee but instead remained and observed the panic the Poles experienced in the face of the Bolshevik aggression. Later, as pope, he repeatedly emphasized the dangers of communism toward religion and family. He formally condemned the movement in his 1937 encyclical Divini Redemptoris (On Atheistic Communism).

The succeeding pope, Pius XII, continued the resistance to communism in his 1939 first encyclical letter Summi Pontificatus (On the Limits of the Authority of the State), in which he condemned totalitarianism and absolute state authority. The pope feared communism, which had blatantly outlawed the practice of religion, more than Nazism, which had not. After the end of World War II (1939–1945), the pope became increasingly alarmed at the threat of Soviet expansionism and so, while he was in favor of the creation of the United Nations organization, he remained uncomfortable with the idea of a Soviet veto in the Security Council, and he continued to plead for the condemnation of atheism and resistance to communism.

The VATICAN's conviction that communism was a threat serious enough to warrant a concerted and unified resistance effort on the part of the West had considerable influence on Western post-World-War-II attitudes toward the Soviet Union. Pius XII strongly supported the introduction of the Marshall Plan in 1947, as he believed that it demonstrated that the United States finally understood "the extreme gravity of the hour," as he wrote in a letter to President Harry S. Truman (1884–1972) on July 19, 1948, and, in fact, the United States had begun to concur with the pope's views. Pius saw any progress toward European economic and political integration as strengthening European resistance to the Soviet push toward expansion, and Truman concurred, agreeing with the pope that communism represented a threat both to religion and to Western civilization, as demonstrated in letters exchanged between Washington, D.C., and the Vatican in 1947.

When NATO was created in 1949, Pius initially had serious concerns about continued Vatican City independence and neutrality should Italy align with the rest of Western Europe, but these paled in comparison to his conviction that communism must be opposed and that the greatest possibility of success lay in a unified European economic and political resistance. In this regard Pius encouraged, whenever possible, even temporary unity among otherwise dissimilar entities. In 1948, for example, in an effort to avoid "the Cossacks watering their horses in St. Peter's Square," the pope had pressured the Italian Christian Democratic Party to join with the monarchists and the neo-Fascists in an electoral alliance, but the party leader, Alcide de GASPERI, resisted. In 1949, however, the pontiff successfully courted the neutralist and pacifist wings of the party to encourage Italy to join NATO. The pope considered NATO critical to the containment of Soviet expansion, and his later support of the West Germany Christian Democrats also contributed to the entry of that country into NATO in 1955. The pope remained politically neutral and, indeed, conciliatory toward Italy and Germany in an attempt to prevent the spread of communism into Western Europe.

Pius XII was recognized by both the United States and Great Britain as a necessary partner in the struggle against communism. Myron Taylor (1863–1959), who had served as President Franklin D. Roosevelt's (1882–1945) personal representative to the Vatican and who stayed on to serve President Truman as well, wrote to Truman that "the Pope has openly challenged Communism from the beginning" and went on to stress the importance of the pope's continued leadership in Western resistance to communism (Kirby 2002, p. 79). Winston Churchill (1874–1965) agreed, admiring the pope for his consistent opposition to the communist ideology.

Pius XII feared not only communism, but also the possibility of a nuclear holocaust, and he cautioned the West against the use of weapons of mass destruction and a complete inflexibility toward the idea of coexistence. In his 1956 Christmas message, the pope reiterated his repugnance toward communism, but refused to initiate a formal Christian crusade against the Soviet regime. The pope, who had initially encouraged the formation of NATO as a weapon against communism, began to have reservations about taking an overly rigid approach to conflict with the Soviet Union, and in 1958 he stressed the Church's opposition to war, except in cases of self-defense. The Vatican now began to demonstrate a movement away from its former alignment with NATO and into a more neutral and conciliatory position, encouraging efforts on all sides to end the Cold War.

Pope JOHN XXIII, successor to Pius XII, continued to seek better relations between the Soviet Union and the Vatican. He succeeded in achieving the liberation of imprisoned ecclesiastics and in opening lines of communication between the Vatican and some communist regimes, notably in Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

After the end of the Cold War, as NATO shifted its focus to other international conflicts, the papacy continued to seek peaceful rather than armed resolutions. Pope JOHN PAUL II, for example, while on a visit to Romania in 1999, condemned the NATO bombings in Kosovo. The papacy, while historically supporting the role of NATO as a defense against threats to religion and the Church during of the Cold War, has also cautioned against the unnecessary use of force by NATO in its responses to international conflicts.

SEE ALSO COLD WAR AND THE PAPACY; DIVINI REDEMPTORIS; NAZISM, PAPAL RESPONSE TO; SUMMI PONTIFICATUS; TAYLOR, MYRON CHARLES; UNITED NATIONS AND THE PAPACY; VATICAN CITY, STATE OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Frank J. Coppa, The Papacy Confronts the Modern World (Malabar, Fla. 2003).

Frank J. Coppa, Politics and the Papacy in the Modern World (Westport, Conn. 2008).

Jo Renee Formicola, Pope John Paul II: Prophetic Politician (Washington, D.C. 2002).

Dianne Kirby, ed., Religion and the Cold War (New York 2002).

Peter Nichols, The Politics of the Vatican (New York 1968).

Stanley R. Sloan, ed., NATO in the 1990s (Washington, D.C. 1989).

Susan A. Maurer
Instructor, Department of History, Political Science, and Geography Nassau Community College, Garden City, New York
(2010)

NAMUNCURÁ, ZEPHERIN, BL.

Seminarian of the Society of St. FRANCIS DE SALES; b. Chimpay, Argentina, August 26, 1886; d. Rome, May 11, 1905; beatified November 11, 2007, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Zepherin Namuncurá, a seminarian who "smiled with his eyes" and loved the outdoors, card tricks, and his Mapuche people, loved God above all. Only eighteen years old when he died, his enthusiasm for his faith and for his people made a lasting impression. The eighth of twelve children of a Mapuche chief, Zepherin was born in the Argentine Pampas to an indigenous "people of the land," as Mapuche is translated. The Pampas region is a fertile, flat land where the Mapuche farmed and thrived until imperiled by European domination. Zepherin's father, Manuel Namuncurá, led the resistance to the encroaching threat but suffered a devastating defeat to the Argentine army. Thousands of Mapuche were captured, including four of Zepherin's siblings and his mother; some never returned. In a series of peace treaties, Manuel Namuncurá was made a colonel in the Argentine army, but the Mapuche nation lost its land, and its people were forced to relocate.

As a toddler, Zepherin was handed over to a Salesian missionary, Fr. Dominic Milanesio, whom Manuel Namuncurá trusted, to be raised. Zepherin attended an Argentine army school, where his father hoped he would gain the skills needed to restore the Mapuche nation. As the only indigenous student there, he endured cruel treatment by his peers, until Fr. Dominic moved him to the Salesian mission school, where he fared better.

At age seventeen, he decided to become a priest. His hope was to return and help the Mapuche people. As a young seminarian in Argentina, he prayed constantly for his people. Developing a devotion to the Virgin Mary, he would ask for her INTERCESSION "for my people." Many of the Mapuche were dying of tuberculosis, and young Zepherin also contracted the disease. He was sent to Turin and then to Rome for his studies in the hopes that the Italian climate would improve his health. But his health continued to deteriorate, and he died before his nineteenth birthday. Zepherin's director at the Turin seminary observed that "he has a heart warm with God's love. It's a heart of gold, and sees no evil in anyone.... He loves God like we love our mothers ... warmly, intensely, as though he were always in God's presence" (Ball 1983, p. 190).

Despite the isolation, persecution, and illness he endured, Zepherin Namuncurá was full of spirit and life. His baptismal name, Zepherin, means wind. His life is a testimony that the wind—like the Holy Spirit—blows where it will, even amidst the most difficult circumstances. Though he was torn from his tribal environment at an early age, he never lost his identity as a Mapuche; though he was rarely in good health, he was always in good spirits; though he was not raised with his people—a people rich in history, culture, and spirituality—he embraced the Christian faith with genuine joy, hoping to return and share that joy with his people. He returned only in death to his home, where he is buried in his native Patagonia and where a great devotion to him has helped keep alive not only his spirit, but that of the Mapuche people.

As Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone said at Zepherin Namuncurá's BEATIFICATION Mass on November 11, 2007, Bl. Zepherin "reminds us that holiness is not something exceptional, reserved for the elect few: holiness is the common vocation of all the baptized, and it is the demanding goal of ordinary Christian life." The cardinal further observed that Zepherin's life gives witness to the preferential option for the poor and the special way God communicates to and through "the little, the poor, to those thirsting for justice, the workers for peace, to the persecuted, to those committed each day to overcoming evil with good."

Feast: May 11.

SEE ALSO ARGENTINA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ann Ball, Modern Saints: Their Lives and Faces (Rockford, Ill. 1983), Bk. 1: 187–191.

Tarcisio Bertone, "Homily, Mass of Beatification of Zepherin Namuncurá," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition, 47 (November 21, 2007): 9.

"Biography of the Servant of God Beatified on 11 November," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition, 47 (November 21, 2007): 10.

Greg Brown, "Aliens in Their Own Land: Boom Times Have Left the Mapuche Indians Behind," Newsweek (September 6, 1999): 47.

Peter M. Lappin, Bury Me Deep (Huntington, Ind. 1974).

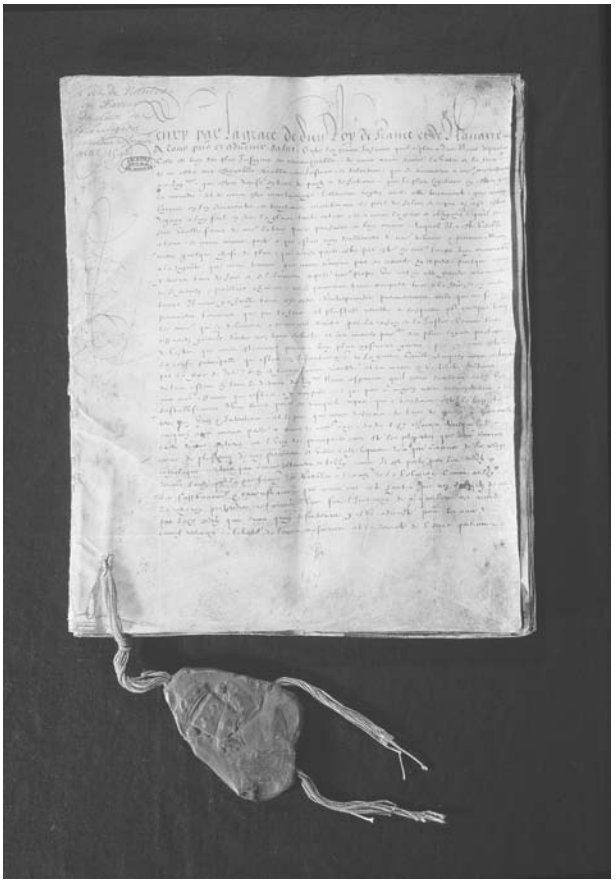
Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Bl. Zepherin Namuncurá (1886–1905)," Vatican Web site, November 11, 2008, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20071111_zefferino_en.html (accessed November 16, 2009).



Roman Curia, Secretariat of State, "Beatification Mass of the Servant of God Zepherin Namuncurá: Homily of Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone," Vatican Web site, November 11, 2007, available from http://www.vatican.va./roman_curia/secretariat_state/card-bertone/2007/documents/rc_seg-st_20071111_beatif-zeffirino_en.html (accessed November 16, 2009).

Elizabeth L. McCloskey
Ph.D. Candidate
School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

NANTES, EDICT OF

After Henry IV's 1593 conversion to Catholicism, the French Calvinists, or HUGUENOTS, faced the unfathomable prospect of armed conflict against the erstwhile champion of their cause. Many Huguenot noblemen expressed their disaffection by refusing to support the war against Spain that Henry IV declared in 1595. They feared that Catholic pressures on the king to prove his sincerity as a Catholic might lead him to curtail, even proscribe, their hard won freedom to worship. Henry IV also loathed the idea of fighting his former coreligionaries. The situation called for decisive action by the king to avert the possible renewal of religious war. Henry IV therefore decided to settle the confessional situation inside the kingdom in April 1598 in advance of the peace reached with Spain in the Treaty of Vervins in May 1598.

After a generation of religious war punctuated by failed attempts at peace, Henry IV reached an enduring agreement with the Huguenots on April 13, 1598, in the Edict of Nantes. Historians have long considered this famous accord as an important step forward for the idea of religious toleration and the notion that politics takes precedence over religion. Upon closer examination, however, neither of these interpretations can be sustained. The Edict of Nantes stated as its principal goal the eventual peaceful reunion of the king's subjects in one agreed upon faith, which implicitly meant Catholicism. In the meantime, the king wished to ensure religious coexistence between the two confessions so that this process of reunion could proceed. The Edict of Nantes therefore affirmed the age-old French heritage of "one king, one faith, one law" rather than looked forward to modern ideas about toleration and secularism. It testified more to the growing authority of the crown than any willingness among French men and women to accept religious differences on a permanent basis.

The Edict. HENRI IV, BY THE GRACE OF GOD, KING OF FRANCE AND NAVARRE, FIRST PAGE FROM 'THE EDICT OF NANTES', 1598 (INK ON PAPER), FRENCH SCHOOL, (15TH CENTURY)/CENTRE HISTORIQUE DES ARCHIVES NATIONALES, PARIS, FRANCE/LAUROS/GIRAUDON/THE BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY

In the Edict of Nantes, Henry IV faced the dilemma of reassuring the Huguenots without alienating the Catholics. A closer look at the edict shows how he hoped to achieve these contrasting goals. Four separate documents actually made up the Edict of Nantes. The first one consisted of ninety-two general articles, while the second one had fifty-six "secret articles" that granted exemptions from the general articles to particular towns and persons. The last two documents were royal writs known as brevets. The reason for all this complexity in the edict stemmed from the political circumstances that Henry IV confronted. The first two sets of articles had to be registered in the Parlement of Paris, the chief judicial court in France, to receive the force of law. Royal brevets, by contrast, did not need to be registered because they ended once the king who originally issued them had died. They were thus ostensibly provisional in nature. Henry IV put the most controversial concessions to the Huguenots in the royal brevets because he knew that the Parlement of Paris, which was controlled by the Catholics, would never register them. In fact, it took nearly a year for the Parlement to accept the first two sets of articles that basically delineated the bounds within which CALVINISM could be practiced. How long the Edict of Nantes would last was therefore, from a legalistic point of view, an open question from the outset. Henry IV's declaration in the preamble that the edict was "perpetual and irrevocable" actually meant only until such time as another edict was issued and registered to replace it.

The provisions making up the Edict of Nantes did not break new ground but rather returned quite explicitly to earlier edicts of pacification, such as the Peace of Bergerac (1577) and Peace of Fleix (1580), sometimes word for word. First, the king consigned all events since 1585 to public oblivion, making it a crime to stir up the memories of past grievances. The edict recognized the Huguenots' right to freedom of conscience and liberty to worship in all towns that they controlled as of August 1597. It also guaranteed the right of Huguenots to hold civil office and established special new courts with both Huguenot and Catholic judges to enforce the provisions of the edict. At the same time, the Edict of Nantes also addressed Catholic concerns. It reaffirmed the Catholic character of both the crown and the kingdom. Whereas Huguenots could only worship in specially designated areas, Catholics could practice their faith anywhere in France. In fact, the Edict of Nantes called for the reintroduction of Catholicism to places where Huguenots had long forbidden it, most notably Béarn. All of these general principles in the first set of articles became decidedly weakened by the exceptions to them contained in the second set of "secret articles." The most significant concessions to the Huguenots came in the two royal brevets, the first of which provided generous royal funds to subsidize the French Calvinist church, whereas the second allowed the Huguenots to fortify and garrison towns under their control. These measures thus provided for financial and military security for the Huguenots, but only while Henry IV was king.

The Edict of Nantes thus brought a temporary end to the Wars of Religion, which broke out again after Henry IV's assassination in 1610 as the Huguenots tried to secure the substantial gains they had made in the royal brevets. They ultimately failed to do so when Henry IV's son, Louis XIII (1601–1643), finally defeated the Huguenots in 1628, following the siege of La Rochelle. Louis XIII stripped the Huguenots of their former military independence and subsidies in the Grace of Alès (June 1629), though he recognized their right to worship in places already established. The provisions in the two sets of articles came to an end when Henry IV's grandson, Louis XIV, revoked the remaining provisions of the Edict of Nantes in the Edict of Fontainebleau (1685). He did so because he mistakenly believed that most Huguenots had returned to the Catholic Church. The resulting persecution forced the French Calvinist church underground, and many Huguenots emigrated to Germany, England, and North America. French Calvinists only enjoyed the right to worship publicly later on in 1787 just prior to the FRENCH REVOLUTION.

SEE ALSO CHURCH AND STATE; HENRY IV, KING OF FRANCE; LOUIS XIV, KING OF FRANCE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Richard L. Goodbar, The Edict of Nantes: Five Essays and a New Translation (Bloomington, Minn. 1998).

Elisabeth Labrousse, Essai sur la révocation de l'Édit de Nantes (Paris 1985).

Nancy Lyman Roelker, One King, One Faith: The Parlement of Paris and the Religious Reformations of the Sixteenth Century (Berkeley, Calif. 1996).

N.L. Sutherland, The Huguenot Struggle for Recognition (New Haven, Conn. 1980).

Ruth Whelan and Carol Baxter, eds., Toleration and Religious Identity: The Edict of Nantes and Its Implications in France, Britain and Ireland (Dublin 2003).

Michael Wolfe
Professor of History
St. John's University, Queens, N.Y. (2010)

NARDINI, PAUL JOSEF, BL.

Diocesan priest, founder of the Congregation of the FRANCISCAN SISTERS of the Holy Family; b. Germersheim, Rhineland Palatinate, Germany, July 25, 1821; d. Pirmasens, Germany, January 27, 1862; beatified October 22, 2006, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Paul Josef Nardini was born to a single mother, Margaret Lichtenberger, but raised by relatives. His aunt and uncle, Marie Barbara and Anton Nardini (who gave Paul Josef his surname), raised him as a son and were able to secure an excellent education for him. Separated from his natural mother, he never forgot her and eventually brought her to live with him when he became a parish priest in Pirmasens. Entering the seminary soon after his completion of grammar school, he first studied philosophy in the Speyer seminary and then theology at the University of Munich, where he graduated summa cum laude. After his ordination on August 22, 1846, Fr. Nardini spent five years as a parochial vicar and boarding school prefect in Speyer. In 1851 he was entrusted with his own parish in Pirmasens.

It was in the Pirmasens parish that Fr. Nardini demonstrated his uncommon pastoral gifts. Pirmasens, as it remains in the twentieth-first century, was a poor town with little profitable industry. Many children were left unattended as their parents sought to earn a living making and selling shoes. Nardini was a true shepherd to the people of Pirmasens; he responded to them with the heart of Jesus: "When he disembarked and saw the vast crowd, his heart was moved with pity for them, for they were like sheep without a shepherd; and he began to teach them many things" (Mk 6: 34).

Known as the "Father of the Poor," Nardini was moved by the poor children of Pirmasens, who had few educational opportunities, and the elderly, who suffered physical ailments with little relief. Just as his adoptive parents had loved him as their own, Nardini saw the people of Pirmasens as children of God deserving of love and respect. He formed an order, the Franciscan Sisters of the Holy Family, to help minister to their physical and spiritual needs. Fr. Nardini became ill after taking viaticum to an ailing parishioner on a cold winter night in January 1862, and he died shortly thereafter. His remains are entombed in Pirmasens, where the sisters of his order prayed for and received a healing miracle for Sr. Stephana Beyer, who was cured of late-stage cancer in 1953.

The motto of the order Nardini founded, now known as the Mallersdorf Sisters, is Caritas Christi urget nos, "the love of Christ urges us on." Continuing the work of their founder, the sisters care for and teach poor, abandoned, neglected, and handicapped children and young people. At Nardini's 2006 BEATIFICATION Mass in Germany, six hundred nuns from his order were among the two thousand people present. In the Speyer Cathedral, Cardinal Friedrich Wetter of Munich read an apostolic letter from Pope Benedict XVI, in which the pope called Nardini an exemplary priest who had shown compassion and love for the poor and suffering.

Feast: January 27.

SEE ALSO GERMANY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Paul Josef Nardini (1821–1862)," Vatican Web site, October 22, 2006, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20061022_nardini_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

"Priest Nardini Beatified in Speyer; First in Germany in 10 Years," Deutsche Well, October 23, 2006, available from http://www.dw-world.de/dw/article/0,,2212744,00.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Marylu Stueber, "Blessed Father Paul Josef Nardini—A Visit to Germany," Franciscan Sisters of Mary Web site, February 21, 2007, available from www.fsmonline.org/upload/477411e915dae.pdf (accessed November 17, 2009).

Elizabeth L. McCloskey
Ph.D. Candidate
School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

NAZISM, PAPAL RESPONSE TO

The HOLY SEE's attitudes and actions toward Nazi Germany developed over the course of the decades of the early twentieth century. The following is a detailed sketch of the major figures and writings which make up that history.

Benedict XV. After the First World War and the peace treaties which followed, Pope BENEDICT XV (1914–1922) and his secretary of state, Pietro GASPARRI, were sympathetic to the Germans, whom they believed had been treated unfairly. They noted that many of President Woodrow Wilson's Fourteen Points, under the terms of which the Central Powers surrendered, had been violated to the detriment of German people. Furthermore, they did not understand why the Allies forbade union or Anschluss (annexation) of the German Republic and the truncated Austrian state, which they feared might not survive on its own. These views were shared by Eugenio Pacelli, who was appointed nuncio to the Weimar Republic but was temporarily stationed in Munich while he negotiated a concordat with Bavaria. All three men understood the right-wing reaction against the treaties and the Allies who had imposed them. This sentiment was shared by Achille Ratti, who became Pope PIUS XI in 1922 and retained Gasparri as secretary of state and Pacelli as nuncio to Germany. However, the new pope was disturbed by the pagan, anti-Semitic, and anti-Christian aspects of the Nazi Party, which had been formed in January 1919 and joined by Adolf HITLER in September of that year. Pius XI's concerns and suspicions grew following the unsuccessful Hitler-Ludendorff Munich Putsch of November 1923.

Pius XI. Through his secretary of state, Pius XI made inquiries about the program and policies of the Nazi Party. His worst fears were confirmed by Pacelli's November 14, 1923, report on the Putsch and the party. Pacelli described the anti-Catholic nature of the National Socialist movement and its leader, Adolf Hitler. Pressed by the Vatican for additional information, the nuncio issued a second report in which he related that the Nazis were against not only the Jews but also the Church and Catholics, and pointed to the violent, vicious, and vulgar campaign of the folkish press, which he duly condemned. He also wrote home in March 1924 to describe the wave of anti-Catholicism unleashed during the course of the Ludendorff trial, in which the general was acquitted.

At this juncture the pope and his nuncio to Berlin shared the sentiments of those German bishops who found Catholicism and Nazism incompatible. At the end of March 1931, the bishops of the Prussian provinces and Bavaria issued joint pastorals condemning the National Socialist Party and forbidding Catholics to join any such movement that espoused principles contrary to the Faith. The bishops especially found fault with article 24 of the party program, which insisted all creeds were subordinate to racial considerations. Equally odious, in their view, were the exaltation of nationalism over religion, the recognition of violence as a legitimate political weapon, the agitation for nondenominational education, the furtherance of artificial birth control, and the blatant ANTICLERICALISM of its leaders. Subsequently, the Fulda Episcopal Conference of August 17–19, 1931, banned membership in the party and forbade clergy from offering Communion to those wearing the swastika. Pius, for his part, found blasphemous the suggestion that Jesus was not a Jew. The elaboration of Nazism's anticlerical and anti-Semitic policies led Pius XI to reconsider his attitude toward Anschluss between Germany and Austria, which he had once earlier favored.

The Role of Pietro Gasparri. Before and after Hitler attained power, at the end of January 1933, there was a consensus among Vatican officials that Hitler and his movement were dangerous, but there was also disagreement on how best to cope with that danger. Gasparri, who during the First World War had outlined the policy of so-called impartiality, called for a conciliatory course toward Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany. This policy allowed the Holy See to make moral distinctions between principles and practices without becoming politically involved or taking political stances. To enter into political conflict with these dangerous dictatorships, Gasparri warned, would be to risk great harm to the Church, its leaders, and its members. He therefore urged the papacy to refrain from condemning Hitler's party so long as it did not wage war on either the Holy See or the hierarchy in Germany. This view was shared by a majority in the secretariat of state, which Gasparri had long dominated, as well as Pacelli, who agreed on the need to temper moral outrage with diplomatic pragmatism. However, Pacelli did so more quietly and diplomatically than his mentor Gasparri, because he was aware that this conciliatory course clashed with the more confrontational one of Pius XI. Indeed, the divergence between the pope and his secretary of state led to the latter's ouster at the end of 1929 and replacement by Pacelli.

Despite Gasparri's removal, the new secretary of state concurred with him that they should accommodate the Nazis by accepting the dissolution of the Catholic Center Party in return for a concordat. Pius XI, who continued to distrust Hitler and the Nazis, had real reservations about the conclusion of a concordat with them. Nazi harassment of the Church and the persistent pressure of Pacelli led Pius to relent and sanction negotiations for an agreement, which was rapidly concluded after negotiations opened in April 1933. It was even more rapidly violated by the Nazis, who in turn aroused the anger of the pope. Despite the misgivings and doubts of Pius XI, Pacelli deemed the concordat necessary to preserve the Catholic Church in Germany. Pius XI, however, increasingly questioned the value of the concordat and refused to remain silent when confronted with the pagan, anti-Semitic, and anti-Christian policies the Reich espoused. Between 1933 and 1936, Pius launched over thirty protests against Nazi actions, denouncing them as evidence of "true paganism." Pius was particularly shocked by the abortive Nazi coup of July 25, 1934, in Austria and the murder of Chancellor Englebert Dollfuss, and he applauded Benito MUSSOLINI's movement of troops to the frontier in order to prevent a possible German intervention. At the close of 1935 the pope deplored the sad events in the Reich.

The Axis and Mit brennender sorge. Scandalized by the Nazi regime's racism, Pius XI rejected the contentions that clerical anti-Judaism served as a precursor to Nazi anti-Semitism, and that the Jewish question was an internal political issue and not a religious one. The pope considered racism anti-Christian and immoral, and he felt the need to say so. In 1936 the increased collaboration between Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany, which had been dubbed the Axis by Mussolini, so disturbed Pius XI that he let it be known. When Hitler sent Pius a congratulatory message on the anniversary of his coronation in 1936, the pope responded by complaining of developments in the Reich, and he sought to disrupt the Rome-Berlin Axis. Pacelli's attempts to moderate the strong papal opposition to the Nazi regime had only limited effect. In 1937 the pope issued the encyclical Mit brennender sorge, denouncing the evils of Hitler's Germany. Secretly dispatched to the Reich, it was read in all Catholic parishes on PALM SUNDAY 1937, and it launched the Vatican's harshest criticism of any political regime to date. With deep anxiety and increasing dismay, Pius revealed his outrage at witnessing developments in the Third Reich. In the encyclical, written in German so as to have the greatest circulation and impact, the pope cataloged the errors of the Nazi regime.

Although Pacelli, under papal orders, played a part in drafting this critical encyclical, he sought to prevent a break between Berlin and the Vatican. The secretary of state continued to follow the advice of his mentor Gasparri, who warned of the unfortunate consequences, for the Church at large and for Catholics in Germany, that would inevitably follow upon provoking Hitler. The growing rift between the Reich and Rome disturbed Pacelli and his allies in the Curia, including the secretariat of state, which feared Nazi retribution and worried about the future of Catholicism in Germany. Thus, when Pius XI seriously considered renouncing the Reich Concordat, Pacelli used all his power of persuasion to prevent him from doing so. He later acknowledged the pope was so indignant about what was happening in Germany that he did not see how the Holy See could continue to maintain diplomatic relations with such demonic a regime. Pacelli in turn responded that these relations were important for preserving the Church in the Reich and for maintaining contact with the German bishops. For the moment the pope allowed Pacelli to prevail, but his subsequent actions indicate he was not convinced by the arguments his secretary of state made in favor of a more conciliatory course toward the "pagan" Nazi regime. In 1938 Pacelli proposed traveling to Berlin to negotiate a settlement with the Reich, but his offer was ignored by both Berlin and the Pontiff.

Anschluss. In April 1938 the Sacred Congregation of Seminaries, presided over by Pius XI, condemned the pernicious racism championed by Nazi Germany in a document which the Catholic press deemed a virtual encyclical against racism. Pius deplored the extension of anti-Semitism to Austria following the Anschluss of March 1938, which also saddened him both as Pontiff and as an Italian. Not surprisingly, Pius XI repudiated Cardinal Theodor Innitzer and the Austrian bishops, who rejoiced at the union of Germany and Austria, obviously seeking accommodation with the Nazis. In April of the same year, L'Osservatore Romano made it clear that the bishops' statement did not have the Vatican's support, and on Vatican Radio Fr. Gustav GUNDLACH, a German Jesuit, denounced the pro-Nazi pastoral letter as inspired by a false, politically motivated Catholicism. Meanwhile, Cardinal Innitzer was summoned to Rome, lectured by an angry pope, and constrained to retract his approval of the Anschluss. During the Führer's May 1938 visit to Rome, Pius left for CASTEL GANDOLFO, closed the Vatican Museum which Hitler had hoped to visit, and did not invite any member of the German party to Vatican City. From Castel Gandolfo Pius XI lamented that it was out of place to hoist in Rome the emblem of a cross not of Christ.

Humani generis unitas. In June 1938, as the Axis threatened to bloom into a full-scale alliance between Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany, and as Mussolini embraced Hitler's anti-Semitism, the pope could no longer contain his sense of outrage. He determined to take further steps to denounce Nazi Germany's racism and anti-Semitism. Skirting Pacelli and his conciliatory secretariat of state, the pope secretly commissioned the American Jesuit John LA FARGE, author of numerous works decrying the evil of racism, to draft an encyclical demonstrating the incompatibility of Catholicism and racism. He did not consult Pacelli or include him in the meeting with La Farge, even though he had been by the pope's side only moments earlier. The pope was apparently convinced his secretary of state would oppose the encyclical. Pius outlined what he wanted to say and, aware of his deteriorating health, asked the Jesuit to produce the encyclical as soon as possible. When told of the pope's desire to receive a draft quickly, Fr. Vladimir Ledochowski, General of the JESUITS, suggested that La Farge collaborate with two of his brother Jesuits, Frenchman Gustave Desbuquois and the German Gundlach. Together the three prepared a draft and in late September 1938 placed the projected encyclical, titled "The Unity of the Human Race," in the hands of Ledochowski for transmission to the pope.

Humani generis unitas condemned anti-Semitism and maintained that Catholics could not be permitted to remain silent in its presence. The encyclical written for Pius XI noted that the struggle for racial purity led to a struggle against the Jews, a struggle the papacy deplored in itself; moreover, it warned that anti-Semitism could serve as an excuse for attacking the sacred Person of the Savior Himself, and thereby lead to a war against Christianity. The Redemption opened the doors of salvation to the entire human race, the encyclical continued, providing for a universal Kingdom in which there would be no distinction of Jew or Gentile, Greek or barbarian. Perhaps most disconcerting to those like Pacelli, who counseled moderation, the encyclical called for ecclesiastical action against racism. It specified that it was the task and duty of the Church, the dignity and responsibility of the Chief Shepherd and of his brother shepherds whom the Holy Ghost has placed to rule the Church of God, that they should illuminate for mankind the true course to be followed, the eternal divine order in the changing circumstances of the times.

The antiracist sentiments expressed in the draft of the encyclical reflected the pope's own stance. Pius XI branded the Fascist Ayran Manifesto of July 14, 1938 a "true form of apostasy," and he urged Catholic groups to combat it and initiated a chorus of opposition to the racism of Nazi Germany and its imitation in Fascist Italy. In August 1938, when Pius XI visited the College of the Propaganda Fide, he warned the students there to shun "exaggerated nationalism," which he characterized as a real curse. In early September he announced that the VICAR OF CHRIST could not remain silent in the face of grave errors and violations of human rights. Italy's racist legislation represented an attack on the Church's teachings. "No, it's not possible for us Christians to participate in anti-Semitism," the pope told a group of visiting Belgians on September 6, 1938. "Spiritually, we are Semites."

The pope's confrontational approach toward the fascist regimes worried some in the Vatican, especially members of the secretariat of state, who feared that he would break with Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany and precipitate disastrous consequences for the Church. These individuals called for a more diplomatic course, and they hoped for the election of a more conciliatory successor to the then seriously ill Pius XI. They were also responsible for the conclusion of an agreement with Fascist Italy on the racial issue. According to Fr. Angelo Martini, a Jesuit who was granted access to the relevant Vatican documents, a "pact" of August 16, 1938, provided that, in return for the Fascists' favorable treatment of CATHOLIC ACTION in Italy, the papacy would leave the so-called Jewish question entirely to the regime. It seems inconceivable that the pope would adhere to such a pact, which clearly violated his convictions—and indeed he did not. The conciliatory group also apparently convinced the General of the Jesuits to moderate the tone of Humani generis unitas.

When the authors of the encyclical received no word of its receipt by the pope, they suspected foul play. Fr. La Farge wrote the pope, who belatedly learned that the encyclical had been delivered but kept from him. Only when the angry pope demanded its release did it reach him. Reportedly Pius received it on January 21, 1939, but is not certain if he actually saw or read it before his death on February 9–10. It is most likely he did not. The draft of the encyclical, with a note attached, from Msgr. Domenico TARDINI indicating Pius XI's desire to receive the document promptly, were found on the desk of the deceased pope.

Pius XII. Following the death of Pius XI, the division within the Vatican concerning the appropriate policy toward the Axis powers persisted, with a majority in favor of a course that was less confrontational and more conciliatory than the one the late pope had pursued. The influential secretariat of state remained steadfastly faithful to Cardinal Gasparri's dictum that it was foolhardy and dangerous for the Church to arouse the anger of the Nazis, who could wreak havoc on the Faith. This sentiment was reflected in the CONCLAVE of March 1939, which opened as Europe was on the brink of another war. The cardinal electors sought a peacemaker and protector, and on the third ballot of a short conclave the conciliatory majority quickly elected the diplomatic Pacelli, who was widely known to favor conciliation rather than confrontation vis-à-vis the dictatorial regimes. The new pope did not disappoint them by failing to live up to this reputation.

Pacelli, who became Pope PIUS XII on March 2, 1939, immediately made a sustained effort to improve relations with the Nazi state. He received the German ambassador on March 5, before all others, and assured him that friendly relations would be restored between the Vatican and the Reich. He confided his intention also to the Italian foreign minister, confident that his desire for peace would quickly be transmitted from Rome to Berlin. Determined to fulfill his promises and achieve a détente with the Reich, he shelved his predecessor's encyclical against the racism and anti-Semitism of the Nazi regime, which might have provoked brutal retaliation. Although Pacelli was a self-acknowledged Germanophile whose housekeeper, private secretary, and confessor all hailed from the Reich, his primary motivation and concern remained the preservation of the Church and Catholicism in Germany.

Although initially skeptical of Pacelli, and assuming he would follow in the footsteps of his predecessor, the Nazis were surprised and pleased by the friendly course he pursued, prompting the German foreign minister to proclaim Pacelli a real pope. One of his first actions was to gather the German cardinals and reveal his intention to send a personal letter to Hitler to announce his accession, which he then proceeded to do. As the clouds of war thickened, and Nazi Germany showed itself increasingly bellicose, the pope proclaimed his impartiality in territorial and political disputes—a diplomatic device he borrowed from Gasparri and Benedict XV, who had utilized it during the First World War. He protested neither the virtual dismemberment of the Czech state by the Nazis, nor the demands they made on Poland and the subsequent attack of that Catholic country launched on September 1, 1939. Critics such as playwright Rolf Hochhuth, author of "The Deputy," saw this as the first step of Pius XII's so-called silence, which culminated in the pope's failure publicly and openly to denounce the Holocaust. Hochhuth's play unleashed a barrage of criticism of the pope and the Church: For example, assertions that Pius was indifferent to the plight of the Jews, that he did absolutely nothing to assist them, and that this failure was a function of pervasive ANTI-JUDAISM and anti-Semitism in the Church. In response, such criticism gave rise to a countermovement of writers who rejected the charge that Pius XII was "Hitler's pope" and dubbed him instead the "Angelic Shepherd." Thus was born the so-called Pius War. The controversy continued unabated, and at the turn of the twenty-first century sparked a heated debate upon the proposal of his BEATIFICATION.

Papal Impartiality. The record reveals that Pius XII publicly adhered to his impartiality, as he refused to proclaim support for one side or the other, much to the regret of the French ambassador to the Holy See, François Charles-Roux, who denounced the pope for employing a policy of diplomatic finesse rather than one of rigid ethical principles. In fact, however, the pope recognized the need to denounce evil and did so in a number of his public speeches, all the while preserving his political neutrality. In his first encyclical (October 20, 1939), Pius XII rejected the claims of absolute state authority propounded by the totalitarian powers, but this denunciation was general rather than specific. He also expressed disapproval of aggression against a peaceful nation, but later assured German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop that the small nation he had referred to was Finland, which had been a victim of Soviet aggression. In his Easter message of 1941, he lamented the evils afflicting not simply those engaged in combat but entire populations, without specifying either perpetrators or victims. In a number of his encyclicals he indirectly revealed the Church's opposition to Nazi policies. For example, his Mystici corporis Christi of June 1943 stressed that the Church embraces all peoples, "whatever their nationality or race," thereby expressing the truth that the Catholic Church transcends boundaries of race or territory.

These and other statements represented an apparent compromise between the Vatican's need to take a moral stance and its determination not to jeopardize its political neutrality. While publicly impartial, politically neutral, and religiously committed, Pius XII did not favor the Axis and remained suspicious of Nazism. The papal secretary of state, Cardinal Luigi MAGLIONE, explained that the Holy See had to adhere to a political policy of impartiality and therefore could not publicly condemn particular atrocities but could, and did, denounce atrocities in general. This pope's carefully crafted criticisms of Nazi abuses, tucked away in long encyclicals, were designed to achieve two objectives. First and foremost, they were intended to ease the CONSCIENCE of the Pontiff, who clearly recognized and often stated that as Vicar of Christ he had the responsibility of alerting the faithful to evils in state and society. Secondly, they were crafted so as not to provoke unduly Hitler and the Nazi regime, which would likely respond with punitive measures against the Church, the hierarchy, and the faithful in the Reich. It was only at the war's end that Pius XII abandoned his impartiality and denounced Nazism as "satanic."

Privately the pope tended to favor the Allies, and he hoped they would triumph over the Nazis. Indeed, at the end of 1939 and early in 1940 he informed the British that a group of German generals were prepared to overthrow the Nazi regime, on the condition that they could be assured a just and honorable peace. However, in mid-January 1940 the war cabinet in London decided it could not proceed on this nebulous proposition. The Vatican once again revealed its pro-Allied bias when it secretly alerted London to the impending Nazi invasion of France and the Low Countries. Still later, in May 1943, Myron Taylor, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's personal representative to the pope, informed the Vatican that the United States was prepared to negotiate with a successor government to Mussolini's regime, and that it sought the Vatican's assistance. Taylor asked that this message be transmitted to those in a position to depose Hitler's ally, the Duce. This prospect apparently appealed to the Vatican, which once more abandoned its neutrality by conveying the message to King Victor Emmanuel III, who proved cautious and noncommittal. (The Vatican later learned that the king was involved in the conspiracy that ultimately replaced Mussolini.)

Papal Efforts on Behalf of War Victims. The Vatican also revealed its sentiments by its relief efforts on behalf of Jews and other victims of the Nazi regime. In 1939 Pius XII established the Vatican Information Service, which covered all theaters of the war and worked in tandem with the humanitarian efforts of the Red Cross. Among other things, it put relatives in touch with prisoners-of-war, missing persons, and refugees, while monitoring and mitigating the suffering and separations brought about by the conflict. The Vatican Information Service was asked to investigate the fates of millions of displaced and incarcerated people, and to report back to concerned families—and it did so with considerable efficiency. Vatican radio transmitted hundreds of thousands of messages, and the Pontifical Relief Commission provided food, medical supplies, and other material assistance to the needy in those countries where it was allowed to function, including France, Belgium, Holland, Greece, Norway, Ethiopia, Malaya, and other countries. Pius provided assistance to the Jews of Slovakia, Romania, Hungary, Turkey, and elsewhere. During the Nazi occupation of Rome and the deportation of the city's Jewish population, the pope, though publicly silent, directed his secretary of state to complain to the German ambassador. This action in turn secured the release of a number of Jews, and others were permitted to hide in extraterritorial religious houses and within Vatican City itself. Reports of this clandestine Church activity reached Berlin, and provoked anger and calls for revenge and retribution from the more anticlerical wing of the Nazi party.

Although Hitler had on numerous occasions indicated that he would settle accounts with the Church at war's end, some believe he became increasingly disenchanted with the Holy See as the tide turned against his military forces and war effort. Following the collapse of Mussolini's Italy, and the subsequent Nazi occupation of a good part of the peninsula, including Rome, rumors circulated that Hitler planned to invade Vatican City, arrest Pius XII and the cardinals as Napoleon had done a century earlier, and transport them to Germany. The plan for this operation had supposedly been devised by the main security office of the Third Reich. Reportedly, Hitler was dissuaded from carrying it out by his military officers. Some doubt this account, based on the reasoning that Hitler had more pressing problems and did not envision an invasion of the Vatican to be feasible. Furthermore, the strict public neutrality espoused by Pius XII provided little justification for such intervention. What is certain is that these rumors abounded, and they led the pope to avoid any pretext for intervention as he publicly adhered to the strictest standards of political neutrality.

Pius XII's impartiality and public political neutrality, which led to his so-called public silence on the matters of both Nazi and Bolshevik atrocities during WORLD WAR II, has been variously assessed. Those who defend the Pontiff note that his refusal to become politically embroiled allowed Vatican diplomacy and charity to assist hundreds of thousands of victims during the conflict. His detractors complain that his refusal to name the aggressors and their victims constituted a compromise of moral standards in the name of mere diplomacy. Decades later, the debate continues.

SEE ALSO ANTI-SEMITISM; BOLSHEVISM; FASCISM; HOLOCAUST (SHOAH); NUNCIO, APOSTOLIC; WORLD WAR I, PAPAL REACTION TO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gerhard Besier, The Holy See and Hitler's Germany, translated by W.R. Ward (New York 2007).

Pierre Blett, et al., eds., Actes et documents du Saint Siège relatifs à la seconde Guerre Mondiale (Rome 1965–1981).

Frank J. Coppa, The Papacy, the Jews and the Holocaust (Washington, D.C. 2006).

Frank J. Coppa, Politics and the Papacy in the Modern World (Westport, Conn. 2008).

Carlo Gasbarri, Quando il Vaticano confinava con il Terzo Reich (Padua, Italy 1984).

Margherita Marchione, Crusade of Charity: Pius XII and POWs (1939–1945) (New York 2006).

Paul O'Shea, A Cross Too Heavy: Eugenio Pacelli: Politics and the Jews of Europe, 1917–1943 (Kenthurst, Australia 2008).

Michael Phayer, Pius XII, The Holocaust and the Cold War (Bloomington, Ind. 2008).

Kevin P. Spicer, C.S.C., Hitler's Priests: Catholic Clergy and National Socialism (DeKalb, Ill. 2008).

Frank J. Coppa
Professor of History
St. John's University, Jamaica, N.Y. (2010)

NEOSCHOLASTICISM AND NEOTHOMISM

The terms Neoscholasticism and Neothomism refer to a group of intellectual movements, originating in the late nineteenth century, that were intended to renew Catholic PHILOSOPHY and THEOLOGY along the lines of approaches that were predominant in the High MIDDLE AGES. These approaches were updated to reflect recent discoveries in many disciplines and thus be better prepared to face contemporary problems.

Neoscholasticism is a broader term than Neothomism, for it encompasses contemporary forms of SCOTISM, THOMISM, AUGUSTINIANISM, and (to a lesser extent) other schools of thought that flourished in the High Middle Ages. The term Neothomism is narrower than the term Neoscholasticism in that it names the contemporary schools of thought that trace their origin and primary inspiration to St. THOMAS AQUINAS. It is nevertheless broad enough to include the Existential Thomism of such thinkers as Jacques MARITAIN, Étienne GILSON, and Josef Pieper (1904–1997); the Transcendental Thomism of such figures as Pierre ROUSSELOT, Joseph MARÉCHAL, Bernard LONERGAN, and Karl RAHNER; and the Analytical Thomism of individuals such as Norman Kretzmann (1928–1998), John Finnis (1940–), and John Haldane (1954–).

Scholasticism during the Middle Ages. Medieval SCHOLASTICISM emerged with the rise of the universities in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, especially under the influence of Aristotelian logic and the then newly recovered natural philosophy of ARISTOTLE, as broadly applied to questions of theology, philosophy, and canon law. As R.W. Southern has shown (1995, 1997), medieval Scholastic thinkers exhibited a thoroughgoing optimism about the prospect of intellectual progress by the rigorous application of a dialectical method that was deeply respectful of tradition. Working under the presumption that recognized authorities (biblical, PAGAN, Patristic, and contemporary) must have had good reasons for their views, Scholastic authors culled their sources for insights, evidence, and arguments. Where they noticed discrepancies in their materials, they attempted to analyze the relevant texts and problems in the hope of finding the distinctions that could explain the differences among authorities and allow them to build up a new synthesis of learning and wisdom (doctrina et sapientia).

Despite considerable differences in the structure of the syntheses that were proposed by such thinkers as Aquinas, St. BONAVENTURE, and John DUNS SCOTUS, they shared enough of a consensus on the basic method to be used, a fundamental realism in philosophical outlook, and the respect to be accorded to authorities. This consensus justified the common attribution of the term Scholastic thinkers to those who worked by this dialogical method within the schools of the High Middle Ages.

The increasing ascendancy of logic in fourteenth-century Scholasticism desiccated the religious HUMANISM typical of the high Scholastic period and precipitated a kind of FIDEISM in reaction to what was perceived as excessive RATIONALISM and logic-chopping frequently associated with NOMINALISM. With the coming of the RENAISSANCE in the fifteenth century, thinkers inclined to humanism became increasingly focused on such disciplines as history, RHETORIC, and morals, generally (but not always) preferring the pagan writers of classical antiquity to the Christian authors of the Scholastic period.

Revival of the Scholastic Method. The late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries saw a revival of SCHOLASTIC METHOD in philosophy and theology. Various Scholastic schools of thought developed around some of the leading universities and centers of study of this period, especially the University of COIMBRA (the Conimbricenses), the University of SALAMANCA (the Salmanticenses), and the CONVENT of the CARMELITES at Alcalá de Henares/Complutum (the COMPLUTENSES). DOMINICANS such as Tommaso de Vio CAJETAN, and JOHN OF ST. THOMAS, joined by many Carmelites (including St. JOHN OF THE CROSS) and BENEDICTINES, spearheaded a revival that included the organization of theological studies on the plan of the Summa theologiae and the articulation of a social doctrine in response to the ethical problems encountered in the relations of European colonizers and the indigenous populations of the lands of the New World. Franciscans of this period generally followed the thought of Scotus or Bonaventure, whereas Augustinians and SERVITES generally took their lead from GILES OF ROME and HENRY OF GHENT and developed their own positions in the controversy on grace and freedom of the will—for example, Michel de Bay (Baius; 1513–1589) and Cornelius Otto JANSEN (Jansenius).

The newly founded JESUITS followed the directives of St. IGNATIUS OF LOYOLA in respecting Patristic and Scholastic authorities (especially Aquinas, but less strictly than the Dominicans). Jesuits such as Francisco SUÁREZ and Pedro da FONSECA developed a distinctive form of Thomism that portrayed the philosophy of Aquinas as a kind of Christianized Aristotelianism but one in which the Platonic participation METAPHYSICS of act limited by POTENCY that had been important in the original Thomistic synthesis was removed. The influence of these various forms of revived Scholasticism is evident at the Council of TRENT and well beyond. Jesuit CASUISTRY (the practice of formulating moral cases and resolving them in ways that would illustrate the right or wrong involved) often seemed to lead toward a moral laxity that the Dominicans forbade their confessors to use. The REDEMPTORISTS under the leadership of figures like St. ALPHONSUS LIGUORI urged a middle course. By the middle of the eighteenth century, however, the fortunes of Scholastic approaches in philosophy and theology had considerably declined with the rise of rationalism, EMPIRICISM, and IDEALISM.

Despite its commitment to a DUALISM of body and soul and its penchant for separating the theoretical and the practical, some form of CARTESIANISM was often regarded as the branch of modern philosophy most suitable for Catholic thought. In German-speaking lands, nineteenth-century theology frequently took the form of romanticism and borrowed from the philosophical approach of German idealism. But Thomism never died out in the Dominican order. The loss of the Papal States in the course of the nineteenth century prompted a reconsideration of many aspects of ecclesial life, including the state of Catholic philosophy and theology.

Role of Pope Leo XIII. In the hope of revivifying a form of thought that could address contemporary problems on many fronts and provide both a cogent for the defense of traditional Catholic positions and a solid basis for arguments with nonbelievers in the public arena on questions pertaining to the order of society, Pope LEO XIII called for a return to the philosophia perennis in his 1879 ENCYCLICAL Aeterni Patris. Pope Leo XIII later made considerable use of the Thomistic doctrine of natural law in his groundbreaking social encyclical Rerum novarum in 1891. While Aeterni Patris gave pride of place to Thomism, it also opened the way to the recovery of various forms of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY under the heading of Neoscholasticism.

Of special note in the recovery of Aquinas's thought that came to be known as Neothomism is the work of such Dominicans as Jean-Baptiste Henri LACORDAIRE and Tommaso ZIGLIARA, whom Leo XIII appointed in 1882 as the director of the project to establish the critical edition of the works of Aquinas, now called the Leonine edition. Jesuits such as Luigi TAPARELLI D'AZEGLIO, Matteo LIBERATORE, Carlo Maria CURCI, and Joseph KLEUTGEN were instrumental in promoting Neothomism by their essays on the Thomistic doctrine of natural law and their support of the papal initiatives through la Civiltà cattolica. Official centers for the editing of the works of Bonaventure, ALEXANDER OF HALES, Scotus, Raymond LULL, Albertus Magnus (c. 1200–1280), and John of St. Thomas were quickly established. This work continues today in such initiatives as the Scotus Project headquartered at the CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA and the ongoing work to complete the Leonine edition of Aquinas, a project that was significantly aided by Roberto Busa's Index Thomisticus (1974–1980, 1993).

Maurice DE WULF is representative of the widespread enthusiasm for Leo XIII's initial project, even though de Wulf prematurely argued for the view that there was minimal disagreement in medieval Scholasticism. Subsequent historical studies in the generation of Pierre MANDONNET and Étienne Gilson disclosed the presence of irreducible differences among thirteenth-century Scholastic thinkers. The crisis over MODERNISM delayed somewhat the development of Neoscholasticism in its various forms, but in due time a return to the texts of Aquinas, Scotus, Bonaventure, and many other medieval thinkers took place as part of a general blossoming of medieval studies.

The modernist crisis seems to have been due, at least in part, to inadequate training in philosophy and theology by many who felt the influence of German HISTORICISM and higher biblical criticism. On the assumption that Scholasticism could not deal with contemporary scientific problems, the thinkers associated with modernism looked for ways to be engaged with the contemporary scholarship but may not always have been sufficiently cautious about preserving traditional doctrines. The papal recommendations in favor of Thomism were not always universally accepted, especially when accompanied by rather restrictive interpretations of what constituted an acceptable form of Thomism, such as the list of twenty-four required theses issued in 1914.

New Movements. Of equal prominence with Neoscholasticism and Neothomism within the Catholic intellectual renascence of the twentieth century was the movement generally known as nouvelle théologie. The fruitful interest of its proponents in renewing theology by a return to biblical and Patristic texts was sometimes accompanied by a reaction to what seemed stifling in the Scholastic method. Among philosophers who identified themselves and their work as Catholic but not Scholastic or Thomistic was the movement known as phenomenological realism, pioneered by such thinkers in the tradition of Edmund HUSSERL as Dietrich von HILDEBRAND and Max SCHELER. Some individuals attempted to synthesize Scholastic and non-Scholastic approaches, such as Charles Sanders PEIRCE, who borrowed much from Scotus; Edith STEIN (St. Teresa Benedicta of the Cross), who tried to integrate Husserl with Scotus and Aquinas, and Karol Wojtyła (Pope JOHN PAUL II), whose thought unites Husserl and Scheler with Aquinas and St. John of the Cross. The thought of Joseph RATZINGER (Pope BENEDICT XVI) involves a revival of Augustinian and Bonaventurian themes.

Various papal encyclicals have taken up the issue of the priority of respect that is owed to Aquinas within the pluralism that is possible within Catholic philosophy and theology. Of special note here are the encyclicals Pascendi of Pope PIUS X, Humani generis of Pope PIUS XII, and Fides et ratio of John Paul II. In repudiating modernism, these documents have repeatedly endorsed the ongoing development of a living form of Thomism. They also encourage the efforts to recognize and develop other sound approaches to Christian philosophy and theology besides Scholasticism as crucial for the preparation of adequate Catholic responses to contemporary problems.

Neothomist Texts. The earliest texts of Neothomism give evidence of influence from philosophical rationalism that took a considerable time to fall away. The writings of Juan José URRÁBURU and Josef August GREDT, for instance, were widely circulated but do not possess the same sense of Thomism as a living philosophy primarily in the Aristotelian tradition that emerged in slightly later figures, such as Cardinal Désiré Joseph MERCIER, Fernand VAN STEENBERGHEN, and Albert Dondeyne (1901–1985). With each decade there were notable improvements made by the recovery of various aspects of the original Thomistic synthesis. These include the work on the doctrine of analogy by Santiago María Ramírez (1891–1967) and later Ralph McInerny (1929–); the doctrine of participation and the recognition of Platonic aspects by Louis-Bertrand Geiger (1906–1983) and Cornelio Fabro (1911–1995); and the primacy of existence by Jacques Maritain, Étienne Gilson, Anton Charles PEGIS, and Gerard PHELAN. Throughout the first half of the twentieth century the Neothomists—and also the proponents of numerous Neoscholastic schools of thought—entered the then wide-ranging debates on the nature of Christian philosophy, the relation between philosophy and revelation, and the proper autonomy of reason unaided by grace.

In various areas of theology there have been strong Neothomistic contributions, including the work of Ambrose GARDEIL and Réginald GARRIGOU-LAGRANGE in apologetics and mystical theology; Louis BILLOT, Francisco MARÍN-SOLA, and Karl Rahner in dogmatic theology; Charles JOURNET, Yves Marie-Joseph CONGAR, Edward SCHILLEBEECKX, and Avery DULLES in ECCLESIOLOGY; Dominikus PRÜMMER and Servais Pinckaers (1925–2008) in moral theology; and Marie-Dominique CHENU in historical theology. The second half of the twentieth century saw a vast pluralizing of theological approaches, but Neothomists continued to play an important role, for instance, in the debate over the proper understanding of intellectus fidei. Some Neothomists proposed that theology should be seen as a deductive discipline that arrives at its conclusions by a fixed method. Others have argued that Aquinas himself envisioned theology as ostensive in its aim to show the internal coherence of revelation by displaying revelation's connection to the articuli fidei (the basic articles of the faith, such as those enumerated in the creeds). Likewise, there have been vigorous discussions about the proper understandings of the workings of grace, especially in connection to the questions about whether Thomists should hold a doctrine of "pure nature."

Schools of Neothomism. Within Neothomist philosophy, a number of schools have considerable importance. In the works of such figures as Brian Davies (1951–), Norman Kretzmann, and John Haldane, there has emerged a school of thought that might be called Analytic Thomism for its use of the tools of contemporary analytic philosophy to read and reflect on the texts of Aquinas and other medieval Scholastic thinkers. Transcendental Thomists such as Pierre Rousselot, Joseph Maréchal, Emerich Coreth (1919–2006), Bernard Lonergan, and Karl Rahner have tried to use the resources of Kantian and neo-Kantian thought, including the "turn to the subject," as a new basis for Thomism. These thinkers have tended to ground Thomistic principles in a critical EPISTEMOLOGY rather than in the traditional focus on metaphysics and philosophy of nature. More traditional scholars, such as John Wippel, W. Norris Clarke (1915–2008), Benedict Ashley, William Wallace, and Jan Aertsen, have argued for the need to retain a focus on the intelligibility of being and the doctrine of the TRANSCENDENTALS as the proper basis for a contemporary Thomism.

Some of the same debates are being played out in the arena of ethics in the debates between traditional natural law theorists such as Ralph McInerny and F. Russell Hittinger and the "new natural law" school associated with John Finnis, Germain Grisez, and Robert P. George. The traditional natural law approach emphasizes the need for the metaphysical grounding of moral claims in a teleological view of human nature. The new natural law approach tends to proceed by an analytical method from the recognition of certain self-evident basic goods and the application of the first principle of practical reasoning to human choices. In the work of such figures as Servais Pinckaers and Romanus Cessario, there is stress on the moral virtues as crucial for the exposition of a genuine Thomistic ethics.

SEE ALSO Aeterni Patris; Albert the Great, St.; Arabian Philosophy; Civiltà Cattolica, la; Fides et Ratio; Humani Generis; Pascendi; Philosophy, History of; Philosophy and Science; Rerum Novarum; Scholastic Philosophy.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Scholasticism and Neoscholasticism

Joseph M. Bochenski, Contemporary European Philosophy, translated by Donald Nicholl and Karl Aschenbrenner (Berkeley, Calif. 1956).

Étienne Gilson, Being and Some Philosophers (Toronto 1949, Rev. ed., 1961).

Étienne Gilson, Elements of Christian Philosophy (Garden City, N.Y. 1960).

Robert F. Harvanek, "The Crisis in Neo-Scholastic Philosophy," Thought 38 (1963): 529–546.

Fergus Kerr, Twentieth-Century Catholic Theologians: From Neoscholasticism to Nuptial Mysticism (Malden, Mass. 2007).

Josef Pieper, Scholasticism: Personalities and Problems of Medieval Philosophy, German original edition, 1960, translated by Richard and Clara Winston (South Bend, Ind. 2001).

Richard William Southern, Scholastic Humanism and the Unification of Europe, 2 vols. (Cambridge, Mass. 1995, 1997).

Maurice de Wulf, Introduction à la philosophie néo-scolastique (Louvain, Belgium 1904).

Thomism and Neothomism: Source Texts

Bulletin thomiste, Étioles (Rome 1924–1965; Rassegna di letteratura tomistica Rome 1966–).

W. Norris Clarke, The One and the Many: A Contemporary Thomistic Metaphysics (Notre Dame, Ind. 2004).

Emerich Coreth, Metaphysics, English ed. by Joseph Donceel (New York 1968).

Cornelio Fabro, La nozione metafiscia di partecipazione secondo S. Tommaso d'Aquino (Rome 2005, 1950).

Joseph de Finance, Être et agir dans la philosophie de S. Thomas d'Aquin (Paris 1945).

Réginald Garrigou-Lagrange, "Thomism," in Dictionnaire de théologie catholique (Paris 1946), 15:823–1023.

Louis-Bertrand Geiger, La participation dans la philosophie de S. Thomas d'Aquin (Paris 1953).

Joseph Gredt, Elementa philosophiae Aristotelico-Thomisticae (Freiburgi Brisgoviae 1937).

Bernard J.F. Lonergan, Insight: A Study of Human Understanding (New York 1970).

Bernard J.F. Lonergan, Method in Theology (New York 1972).

Jacques Maritain, Distinguish to Unite, or The Degrees of Knowledge, translated under the supervision of Gerald B. Phelan (New York 1959).

Ralph M. McInerny, The Logic of Analogy: An Interpretation of St. Thomas (The Hague 1961).

Ralph M. McInerny, Studies in Analogy (The Hague 1969).

Josef Pieper, Leisure, the Basis of Culture, translated by Gerald Malsbary (South Bend, Ind. 1998, 1952).

Josef Pieper, "What Does It Mean to Philosophize?" Four Lectures, in For the Love of Wisdom: Essays on the Nature of Philosophy, translated by Roger Wasserman (San Francisco 2007), 27–80.

Lorenz B. Puntel, Analogie und Geschichtlichkeit, vol. 1, Philosophiegeschichtlich-kritischer Versuch über das Grundproblem der Metaphysik (Freiburg, Basel, Vienna 1969).

Santiago Ramírez, De analogia secundum doctrinam Aristotelico-Thomisticam (Madrid 1922, 1972).

Fernard van Steenberghen, Epistemology, edited by David A. Boileau (New York 1949).

Université catholique de Louvain (1835–1969), Institut supérieur de philosophie, A Manual of Modern Scholastic Philosophy by Cardinal Mercier and Professors of the Higher Institute of Philosophy, Louvain (London 1928).

Juan J. Urráburu, Compendium philosophiae scholasticae, 5 vols. (Madrid 1902–1904).

Thomism and Neothomism: Historical Studies

David A. Boileau, ed., Cardinal Mercier's Philosophical Essays: A Study in Neo-Thomism (Herent, Belgium 2002).

Victor B. Brezik, ed., One Hundred Years of Thomism (Houston 1981).

Roberto Busa, Index Thomisticus (Stuttgart-Bad Cannstatt, Germany 1974–1980), revised edition on CD-ROM (1993).

Romanus Cessario, A Short History of Thomism (Washington, D.C. 2005).

Thomas J.A. Hartley, Thomistic Revival and the Modernist Era (Toronto 1971).

Helen J. John, The Thomist Spectrum (Bronx, N.Y. 1966).

John F.X. Knasas, Being and Some Twentieth-Century Thomists (Bronx, N.Y. 2003).

Gerald A. McCool, From Unity to Pluralism: The Internal Evolution of Thomism (New York 1989).

Gerald A. McCool, The Neo-Thomists (Milwaukee 1994).

Ralph M. McInerny, Praeambula fidei: Thomism and the God of the Philosophers (Washington, D.C. 2006).

Thomas F. O'Meara, "Thomas Aquinas and German Intellectuals," Gregorianum 68 (1987): 719–736.

Craig Paterson and Matthew S. Pugh, eds., Analytical Thomism: Traditions in Dialogue (Burlington, Vt. 2006).

Richard Peddicord, The Sacred Monster of Thomism: An Introduction to the Life and Legacy of Reginald Garrigou-Lagrange (South Bend, Ind. 2005).

Tracey Rowland, Culture and the Thomist Tradition: After Vatican II (New York 2005).

Jean-Pierre Torrell, Saint Thomas Aquinas, translated by Robert Royal, 2 vols., Rev. ed. (Washington, D.C. 2005).

Augustinianism and Neo-Augustinianism

Robert B. Caponigri, "Contemporary Neo-Augustinianism," Proceedings of the American Catholic Philosophical Quarterly 48 (1974): 305–307.

Gareth B. Matthews, "Post-Medieval Augustinianism," in The Cambridge Companion to Augustine, edited by Eleonore Stump and Norman Kretzmann (New York 2001), 267–279.

Joseph Cardinal Ratzinger (Pope Benedict XVI), The Theology of History of St. Bonaventure, translated by Zachary Hayes (Chicago 1971; German original, 1959).

Scotism and Neo-Scotism

Richard A. Lee, Jr., "Peirce's Retrieval of Scotistic Realism," American Catholic Philosophical Quarterly 72, no. 2 (1998): 179–196.

Catherine Pickstock, "Modernity and Scholasticism: A Critique of Recent Invocations of Univocity," Antonianum 78, no. 1 (2003): 3–46.

Related Issues

Brian J. Daley, "The Nouvelle Théologie and the Patristic Revival: Sources, Symbols, and the Science of Theology," International Journal of Systematic Theology 7, no. 4 (2005): 362–382.

Dietrich von Hildebrand, What Is Philosophy? (New York 1991, 1960).

Josef Seifert, Back to Things in Themselves (Boston 1987).

Robert Sokolowski, ed., Edmund Husserl and the Phenomenological Tradition (Washington, D.C. 1988).

Edith Stein (Sr. Teresa Benedicta of the Cross), Finite and Eternal Being: An Attempt at an Ascent to the Meaning of Being, translated by Kurt Reinhardt (Washington, D.C. 2002).

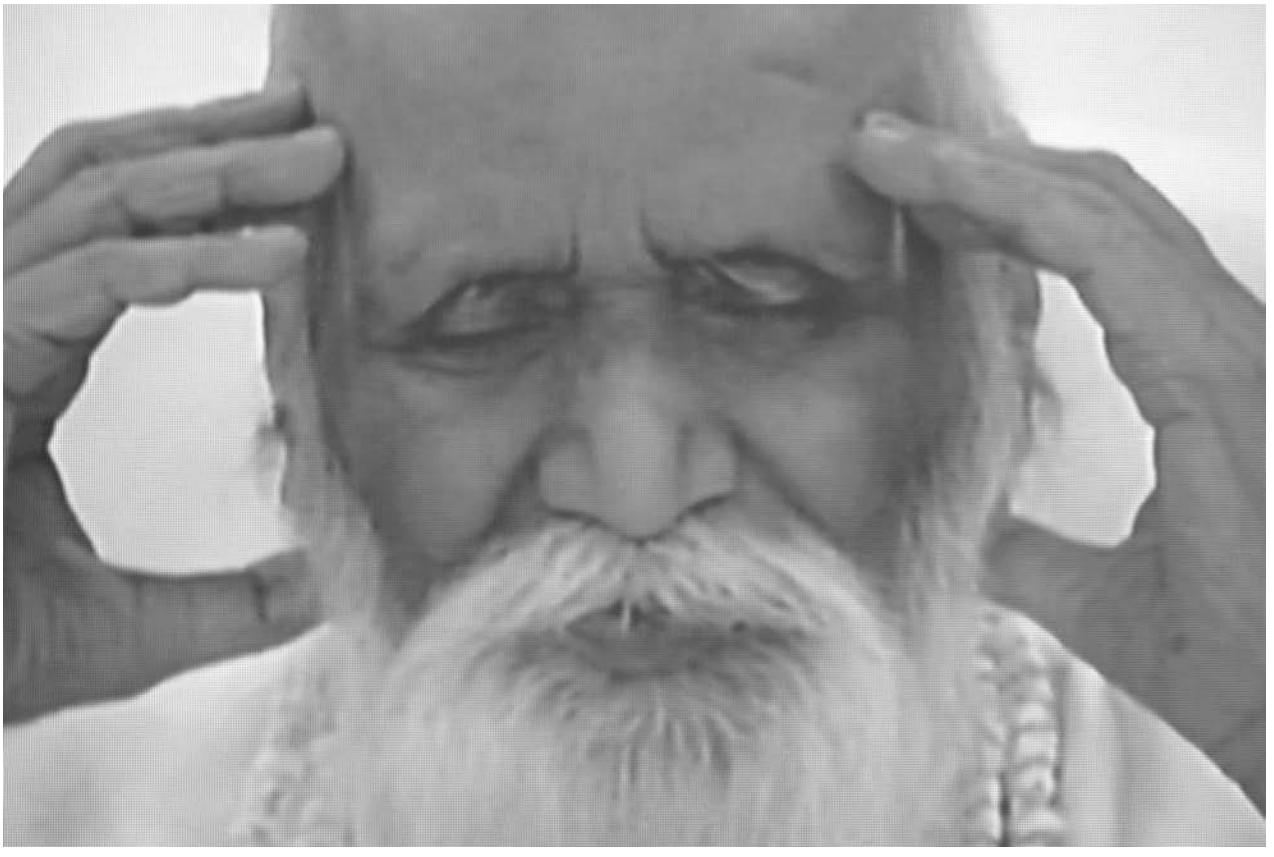
Karol Wojtyła (Pope John Paul II), The Acting Person, translated by Andrzej Potocki (Boston 1979).

Karol Wojtyła (Pope John Paul II), Person and Community: Selected Essays, translated by Theresa Sandok (New York 1993).

Rev. Joseph W. Koterski SJ
Professor, Department of Philosophy
Fordham University (2010)

NEW AGE MOVEMENT, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND

The New Age (NA) movement is a variegated cultural phenomenon. In its broadest sense, the term refers to a configuration of Eastern and Western esoteric psychologies, philosophies, and religious traditions that have been brought into convergence with new paradigms in science and modern PSYCHOLOGY. The movement has links with the Eastern and Western occult, mystical, and metaphysical traditions. In the United States, the movement is the inheritor of the Aquarian "new religious consciousness" of the 1960s and 1970s.



New Age cultural referents include health food stores, parapsychology research organizations, and psychic development groups; the late twentieth-century interest in REINCARNATION, ASTROLOGY, WICCA, tarot cards, the I Ching, out-of-body experience, channeling, and the "healing powers" of crystals and pyramids; "transformational" techniques ranging from MEDITATION to martial arts; alternative or "holistic" medicine and body therapies; and a melange of other "consciousness raising" techniques.

While there is no clearly defined New Age "gospel," per se, nor any unanimity of NA beliefs, the conviction that humanity is on the threshold of a radical spiritual transformation is a central motif. New Age thinking also embraces eclectic and syncretistic healing strategies and spiritual disciplines, reasserts various forms of supernaturalism and sacramentalism, and promotes the full realization of human potential. Themes of "transformation," "consciousness raising," "self-realization," "higher self," the "god within," and "global unity" are standard NA parlance. New Age thinking also animates elements of the contemporary environmental movement, notably in relation to ecofeminism and CREATION theology.

Growth of the Movement. The spread of NA thinking in modern society has been propagated through movement literature and a multitude of seminars and training programs focused on human potential and self-improvement. Various teachers, empowerment practitioners, and assorted shamans have facilitated such programs. These include cultural celebrities as diverse as Baba Ram Dass (Richard Alpert, b. 1931), a former professor of psychology at Harvard; the actress Shirley MacLaine (b. 1934); and David Spangler (b. 1945), formerly a codirector of a spiritual community in Scotland run by the Findhorn Foundation and the author of Revelation: The Birth of a New Age (1976). It was Spangler who coined the term "New Age." Marilyn Ferguson's book The Aquarian Conspiracy: Personal and Social Transformation in the 1980s (1980), an impassioned discussion of the need to create a new society based on a "turnabout in consciousness" and a vastly enlarged concept of human potential, also helped popularize New Age perspectives.

Cultural historians have emphasized the continuity between current NA ideas and earlier American interest in metaphysical, occult, and non-Western spiritual traditions, such as TRANSCENDENTALISM, SPIRITUALISM, THEOSOPHY, and New Thought. They have also pointed to NA affinities with the long-standing American utopian tradition and the quintessential American dream of transcending personal background by reinventing the SELF.

Social and behavioral science perspectives link the appeal of the NA to the cultural crisis of post-1950s

Group Meditation. Maharishi Mahesh Yogi is seen on a video screen during an AP interview in 2006, which was also broadcast over the Internet. Since the founding of Maharishi Vedic City in Iowa in 2001, hundreds of Transcendental Meditation practitioners have meditated in unison, sending what they say is a wave of positivity across the globe. AP IMAGES

America. From this perspective, the NA is a cultural response to the weakening of the structures and institutions that integrate society. The contradictions of late capitalism's commodity culture and the spiritual poverty of the technocratic state—characterized by massive bureaucracy, depersonalization, aesthetic sterility, and the dominance of instrumental rationality—compounded this crisis. Other factors facilitating the spread of NA thinking include the decline of mainline religions, the expansion of comparative religion courses, the increase in Asian immigration, and mass marketing techniques used by NA spiritual entrepreneurs. The high media visibility of Hollywood celebrities promoting NA concepts and theories have also contributed to the cultural visibility of the movement.

Since the 1960s, a large part of the recruiting ground for religious and spiritual experiment has been among the relatively privileged and social elites. In this context, the spread of the NA movement is attributable, in part, to structural characteristics of demographic and generational shifts associated with an emerging cohort of "baby boomers," whose affluence and greater discretionary time have freed them for diverse spiritual and cultural pursuits.

Criticism of the Movement. Criticism of NA therapies and philosophies tends to come from two main sources: (1) left-leaning cultural critics and academics, and (2) conservative Christians. Cultural critics and academics censure the movement for its assault on the heritage of the ENLIGHTENMENT and for sowing doubt about the trustworthiness of rational thought. Accordingly, they claim that NA devotees promote alchemist-like spirituality, superstition, pseudoscience, incipient totalitarianism, a dangerous ahistoricism, and, in some cases, outright fraud.

Cultural critics have also asserted that exotic NA interests such as crystal gazing and "harmonic convergence" are contrived, artificial phenomena that actually point to the triviality of spiritual matters in modern society. They state that, from a psychological perspective, some NA devotees manifest narcissistic and obsessive self-fixation traits that mirror the powerlessness, alienation, and atomistic individualism endemic in society. New Age "higher consciousness" is, therefore, viewed by these critics as little more than a misguided initiative to rescue the modern American "minimal self." In addition, NA practitioners have been accused of mimicking liberalism's idioms of GLOBALISM, cooperation, and tolerance. However, because some currents in the movement reject or minimize reformist political struggle, they implicitly promote apolitical escapism and reinforce the status quo.

The most aggressive assault on NA thinking comes from fundamentalist and other conservative Christians who link NA spiritual effervescence with exotic "cults," with secular humanism, and with the emergence of a "false" and "one world" religion. "Bible-believing" Christians denounce NA apologists for distorting and rejecting the Bible's message of sin and SALVATION, for promoting the "occult" and "demonic," and for contaminating the Christian tradition with false spiritual ideas. The New Age movement is thus construed as the shadow of the ANTICHRIST and another cultural barometer of an apostate age.

More moderate Christian critics point to the latent GNOSTICISM in much NA thought, to the movement's promotion of magic-like ritualization, and to its cooption of traditional religious symbolism. These critics have also reproached the New Age movement for failing to address the reality of EVIL (or for viewing social and structural oppression as merely a state of mind), for failing to link "self-realization" with moral guidance, and for extolling forms of self-exploration that too readily degenerate into self-promotion. In addition, both secular and religious critics have attacked certain NA currents for amoralism, for the degradation and blatant commercialization of piety, and for the tendency to reduce religion to psychology.

The spread of New Age thinking has also been interpreted in more positive ways. First, the phenomenon shows that people do not respond to new social and cultural problems by abandoning religion as much as by developing new religious innovations and orientations on the ruins of the old. What is "new" about much NA thinking is not the content, per se, but the unexpected spread of such ideas in the face of assumptions regarding the alleged inexorable triumph of secularization.

Second, the NA movement points up the continuing problem of the bifurcation of religious and scientific orientations that has long afflicted Western civilization. In response to this situation, people often compartmentalize their meaning systems. The privatization of religion is one aspect of this; the idolatry of technique is another. New Age thinking, with its call for "holistic" and "integrated" living, is both symptomatic of this cultural problem and a creative and contemporary response to it.

Third, while the spread of NA theories and practices can be seen as an indictment of organized religion's failure to respond in creative and dynamic ways to new cultural trends, the movement has also stimulated a renewed interest in mysticism, meditation, and spiritual renewal within the Christian tradition. New Age ideals have also converged with a new stress on eclectic approaches to spirituality in many mainline churches.

The most positive aspects of NA ideals are those that encourage consensus decision making, integrated living, an emphasis on freedom for positive growth, creative action, and a call for human solidarity. Certain NA motifs are also highly relevant to aspects of the emerging ecological ethos and for the need for a new cosmology relevant to environmental concerns.

In its overall composition and visibility, the NA movement gives expression to the dynamic and ongoing realignment of religion and culture. In reference to the Christian tradition, the movement provides another opportunity for both spiritual revitalization within the tradition and for a new and creative discernment of the vibrant relationship between the GOSPEL and culture.

The Catholic Church and the New Age. Some beliefs and practices commonly promoted by New Age followers (though not necessarily of NA origin) have found their way into Catholic settings. Eastern forms of meditation; alternative medicines and healing techniques such as Reiki; Jungian psychology; "creation spirituality"; feng shui; the enneagram (a nine-pointed starlike symbol); neo-pagan, Wiccan, and Native American rituals; astrology; goddess worship; ecofeminist theology; shamanism, and spirit "channeling" have all been embraced, not only in private by some individual Catholics but also publicly in some Catholic parishes, universities, hospitals, retreat centers, and religious orders.

The resulting forms of religious syncretism have provoked various critiques informed by more traditional Catholic perspectives. A number of formal documents have been issued by Church officials to address either New Age spirituality as a whole or specific teachings and practices common in NA circles. In the 1990s, pastoral directives on these subjects were published by individual bishops in Belgium (Godfried Danneels of Brussels, in 1990); the United States (Edward Anthony McCarthy of Miami, 1992); Italy (Carlo Maccari of Ancona-Osimo, 1994); and Mexico (Norberto Rivera Carrera of Mexico City, 1996). The Argentine Bishops' Conference Committee for Culture and the Irish Theological Commission also published extensive critiques of New Age influences at this time.

Relevant documents from Rome include the Letter to Bishops on Certain Aspects of Christian Meditation—

Orationis Formas (1989) from the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (1989); Some Current Questions Concerning Eschatology (1992), issued by the INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL COMMISSION to address the notion of reincarnation and other popular beliefs about life after death; and the Vatican's most comprehensive statement on New Age spirituality, Jesus Christ, the Bearer of the Water of Life: A Christian Reflection on the "New Age" (2003), prepared by the PONTIFICAL COUNCIL FOR CULTURE and the PONTIFICAL COUNCIL FOR INTERRELIGIOUS DIALOGUE. Intended as a "provisional report" from the Working Group on New Religious Movements, this document was "offered primarily to those engaged in pastoral work so that they might be able to explain how the New Age movement differs from the Christian faith" (Foreword). It "does not aim at providing a set of complete answers to the many questions raised by the New Age," but rather "is an invitation to understand the New Age and to engage in a genuine dialogue with those who are influenced by New Age thought" (sec. 1).

The authors of Jesus Christ, the Bearer of the Water of Life echo many of the secular and Christian analyses of New Age religion summarized above, citing numerous sociological, psychological, cultural, and theological studies. They state, for example, that "there is, in fact, little in the New Age that is new" (sec. 1.3), and that it seems to represent a form of "spiritual narcissism or pseudo-mysticism" (sec. 3.2). Even so, they add, "[i]t would be unwise and untrue to say that everything connected with the New Age movement is good, or that everything about it is bad" (sec. 2).

After tracing the historical and cultural sources of the movement, as well as the universal human aspirations that drive it, the report concludes:

> Even if it can be admitted that New Age religiosity in some way responds to the legitimate spiritual longing of human nature, it must be acknowledged that its attempts to do so run counter to Christian revelation. ... An adequate Christian discernment of New Age thought and practice cannot fail to recognize that, like second- and third-century gnosticism, it represents something of a compendium of positions that the Church has identified as heterodox. (sec. 1.4)

The report goes on to provide an overview of New Age claims, fundamental themes, and principles of thought. The authors clarify the particular differences between NA and Catholic beliefs with regard to notions about God and the world; the identity and mission of Jesus Christ; the nature of truth and moral authority; the human being (especially human free will and destiny); suffering and death; sin and salvation; and the need for social commitment.

Playing off the NA mythology surrounding the "Age of Aquarius" (the Water-Bearer), the document proposes that Jesus' encounter with the woman at the well (Jn 4:1–42) offers a paradigm for the Church's encounter with New Age believers: "The experience of meeting the stranger who offers us the water of life is a key to the way Christians can and should engage in dialogue with anyone who does not know Jesus," especially those "who may have been attracted to the water-carrier (Aquarius) but who are genuinely still seeking the truth" (sec. 5). Practical suggestions for pastoral strategies and resources reflect the authors' conviction that "through many of our contemporaries who are searching, we can discover a true thirst for God" (Foreword).

SEE ALSO APOSTASY; DOCTRINE OF THE FAITH, CONGREGATION FOR THE; ECOFEMINISM AND ECOFEMINIST THEOLOGY; HUMANISM, SECULAR; JUNG, CARL GUSTAV; METAPHYSICS; OCCULTISM; PHILOSOPHY; RELIGIONS, COMPARATIVE STUDY OF; SELF, THE; SPIRITUALISM; THEOSOPHY; TRANSCENDENTALISM; WITCHCRAFT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Argentine Bishops' Conference Committee for Culture, Frente a una Nueva Era: Desafío a la pastoral en el horizonte de la Nueva Evangelización (Buenos Aires 1993).

Norberto Rivera Carrera, A Call to Vigilance: Pastoral Instruction on New Age (Pastoral Letter, January 7, 1996), available from http://www.ewtn.com/library/BISHOPS/ACALL.HTM (accessed March 3, 2008).

Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Orationis formas, On Certain Aspects of Christian Meditation (Letter, October 15, 1989), available from http://www.ewtn.com/library/CURIA/CDFMED.HTM (accessed March 7, 2008).

Godfried Danneels, Christ or Aquarius?: Exploring the New Age Movement (Dublin 1990).

Marilyn Ferguson, The Aquarian Conspiracy: Personal and Social Transformation in the 1980s (Los Angeles 1980).

Wouter Hanegraaff, New Age Religion and Western Culture: Esotericism in the Mirror of Nature (Leiden, Netherlands 1996).

Paul Heelas, The New Age Movement: The Celebration of the Self and the Sacralization of Modernity (Oxford, U.K. 1996).

International Theological Commission, Some Current Questions Concerning Eschatology (Vatican City 1992).

Irish Theological Commission, A New Age of the Spirit? A Catholic Response to the New Age Phenomenon (Dublin, Ireland 1994).

Christopher Lasch, The Minimal Self: Psychic Survival in Troubled Times (New York 1984).

James R. Lewis and J. Gordon Melton, Perspectives on the New Age (Albany, N.Y. 1992).

Edward Anthony McCarthy, The New Age Movement (Miami, Fla. 1992).

Mitch Pacwa, S.J., Catholics and the New Age: How Good People Are Being Drawn Into Jungian Psychology, the Enneagram, and the New Age of Aquarius (Ann Arbor, Mich. 1992).

Ted Peters, The Cosmic Self: A Penetrating Look at Today's New Age Movements (San Francisco 1991).

Pontifical Council for Culture and Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue, Jesus Christ, the Bearer of the Water of Life: A Christian Reflection on the "New Age" (2003), available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/pontifical_councils/interelg/documents/rc_pc_interelg_doc_20030203_new-age_en.html (accessed March 3, 2008).

David Toolan, Facing West from California's Shores: A Jesuit's Journey Into New Age Consciousness (New York 1987).

William Dinges
Associate Professor of Religion and Religious Education
Catholic University of America

Paul Thigpen
Executive Director
Stella Maris Center for Faith and Culture
Savannah, Georgia (2010)

NICOLI, GIUSEPPINA, BL.

Religious sister of the Daughters of Charity; b. Casatisma, Pavia, Italy, November 18, 1863; d. Cagliari, Sardinia, Italy, December 31, 1924; beatified February 3, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Giuseppina Nicoli entered the Daughters of Charity of St. VINCENT DE PAUL in Turin, Italy, in 1883. She was sent to Sardinia, Italy, in 1885. Sr. Josephine, as she became known, took her vows on Christmas Eve 1888. She served mostly in Sardinia, evangelizing while caring for the poor, the sick, and the orphaned. In 1893 Nicoli contracted tuberculosis, which would cause her difficulty for the rest of her life. In Cagliari, Sardinia, she founded and directed the Society of the Pious Union of the Sons of Mary. There, Nicoli taught catechism to students and workers.

Nicoli left Cagliari for Sassari in 1899 to run an orphanage, and she opened the Daughters of Charity's first Italian section. Its works included teaching catechism to children and providing clothing to the poor. Nicoli also opened a school of religion to train older students to become teachers of the faith.

In 1910 Nicoli returned to mainland Italy, serving as bursar of the province of Turin. Two years later, she was assigned as directress to the novitiate in Turin. She served just nine months before declining health led her superiors to move her back to Sardinia's warmer climate. Nicoli returned to Sassari, but differences over her administration of the orphanage led to her transfer back to Cagliari in 1914. There, she and her sisters cared for those injured in WORLD WAR I (1914–1918). After the local bishop directed her to start the Dorotean Society for consecrated laywomen, Nicoli and the society's members set up the Young Women of Charity in 1917, and opened a facility for sick children in Marina del Poetto, a suburb. In Cagliari, she founded the St. Teresa Circle for young Catholic women (later called Women's Catholic Action) and established the Josephite Association for religious instruction.

At her BEATIFICATION, Cardinal José Saraiva Martins noted:

> What was striking in Sr. Nicoli was how she readily accepted and responded to the new social challenges of the time; Gospel hope, which did not let her hesitate in the face of misunderstandings and difficulties; the depth of her communion with Christ in the Eucharist, which supported her in all her charitable enterprises; as well as the constant effort she made to evangelize.

Feast: December 31.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Rite for the Beatification of the Servant of God Giuseppina Nicoli, D.C.: Homily of Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, February 3, 2008, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20080203_beatif-nicoli_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Sr Giuseppina Nicoli (1863–1924)," Vatican Web site, February 3, 2008, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2008/ns_lit_doc_20080203_suor-nicoli_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Rebecca Bowman Woods
Independent Researcher
Cincinnati, Ohio (2010)

NOMINALISM

Nominalism is a term that derives from the Latin nomen (name) and is used to refer to a range of philosophical doctrines and methods that have occasionally surfaced in other fields, such as literature and THEOLOGY. The core notion is ontological. Nominalism holds that only individuals exist and, conversely, that non-individuals, such as UNIVERSALS or common natures, are not things but "names." It is most clearly opposed to Platonic REALISM, which argues for the existence of real universals as transcendent patterns or exemplars for particular things, although it is also opposed to more moderate forms of realism, which claim that universals must somehow inhere or exist in the substance of particulars. The middle ground is CONCEPTUALISM, which is the view that universals exist as concepts in the mind or as ways of conceiving individuals that do exist outside the mind. All three views had an enormous impact on the history of Western PHILOSOPHY because of the theories that were developed to explore their semantic and metaphysical consequences. For this reason, philosophical use of the term nominalism has always been multilayered, or at least potentially so.

Historiographically, medieval nominalism has been associated not only with parsimony as regards universals but also with theologies that emphasize the absolute SOVEREIGNTY of God's will and hence the radical contingency of CREATION, as well as with VOLUNTARISM and Pelagianism (or SEMI-PELAGIANISM) in connection with human SALVATION, which is the reason why it occasioned comment from literary figures such as Geoffrey CHAUCER (Utz 1995). Because this seemed counter to ORTHODOXY, nominalism was often a term of disapprobation. But the application of the term was almost always backward-looking in both its earlier and later medieval manifestations; that is, nominalists were always given the name by those who wrote about them later (Courtenay 1992). Twentieth-century usage has for the most part returned to the ontological paradigm, in which a nominalist is someone who rejects the existence of real universals, frequently as part of a broader program of ontological parsimony.

Greek Origins. The position called nominalism predates the label by at least a millennium. It first emerges in resistance to Platonic METAPHYSICS, and especially to the idea that the particular things we perceive somehow owe their existence as beings of a certain type to a higher level of things: that of the types themselves. For example, Antisthenes the Cynic (c. 445–c. 365 BC) is said to have objected to PLATO, "I see a horse, but I do not see horseness" (Simplicius, In Arist. Categ. 208.30). ARISTOTLE leveled a number of devastating criticisms in Book I of the Metaphysics against what he took to be Plato's position. Aristotle's own view was that a thing's nature must actually exist in it, so that horseness inheres in each and every horse as part of its metaphysical makeup. The human INTELLECT is able to cognize horseness as a natural kind, however, because it abstracts the nature from its individualized existence as Silver, Trigger, Old Paint, and so on.

The Stoics have often been classified as nominalists because of their focus on individuals of the material world, but in addition, as an ontological foundation for their logic, they postulated a special kind of universal, the τὸ λεκτόν (what is said), referring to the meaning of a sentence or word. The idea that separate existence must be granted to the meanings of sentences reappeared in the MIDDLE AGES in controversies over the ontological status of the enuntiabile (sayable) of spoken or written or mental sentences, and still later, in the twentieth-century use of the term proposition to refer to the abstract entity expressed by the synonymous sentence-tokens of different languages. Thus, Il pleut and Es regnet (It's raining) are different linguistic conventions for expressing the same proposition.

The Early Middle Ages. The author who did the most to shape medieval discussion of the problem of universals was BOETHIUS, whose translation of and commentaries on PORPHYRY's Isagoge (Introduction) to the Categories of Aristotle forced later readers to consider the ontological significance of how we classify things. Specifically, Porphyry raises three questions: (1) whether genera (e.g., animal) and SPECIES (e.g., dog) exist in reality or only in thought; (2) if they are real, whether or not they are bodies; and (3) whether they exist in sensible things or apart from them (Isagoge 1.2), a question that Porphyry "begs off" answering, even though Boethius is happy to oblige (Spade 1994, pp. 20–25). In his Isagoge commentaries, Boethius basically splits the difference on each of Porphyry's questions by defending the moderate realist position that universals such as GENUS and species really do exist in sensible things, although they can also be abstracted in thought. But his subtle ARGUMENTATION and even-handed presentation of arguments for the nominalist and realist positions were what, primarily, attracted later thinkers to the issue.

Until the late eleventh century, most commentators were content to repeat Boethius's answers to Porphyry's three questions. But in fact Boethius gives what amounts to a different answer in his commentary on Aristotle's Categories, where he contends that universals are voces (words) and not the res, or things signified by them (Boethius, Patrologia Latina 64.159A7–161B2). Sometime during the late 1080s, a certain master at PARIS named John and his student ROSCELIN OF COMPIÈGNE began to teach the view that genus and species are words and not things, and a controversy erupted between the realists (reales) and this new group of so-called vocalists (vocales), who later became known as the nominalists (nominales; Iwakuma 1992a, 1992b).

The earliest representatives of medieval nominalism were these early vocalists, the term nominalist being unattested before the middle of the twelfth century (Reiners 1910). Foremost among them was a student of Roscelin's, Peter ABELARD, a brilliant philosopher and dialectician who took great relish in reducing to absurdity the views of realist opponents such as WILLIAM OF CHAMPEAUX. Abelard argued that nothing can be a universal in the Boethian sense, apparently defended by William, because it is impossible (e.g., for one and the same humanity to exist in numerically distinct human beings at the same time). His metaphysical antirealism was grounded in a sophisticated SEMANTICS of terms that moved vocalism beyond the primitive—and equally absurd—view of Roscelin that universals are nothing more than vocal noises (flatus vocis). According to Abelard, a common noun such as man names (appellat) individual men but signifies whatever it is that makes them all men, which must be real without being any kind of thing (res). So what is it, if not a thing? Abelard calls it a status—which he designates via the grammatical construction "being a man" (hominem esse)—but denies that the status itself is a thing and even that we have any direct acquaintance with it, although we do notice the similarities it causes among particular men and that make man into the natural kind with which we are all familiar (Geyer 1919–1927, 530.38–533.9). Abelard's nominalism depends for its viability on the notion of a status, as well as on a host of other non-things—such as the dicta, or the meanings of propositions—which do philosophical work but whose ontological significance is never quite clear (Tweedale 1988; King 2004).

Abelard ran into difficulties, though, when he tried to apply his science of discourse (scientia sermocinalis) to theological doctrines such as the Holy TRINITY. Here he sought to refute those known as anti-dialecticians, such as St. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX, who held that reason should not meddle with simple propositions of the Faith, and the "pseudodialecticians," such as Roscelin, who rejected arguments from authority and wanted to subject all faith claims to rational scrutiny (King 2004). Abelard's middle ground was to use reason to try to understand what people believe on faith. Thus, he developed a semantics for claiming that the three persons of the Trinity are really the same in their divine ESSENCE but numerically different insofar as each possesses certain unique properties, such as the Father's being unbegotten, the Son's being begotten, and the Spirit's proceeding from the Father and Son (dal Pra 1969, IV, pp. 156–157). But how can such relations be real without being things (res)? The subtleties of Abelard's position were evidently lost on his opponents, and Bernard of Clairvaux was able to successfully accuse Abelard of HERESY, which drove him from public life.

Although he influenced later thinkers such as Peter Lombard (c. 1100–1164; Colish 1992), Abelard's once-vibrant nominalist program went into eclipse in the second half of the twelfth century for reasons that are still not clear (Iwakuma 1992b). Perhaps the stigma surrounding his condemned theological views played a role. But the middle of the twelfth century also saw the arrival of a raft of previously untranslated works by Aristotle and his Islamic commentators. These brought about gradual but significant changes in the way the dialectical arts were treated, with less attention being paid to Porphyry's text and the ontological questions it raised and more to a new range of semantic questions presented by Aristotle's metaphysics and natural philosophy.

The Later Middle Ages. When thirteenth-century philosophers such as ALBERT THE GREAT, BONAVENTURE, and THOMAS AQUINAS referred to the nominales, they did so in the past tense, indicating that nominalism had by then ceased to be an active philosophical school (Iwakuma 1992a). But it reappeared under different circumstances in the fourteenth century. Much had changed in the interim, however, especially regarding the techniques of the scientia sermocinalis. Perhaps the most important of these was the development of an alternative account of PREDICATION that was more in keeping with the nominalist assumption that only individuals exist. According to the traditional account, the sentence "Socrates is a man" is true if the common nature, humanity, actually inheres in the individual bearer of the name SOCRATES. But according to the logic of the moderns (logica moderna), the sentence is true if the term Socrates and the term man stand, or supposit (supponit), for the same thing—that is, refer to the same individual (Buridan 2001, pp. xxxiii–lxii). It is easy to see that on the latter view, there is no need to make reference to universals of any sort, or even to strange non-things like Abelard's status. Rather, the question of what common terms signify can be clearly separated from the question of what role they play in making a given sentence true (or false).

The best known later medieval nominalist, WILLIAM OF OCKHAM, was a practitioner of the new semantics. He wrote, "Therefore, if in the proposition, 'This is an angel [Hic est angelus],' the subject and the predicate supposit for the same thing, the proposition will be true. And so it is not denoted that this has angelity [angelitas], or that there is angelity in this, or something like this, but what is denoted is that this is truly an angel" (Ockham, Summa Logicae II.2). But what does the common term angel signify? Ockham contends that such terms immediately signify their corresponding concepts and ultimately signify what those concepts represent (i.e., particular angels). To use a more mundane example, the concept of man indifferently signifies all past, present, and possible men; that is, the concept signifies all of the singulars represented by it (Klima 1999, p. 131). The concept is itself a particular, needless to say, although Ockham changed his mind over the course of his career about whether it should be thought of as a representational construct (fictum), or, even more simply, as the mental act of signifying many. He came to prefer the latter on grounds of parsimony.

The principle of parsimony is the engine that drives Ockham's nominalism. The razor—"Entities are not to be multiplied beyond necessity" (Entia non sunt multiplicanda praeter necessitatem) is one formulation—is not known as such in his writings, and the general principle was around long before Ockham (Spade 1999). It probably became associated with his name because he regarded simplicity and explanatory power as CARDINAL VIRTUES of philosophical theories. For example, he is known for arguing that the ten Aristotelian categories could be reduced to two, SUBSTANCE and QUALITY, and could even be reduced to just substance if not for PHENOMENA such as the Eucharist, which required that the accidental qualities of the bread continue to exist apart from its substance while manifesting the body of Christ. It is important to note, however, that parsimony was not so much an argument for denying real universals as it was a method of paring down one's ontological commitments. Thus, Ockham rejected the realist theory of his Franciscan predecessor John DUNS SCOTUS because he believed it to be inconsistent, not because everything can be explained just as well without it (Adams 1982).

Ockham had few students of his own, but his writings were influential both in England and on the continent, especially at Paris, where they helped transform an indigenous logical tradition into a powerful semantic theory that eventually reshaped the whole of Aristotelian science. The most famous and influential practitioner of the nominalist way was JOHN BURIDAN. What is most striking about his writings is their focus on the method of solving philosophical problems (Buridan 1966, p. 13; Zupko 2003). Buridan almost always approaches a question by saying first what its key terms mean, disambiguating them, and examining the truth conditions of their various senses. Do universals exist? Buridan says that this question is really asking about the signification of common terms and concepts, because he takes it as given that there are no real universals: "everything in the world is singular; that is why Boethius said that everything that exists is one in number and undivided. Indeed, in this way a genus is one singular term insofar as it exists just as singularly in my intellect or yours, or in my utterance [vox] or yours, as this whiteness does in this wall" (Tatarzyński 1986, p. 158). His answer is that the primary signification of the term universal is "predicable of many," which makes it a term of second intention, or a term of terms, since only terms are predicable (Tatarzyński 1986, pp. 135–136; Szyller 1987, p. 148). Likewise, when we conceive of something universally (note the adverbial form), we are taking some singular concept as indifferently designating the "suppositi" or individuals of which it is true (Szyller 1987, p. 59). Buridan is not unlike some twentieth-century philosophers such as Ludwig WITTGENSTEIN and Rudolf CARNAP in that he sees language as a source of pseudoproblems in philosophy. With the right techniques we can make the meaning of our terms and concepts clear without reifying their grammatical forms or mental categories.

Like Ockham, Buridan's nominalist methods do not always produce parsimonious results. He found it necessary, for example, to posit the existence of QUANTITY, along with substance and quality, to explain the motion involved in condensation and rarefaction. But his ontological commitments are often expressed tentatively, as if he would be happy to pare them down further if someone were to advance a convincing argument for doing so. He was unconvinced by the radical reductionism of JOHN OF MIRECOURT, whose views were condemned in 1347. John apparently wanted to reduce everything to substances "being differently disposed [aliter et aliter se habere]," but Buridan argued that this is a false economy, since we could not distinguish between the modes of a substance without some kind of real difference, so it is better to assume this at the outset (Zupko 2003, pp. 219–223).

The Postmedieval Period. During the decades after Buridan, the institutionalization of philosophical methods was evident in the development within the universities of various schools: Albertist, Thomist, Scotist, and Ockhamist, or nominalist. But the emphasis here was pedagogical, so that students would be given the exercise of resolving a philosophical question "in the nominalist way" or "in the Thomist manner." The other mark of the schools was endless quarreling. In intellectual history this is known as the period of the wegestreit (war of the ways), when practitioners of the older Aristotelian-Thomistic (via antiqua) and newer Ockhamist (via moderna) methods were not as eager to pursue the consequences of their own positions as to stake out their differences on virtually every issue they discussed (Hoenen 1997).

An important figure in the transmission of nominalism during this period was the theologian Gabriel BIEL, a self-professed follower of Ockham. Biel's theology, however, was strongly influenced by Duns Scotus, who was a realist, and so he was not exactly a doctrinaire nominalist. Because of his excellent reputation and the fact that, unlike Abelard and Ockham, he was never charged with heterodoxy, Biel went some distance toward calming the growing opposition in the Church to nominalist methods in the teaching of theology, which had been caricatured as sweeping aside traditional beliefs and leaving no room for revelation. Noting Biel's impact on Martin LUTHER, Church historians for a long time held that medieval nominalism was a forerunner to the Protestant Reformation because it challenged what they took to be the prevailing Thomism. But it turns out that Biel's writings, especially on Scripture and MARIOLOGY, also influenced the Council of TRENT, which suggests that the association of nominalism with heterodoxy is far too simplistic (Oberman 1963, pp. 423–428).

The Modern Period. Although the term nominalism continued to be used after the Reformation, it ceased to refer to anything as palpable as a school of thought or a set of doctrines or even a method of philosophy. The modern sense of the term is rather that of an attitude or outlook that eschews real universals and seeks to economize on entities. Thus, nominalism in twentieth-century set theory views sets or classes as concrete collections of individuals rather than as abstract entities (the position known as PLATONISM). Likewise, the American philosopher W. V. O. Quine (1908–2000) expressed nominalist sentiments when he wrote, "We adopt, at least insofar as we are reasonable, the simplest conceptual scheme into which the disordered fragments of raw experience can be fitted and arranged." For Quine, it is the orderly arrangement of these fragments into a theory that matters, for only a theory can say what there is: "To be is to be the value of a bound variable" (1953, p. 15). Medieval nominalists would have had trouble accepting the modern view of the primacy and interchangeability of theories in this regard.

SEE ALSO DIALECTICAL THEOLOGY; DIALECTICS; DIALECTICS IN THE MIDDLE AGES; OCKHAMISM; ONTOLOGICAL ARGUMENT; PELAGIUS AND PELAGIANISM; SCHOLASTICISM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Marilyn McCord Adams, "Universals in the Early Fourteenth Century," in The Cambridge History of Later Medieval Philosophy, edited by Norman Kretzmann, Anthony Kenny, and Jan Pinborg (New York 1982), 411–439.

John Buridan, Sophisms on Meaning and Truth, translated by Theodore Kermit Scott Jr. (New York 1966).

John Buridan, Summulae de Dialectica: An Annotated Translation, translated by Gyula Klima, Yale Library of Medieval Philosophy (New Haven, Conn. 2001).

Marcia L. Colish, "Peter Lombard and Abelard: The Opinio Nominalium and Divine Transcendence," Vivarium 30.1 (1992; special issue on the origin and meaning of twelfth-century nominalism): 139–156.

William J. Courtenay, "Nominales and Nominalism in the Twelfth Century," in Lectionum varietates: Hommage à Paul Vignaux (1904–1987), edited by J. Jolivet, Z. Kaluza, and A. de Libera (Paris 1991), 11–48.

William J. Courtenay, "Introduction," Vivarium 30.1 (1992; special issue on the origin and meaning of twelfth-century nominalism): 1–3.

Mario dal Pra, ed., Pietro Abelardo Scritti Filosofici: Editio super Porphyrium, Glossae in Categorias, Editio super Aristotelem De Interpretatione, De Divisionibus, Super Topicae Glossae, 2nd ed. (Roma-Milano, Italy 1969).

Bernhard Geyer, ed., Peter Abaelards Philosophische Schriften; I. Die Logica 'ingredientibus'; II. Die Glossen zu Porphyrius, Beiträge zur Geschichte des Philosophie und Theologie des Mittelalters, 21, 3 vols. (Münster, Germany 1919–1927).

Maarten J. F. M. Hoenen, "Thomismus, Skotismus und Albertismus: Das Entstehen und die Bedeutung von philosophischen Schulen im späten Mittelalter," Bochumer Philosophisches Jahrbuch für Antike und Mittelalter 2 (1997): 81–104.

Yukio Iwakuma, "'Vocales,' or Early Nominalists," Traditio 47 (1992a): 37–111.

Yukio Iwakuma, "Twelfth-Century Nominales: The Posthumous School of Peter Abelard," Vivarium 30.1 (1992b; special issue on the origin and meaning of twelfth-century nominalism): 97–109.

Zénon Kaluza, Les Querelles doctrinales à Paris: Nominalistes et réalistes aux confins du XIVe et du XVe siècles (Bergamo, Italy 1988).

Peter King, "Peter Abelard," in The Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy, Fall 2004 Edition, edited by Edward N. Zalta (Stanford, Calif.), available from http://plato.stanford.edu/archives/fall2004/entries/abelard/ (accessed March 10, 2008).

Gyula Klima, "Buridan's Logic and the Ontology of Modes," in Medieval Analyses in Language and Cognition, edited by Sten Ebbesen and Russell L. Friedman (Copenhagen, Denmark 1999), 473–495.

Gabriel Nuchelmans, Late-Scholastic and Humanist Theories of the Proposition (Amsterdam, Netherlands 1980).

Heiko Augustinus Oberman, The Harvest of Medieval Theology: Gabriel Biel and Late Medieval Nominalism (Cambridge, Mass. 1963).

Willard van Orman Quine, "On What There Is," in From a Logical Point of View: 9 Logico-philosophical Essays (Cambridge, Mass. 1953).

Josef Reiners, Der Nominalismus in der Frühscholastik, Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie und Theologie des Mittelalters, 8.5 (Münster, Germany 1910).

Paul Vincent Spade, ed. and trans., Five Texts on the Mediaeval Problem of Universals: Porphyry, Boethius, Abelard, Duns Scotus, Ockham (Indianapolis, Ind. 1994).

Paul Vincent Spade, "Ockham's Nominalist Metaphysics: Some Main Themes," in The Cambridge Companion to Ockham, edited by Paul Vincent Spade (New York 1999), 100–117.

Sławomir Szyller, ed., "Jan Buridan, Tractatus de differentia universalis ad individuum," Przeglad Tomistyczny 3 (1987): 135–178.

Ryszard Tatarzyński, ed., "Jan Buridan, Kommentarz do Isagogi Porfiriusza," Przeglad Tomistyczny 2 (1986): 111–195.

Martin M. Tweedale, "Logic: From the Late Eleventh Century to the Time of Abelard," in A History of Twelfth-Century Western Philosophy, edited by Peter Dronke (New York 1988), 196–226.

Richard J. Utz, ed., Literary Nominalism and the Theory of Rereading Late Medieval Texts: A New Research Paradigm (Lewiston, N.Y. 1995).

Jack Zupko, John Buridan: Portrait of a Fourteenth-Century Arts Master, Publications in Medieval Studies (Notre Dame, Ind. 2003).

Jack Zupko
Department of Philosophy
Emory University, Atlanta, Ga. (2010)

NON LICET

The Non licet ("it is not permitted") decree of 1886 prohibited Catholic participation in Italian political (as opposed to administrative) elections during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. It brought the HOLY SEE a step beyond its earlier Non expedit policy, which dismissed such involvement as "not expedient" and, rather, with greater emphasis prohibited it, constituting a significant step in the Holy See's response to the Kingdom of Italy's conquest of the Papal, or Pontifical, States between 1860 and 1870.

During the wars of Italian unification, the RISORGIMENTO, the kingdom first attacked the papal dominions in 1860 to counter the advance of Giuseppe GARIBALDI's forces and scored a decisive victory over the pope's troops on September 18 at Castelfidardo. As a consequence Italy annexed the eastern territories of the Pontifical States, leaving only Latium and ROME open for a second assault, which came in 1870. Italian soldiers under General Raffaele Cadorna (1815–1897) then conquered the city on September 20, although they refrained from occupying the neighborhoods around the VATICAN until the following day, when Pope PIUS IX requested it for the sake of public safety. The pontiff nonetheless condemned the aggression and refused the Italians' offer of compensation (the Law of GUARANTEES) in his ENCYCLICAL, Ubi nos, of May 15, 1871. The Holy Penitentiary, furthermore, issued the Non expedit for a second time in March 1871. It had been first proclaimed in 1868. Pius reiterated the Non expedit in June 1874 during an audience with Neapolitan Catholic activists and then, on September 10, the Holy Penitentiary confirmed it regarding upcoming political elections.

The issue was re-examined after a string of Catholic successes in administrative elections and an electoral law reform on January 22, 1882, that extended the franchise to literate men of at least twenty-one years of age. Those who had not attended elementary school, furthermore, could pay a tax to secure a place on the list, and the voting rolls increased overnight from 600,000 to about 2,300,000. In response, Pope LEO XIII asked Bishops Geremia BONOMELLI of Cremona and Giovanni Battista SCALABRINI of Piacenza to investigate what impact the new situation might have on the Non expedit and on Catholics at the polls. In May Bonomelli responded frankly that the Non expedit was not working and that the reform had extended the vote mostly to peasants, who held the Church in great esteem. Scalabrini's judgment, delivered to Leo the following September, reflected in tone Bonomelli's. Shortly afterward, however, Scalabrini confessed to Bonomelli that Leo appeared prepared to maintain the Non expedit. The Holy Penitentiary, nonetheless, privately assured the bishop that "with great prudence and, above all, without publicity" the Church would support "good deputies" over its enemies (Marongiu Buonaiuti 1971, pp. 69–70). Still, the Bishop of Piacenza's doubts were proved well-founded when Leo confirmed the Non expedit in his Encyclical Immortale Dei of November 1, 1885. On July 30, 1886, Cardinal Monaco della Valletta (1827–1896) of the Holy Office then issued the so-called Non licet, declaring that those who interpreted the Holy Penitentiary's Non expedit as anything less than a prohibition were mistaken. Doubts over Italian Catholic participation in elections, therefore, remained unresolved until Pope PIUS X allowed for some flexibility in his 1905 Encyclical, Il fermo proposito, and then in BENEDICT XV's acceptance of a formal Catholic Italian Popular Party in 1919.

SEE ALSO IMMORTALE DEI; NON EXPEDIT.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gabriele De Rosa Il movimento cattolico in italia: dalla restaurazione all'età giolittiana (Rome-Bari 1988).

Cesare Marongiu Buonaiuti, Non expedit, storia di una politica (1866–1919) (Milan 1971).

Roy P. Domenico
Professor, Department of History
The University of Scranton (2010)

NOUWEN, HENRI JOZEF MACHIEL

Priest, teacher; spiritual writer; b. Nijkerk, Holland, January 24, 1932; d. Hilversum, Netherlands, September 21, 1996.

Henri Nouwen was the author of forty-three books and numerous articles on pastoral ministry and the spiritual life. His books are widely read among Catholics, Protestants, and Eastern Orthodox Christians alike and have been translated into twenty-four languages. The breadth of his influence on church ministry was revealed in the results of a survey commissioned by Duke University's Pulpit and Pew Project 2001 and conducted by the National Opinion Resource Center at the University of Chicago. The survey results indicated that Nouwen's work was the first choice for spiritual reading among both Catholic and mainline Protestant clergy (Carroll 2003, pp. 31–33).

Nouwen was ordained in the Archdiocese of Utrecht in 1957 and undertook advanced studies in psychology at the Catholic University of Nijmegen, The Netherlands, where he received his Doctorandus degree in 1964. After a two-year fellowship in the program for RELIGION and psychiatry at the Menninger Clinic in Topeka, Kansas, he taught pastoral THEOLOGY and psychology at the University of Notre Dame (1966–1968), the Catholic Theological Institute in Utrecht (1968–1970), Yale Divinity School (1971–1981), and Harvard Divinity School (1983–1985).

In 1985 Nouwen left his academic career to explore a vocation at L'ARCHE, an international federation of Christian communities that create homes for people with disabilities. In 1986, he became the pastor of Daybreak, a L'Arche community near Toronto, Ontario, Canada, where he remained until his death in 1996.

The main themes of Henri Nouwen's spirituality reflect three of the core passions that inspired his life and ministry. The first was his desire to communicate a contemplative theology of ministry that integrated the insights of orthodox Christian theology, classical Christian SPIRITUALITY, and contemporary psychology.

During his years of theological education, his best-known published works included Intimacy: Pastoral Psychological Essays (1969), Creative Ministry (1971), and the now classic volume The Wounded Healer (1972), in which he explored the role of the minister's own SUFFERING as the source of authentic compassion in the practice of pastoral ministry. Nouwen's seminal insight was, in his words, that "the minister is called to recognize the sufferings of his time in his own heart and make that recognition the starting point of his service" (The Wounded Healer, p. xvi).

Nouwen's image of the minister as a wounded healer was shaped by his perception of a sociocultural context in which the church was seen as increasingly marginal in its influence and an ecclesial context in which the role of clergy was being shaped more by professional and therapeutic norms in efforts to remain relevant. In The Wounded Healer, Nouwen emphasized the need for contemporary ministers to claim the source of their spiritual power in the experience of personal loneliness as well as the professional loneliness that flows from exercising a role in society that is considered irrelevant. Nouwen's best-known works in pastoral theology also include The Living Reminder (1977), Clowning in Rome (1979), The Way of the Heart (1981, 2003), and In the Name of Jesus (1989).

The second main theme of Nouwen's spirituality was his commitment to make the depths of his own personal spiritual experience of vulnerability and suffering available as a resource to others in their struggle to live authentic Christian lives. In his numerous spiritual journals, such as The Genesee Diary (1976), Gracias! (1983), The Road to Daybreak (1988), and Sabbatical Journey (1998), Nouwen reveals the depth of his own intimate joys, anguish, and questions in a uniquely personal style that illumines many of the universal challenges of the spiritual life. Nouwen's struggle with issues of embodiment, sexual identity, and self-acceptance reflect profound spiritual and psychological insight and have been the subject of recent interest by biographers such as Michael Ford (Wounded Prophet, 1999) and Chris Glaser (Henri's Mantle, 2002). These struggles reflect Nouwen's deeper search for human and divine intimacy within the context of his celibacy and priestly ministry, his friendships, and his experience of community life.

The third main theme of Nouwen's spirituality was rooted in his experience of what he described as GOD's First Love and his articulation of a core sense of personal identity rooted in divine love. This experience is expressed throughout Nouwen's writings but is especially prominent in those published during his years in L'Arche caring for persons with intellectual disabilities: Life of the Beloved (1992), Adam (1997), The Inner Voice of Love (1996), and what is generally regarded as his masterwork, The Return of the Prodigal Son (1993). In all of these works, Nouwen is retrieving a deeply personal and Christocentric understanding of the human search for God and the unconditional nature of divine love as the basis of Christian theology, spirituality, and ministry.

One of Henri Nouwen's greatest achievements was his unique capacity to make the Christian mystical life intelligible for laypersons as well as clergy. His contemplative spirituality of the heart is grounded in a strong sense of the humanity of Jesus as model of the spiritual life, and his theology of the Beloved flows from his own witness as a "wounded healer." Nouwen's interpretation of the spiritual life has touched the lives of generations of Christians, and his legacy will endure as an important resource in spiritual formation and renewal for generations to come.

SEE ALSO CHRISTOCENTRISM; MYSTICISM; SUFFERING SERVANT, SONGS OF THE; WITNESS, CHRISTIAN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jackson Carroll, "Pastors Picks: What Preachers Are Reading," Christian Century (August 23, 2003): 31–33.

WORKS BY HENRI NOUWEN

The Wounded Healer: Ministry in Contemporary Society (Garden City, N.Y. 1972).

Reaching Out: The Three Movements of the Spiritual Life (Garden City, N.Y. 1975).

Clowning in Rome: Reflections on Solitude, Celibacy, Prayer, and Contemplation (Garden City, N.Y. 1979).

The Road to Daybreak: A Spiritual Journey (New York 1988).

In the Name of Jesus: Reflections on Christian Leadership (New York 1989).

Life of the Beloved: Spiritual Living in a Secular World (New York 1992).

The Return of the Prodigal Son: A Story of Homecoming (New York 1993).

The Inner Voice of Love: A Journey Through Anguish to Freedom (New York 1996).

Adam: God's Beloved (Maryknoll, N.Y. 1997).

The Way of the Heart: Connecting with God through Prayer, Wisdom, and Silence (New York 2003). Originally published as The Way of the Heart: Desert Spirituality and Contemporary Ministry (New York 1981).

Biographies of Henri Nouwen

Jurjen Beumer, Henri Nouwen: A Restless Seeking for God, translated by David E. Schlaver and Nancy Forest-Flier (New York 1997).

Michael Ford, Wounded Prophet: A Portrait of Henri J.M. Nouwen (New York 1999).

Chris Glaser, Henri's Mantle: 100 Meditations on Nouwen's Legacy (Cleveland, Ohio 2002).

Deirdre LaNoue, The Spiritual Legacy of Henri Nouwen (New York 2000).

Michael O'Laughlin, God's Beloved: A Spiritual Biography of Henri Nouwen, (Maryknoll, N.Y. 2004).

Gerald S. Twomey and Claude Pomerleau, eds., Remembering Henri: The Life and Legacy of Henri Nouwen (Maryknoll, N.Y. 2006).

Michael Hryniuk
Executive Director
Henri Nouwen Society, Richmond Hill,
Ontario, Canada (2010)

O

OBLATES OF ST. JOSEPH

Rev. Silvio J. Chini OSJ
Catholic Journalist
Pittston, Pa.

EDS (2010)

(OSJ, Official Catholic Directory #0930) The Congregation of the Oblates of St. Joseph was founded in 1878 by St. Giuseppe MARELLO (canonized on November 25, 2001, by Pope John Paul II), Bishop of Acqui, Italy. After surviving its difficult early years, the congregation was given final approval by the HOLY SEE April 11, 1909. The Oblates of St. Joseph are engaged in various apostolic works in parishes, schools, and foreign missions. The founder wished his followers to be ready to serve the bishops in whatever tasks were given to them. The generalate is in Rome. The congregation came to the U.S. in 1929 at the request of Thomas C. O'Reilly, Bishop of Scranton, Pa. In 1931 they opened houses in California at Madera, Santa Cruz, Sacramento, and Tomales. In the U.S. the congregation is divided into two provinces: the eastern province embraces Pennsylvania, New York, and Washington, D.C.; the western, California. In 2009 there were 576 members, of which 366 were priests (Catholic Almanac 2010, p. 467).

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Siro Dal Degan, OSJ, History of the Oblates Founded by Blessed Marello with Political and Religious Background of the 18th and 19th Centuries (Santa Cruz CA, 2003).

Oblates of St. Joseph Official Web site, available from http://www.osjoseph.org/ (accessed October 28, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Joseph Marello (1844–1895)," Vatican Web Site, November 25, 2001, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20011125_marello_en.html (accessed October 1, 2009).

OKELO, DAUDI, BL.

CATECHIST, MARTYR; also known as David; b. Ogom-Payira, Uganda, 1902; d. speared to death at Paimol, Uganda, October 18, 1918; beatified October 20, 2002, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Daudi Okelo was born to pagan parents, Lodi and Amona Okelo. Taught by the Comboni Missionaries, who founded the mission of Kitgum in 1915, Okelo was baptized on June 1, 1916, at age fourteen, by Fr. Cesare Gambaretto, the mission founder. Okelo was confirmed on October 15, along with ten-year-old Jildo IRWA, who would share his short life's work and his martyrdom.

With other Catholic boys, Okelo attended school to become a catechist. He was a calm, shy, responsible youth who was loved and respected in the village. In November 1917, Okelo volunteered to travel to Paimol, a troubled village in the Upper Nile Basin, to replace a catechist who had died. Young Irwa went with him as his assistant. Fr. Gambaretto warned them that their work would be dangerous, but Okelo replied, "I am not afraid to die. Jesus, too, died for us!"

Although harassed and threatened in Paimol, Okelo beat the drum every morning to call his catechumens for morning prayers. He used singsong repetitions to teach the catechism, and closed the day with PRAYER, the ROSARY, and a song to Our Lady. In time, an anti-Christian group took advantage of an increase in socio-political unrest to try to stop the teaching of Christianity in Paimol. At daybreak on October 18, 1918, four men came to Okelo's hut and demanded that Okelo and Irwa stop teaching the catechism. When they refused, the men dragged Okelo outside, pushed him to the ground, and speared him to death. Young Irwa replied in tears that they should also kill him, and he was speared and knifed to death.

A few days later, some villagers tied a rope around Okelo's neck and dragged his body. He was never buried, but his mortal remains were collected in February 1926 and placed at the foot of the altar of the Sacred Heart in the mission church at Kitgum. The place where Okelo and Irwa were killed, originally called Palamuku, was renamed Wi Polo (In Heaven) in tribute to the Our Father prayer and as a testimony to the two martyrs' heavenly reward.

In his HOMILY of BEATIFICATION at Vatican City on World Missionary Day, Pope John Paul II called them "models and intercessors for catechists throughout the world, especially in those places where catechists still suffer for their faith."

Feast: October 18.

SEE ALSO AFRICA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; UGANDA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Archdiocese of Gulu, "Martyrs of Paimol," available from http://www.archdioceseofgulu.org/mar.htm (accessed November 3, 2009).

Camille Lewis Brown, African Saints, African Stories: 40 Holy Men and Women (Cincinnati, Ohio, 2008).

Eternal Word Television Network, "Bl. Daudi Okelo and Bl. Jildo Irwa," Biographies of New Blesseds: 2002, available from http://www.ewtn.com/library/mary/bios2002.htm#Daudi (accessed November 3, 2009).

John Paul II, "Cappella Papale for the Beatification of 6 Servants of God" (Homily, October 20, 2001), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2002/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20021020_beatification_en.html (accessed November 3, 2009).

Terry H. Jones, "Blessed Daudi Okelo," Patron Saints Index, available from http://saints.sqpn.com/saintd95.htm (accessed November 3, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Daudi Okelo (1902 ca.–1918) and Jildo Irwa (1906 ca.–1918)," Vatican Web site, October 20, 2002, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20021020_okelo-irwa_en.html (accessed November 3, 2009).

"Ugandan Martyrs to Be Beatified this Sunday: Daudi Okelo and Jildo Irwa Were Teen-age Catechists," Zenit, October 18, 2002, available from https://www.zenit.org/article-5626?l=english (accessed November 3, 2009).

Ann H. Shurgin
Independent Researcher
College Station, Texas (2010)

OPUS DEI

The Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei is a personal prelature of the Roman Catholic Church, with its central offices located in Rome. The Second Vatican Council made provisions for the juridical format of personal prelatures to facilitate the carrying out of "specific apostolic tasks." Prelatures form part of the pastoral and hierarchical structure of the Church. They are dependent on the Congregation for Bishops.

The aim of the prelature of Opus Dei is to promote among Christians an awareness that all are called to seek holiness and to contribute to the evangelization of every sphere of society. The prelature provides for the pastoral and spiritual care of its members, extending this help to many other people, in accord with each one's situation and profession (cf. Statutes of Opus Dei, 2:1). The faithful of the prelature strive to put into practice the teachings of the Gospel by exercising the Christian virtues and sanctifying their ordinary work (cf. Statutes of Opus Dei, 2).

St. Josemaría ESCRIVÁ founded Opus Dei on Oct. 2, 1928. On Feb. 14, 1930, St. Josemaría understood by God's grace that Opus Dei was meant to develop its apostolate among women as well. From 1946 on, he resided in Rome. He died on June 26, 1975 and was beatified on June 26, 1992. He was canonized on October 6, 2002 by Pope John Paul II. From Rome he oversaw Opus Dei's apostolic expansion throughout the world, beginning with Portugal, England, Italy, France, Ireland, the United States, and Mexico. From the outset, he relied on the encouragement and stimulus of the episcopal hierarchy. From 1943, Opus Dei received all of the necessary approvals from the HOLY SEE, culminating in its establishment as a personal prelature by Pope JOHN PAUL II on Nov. 28, 1982.

The prelature of Opus Dei spread throughout every continent and comprises: the prelate (currently Bishop Javier Echevarría), around 1,700 priests, and 85,000 laity who, with a divine vocation, are freely incorporated into the prelature. The clergy incardinated in the prelature come from among the laymen. "The laity incorporated in the Prelature do not alter their personal situation, either canonically or theologically. They continue to be ordinary lay faithful, and act accordingly in everything they do, specifically in their apostolate" (Congregation for Bishops, Declaration concerning Opus Dei, Aug. 23, 1982, 2b).

The lay faithful of the prelature enjoy the same freedom as other Catholic citizens, their equals, in all professional, family, social, political, and financial activities. These activities do not fall under the prelature's jurisdiction, which extends only to the ascetical and apostolic commitments that each one freely assumes by means of a contractual bond. The prelature's lay faithful remain under the diocesan bishop's jurisdiction in everything established by common Church law for the Catholic faithful.

The Priestly Society of the Holy Cross, inseparably united to the Prelature of Opus Dei, is governed by the prelate of Opus Dei as its president general. The prelature's priests belong to the Priestly Society of the Holy Cross. In addition, diocesan priests who wish to seek holiness in the exercise of their ministry may be associated as well. Their tie to the priestly society in no way compromises their loyalty to their own bishop, who continues to be their only superior. The prelature of Opus Dei also relies on cooperators, some of whom are non-Catholics or even non-Christians. Although not incorporated into the prelature, cooperators collaborate in its apostolate by their prayer, work, and alms.

The prelature of Opus Dei directs the Pontifical University of the Holy Cross in Rome, as well as the University of Navarre in Spain. Other apostolic undertakings, including universities in Latin America, Italy, and the Philippines, student residences, cultural centers, technical and agricultural institutes, medical clinics, and a variety of centers for the development of disadvantaged areas, have the pastoral assistance of the prelature which takes on responsibility for their Christian orientation.

Opus Dei's most important contribution to the Church's mission, however, is not its corporate apostolates but rather the effort of each member to sanctify his or her ordinary, daily work and to bring those around them closer to God. The process for beatification is underway for several members of Opus Dei, among them the Argentine engineer Isidoro Zorzano (1902–1943) and the young Spanish woman Montserrat Grases (1941–1959).

SEE ALSO APOSTOLATE AND SPIRITUAL LIFE; SPAIN (THE CHURCH DURING THE SPANISH REPUBLIC AND THE CIVIL WAR: 1931–1939); VATICAN COUNCIL II.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Peter Berglar, Opus Dei. Life and Work of Its Founder Josemaría Escrivá (Princeton 1993).

John F. Coverdale, Uncommon Faith: The Early Years of Opus Dei, 1928–1943, (New York, 2002).

Alvaro del Portillo, Immersed in God: Blessed Josemaría Escrivá, Founder of Opus Dei (Princeton 1996).

Amadeo Fuenmayor, Fernando Ocariz, and José Luis Illanes, The Canonical Path of Opus Dei (Princeton and Chicago 1994).

José Luis Illanes, On the Theology of Work (Dublin 1982).

Opus Dei Official Web site, available from http://www.opusdei.us/ (accessed October 23, 2009).

Pedro Rodriguez, Particular Churches and Personal Prelatures (Dublin 1986).

Pedro Rodriguez, Fernando Ocariz, and José Luis Illanes, Opus Dei in the Church: An Ecclesiological Study of the Life and Apostolate of Opus Dei (Dublin and Princeton 1994).

Andrés Vázquez de Prada, The Founder of Opus Dei: The Life of Josemaría Escrivá. (Princeton, N.J. 2001).

Ramiro Pellitero
Adjunct Professor of Pastoral Theology
Universidad de Navarra, Spain

EDS (2010)

ORIONE, LUIGI (LOUIS), ST.

Founder of the Congregation of the Piccola Opera della Divina Provvidenza (Little Work of Divine Providence); b. June 23, 1872, Pontecurone (Alessandria), Italy; d. March 12, 1940, San Remo (Imperia), Italy; beatified by Pope John Paul II, October 26, 1980; canonized by Pope John Paul II, May 16, 2004.

Orione joined the Franciscans at Voghera at an early age but left because of poor health. St. John BOSCO accepted him into the Salesian Oratory in Turin in 1886. In 1890 Orione entered the seminary in Tortona in his native diocese and began what was to be his main work in life by caring for poor boys.

After ordination on April 13, 1895, he opened a lodging house for needy seminarians. As the work expanded, he accepted orphans and elderly and needy persons. His Little Work of Divine Providence, a network of laity and religious dedicated to charitable works and prayer, was modeled on the foundation of St. Giuseppe COTTOLENGO. To attain the goals of the Piccola Opera, Don Orione founded a number of religious congregations: the SONS OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE; the LITTLE MISSIONARY SISTERS OF CHARITY; the Hermits of Divine Providence; the Brothers of Divine Providence, who wear lay dress, but follow a common rule of life; and the blind Sacramentine Sisters, who dedicate themselves to prayer. By 2000 Orione's disciples in these related institutes had spread to thirty countries and five continents. One hundred sixteen volumes of his writings, as well as voice recordings, are preserved in the archives of the Piccola Opera della Divina Provvidenza in Rome.

Worn out from his labors, he died. His remains repose in Tortona. The Decretum super scripta in his beatification cause was issued in 1956. Pope JOHN PAUL II declared Orione blessed on October 26, 1980, presenting him to the Church as a "marvelous and genial expression of Christian charity." The pope described him as "having the character and heart of the Apostle Paul, tender and sensitive, indefatigable and courageous, tenacious, and dynamic."

Preceding St. Orione's canonization his miraculous intercession in the curing of Pierino Penacca was officially recognized. In November 1990 Penacca, who had known St. Orione as a child, was diagnosed with a fatal lung tumor that was deemed medically untreatable. Along with several companions, Penacca beseeched St. Orione in prayer for intercession. Shortly thereafter Penacca's symptoms vanished and repeated testing could detect neither the presence of a tumor nor concomitant ill effects associated with his prior diagnosis. Medical science was without explanation. The miracle was officially credited to the intercession of then Blessed Orione on July 7, 2003, in the presence of Pope John Paul II.

On May 16, 2004, almost twenty-four years after his beatification, Orione was canonized by Pope John Paul II. At the Mass of Canonization, the Pope reiterated St. Orione's bold and determined character describing him as "a man who gave himself entirely for the cause of Christ and his Kingdom."

Of St. Orione's myriad disciples, several were on hand for his canonization. Religious and laity further St. Orione's work through charitable deeds and prayer. Largely through them, St. Orione's person and writings continue to gain increasing international attention and honors.

Feast: March 12.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 72 (1981): 477–480.

Giovanni Barra, Don Orione (Turin 1970).

Enrique A. Cuono, Don Orione (Victoria, Argentina 1967).

Don Orione. L'apostolo tortonese a 100 anni dalla nascita (Turin 1972).

Andrea Gemma, ed., La scelta dei poveri più poveri: Scritti spirituali (Rome 1979).

Andrea Gemma, Don Orione: Un cuore senza confini (Gorle, Italy 1989).

Andrea Gemma, I fioretti di Don Orione (Rome 1994).

Douglas Arnold Hyde, God's Bandit: The Story of Don Orione, "Father of the Poor" (Westminster, Md. 1957).

John Paul II, "Canonization of Six New Saints," (Homily, May 16, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20040516_canonizations_en.html (accessed October 16, 2009).

L'Osservatore Romano, English edition, no. 44 (1980).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Luigi Orione (1872–1940)," Vatican Web site, May 16, 2004, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20040516_orione_en.html (accessed October 16, 2009).

Giorgio Papàsogli, Vita di don Orione, edited by Piero Gribaudi, 4th ed. (Turin 1994).

Gaetano Piccinini, Luce dai colli (Boston 1958).

A Priceless Treasure Don Orione: Letters and Writings, 2 vols. (London 1995).

The Restless Apostle: From the Writings of Don Orione (London 1981).

Rev. Thomas F. Casey
Professor of Church History,
St. John's Seminary, Brighton, Mass.
Chaplain, Catholic Graduates Club of Greater Boston

A. J. Kim
Graduate Student, School of Theology
and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America,
Washington, D.C. (2010)

OROZCO, ALFONSO DE, ST.

Augustinian ascetical writer; name also given as Alonso or Alphonsus; b. Oropesa (Toledo), Spain, October 17, 1500; d. Madrid, September 19, 1591; beatified by Pope LEO XIII on October 1, 1881; canonized by Pope JOHN PAUL II on May 19, 2002.

During his time as a law student at the University of Salamanca, Alfonso heard St. THOMAS OF VILLANOVA preaching. Inspired by this, he followed the lead of his elder brother Francis and entered the AUGUSTINIANS in 1521. Even though Francis died a few years later, Alfonso continued his formation and was ordained in 1527.

His superiors noted his piety early on, and they increased his preaching duties. From 1530 to 1554 he was superior at Soria, Medina, Seville, Granada, and Valladolid. Orozco attempted a missionary expedition to Mexico in 1549, but excruciating pain from arthritis forced him to return to Spain. In 1554 he was appointed court preacher and counselor to Charles V. Later he advised PHILIP II, son of Charles. As he lived in the convent of St. Philip the Royal, he was affectionately known as "the saint of St. Philip's" due to his spiritual zeal, austerity of life, and apostolate to all in need, which merited him the goodwill of kings and common people alike.

Orozco was a prolific writer and editor of over fifty spiritual and apologetic texts. He attributed his inspiration to a dream he had of the Virgin Mary, who said to him only, "Write." His most important work is Vergel de oración y monte de contemplación (1544). In addition, he wrote Desposorio espiritual (1551), Regimiento del alma (1551), Las siete palabras de la Virgen (1556), Victoria de mundo (1565), Arte de amar a Dios y al projimo (1568), De la suavidad de Dios (1588), Bonum certamen (1562), and Regalis institutio (1565).

Orozco died at the age of ninety, and he is currently buried in the chapel of a convent of contemplative nuns in Talavera de la Reina. Leo XIII beatified Orozco on October 1, 1881. After a miracle was attributed to his INTERCESSION in April 2001, he was canonized by John Paul II on May 19, 2002. During the canonization homily, Orozco's exemplary life was recognized: "His pastoral dedication to serving the poorest in the hospitals and prisons makes him a model for all who ... base their entire life on the love of God and of their neighbor."

Feast: September 19.

SEE ALSO APOLOGETICS; BEATIFICATION; CANONIZATION OF SAINTS (HISTORY AND PROCEDURE).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gonzalo Tejerina Arias, "Revelación creacional y estética religiosa en la doctrina de Alonso de Orozco," Salmanticensis 48, no. 3 (2001): 521–552.

L. Rubio Calzon, El beato Alonso de Orozco hombre de letras: Indice de sus escritos y su significación como autor (Madrid 1992).

Dictionnaire de spiritualité ascétique et mystique. Doctrine et histoire, edited by Marcel Viller et al. (Paris 1932), 1:392–395.

María del Prado González, "Teologia de la cruz en el beato Alfonso de Orozco," Nova et Vetera 19 (1994): 327–344.

Leo XIII, "Quod Paulus Apostolus aiebat," (Apostolic Letter, October 1, 1881), Leonis XIII Acta, 23 vols. (Rome 1881–1905), 2:374–384.

Juan Márquez and Modesto González Velasco, Vida de San Alonso de Orozco: Agustino (Madrid 2002).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Alonso de Orozco (1500–1591)," Vatican Web site, May 19, 2002, available (in Italian) from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20020519_orozco_it.html (accessed November 9, 2009).

Alonso de Orozco, Obras Completas, edited by Rafael Lazcano González (Madrid 2001).

Brendan R. Cavanaugh
Independent Scholar
Washington, D.C.

Elizabeth-Jane P. McGuire
Doctoral Candidate, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America,
Washington, D.C. (2010)

ORTIZ REAL, PIEDAD DE LA CRUZ, BL.

Baptized Tomasa, NUN, founder of the Congregation of SALESIAN SISTERS of the Sacred Heart of Jesus; b. Bocairente, Valencia, Spain, November 12, 1842; d. Alcantarilla, Murcia, Spain, February 26, 1916; beatified March 21, 2004, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Tomasa Ortiz Real was the fifth of eight children born to José and Tomasa Ortiz. Upon her first Holy Communion, at age ten, she knew she was called to be a nun. She asked her parents for permission to join the Order of the Religious of the Holy Family of Burdeos after finishing her studies at the order's Loreto College. Her father said she was too young; he was also concerned about the political climate in Spain at that time.

Tomasa later tried twice to enter the Carmelite convent in Valencia, but she became so ill she could not stay. After a mystical experience during PRAYER, Tomasa realized that God wanted her to begin a new congregation. In March 1884, with her bishop's authorization, she and three other nuns established the Community of the Third Order of Our Lady of Mount Carmel near Alcantarilla. Tomasa took the name Piedad de la Cruz (Piety of the Cross), and she and her sisters began to help orphaned girls and the sick.

As the community grew and the living space became too small, Sr. Piedad opened another community in nearby Caudete. Eventually, all except one member of the community, Sr. Alfonsa, left Alcantarilla and formed their own community at Caudete. Although devastated, Sr. Piedad prayed patiently for God's guidance.

Bishop Bryan y Livermore suggested that Srs. Piedad and Alfonsa go on a spiritual retreat at the Salesian Convent of the Visitation in Orihuela. There, Sr. Piedad received a new understanding of God's will for her life. On September 8, 1890, she founded the Congregation of the Salesian Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, whose mission was to help orphaned girls, young working women, the sick, and the abandoned elderly. Mother Piedad gave credit for the Salesian congregation's rapid growth to God alone.

Mother Piedad died of natural causes on February 26, 1916. A decree on a miracle was made on April 12, 2003. She was beatified by Pope John Paul II on March 21, 2004, in St. Peter's Square in Rome. During his HOMILY, the pope said, "a model of Christian and religious virtues and in love with Christ, the Blessed Virgin, and the poor, she leaves us the example of austerity, prayer, and charity to all the needy."

Feast: February 26.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SPAIN, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Matthew Bunson and Margaret Bunson, "Piedad de la Cruz Ortiz Real," in John Paul II's Book of Saints (Huntington, Ind. 2007), 495–496.

Catholic Online, "Bl. Piety of the Cross," Saints and Angels, available from http://www.catholic.org/saints/saint.php?saint_id=5718 (accessed November 3, 2009).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Four Servants of God" (Homily, March 21, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20040321_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 3, 2009).

Terry H. Jones. "Blessed Piedad de la Cruz Ortiz Real," Patron Saints Index, available from http://saints.sqpn.com/saintp6m.htm (accessed November 3, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Piedad de la Cruz Ortiz Real (1842–1916)," Vatican Web site, March 21, 2004, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20040321_real_en.html (accessed November 3, 2009).

Ann H. Shurgin
Independent Researcher
College Station, Texas (2010)

OTRANTO (ITALY), MARTYRS OF

The Martyrs of Otranto, also known as the Otranto Eight Hundred or Antonio Primaldo and Companions, were eight hundred male citizens of the Italian town of Otranto who were executed on August 14, 1480, by Turkish soldiers led by Gedik Ahmet Pasha after they refused to convert to Islam.

Otranto, also known by its ancient name of Hydruntum, enjoyed both strategic and economic prominence due to its position on the southern Adriatic coast. After the capture of Constantinople (present-day Istanbul) by the Turkish fleet led by Sultan Mehmet II in 1453, the Ottoman Empire looked to expand into Europe using Otranto as a stepping-stone.

Hoping to take Italy by surprise, Gedik Ahmet Pasha offered the citizens of Otranto advantageous conditions of surrender, but they threw the keys of the city into the sea and prepared for a siege. The Neapolitan soldiers responsible for garrisoning the city deserted the same night.

The siege of Otranto began on July 28, 1480. The citizens, mostly fishermen and merchants, put up a sufficiently spirited defense to gain time for the rest of the Italian Peninsula to prepare defenses against the invaders. Otranto was finally captured on August 11, 1480, with an estimated eleven thousand citizens killed or imprisoned. Of these casualties, eight hundred are considered martyrs for the Catholic faith.

The first to be martyred was the ARCHBISHOP of Otranto, Stefano Pendinelli, who was praying with the women and children of the city in the cathedral. Faced with the choice between conversion to Islam or death, the archbishop refused to renounce Christ. He was beheaded with a single blow of a scimitar. The remaining priests, including a Dominican friar, Fra' Fruttuoso, were also executed. The women and children were imprisoned for sale as slaves, while all the captured males were taken to the Turkish camp outside the city.

On August 13, all the male citizens of Otranto between the ages of fifteen and fifty were bound in pairs and brought in groups of fifty before Gedik Ahmet Pasha, who promised the prisoners their lives, their freedom, and the return of their captive families in exchange for their conversion to Islam. An apostate priest, Giovanni of Calabria, accompanied Gedik Ahmet Pasha and enjoined the men to renounce their faith.

A tailor named Antonio Primaldo, one of the older men, exhorted the others with these words, recorded by sixteenth-century chronicler Giovanni Michele Laggetto, who heard the story from his father:

> My brothers, until today we have fought in defense of our homeland, to save our lives, and for our earthly governors; now it is time for us to fight to save our souls for our Lord. And since he died on the cross for us, it is fitting that we should die for him, remaining firm and constant in the faith, and with this earthly death we will earn eternal life and the glory of martyrdom. (Laggetto 1924, p. 31)

To a man, the citizens of Otranto rejected the offer of Gedik Ahmet Pasha, who fixed their execution for the following day, August 14, 1480. Led to the Hill of Minerva, named for the pagan goddess of war, the men were all decapitated, Antonio Primaldo being the first of the group to suffer martyrdom. An eyewitness, testifying at the canonization process in 1539, declared to have seen the headless trunk of Primaldo remain standing, despite repeated attempts to knock it down, until the last man of Otranto had been martyred. Struck by this prodigious demonstration of faith, one of the executioners, named Barlebey, converted to Christianity and was impaled alongside the martyrs.

The bodies remained unburied on the hill, now renamed the Hill of the Martyrs, until Duke Alfonso of Calabria retook the city and arranged for their burial in May 1481. The martyrs' remains are now displayed in seven large wooden cabinets in the Cathedral of Otranto.

The BEATIFICATION process began in 1539 with eyewitness accounts from four men who were too young to stand with the martyrs at the time and had been given as slaves to Ottoman commanders. After regaining their freedom, they returned to their home to testify to the bravery they had witnessed. As of 2010, Antonio Primaldo and his companions had not been beatified, although Pope JOHN PAUL II visited the tomb of the Otranto Eight Hundred in 1980, the 500th anniversary of their martyrdom.

On July 6, 2007, Pope BENEDICT XVI decreed the validity of the martyrs of Otranto both historically and theologically. Several accounts of miracles through the INTERCESSION of Antonio Primaldo and his companions have been delivered to the Congregation for the Causes of Saints, awaiting verification.

Several Italian accounts of the tale of the Otranto martyrs are available, but the story remains little known in English, although it may have been the inspiration for Horace Walpole's 1764 novel The Castle of Otranto. Several recent English-language articles have made the story better known among Anglophone readers, and Pope John Paul II's homily of October 5, 1980, during a pastoral visit to Otranto, offered modern reflections and meaning to the sacrifice of the martyrs. The principal sources, however, remain the Italian chroniclers who recorded the events as they unfolded.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; MARTYR; OTTOMAN TURKS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Antonio Antonaci, Otranto: Testi e monumenti (Galatina, Italy 1955).

Antonio Antonaci, I Processi nella causa di beatificazione dei martiri di Otranto (Galatina, Italy 1960).

Matthew E. Bunson, "How the 800 Martyrs of Otranto Saved Rome," in This Rock: The Magazine of Catholic Apologetics and Evangelization 19, no. 6 (July–August 2008): 12–17.

Comitato diocesano per il quinto centenario dei beati martiri di Otranto, ed. I beati 800 martiri di Otranto del 1480 (Lecce, Italy 1980).

Grazio Gianfreda, Storicità del martirio dei martiri di Otranto (Lecce, Italy 1991).

Grazio Gianfreda, I beati 800 martiri di Otranto, 11th ed. (Lecce, Italy 2007).

Giovanni Michele Laggetto, Historia della Guerra di Otranto del 1480, Come Fu Presa dai Turchi e Martirizzati i suoi Fedeli Cittadini: Trascritta da un antico manuscritto con brevi commenti dal Cav. Luigi Muscari (Maglie, Italy 1924).

Sandro Magister, "Summer Reading: How the Eight Hundred Men of Otranto Saved Rome," including a reprinting of Alfredo Mantovano, "Ready to Die a Thousand Times for Him..." (Il Foglio, July 14, 2008), Chiesa.espressonline, August 14, 2007, available from http://chiesa.espresso.repubblica.it/articolo/161401?eng=y (accessed December 8, 2009).

Elizabeth Lev
Adjunct Professor, Department of Art History
Duquesne University, Italian Campus, Rome (2010)

OUR LADY OF ALL NATIONS

From 1945 to 1959, Dutch woman Ida Peerdeman received fifty-six apparitions and concurring messages from the Blessed Virgin Mary in Amsterdam, Netherlands under the title, "The Lady of All Nations." The messages contain the urgent Marian call to prayer, penance, and conversion; a number of geo-political prophecies for the Church and the world; and a consistent urging of prayer and action for the solemn papal declaration of a new Marian DOGMA.

Origins and History. The first apparition occurred on March 25, 1945, with a message predicting a proximate end to WORLD WAR II with the praying of the ROSARY as the saving factor in bringing the war to a close, as well as a call to make known a new prayer throughout the world.

On February 11, 1951, the Blessed Virgin revealed to the seer the following prayer, which supplicates for a new descent of the Holy Spirit into the hearts of all nations in order to prevent global "degeneration, disaster, and war": "Lord Jesus Christ, Son of the Father, send now your Spirit over the earth. Let the Holy Spirit live in the hearts of all nations, that they may be preserved from degeneration, disaster, and war. May the Lady of All Nations, who once was Mary, be our Advocate. Amen." The Virgin then instructed all peoples to pray this prayer: "This prayer is so short and simple that each one can say it in his own tongue, before their own crucifix, and those who have no crucifix, repeat it to themselves."

Later in 1951, the Lady of All Nations revealed that the prayer was to serve in preparation for a new and final solemn dogmatic proclamation or "dogma" regarding the traditional Catholic doctrinal roles of Mary as Co-Redemptrix, Mediatrix, and Advocate. On April 29, 1951, she revealed to Peerdeman:

> I stand here as the Co-Redemptrix and Advocate. Everything should be concentrated on that.... The new dogma will be the "dogma of the Co-Redemptrix." Notice I lay special attention on "Co." I have said it will arouse much controversy. Once again, I tell you that the Church, "Rome," will carry it through and silence all objections. The Church, "Rome," will incur opposition and overcome it. The Church, "Rome," will become stronger and mightier in proportion to the resistance she puts up in the struggle.... I know well the struggle will be hard and bitter ... but the outcome is already assured.

On May 31, 1954 (which in that time was the feast of Mary, Mediatrix of All Graces) the Mother of Christ appeared to the Dutch seer with the instruction:

> Once more I am here, the Co-Redemptrix, Mediatrix, and Advocate is now standing before you. I have chosen this day: on this day the Lady shall be crowned. Theologians and apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, listen carefully: I have given you the explanation of the dogma. Work and ask for this dogma. You should petition the Holy Father for this dogma.

This was followed by a vision of a Roman PONTIFF in ST. PETER'S BASILICA making a solemn proclamation in the presence of numerous cardinals and bishops. The Virgin added: "Once the dogma, the last dogma in Marian history has been proclaimed, the Lady of All Nations will give peace, true peace, to the world."

Ecclesiastical Status. In 1956 the Bishop of Haarlem, Bishop Huibers, gave his IMPRIMATUR to the promulgation of the revealed prayer of the Lady of All Nations, but took the position of non constat de supernaturalitate regarding the apparitions, which neither approves nor denies their SUPERNATURAL character. In 1974 the Vatican Congregation for the DOCTRINE OF THE FAITH confirmed the position of Bishop Huibers. In 1996 Bishop Hendrik Bomers of Haarlem, after consultation with the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, issued a positive statement which granted Church approval for public devotion to the Lady of All Nations, while leaving the decision of authenticity of the apparitions to the individual CONSCIENCE of the faithful. On May 31, 2002, Bishop Jozef M. Punt of Haarlem, after the establishment of a new formal investigation by a commission, released a positive official ecclesiastical declaration establishing the supernatural authenticity of the apparitions (constat de supernaturalitate).

In 2007 Bishop Punt, in consultation with the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, issued a pastoral statement that replaced the phrase originally present in the Lady of All Nations prayer, "who once was Mary," with the phrase, "the Blessed Virgin Mary," in an effort to avoid pastoral misunderstanding. The prayer of the Lady of All Nations has received over fifty imprimaturs by various cardinals and bishops worldwide.

SEE ALSO GOD (HOLY SPIRIT); MARY, BLESSED VIRGIN, DEVOTION TO; NETHERLANDS, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; PROPHECY (THEOLOGY OF).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ida Peerdeman and Josef Kunzli, The Messages of the Lady of All Nations (Goleta, Calif. 1997).

Jozef Marianus Punt, "In Response to Inquiries Concerning the Lady of All Nations Apparitions" (May 31, 2002), available from http://www.ewtn.com/expert/answers/OLAN2002.pdf (accessed August 26, 2009).

Mark Miravalle
Full Professor of Theology and Mariology
Franciscan University of Steubenville (2010)

OWENS, JOSEPH

CSsR, Canadian priest, philosopher, and scholar; b. New Brunswick, Canada, 1908; d. Toronto, Canada, 2005.

Joseph Owens, CSsR was born in St. John, New Brunswick, Canada, April 17, 1908, professed as a Redemptorist in 1928, and ordained a priest in 1933. In 1935 he entered the Institute of Mediaeval Studies in Toronto, receiving his MSL (1946) and MSD (1951) from there after the conferral of its pontifical charter. Except for a year at the Accademia Alfonsiana in ROME (1952–1953) and two visiting appointments at Purdue University (1968 and 1970), Owens's academic career was passed entirely in Canada, notably as Senior Fellow of the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies and in the Department of PHILOSOPHY at the University of Toronto from 1954 to 1977. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada (1963) and served as president of the American Catholic Philosophical Association (1965–1966), receiving its Aquinas Medal in 1972; the Metaphysical Society of America (1971–1972); the Society for Ancient Greek Philosophy (1971–1973); and the Canadian Philosophical Association (1981–1982). He died in 2005 at the age of ninety-seven, "manifesting that 'delicate sign of love' which is religious obedience..." (Owens, 1997).

Owens must be numbered among the great commentators on ARISTOTLE, a list that includes Alexander of Aphrodisias, AVERROËS, THOMAS AQUINAS, and Werner Jaeger. In The Doctrine of Being in the Aristotelian Metaphysics (1951; 2nd rev. ed., 1963; 3rd rev. ed., 1978), he sets out to uncover an authentic Aristotle and an Aristotle who is the student of his predecessors, yet not reducible to them. Departing from Jaeger, Owens does not find the key to interpretation in the order of composition of the treatises which make up the Metaphysics, but in the methodical order, the order in which Aristotle "wished his thought to be studied" (Owens 1951, p. 38). Out of this order, a careful study of Aristotle's terminology and near ad litteram textual analysis, Owens concludes that Aristotle's "First Philosophy" is the SCIENCE of BEING as FORM, not of being as EXISTENCE. It is also both the universal science of the being common to all beings and the science of the first, that is, divine beings, because "being qua being ... is ... the nature which constitutes separate entity. In studying this definite nature, one studies the Being found in everything else" (Owens 1951, p. 176). For although "'Being' is said in many ways," it is said with reference to one thing (πρὸς ἕν) entity (or SUBSTANCE) and all entities are, in turn, related to the first, separate entities, which are pure forms. Despite the existence of separate forms, it is the individual forms (which actualize sensible entities as the kind of things they are) that function as the principles of human knowing. This constitutes the problem of the universals as it is found in Aristotle, who, in contrast to Plato, asserts that no entity is universal. Owens's solution is that the form of itself is neither singular nor universal: "Because it is not singular, it can be knowable.... At the same time it can be Entity, because it is not actually universal" (Owens 1951, pp. 242–243).

Owens's study provides CONFIRMATION of Étienne GILSON's claim that "the world of Aristotle" was "existenceless" and "eternally self-repeating," not the "existentially contingent world" of Thomas Aquinas created, as such, by a Being whose very nature it is to exist (Gilson 1949, pp. 72, 162). The basic lines of Owens's own existential THOMISM are laid out in his Marquette Aquinas Lecture (1957), St. Thomas and the Future of Metaphysics. For Aquinas, METAPHYSICS is a science, whose subject is ens, "the composite of essence and existence," but which "is constituted as such by the existential act" (Owens 1957, p. 49). When a composite thing is presented to the INTELLECT, it is grasped "according to its essence or nature by the act of conceptualization and, simultaneously, according to its being by the judgment" (Owens 1957, p. 38). Being (esse), whether real or cognitional, is wholly "outside of essence," and although it follows upon "the essential principles of finite things" in the order of formal CAUSALITY, it does not follow from them "in its own proper order of causality, namely efficient causality." Therefore, "because of its priority and accidentality to the sensible things themselves, the being of these things is seen through demonstration to have been received from something else and ultimately from subsistent being" (Owens 1957, pp. 44–46). Because the Thomistic PROOF for GOD's existence starts from "the being of a thing ... not as already submitted to the finitizing process of conceptualization but as directly attained in the act of judgment..., it establishes being as a nature and thereby has already reached the term of demonstration" avoiding the "'awful leap' from the finite to the infinite" (Owens 1957, pp. 46–47). Owens's own philosophical program, grounded in Thomas Aquinas, is laid out in An Interpretation of Existence (1968), An Elementary Christian Metaphysics (1985), and Cognition: An Epistemological Inquiry (1992).

Owens enters the debate over the existence of CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY on the affirmative side and identifies some of his work as belonging to that enterprise. In Towards a Christian Philosophy (1990), he explains how "something accidental and external," such as the notion "Christian," can "bring about the essential differentiation that is intrinsic to a philosophical discipline" through a "radically pluralistic understanding of philosophy," in which differing pre-philosophical DIALECTICS, as engaged in, for example, by Aristotle and DESCARTES, produce a plurality of starting points. "In all general philosophies, then, the source of specification is to be looked for in the personal conditioning and approach of their respective proponents." In the case of Christian philosophy, the starting points are indicated by Christian belief, but are grasped by natural reason when "seen in the things themselves" (Owens 1942, pp. 23–24).

Joseph Owens authored or edited thirteen books and wrote well over 200 articles and reviews. The four volumes of his collected papers and the numerous reviews and critical studies of his work testify to his significance as a scholar of ancient and medieval philosophy. The hundreds of his students who have taught, and who still teach, in philosophy departments across Canada and the United States are a testimony of another kind.

SEE ALSO BELIEFS; ESSENCE AND EXISTENCE; EXISTENTIAL METAPHYSICS; GOD, PROOFS FOR THE EXISTENCE OF; JUDGMENT; NATURE (IN PHILOSOPHY); NATURE (IN THEOLOGY); PLURALISM, PHILOSOPHICAL; REASON, USE OF; REDEMPTORISTS; UNIVERSALS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Works by Joseph Owens

The Doctrine of Being in the Aristotelian Metaphysics: A Study in the Greek Background of Mediaeval Thought (Toronto 1951; 2nd rev. ed., 1963; 3rd rev. ed., 1978).

St. Thomas and the Future of Metaphysics, The Aquinas Lecture, 1957 (Milwaukee, Wis. 1957; Reprint, 1973).

An Elementary Christian Metaphysics (Milwaukee, Wis. 1963; Reprint, Houston, Tex. 1985).

An Interpretation of Existence (Milwaukee 1968; Reprint, Houston, Tex. 1985).

Cognition: An Epistemological Inquiry (Houston, Tex. 1992).

Review: Paul Laverdure, Redemption and Renewal: The Redemptorists of English Canada, 1834–1994 (Toronto 1996) in Catholic Insight (June 1, 1997), available from http://www.thefreelibrary.com/Redemption+and+renewal%3a+the+Redemptorists+of+English+Canada%2c…-a030145489 (accessed March 24, 2008).

Aristotle's Gradations of Being in Metaphysics E–Z, edited by Lloyd P. Gerson (South Bend, Ind. 2007), ix–xlvii.

Collected Papers of Joseph Owens

Towards a Christian Philosophy (Washington, D.C. 1942; 1990).

St. Thomas Aquinas on the Existence of God: Collected Papers of Joseph Owens, C.Ss.R., edited by John R. Catan. (Albany, N.Y. 1980).

Aristotle: The Collected Papers of Joseph Owens, C.Ss.R., edited by John R. Catan (Albany, N.Y. 1981).

Some Philosophical Issues in Moral Matters: The Collected Ethical Writings of Joseph Owens, edited by Dennis J. Billy and Terence Kennedy (Rome 1996).

Sources

Étienne Gilson, Being and Some Philosophers, 2nd ed. (Toronto 1949; 2nd ed., 1952).

Edward M. Macierowski, "Joseph Owens, CSsR (1908–2005)," Mediaeval Studies 68 (2006): vii–xxv.

"Rev. Joseph Owens CSsR" Obituary. Toronto Globe and Mail (November 2, 2005): S9.

E.A. Synan, "Preface," in Graceful Reason: Essays in Ancient and Medieval Philosophy Presented to Joseph Owens, on the Occasion of His Seventy-Fifth Birthday and the Fiftieth Anniversary of His Ordination, ed. Lloyd P. Gerson (Toronto 1983), xi–xiii.

Mary C. Sommers
Professor and Director, Center for Thomistic Studies
University of St. Thomas, Houston, Texas (2010)

P

PALESTINE, PAPAL POSITION TOWARD

During the course of its long history, the Holy Land has been a source of inspiration and contention among various civilizations and faiths, and its capital, JERUSALEM, besieged some two dozen times. For centuries before Christ it was the center of Jewish life, attacked by a host of enemies including the Babylonians, Persians, Romans, and others, before it fell to the Islamic Caliphate in the seventh century. Its capture by Christian crusaders in AD 1099 proved temporary, for in 1187 SALADIN pushed them out. In 1517 it fell to the OTTOMAN TURKS, who granted the various Christian denominations rights over the Christian shrines. The various Christian groups and their state protectors over time contested the rights to these holy sites. In 1853 this conflict provided the pretext for the opening of the Crimean War, as France and Russia clashed over the issue of Catholic versus Orthodox protection and supervision of the Christian shrines in Palestine. The contentions continued, as did Turkish control over the Holy Land, until WORLD WAR I, when it was "liberated" by British forces under the command of Field Marshal Henry Hynman, First Viscount ALLENBY, in 1917. Despite the fact that the Muslim Turks had over the course of several centuries proven increasingly respectful of the rights of Christians and Jews in the Holy Land, both groups applauded its liberation and planned for its future. Pope BENEDICT XV (1914–1922) and his secretary of state, Pietro GASPARRI, abandoned their wartime impartiality and openly expressed their joy that Palestine had been freed of Turkish control, while the Zionists hoped to establish a homeland for Jews there. A resulting clash of interests ensued, as the various faiths planned for the future of the region.

The Papacy and Zionism. Dismayed by the religious ANTI-JUDAISM and the racial ANTI-SEMITISM that emerged during the DREYFUS AFFAIR in France and elsewhere in Europe, Theodor Herzl (1860–1904) had by 1896 moved away from Jewish conversion and integration into European life, to seek a home for the Jewish people in Palestine—founding the Zionist movement in the process. Modern political Zionism had two major goals: (1) the return of the Jewish people to the land of Israel; and (2) the establishment of a Jewish state there. From the first the Church and the papacy did not necessarily oppose the first goal, but clearly opposed the latter aim of establishing a Jewish state that might gain control of the Christian shrines. As early as May 1896, Herzl, hoping to secure Vatican support for his program, met with the papal nuncio to Vienna to explore the possibility of that prospect. To allay possible Vatican concerns, he sought to reassure the nuncio, and through him Pope LEO XIII (1878–1903), that the Jewish homeland in Palestine his organization envisioned would not prove detrimental to Catholic interests in the Holy Land. In fact, he promised it would not include such Christian points of interest as Jerusalem, BETHLEHEM, or NAZARETH, and that all the Christian shrines would be accorded extraterritorial status. Neither the nuncio nor the pope showed any interest in the project. In fact, as news of the Zionist goal spread, the Jesuit-run publication Civiltà Cattolica opposed the creation of a Jewish state in Palestine, considering it contrary to Christ's predictions and the Church's interests. Leo concurred with the JESUITS in opposing Jewish control of the Holy Land, as did his successor, PIUS X (1903–1914).

Like his predecessor, Pius X, while not hostile to Jews or JUDAISM, was most concerned about the Church's position and future in the Holy Land, the cradle of Christianity, whose indigenous Christian population remained among the oldest in the world. At the opening of Pius's pontificate, the Vatican supported some thirty orders and associations in the Holy Land, some twenty convents and monasteries, and eighteen hospices as well as five hospitals. Pius X shared Leo's concern that the Zionist program might prove detrimental to Christian interests and concessions in the Holy Land, and for this and other reasons he decided to meet with Herzl at the beginning of 1904. In response to Herzl's plea for papal assistance in establishing a Jewish homeland in Palestine, Pius responded that as head of the Church, he could never favor such an enterprise. Acknowledging that he could neither sanction nor stop the Jews from venturing to Palestine, he added, "If you come to Palestine and settle your people there, we shall have churches and priests ready to baptize you all." Later, his secretary of state, Cardinal Rafael Merry dal Val, elaborated upon the Vatican's policy regarding Jewish emigration to the Holy Land. He specified that if the Jews sought only to establish agricultural colonies, without wishing to assert political control, Rome would deem it a humanitarian effort and would not impede it.

Pius's successor, Benedict XV, who regretted the persecution of the Jews in the Polish territories on the part of the retreating Russian forces during the First World War and viewed the return of Jews to Palestine as providential, did not oppose their return. He indicated as much to Nahum Sokolow, Secretary General of the World Zionist Organization, whom he met in early May 1917. Benedict revealed his conviction that Jews and Christians could live in the Holy Land side-by-side as good neighbors. However, like his predecessors he opposed the political program of the Zionists and their plans for the creation of a Jewish state. In mid-December 1917, his secretary of state, Pietro Gasparri, explained the basis of papal opposition: The transformation of Palestine into a Jewish state would endanger the holy places, damage the feelings of all Christians, and prove very harmful for the country itself.

Having been clearly told they could not expect help from the papacy to fulfill their political goals, the Zionists sought support elsewhere—especially from the British government. In November 1917 they obtained the "British Declaration of Sympathy with Zionist Aspirations," issued by British foreign secretary, Lord Arthur James Balfour. This declaration seemed to promise the Jews political and territorial rights in the Holy Land. The talk of a British mandate over Palestine led the pope and his secretary of state to fear that Catholic rights in the Holy Land would be compromised and the Church's position undermined. Determined to assure the "inalienable rights" of the Church in Palestine, in May 1917 Benedict XV founded the Congregation for the EASTERN CHURCHES, which he personally directed, and in June 1919 he had a branch of the Biblical Institute at Rome erected in Jerusalem. Not opposed to the British mandate in Palestine or the emigration of Jews there, in an allocution of June 13, 1921, Benedict expressly stated: "We do not wish to deprive the Jews of their rights; we want, nevertheless, that they be not in any way preferred to the just rights of the Christians." Indeed, Cardinal Gasparri complained about the draft of the British proposal that Lord Balfour presented on December 7, 1920, which he believed would establish the economic and political predominance of the Jews in the Holy Land. At the same time, the Vatican considered the prospect of an Arab administration there as unreliable and therefore unacceptable.

The HOLY SEE hoped that the conflicting positions of the Church and the Zionists over the Holy Land would be resolved at the international conference held at San Remo in April 1920. Among other issues to be considered were that of preserving the special status of the French regarding the holy places, and the possible creation of a special international commission to administer these sites. Although the conference granted Britain the mandate for Palestine, neither of the other two papal objectives was attained. A number of Vatican aims were disregarded or rejected, including the papal call for the internationalization of the Holy Land, which would have accorded Catholic countries, especially France and Belgium, special protective rights there. Instead, the British were accorded exclusive control.

Some in the Vatican expressed concern when the British appointed Sir Herbert Samuel as first High Commissioner in Palestine, not so much because he was a Jew, but because he was known to be sympathetic to the Zionist program and aspirations. To allay these fears Samuel visited Rome on the way to his new post. He was received by both Benedict XV and Cardinal Gasparri on June 25, 1920. Rome was not reassured by the promises provided for its position in the Holy Land, and was thus encouraged to facilitate the reopening of relations with the Paris government, whose support on this issue it hoped to garner. Disappointed by the position accorded the Church in the Holy Land and the other consequences of the peace treaties, at the end of December 1921, Benedict caught a cold, which he neglected, and which led to a bronchial infection and his subsequent death on January 22, 1922.

Benedict's successor, PIUS XI (1922–1939), who deplored and protested Nazi Germany's anti-Semitism and supported Jewish emigration to escape that satanic regime, did not approve the creation of a Jewish state in Palestine. In March 1922 the Vatican's position on Palestine was concretized in a memorandum to the secretary-general of the League of Nations, which criticized a number of the articles in the draft of the British mandate for Palestine. These, he noted, sought to implement the Balfour Declaration of 1917, in violation of the Covenant of the League. Gasparri likewise opposed giving the Jews priority in the Holy Land, fearing this would prove detrimental to Christian interests there. The Catholic press during the pontificate of Pius XI proved more critical of Zionism than the pope and displayed a degree of anti-Judaism in its critique of the establishment of a Jewish homeland in Palestine. In 1929, L'Osservatore Romano denounced "The Jewish Danger Threatening the Entire World," while Civiltà Cattolica proclaimed that "the Jews constitute a serious and permanent danger to Christianity." Confronted with conflicting claims, in July 1937 the Palestine Royal Commission's Report (also known as the Peel Report), proposed the partition of Palestine into Jewish and Arab sectors. This projected division found few supporters among the parties most interested.

Pius XII and Palestine. Since the turn of the century the Vatican had openly opposed turning over even part of Palestine to the political control of Jews or Muslims, a stance Pius XI's successor, PIUS XII (1939–1958), also adopted following his assumption of the tiara. The outbreak of WORLD WAR II in September 1939 witnessed an acceleration and intensification of the Nazi persecution of the Jews that culminated in the genocide that was their "final solution." European Jews who managed to escape the HOLOCAUST (SHOAH) found few open doors and increasingly looked to Palestine for refuge. Their resettlement there led to tension with the resident Arab population as the influx of Jews increased, creating problems for the British who still exercised the mandate over the area. Their problems were compounded by the continued papal opposition to the creation of a Jewish state in Palestine. Although the situation of European Jewry had changed dramatically following the Holocaust, and international support for a Jewish state had increased dramatically, Pope Pius XII maintained the Holy See's opposition to the creation of a Jewish state in Palestine.

Aware of the growing military and diplomatic standing of the United States, in 1943 Pius XII's secretary of state, Cardinal Luigi Maglione, following Pius XII's directive, wrote the apostolic delegate in the United States, Amleto Cicognani, to apprise Washington of the Vatican's position on the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine. He wrote that Catholics worldwide would feel wounded if Palestine were to be given to the Jews, while warning the Americans that the creation of such a Jewish state would enrage the Muslim population and endanger peace and stability in the region. Between the summers of 1943 and 1944, Pius XII's Vatican clearly reiterated its opposition to Jewish control over any part of Palestine. Some inside the Church, as well as outside, were convinced that the prevailing anti-Judaism in the institution was behind the Vatican's opposition for the creation of a Jewish state. Cardinal Johann WILLEBRANDS of Holland explained that many Catholics believed that the Jews as a people were collectively responsible for the death of Christ and were therefore condemned "to eternal pilgrimage across the world outside of Israel."

Despite these contentions, the best available evidence suggests that Rome's objections to a Jewish state did not flow primarily from theological anti-Judaism, which may have been a contributing factor, but not the primary one, in the formation of its policy. Far more important was the Vatican's determination to protect and preserve Catholic interests in the Holy Land, a major priority during the Second World War and its aftermath. This same interest led the Holy See to oppose Arab domination there. The British Minister to the Holy See was convinced that the Vatican would have preferred that neither Jews nor Muslim Arabs control the area, opting instead for a third entity that would be neutral. Although the Catholic Church was most vocal in its opposition to placing Jerusalem under the political control of a competing religious element, it was not the only Christian church to reveal concern about the future of Palestine in general and Jerusalem in particular. When the British refused to continue to be burdened with this responsibility, the Vatican of Pius XII concluded that the next best solution was the internationalization of Jerusalem, and he proposed that this be under the auspices and supervision of the newly formed United Nations (U.N.). Presumably the international organization would not favor one religion of the book over the others, but some complained that the Western bias of the organization would mean that the interests of Christians would be favored over those of Muslims and Jews.

Others observed that there was a pressing need for some solution to the controversy over Palestine as violence escalated among Jews, Muslims, and Christians, as well as against the British who had held the League's mandate over the region since the end of World War I. After 1945 the British had increasingly to resort to military force to subdue the constant clashes between Arabs and Jews, and Britain was increasingly embroiled in the conflicting diplomatic initiatives for the Jews or the Arabs. Although Pius XII was sympathetic to the Palestinian desire for self-determination, he opposed violent means to achieve that end, as he informed a visiting Palestinian delegation in 1946. This pope hoped and believed that the conflict over the future of Jerusalem could be resolved diplomatically, a message he also conveyed to Moshe Shertok, head of the Jewish agency's Political Department and subsequently Israel's foreign minister, whom he received in April 1945.

Initially Pius XII sought to preserve his "impartiality" on the Palestinian conflict just as he had during the course of World War II, having others defend the Vatican stance in favor of the internationalization of Jerusalem. He related his position to a group of Jewish refugees who visited him in November 1945. Probably expecting this group to ask him to lend support for a Jewish state in Palestine, Pius indirectly explained why he could not. The Church does not involve herself in political problems and territorial issues, he related, but he offered the prospect of some help by adding that the Church lays foundations for their solution. This ambiguous, indeed enigmatic, assertion provided no clue concerning the solution he favored. Pius was no more explicit in an encyclical he issued in 1948 following the outbreak of the Arab-Israeli war, which claimed that impartiality was imposed as an apostolic duty, placing the Holy See above the conflicts that agitate human society. In fact, however, this recourse to "impartiality" over the future of Palestine was more rhetoric than reality.

Pius XII soon had to review his position, as did the British. The latter confronted colonial disputes elsewhere and were anxious to protect their own colonies, and so in early 1947 they turned the thorny problem of Jerusalem over to the newly formed United Nations. The British decision to withdraw disappointed the Vatican, which nonetheless believed that the next best solution was to have its administration entrusted to the United Nations. The U.N. Special Committee on Palestine subsequently recommended the partition of Palestine and the internationalization of Jerusalem. The resolution of the General Assembly of November 29, 1947, provided that the city of Jerusalem and its immediate environs would be governed as a corpus separatum under an international regime administered by the United Nations. This limited the role and responsibility of the U.N., although its administration would still cover some hundred square miles of territory and a population of over 200,000, and would encompass Bethlehem and the other suburbs of Jerusalem. The Arabs rejected the proposal. The Vatican tacitly accepted U.N. Resolution 181, even though at this time it had reservations about the partition of the Holy Land into Jewish and Arab states. However, from the Holy See's perspective, the partition was rendered palatable by the proposed internationalization of Jerusalem and Bethlehem. The Vatican's approval of the plan was reflected in the support it received from the countries of Latin America, Belgium, France, and the Philippines, all protective of the interests of the Church. Zionists, who opposed Jerusalem's internationalization, believed that these Catholic countries had been pressured by the Vatican to favor it.

Following the General Assembly's approval of the partition and the British withdrawal from Palestine in mid-May 1948, David Ben-Gurion announced the creation of the state of Israel, which was attacked by the surrounding Arab states while King Abdullah of Jordan conquered that part of Jerusalem that contained most of the holy places. In October 1948, Pius XII released an encyclical calling for the internationalization of Jerusalem and supporting the cause of the Muslim and Catholic refugees, some 800,000 of whom were either ejected or fled from the territory that fell under Israeli control. The Jewish state, immediately recognized by the United States and the Soviet Union, resisted the internationalization sought by the Vatican and approved by the United Nations. Pius XII continued to insist on the internationalization of Jerusalem, and at the end of 1949 the U.N. General Assembly adopted a resolution for such an internationalization. This resolution was in turn rejected by Israel and Jordan, which controlled sections of the city. In 1949 Pius XII established the Pontifical Mission for Palestine—a humanitarian effort to provide Palestinian refugees with food, housing, and essential services. By this and other measures he was the first modern pope to open serious relations with the Muslim world. In 1949 Egypt became the first Muslim state to establish formal diplomatic relations with the Holy See.

The renewed outbreak of war in the Middle East in 1956 disturbed Pius, who expressed concern over the plight of the people of the region and the likely damage to the holy sites. His refusal to recognize Israel was not based on anti-Judaism, which indeed persisted in the Church, but was in response to the Israeli refusal to adhere to the U.N. resolutions on the internationalization of Jerusalem, which Pius invoked on three separate occasions in the postwar period. Other factors contributing to the Vatican's refusal to recognize Israel included Israel's unwillingness to permit the return of displaced Palestinians, and the fact that it proclaimed Jerusalem its capital without recognizing any international protection for the adherents of non-Jewish religions. Although Americans clearly favored Israel, Vatican support for the Arab stance in the Middle East did not interfere with U.S. and Vatican cooperation elsewhere. Pius XII sought to improve the Vatican's diplomatic position in the Middle East and the Islamic world by establishing relations with Syria and Iran in 1953, while preserving the friendship of Jordan and Egypt. In 1953, despite its close cooperation with the United States and the Western European powers in the Cold War against the Soviet Union, Pius once again proclaimed Papal "impartiality" and freedom from any political alliance or bloc.

The Second Vatican Council and Its Aftermath. JOHN XXIII (1958–1963), who convoked the Second Vatican Council and encouraged a dramatic improvement in Catholic-Jewish relations, brought about no immediate official change in the Vatican's position on Israel and Palestine. Nonetheless, the improvement in relations between the two faiths inevitably improved relations between the Vatican and Israel, which continued during the pontificate of PAUL VI (1963–1978). In 1963 Paul was the first pope since apostolic times to visit the Holy Land; he stopped in Jordan and Israel, and preached peace and unity. Following the Six-Day War of June 5–10, 1967, in which Israel occupied Sinai, the Old City of Jerusalem, the West Bank, and the Golan Heights, and defeated an Egyptian, Jordanian, and Syrian alliance, Paul VI moderated the previous Vatican demand for the extraterritoriality of Jerusalem. At this juncture the pope invoked international guarantees for the rights of Christians, Jews, and Muslims in the Holy City. In his Christmas message of 1967 he cited two conditions that had to be met to assure peace and provide a just settlement in Palestine. The first was the need to provide security and guarantees for the holy places, and the second was to assure the civil and religious rights of the Palestinian people and the right of return for those forced to flee.

To attain these ends, Paul VI proved willing to make concessions, and in 1974 he completely abandoned the earlier Vatican demand for the internationalization of Jerusalem. By this and other means he set the stage for an eventual agreement with the Jewish state. While Paul tacitly acknowledged the sovereignty of the state of Israel, he insisted on certain guarantees for the Church and the Palestinians before diplomatic relations between it and the Vatican could be established. He presented his position to Israeli Jews in December 1975, noting he was aware of the "recent tragedies which led the Jewish people to search for safe protection in a state of its own." Recognizing and recalling the tragedy of the Holocaust, he called upon the sons of these people to recognize the rights of another people who have also suffered for a long time, the Palestinians. There was also continued concern for the security of the holy places including the Basilica of the Holy Sepulcher, the Sanctuary of the Ascension, the Tomb of the Virgin, the Basilica of the Nativity at Bethlehem, and the Field of the Shepherds at Bethlehem, among others.

The Contemporary Papacy and Palestine. The Vatican of JOHN PAUL II (1978–2005) continued the rapprochement with the Israeli state and by the 1980s recognized the factual existence of Israel and its right to exist within secure borders. However, two issues continued to block formal recognition of the Israeli state and the opening of diplomatic relations: the status of Jerusalem and its holy sites, and the plight of the Palestinian people. John Paul II also opened a dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), a political and military organization formed in 1964 to unite various Palestinian Arab groups with the ultimate goal of bringing about an independent state of Palestine. In 1982, the first pope to visit a synagogue and mosque met with Yasser ARAFAT of the PLO. Despite the criticism of some, he met with Arafat eight more times over the course of the following two decades, and he concluded a basic agreement between the Holy See and the PLO. At the same time he maintained contact with the Israelis, and at the beginning of 1991 the papal press secretary outlined the Vatican's position toward Israel and Palestine. His release noted that according to international law the Holy See implicitly recognized the state of Israel, but that diplomatic relations had not been established because of a number of unresolved issues. These included the plight and position of the Palestinians, the rights of the Catholic population of Palestine and Israel, and the status of Jerusalem.

Following the Gulf War of 1990–1991, the subsequent Madrid Conference of 1991, which was jointly sponsored by the United States and the Soviet Union, brought together Israel, Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, and the Palestinians. It was a watershed event that for the first time saw Israel enter into direct, face-to-face negotiations with Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, and the Palestinians, and it seemingly promised finally to bring peace to the Middle East. Two positive developments emerged. The first was the opening of negotiations between the Israelis and Palestinians to settle their differences; the second, which followed upon the first, was the opening of talks between the Vatican and Israel in order to establish full diplomatic relations—which were ultimately established at the end of 1993. That same year talks opened in Norway between Israel and the Palestinian Arabs, which launched what became known as the Oslo Peace Process. On September 13, 1993, representatives of the state of Israel and the PLO signed the "Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements," a document also known as the "Oslo Accords." They were signed at a Washington ceremony hosted by U.S. President Bill Clinton on September 13, 1993, during which Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin ended decades as sworn enemies with a handshake and what seemed to be the prospect of a two-state solution—which John Paul II favored.

The opening of relations between the Vatican and Israel led to extensive talks between the two regarding the legal status of the Catholic Church and its institutions in the Israeli state. An agreement was concluded in November 1997 and ratified on February 3, 1999, which regularized the status and legal position of Catholicism and its institutions in Israel. Among other things, it established the Church's rights in Israel in accordance with the laws of the Jewish state: freedom of religion,

Middle East Diplomacy. Pope Benedict XVI, during his visit to the Holy Land in 2009, meets with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to discuss the need for an independent Palestinian state alongside a secure Jewish state. AP IMAGES freedom of worship, and freedom of access to the holy places. The negotiations between Israel and the PLO proved far less successful. Israeli talks with Yasser Arafat brought about only a partial transfer of power to the Palestinians and no permanent agreement. This played a part in provoking the intifada in 1987—the Palestinian uprising against the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. These developments worried the Vatican, which had predicted an increase in violence if there were no peaceful solution to the plight of the Palestinian people.

In fact the continued Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza led to the 1987 formation of Hamas, which assumed a more militant, and some said terrorist, response. Its defiance of Israel made it popular among many Palestinians, but its recourse to violence only provoked deadly Israeli retaliation. The escalation of violence troubled the last years of the pontificate of John Paul II, whose diplomacy proved no more successful than that of the United Nations in finding a solution to the problems of Palestine.

BENEDICT XVI, who in 2005 succeeded John Paul II as pope, shared his predecessor's concern for the difficult situation in the Middle East. The victory of Hamas in the Palestinian elections at the beginning of 2006, the civil war between Hamas and Fatah that ensued, the Israeli invasion of Hamas-controlled Gaza in December 2008, and its withdrawal in January 2009 all combined to create consternation in the Vatican. Although more of a theologian than a diplomat, Benedict recognized the need for a diplomatic solution to the conflict over Palestine. His solution echoed that of his predecessor—the need for an independent Palestinian state alongside a secure Jewish state. This was the message he hoped to convey and repeated during the course of his mid-May 2009 visit to the Holy Land, which he viewed as a pilgrimage of peace to encourage harmony between Israelis and Palestinians. Benedict also saw the trip as a means of seeking reconciliation with Muslims and Jews: with the first for an unfortunate citation about Islam in an earlier speech, and with the latter for lifting the 1988 excommunication of four members of the Society of Saint Pius X, one of whom has called into question the veracity of the Holocaust.

In Bethlehem, on Palestinian soil, Benedict XVI sympathized with their suffering and offered a prayer to have the Israeli's lift their blockade of Gaza and tear down their walls in the West Bank. To maintain papal impartiality he also called upon Palestinians to shun violence and terrorism against Israel and to seek a peaceful alternative to their occupation. While given a respectful reception first in Jordan, then the West Bank, and finally Israel, Benedict witnessed firsthand the prevailing antagonisms and difficulties hindering a just and peaceful solution in the Middle East. The Latin Patriarch of Jerusalem, Fouad Twal, complained that the Catholic population of Jerusalem and the West Bank was shrinking day by day because of the unjust occupation of Palestinian land and the host of humiliations imposed by the Israelis on all Palestinians, Christians as well as Muslims. In an interreligious meeting held at the Notre Dame center in Jerusalem, Sheik Taysir al Tamimi, the chief Palestinian justice who was not scheduled to speak, grabbed the microphone and denounced the unjust and oppressive Israeli occupation, prompting many Jewish attendees to protest by leaving the meeting. In turn, some Jews felt that the pope was too detached in his comments on the Holocaust. The speaker of Israel's parliament denounced Benedict for not showing sufficient personal contrition, and he described the pope as a German who joined the Hitler Youth and the German army.

Benedict was not discouraged by the difficulties his peace mission confronted or the personal attacks; he was confident that eventually peace and justice would prevail, and that the Israelis and Palestinians would live peacefully side by side in separate states. The written message he left May 12, 2009, in the Old City of Jerusalem at the Western Wall, Judaism's holiest prayer site, was an appeal to God to bring his peace upon this Holy Land, the Middle East, and the entire human family. Subsequently, at the end of May, U.S. President Barack Obama told the visiting Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu that, like the pope, he supported a two-state solution to the Palestinian dispute. When President Obama visited a number of Arab states and Israel in June 2009, he repeated this call for the establishment of a two-state solution—which is supported by the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council: the United States, Great Britain, France, Russia, and China, as well as the Holy See. The Vatican journal L'Osservatore Romano, established by Pope Pius XII's grandfather, praised the U.S. president's stance, which echoed that of Pope Benedict XVI. Awaiting full sovereignty, the Palestinian entity, like the Vatican, has been granted Permanent Observer status at the United Nations.

SEE ALSO COLD WAR AND THE PAPACY; NAZISM, PAPAL RESPONSE TO; UNITED NATIONS AND THE PAPACY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Andrew M. Canepa, "Zionism, Israel and the Vatican," in Encyclopedia of the Vatican and Papacy, edited by Frank J. Coppa (Westport, Conn. 1999), 458–460.

Duncan L. Clarke and Eric Flohr, "Christian Churches and the Palestinian Question," Journal of Palestinian Studies, 21, no. 4 (Summer 1992): 67–79.

Frank J. Coppa, The Papacy, the Jews and the Holocaust (Washington, D.C. 2006).

Frank J. Coppa, Politics and the Papacy in the Modern World (Westport, Conn. 2008).

George E. Irani, The Papacy and the Middle East: The Role of the Holy See in the Arab-Israeli Conflict (Notre Dame, Ind. 1986).

Andrej Kreutz, Vatican Policy in the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict: The Struggle for the Holy Land (New York 1990).

Andrej Kreutz, "The Vatican and the Palestinians: A Historical Overview," in Papal Diplomacy in the Modern Age, edited by Peter C. Kent and John F. Pollard (Westport, Conn. 1994), 167–179.

Sergio Minerbi, The Vatican and Zionism: Conflict in the Holy Land, 1895–1925 (New York 1992).

Edward W. Said, "Reflections on Twenty Years of Palestinian History," Journal of Palestinian Studies, 20, no. 4 (Summer 1991): 5–22.

Frank Coppa
Professor of History
St. John's University, Queens, N.Y. (2010)

PALOMINO YENES, EUSEBIA, BL.

Religious sister of the Daughters of Mary, Help of Christians; b. Cantalpino, Spain, December 15, 1899; d. Valverde del Camino, Spain, February 10, 1935; beatified April 25, 2004, by JOHN PAUL II.

Eusebia Palomino Yenes was one of four children born to Agustin Palomino and Juana Yenes. As a farmhand who was only employed seasonally, Agustin found himself periodically obliged to resort to begging. Eusebia enjoyed frequently accompanying her father on these trips without realizing their social situation. She received her FIRST COMMUNION at the age of eight, and later recounted it as her first mystical experience and the beginning of her vocation. She was obliged to leave school that same year in order to help support her family. The adults in Palomino's life consistently noted her unusual maturity. When she was twelve years old, she and her older sister traveled to Salamanca to work as nannies.

On Sunday afternoons in Salamanca, Palomino would go to the Oratory of the Sancti Spiritus School run by the Daughters of Mary, Help of Christians. The sisters asked Palomino to help with menial chores around the school. She complied and was known for her cheerful demeanor. Palomino did not at first reveal her desire to enter the community because she believed her poverty would prevent it. But she confided in a visiting superior, who accepted her into the community. She entered the novitiate on August 5, 1922, and made her solemn profession in 1924. Palomino was then sent to the congregation's house in Valverde del Camino.

When she arrived, Palomino was ridiculed by the children of the convent school because of her awkward appearance, but her cheerfulness and storytelling skills won them over. Before long, the children, their parents, the other sisters, and even priests of the area sought out Palomino, who worked as a kitchen hand because of her lack of education, for spiritual advice. She encouraged them to lead a spiritual life based on the wounds of Christ and on the Marian devotion of St. Louis de Montfort. She also taught people to recite the Divine Mercy Chaplet, which had recently been introduced to Spain.

After the establishment of the anticlerical Second Spanish Republic in 1931, Palomino offered herself as a victim soul for religious liberty and the well-being of Spain. She became ill in August 1932 with an undiagnosed ailment that caused her limbs to contract tightly and exacerbated her asthma. She began to experience ecstasies and VISIONS at this time. In spite of intense pain and numerous visitors, Palomino remained cheerful until her death three years later. She was widely proclaimed a saint upon her death, and declared a servant of God by John Paul II on December 17, 1996. On December 20, 2003, the pope accepted evidence of her miraculous INTERCESSION, and she was beatified on April 25, 2004.

Feast: February 10.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SPAIN, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; SPAIN (THE CHURCH DURING THE SPANISH REPUBLIC AND THE CIVIL WAR: 1931–1939).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six Servants of God" (Homily, April 25, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20040425_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Eusebia Palomino Yenes (1899–1835)," Vatican Web site, April 25, 2004, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20040425_yenes_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Salesians of Don Bosco, "Blessed: Sr. Eusebia Palomino (1899–1935)," available from http://www.sdb.org/sdbweb/index.asp?Lingua=2&MySez=12&MySotsez=18&MyDetSotSez=16&FileCentro=_2_12_18_16_.htm (accessed November 17, 2009).

Ryan Haber
Independent Researcher
Kensington, Maryland (2010)

PAPAL ELECTIONS

Upon the POPE's death, the papal chamberlain, or camerlengo, alerts the eligible cardinals of the Sacred College (ideally 120) and summons them to meet in CONCLAVE for the election of a new pope. The camerlengo administers the HOLY SEE and the VATICAN CITY during the interregnum. Eighteen days later the cardinals begin their deliberations although those who arrive late may still join the negotiations. After JOHN PAUL II's death in 2005 the cardinals, for the first time, slept in the Domus Sanctae Marthae, built by the late pope to house visitors. More comfortable than the old routine of cots in the apostolic palace, the cardinals were still transported to the SISTINE CHAPEL for their formal duties.

After mass and communion, on the first day the cardinals call upon the Holy Spirit for guidance and begin their work of deliberation and election. To vote, each writes the name of his choice on a blank piece of paper, folds it in half and, holding it between first two fingers of the right hand, carries it to the altar. There, after he kneels in a short PRAYER, he declares that CHRIST is his judge and that his vote represents GOD's choice. The ballot is placed on a paten and then into a chalice with the others. The new pope should receive two-thirds of the votes. If no one does, the votes continue, two in the morning and two in the afternoon, until a victor is declared. In modern times most winners have already been bishops; the last exception was GREGORY XVI in 1831. Election, nonetheless, means that he becomes bishop of ROME and head of the Episcopal College.

The method used to select the PONTIFF has evolved over the past two millennia. The GOSPEL of MATTHEW (16:18) tells us that Christ selected the APOSTLE PETER, the "rock," to lead his Church. Later, Peter's see of Rome eventually surpassed all rivals as the capital of Latin Christendom and those who succeeded him assumed the role of head of the Church. According to tradition, Peter chose his next three successors, LINUS, ANACLETUS I, and CLEMENT I as the second, third, and fourth bishops of Rome (although the strict notion of bishop had yet to be developed). As the office and its importance became clearer in those first centuries, sketchy evidence indicates that the bishops of Rome were, in one form or another, elected. In the first centuries, votes came from all sectors—other bishops, local clergy, and lay Christians all participated.

While the PRINCIPLE of election has persisted through the past two millennia, political pressures, corruption, and ignorance have violated it, and it was sometimes abandoned altogether. Pope INNOCENT I, for instance, succeeded his father, ANASTASIUS I in 401, although an election may have confirmed this. To rescue papal independence from Byzantine/Gothic intrigue, moreover, FELIX IV appointed his own successor, Boniface II, in 530. When the new pope tried to do the same thing, a popular outcry stopped him. The election principle suffered more at the hands of political factions. In 686 and 767 succession was determined by troops who seized control of the LATERAN palace where elections frequently occurred. By the tenth and eleventh centuries Holy Roman Emperors influenced papal elections almost as a matter of course. HENRY III nominated four of them before he died in 1056.

Reforms by NICHOLAS II in 1059, ALEXANDER III in 1179, and GREGORY X in 1274 addressed papal succession, confirming the electoral principle and the basic routine that largely remains in effect. To challenge imperial meddling, reforming cardinals elected Nicholas who promptly called a Roman synod. There it was decided to restrict voting to the highest ranks in the hierarchy and that preference be given to Roman candidates. Lay factions were permitted the right to acclaim the outcomes. Nicholas's assumption that elections would be unanimous, however, created difficulties. Pope Alexander III corrected the problem at the Third Lateran Council of 1179. There, his APOSTOLIC CONSTITUTION, Licet de vitanda discordia emphasized the cardinals' role in the process and decided that a two-thirds majority was needed to elect a pope.

The death of Pope CLEMENT IV in 1268 triggered the third major reform concerning the Conclave—the physical details of the election. The rebellious Romans had forced Clement's election to Perugia, and he reigned as pope from Viterbo, north of Rome. Thanks partly to Anjevin and French intrusion, the cardinals deliberated at Clement's Viterbo palace for over three years. At one point the frustrated locals removed the palace roof to force them into a decision. On March 19, 1272, four years after Clement died, his successor was finally crowned in Rome as Gregory X. Anxious that such embarrassments not recur, Gregory called the Council of Lyons in 1274, which approved Ubi majus periculum, his bull that set firm rules for electoral procedure. Cardinals would be permitted one or two servants and locked into the Conclave (cum clave) with no outside communication. All were to sleep in one large room separated by curtains for privacy. Meals were delivered on a turnstile and after five days were reduced to bread, water and wine. Gregory's reform also determined that, when possible, Conclaves occur in the city of the pope's death. In Rome many took place at the Lateran Palace or at the churches of Santa Sabina or Santa Maria sopra Minerva. The first Conclave at the Vatican Palace was held in 1378. The 1484 election of Giovanni Cibo (INNOCENT VIII) was the first in the Sistine Chapel.

The reforms, nevertheless, failed to cure the nagging foreign meddling, which took on a new life after the RENAISSANCE. Starting with the Protestant Reformation, leading Catholic states—first Spain, then France, and Austria—claimed jus exclusivae, veto over papal candidates, a power that was greatly resented but effectively wielded mostly in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. In the nineteenth century PIUS IX's bull, Consultari ne post obitum (1877), and LEO XIII's constitution, Praedecessores nostri (1882), tried to stem it. By 1903 Austria-Hungary's Emperor Franz Josef (1830–1916) was the last to try it, against CARDINAL Mariano RAMPOLLA DEL TINDARO. Rampolla was not elected, but the new pope, PIUS X, was so outraged that he secretly threatened EXCOMMUNICATION for anyone who revived the jus exclusivae. Since the First World War, no Catholic power has felt that interference in Conclaves could bring any rewards, and the issue has become moot.

In recent times Pope PAUL VI's moto proprio of November 21, 1970, and apostolic constitution, Romano pontefici eligendo (1975), restricted voting to cardinals under the age of eighty; and John Paul II's apostolic constitution, Universi dominici gregis (1996), mandated a simple majority for election. BENEDICT XVI's moto proprio of June 11, 2007, however, restored the old two-thirds rule.

SEE ALSO APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION; CAMERLENGO; CARDINALS OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH; DOMUS SANCTAE MARTHAE; LATERAN COUNCILS; LYONS, COUNCILS OF; PAPACY; PAPAL CEREMONY AND VESTURE; PAPAL ELECTION DECREE (1059); PAPAL ELECTIONS, VETO POWER IN; PAPAL REGISTERS; POLITICS, CHURCH AND; REFORMATION, PROTESTANT (ON THE CONTINENT); UNIVERSI DOMINICI GREGIS; VATICAN CITY, STATE OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Frederic J. Baumgartner, Behind Locked Doors: A History of the Papal Elections (New York 2003).

Francis A. Burkle-Young, Passing the Keys: Modern Cardinals, Conclaves, and the Election of the Next Pope (Lanham, Md. 1999).

Francis A. Burkle-Young, Papal Elections in the Age of Transition, 1878–1922 (Lanham, Md. 2000).

John-Peter Pham, Heirs of the Fisherman: Behind the Scenes of Papal Death and Succession (Oxford, U.K. 2004).

Roy Palmer Domenico
Professor, Department of History
The University of Scranton, Scranton, Pa. (2010)

PAPCZYŃSKI, STANISLAUS OF JESUS AND MARY, BL.

Baptized John; founder of the MARIAN FATHERS; b. Podegrodzie, near Stary Sacz, Poland, May 18, 1631; d. Góra Kalwaria, Poland, September 17, 1701; beatified by Pope BENEDICT XVI, September 16, 2007.

Stanislaus studied in the Piarist college in Podoliniec (Spisz) and in Jesuit colleges in Lvov and in Rawa Mazowiecka. In 1654 he entered the Piarist novitiate in Podoliniec and received the religious name Stanislaus of Jesus and Mary. In 1656, in Warsaw, at the close of his second novitiate combined with a theology course, he took his simple vows and became a subdeacon. In 1661 he was ordained in Brozozów, while living at the Piarist college of Rzeszów.

Transferred to Warsaw in 1663, he became renowned as a teacher of eloquence and as a preacher and confessor. After a series of legal and religious controversies with his Piarist superiors, he requested to be secularized as a priest of the diocese of Kraków. In the act of his release from vows and the oath of perseverance in the Piarist Institute on December 11, 1670, he solemnly promised God to continue in the religious life through the "Society of the Marian Clerics of the Immaculate Conception," which he planned to found.

The new Marian congregation received its first ecclesiastical approval in 1673, and Papczyński was appointed superior of a small hermitage at Korabiew (Puszcza Mariańska), near Zyradów in the Diocese of Poznań. At first he struggled to obtain even a few vocations, but the order eventually began to grow. In 1677 he fixed his residence in Nowa Jerozolima (Góra Kalwaria), a town near Warsaw, and he devoted the rest of his life to the government and canonical establishment of the Marians in the strict observance of the Norma Vitae, the constitutions he had written for them. In 1699 the HOLY SEE approved the Marians, and in 1701 Papczyński made his solemn profession only a few months before his death. His body rests in the "Cenacle" Chapel of Góra Kalwaria.

Papczyński's principal writings are Prodromus Reginae Artium (1669), Orator Crucifixus (1670), Templum Dei Mysticum (1675), Inspectio Cordis (c. 1682), Norma Vitae (Warsaw 1687), and Christus Patiens (1690).

His BEATIFICATION process, begun in 1769, was interrupted in 1775 when, due to political unrest in Poland and lack of sufficient documentation, the Marian Fathers were unable to answer adequately objections to his cause. Early in the twentieth century, the Marian Fathers began collecting documents about Papczyński's life, and the process resumed in 1953. In 1992 John Paul II announced Papczyński's heroic virtue. On December 16, 2006, the Vatican approved a miracle brought about through his INTERCESSION: A baby had died in utero and was resuscitated. The miraculous event was verified by ultrasound images.

Papczyński was beatified on the Memorial of Our Lady of Sorrows, September 16, 2007, at a Mass celebrated by Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone at the Basilica of Our Lady of Licheń, Licheń Stary, Poland. In his homily, Cardinal Bertone highlighted Papczyński's work with the poor, promotion of temperance, devotion to the IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, and commitment to praying for the dead.

Feast: May 18.

SEE ALSO JESUITS; PIARISTS; TEMPERANCE, VIRTUE OF; VIRTUE, HEROIC.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Casimir Krzyżanowski, Stanislaus a Jesu Maria Papczyński, ... Magister studii perfectionis (Rome 1963).

Georgio A. Navikevičius, "Stanislao di Gesù Maria Papczyński 1631–1701" (Ph.D. diss., Gregorian University Rome, 1960).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Bl. Stanislaus Papczyński (1631–1701)," Vatican Web site, September 16, 2007, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20070916_paczynski_en.html (accessed November 9, 2009).

Tadeusz Rogalewski, Lumen Marianorum: Stanislaus Papczyński (1631–1701) (Stockbridge, Mass. 2001).

General Curia of the Congregation of Marian Fathers, And That Your Fruit Would Remain: Materials of the General Commission for the Beatification of the Venerable Servant of God, Father Stanislaus Papczyński, Founder of the Congregation of Marians (Rome 2007), available from http://stanislawpapczynski.org/assets/pdfs/en_aby_owoc.pdf (accessed November 9, 2009).

Rev. Martin P. Rzeszutek MIC
Superior
Marian Fathers Scholasticate, Washington, D.C.

Mark B. Giszczak
Ph.D. Student, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America,
Washington, D.C. (2010)

PAQUAY, VALENTIN, BL.

Baptized Louis, known in religion as Valentin, priest of the Order of Friars Minor; b. Tongres, Belgium, November 17, 1828; d. Hasselt, Belgium, January 1, 1905; beatified November 9, 2003, by JOHN PAUL II.

Louis Paquay was born into the deeply religious family of Henry and Anna (née Neven) Paquay. He was the fifth of their eleven children. Louis completed his secondary education at a school run by the CANONS REGULAR OF ST. AUGUSTINE in Tongres. In 1845 he started his seminary studies at Saint-Trond. Paquay's father died in 1847, leaving his mother to give consent for him to enter the Belgian province of the Order of Friars Minor. He took the name Valentin and began his novitiate on October 3, 1849, at the convent of Thielt. On October 4, 1850, he made his religious profession. On June 10, 1854, Paquay was ordained a priest and sent to Hasselt in northeast Belgium.

Paquay lived the rest of his life in Hasselt, where he developed a reputation for sanctity. He preached regularly in clear language, and he taught a deep devotion to the Eucharist. He heard many confessions each day and for this reason has been likened to the Curé of Ars (St. Jean Baptiste Marie VIANNEY). Paquay emphasized the PASSION in his preaching, and meditated on it frequently through daily STATIONS OF THE CROSS. In addition, he advocated devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus and to Mary as the "cause of our joy," and he urged his listeners to pray the ROSARY daily. He was noted for his prudent conduct, and he aimed at moderation. Taking St. FRANCIS OF ASSISI as his model, he ate simple meals, took only the necessary rest, and kept a sparsely decorated room. Toward the end of his life, he suffered numerous ills with equanimity, including near total blindness.

At different points, Paquay served as guardian of his house and as vicar of the order. In 1890, and again in 1899, he was appointed provincial for Belgium. He also served as the director of the Secular Franciscan Order in Hasselt for twenty-six years.

Because of his early and widespread reputation for sanctity, Paquay's cause was opened in 1908. Pope PAUL VI declared him VENERABLE on May 4, 1970. On December 20, 2002, John Paul II accepted testimony of a miraculous intervention by the servant of God, and Paquay was beatified on November 9, 2003.

Feast: January 1.

SEE ALSO BELGIUM, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Five Servants of God" (Homily, November 9, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20031109_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Valentin Paquay (1828–1905)," Vatican Web site, November 9, 2003, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20031109_paquay_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Ryan Haber
Independent Researcher
Kensington, Maryland (2010)

PAULINE FATHERS AND BROTHERS

(SSP, Official Catholic Directory #1020) Popular name of the Society of St. Paul for the Apostolate of Communications; founded, 1914, Alba, Italy, by Bl. James Alberione (beatified by Pope John Paul II on April 27, 2003) as a religious congregation of priests and brothers engaged in the apostolate of bringing Christ to the world through the mass media and the internet. In the U.S., the society operates a publishing house (Alba House), in addition to St. Paul Publications. The generalate is in Rome.

SEE ALSO MODERN MEDIA AND THE CHURCH; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "On the Beatification of Blessed Father James Alberione: Homily of Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, April 28, 2003, available (in Portuguese) from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20030428_homilia-martins_po.html (accessed July 8, 2009).

Society of St. Paul for the Apostolate of Communications Official Web site, available from http://www.albahouse.org/ssp.htm.

Rev. James Dunn SSP
Independent Scholar
Brookline, Mass.

EDS (2010)

PAVONI, LODOVICO, BL.

Founder of the Congregation of the Sons of Mary Immaculate; b. Brescia, Italy, September 11, 1784; d. Saiano, Italy, April 1, 1849; beatified April 14, 2002, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Lodovico Pavoni was the first of the five children of Alessandro and Lelia (née Pancarali) Pavoni. Even as a child, he was noted for his intelligence, as well as for his interest in the social questions of the day. He received private theological formation in the home of Fr. Carlo Domenico Ferrari, O.P. (d. 1846), because seminaries were closed during the Napoleonic occupation. Pavoni was ordained a priest in 1807.

Pavoni opened an oratory for poor boys in 1812. A book by Pietro Schedoni (1759–1835) titled Moral Influences (1810) shaped Pavoni's work and educational method. When he was appointed secretary to Bishop Gabrio Nava of Brescia (1758–1831) in 1812, he was permitted to continue his work with the oratory. On March 16, 1818, Pavoni was appointed a canon of the cathedral and rector of the Church of St. Barnabas. When he noted that many youths of the oratory were drawn into sin as they entered the workforce, Pavoni sought and received permission to found an orphanage and vocational school. These became known as the Institute of St. Barnabas in 1821. Pavoni instructed the boys in various trades, beginning with printing in an enterprise known as the Publishing House of the Institute of St. Barnabas, later called Ancora Press. Pavoni added additional trades to the curriculum as opportunity allowed. In 1823 he opened the institute to deaf students. His educational method was based on reasonableness and a positive and preventive approach.

Pavoni established a religious institute in 1825 in order to continue and expand his work. Pope GREGORY XVI approved the purpose of the institute in 1843, and on August 11, 1847, the bishop, on behalf of the HOLY SEE, formally established it as the Congregation of the Sons of Mary Immaculate. Pavoni resigned from the cathedral chapter on November 29, 1847, and on December 8 he and his first brothers made solemn profession as the first members of the congregation.

On March 24, 1849, already ill, Pavoni led the boys of the institute out of Brescia to the novitiate at Saiano to escape the violence of the "Ten Days," during which the city rebelled against the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Pavoni died of natural causes the morning of PALM SUNDAY, April 1, 1849. On June 5, 1947, Pope PIUS XII declared him a VENERABLE servant of God. On December 20, 2001, Pope John Paul II accepted as evidence for his cause the miraculous healing of Maria Stevani in 1909, and Pavoni was beatified on April 14, 2002.

Feast: April 1.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 94 (2002): 389.

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six Servants of God" (Homily, April 14, 2002), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2002/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20020414_beatification_en.html (accessed November 17, 2002).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Lodovico Pavoni (1784–1849)," Vatican Web site, April 14, 2002, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/2002/documents/ns_lit_doc_20020414_pavoni_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Ryan Haber
Independent Researcher
Kensington, Maryland (2010)

PELCZAR, JÓZEF SEBASTIAN, ST.

Bishop, founder of the Sister Servants of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus; name also given as Joseph; b. January 17, 1842, Korczyna, Poland; d. March 28, 1924, Przemyśl, Poland; beatified June 2, 1991; canonized May 18, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Józef Pelczar became aware of his vocation to the priesthood at a young age, and he entered a minor seminary after he finished sixth grade. He was ordained a priest on July 17, 1864, and soon afterward was sent to Rome for further studies. There, he earned two doctorates, one in THEOLOGY from the present-day Gregorian University and the other in canon law from the Lateran University.

Upon his return to Poland, he served as a theology professor, writing numerous academic and pastoral works, including Zycie duchowne (On the Spiritual Life). Known for his efforts to make education more accessible to all Polish people, Pelczar was also concerned for the poor, founding both the Fraternity of Our Lady, Queen of the Polish Crown (1861), and the Sister Servants of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus (1894), who came to the United States in 1959. In 1899 he was made auxiliary bishop of Przemyśl, becoming the ordinary in 1900.

Pelczar had a profound devotion to the Eucharist, the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and the Virgin Mary, which gave him the strength to lead his flock through the horrors of WORLD WAR I (1914–1918) despite his own failing health. He is remembered for his selfless heroism following the invasion of Russia in March 1915, as well as for opening medical centers to care for the wounded and for victims of epidemics.

At his BEATIFICATION on June 2, 1991, John Paul II remembered Bishop Pelczar as "the man who did the will of the Father." At Pelczar's canonization, John Paul II reflected, "He was zealous in all things, but in such a way that in his service Christ himself was the Master." Pelczar was canonized on May 18, 2003, after a miracle attributed to his INTERCESSION was approved in December 2002. He is buried in the Przemyśl Cathedral.

Feast: January 19.

SEE ALSO POLAND; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Canonization of Four New Saints" (Homily, May 18, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.net/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030518_canoniz_en.html (accessed November 4, 2009).

John Paul II, "Homily at the Canonization Mass for Four Blesseds," Acta Apostolicae Sedis 95, no. 11 (November 3, 2004): 750–754.

"St. Joseph Sebastian Pelczar (1842–1924)," L'Osservatore Romano 1794 (May 21, 2003): 1, 9–10.

Franciszka Sankowska, Wszystko dla Serca Jezusowego: Służebnica Boża M. Klara Szczęsna, 1863–1916 (Kraków, Poland 1995).

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Elizabeth-Jane P. McGuire
Doctoral Candidate, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

PELLESI, MARIA ROSA, BL.

Baptized Bruna Aldina Maria, a professed sister of the Franciscan Missionary Sisters of Christ; b. November 11, 1917, Prignano sulla Secchia, Italy; d. December 1, 1972, Sassuolo, Italy; beatified at Rimini, Italy, by Pope BENEDICT XVI, April 29, 2007.

Bruna, the youngest of nine children, was known for her sweetness and good humor. When she was in her late teens, two sisters-in-law died and left behind six children under the age of four. Bruna helped raise the children until answering the call to religious life in 1940.

She was twenty-two when she joined the Franciscan Missionary Sisters of Christ, then known as the Franciscan Sisters of Sant'Onofrio. In 1942 she took her first vows as Sr. Maria Rosa of Jesus. She was sent to Sassuolo and taught elementary school for three years. In May 1945, Sr. Maria Rosa went to Ferrara to work in the parish elementary school. That July she opened a nursery school. Her teaching ministry ended when she was hospitalized for tuberculosis.

Sr. Maria Rosa spent three years in a sanatorium in Gaiato and was then transferred to a Bologna sanatorium. Faith sustained her throughout years of surgeries and treatments that eventually included the daily extraction of fluid from her lungs. In 1955 a needle broke in her thorax and could not be removed. Sr. Maria Rosa referred to the needle as "my lance." According to her Vatican biography, during years of hospitalization she smiled and said, "In recompense, my heart sings and I am very happy."

Sr. Maria Rosa made pilgrimages to LOURDES in 1946 and 1961. She returned to her community in Sassuolo on November 6, 1972, where she died the following month. Pope JOHN PAUL II declared her venerable on July 1, 2000. On June 26, 2006, Pope Benedict XVI issued the decree for BEATIFICATION after the miraculous and complete recovery of a person who prayed for Sr. Maria Rosa's INTERCESSION.

At Sr. Maria Rosa's beatification at the cathedral of Rimini, Cardinal José Saraiva Martins observed that she "heroically welcomed her bodily breakdown, which spread within her the abyss of the mystery of the passion, death and Resurrection of Christ. In confinement, she lived with the missionary yearning of Christ." Cardinal Martins also commented, "If there is an immediate sign of thanksgiving by Sr. Maria Rosa, it is surely the smile that became her first work of charity to all who lived with her."

Feast: December 1.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Causes in Progress," Order of Capuchin Friars Minor Web site, available from http://www.db.ofmcap.org/pls/ofmcap/consultazione.mostra_pagina?id_pagina=2239 (accessed September 9, 2009).

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Rite of Beatification of Maria Rosa Pellesi: Homily of Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, April 29, 2007, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20070429_beatif-pellesi_en.html (accessed September 9, 2009).

"Maria Rosa Pellesi Declared Blessed," Bollettino di Informazioni Cappuccine Internazionali (May 2007): 4, available from http://www.ofmcap.org/en/doc/bici_198-en.indd.pdf (accessed September 9, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Bl. Maria Rosa Pellesi (1917–1972)," Vatican Web site, Aptil 29, 2007, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20070429_pellesi_en.html (accessed September 9, 2009).

"Suor Maria Rosa Domenica Sarà Beata," Il Resto del Carlino (April 24, 2007), available from http://ilrestodelcarlino.ilsole24ore.com/modena/2007/04/24/7931-suor_maria_rosa.shtml (accessed September 9, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Scholar
San Diego, Calif. (2010)

PEREIRA, NUNO DE SANTA MARIA ÁLVARES, ST.

Soldier, national hero, widower, and Carmelite; b. Portugal (most likely at Cernache do Bonjardim), June 24, 1360; d. Lisbon, Portugal, April 1 (Easter Sunday), 1431. Beatified by BENEDICT XV, January 23, 1918. Canonized by BENEDICT XVI, April 26, 2009.

Saint Nuno was born the illegitimate son of Brother Álvaro Gonçalves Pereira, the prior of Crato, Portugal, and Knight Hospitalier of St. John of Jerusalem. His mother was Lady Iria Gonçalves do Carvalhal. Legitimated by royal decree about a year after his birth, Nuno received an education characteristic of those in nobility. At about thirteen, he became the page of Queen Leonor and was knighted. When he was sixteen, at the urging of his father he married Lady Leonor de Alvim, a wealthy young widow. Nuno and Leanor had three children, two sons who died young and a daughter, Beatriz, who later married Afonso, the first Duke of Bragança and son of King João I. Through this marriage, Saint Nuno is linked to many royal descendants, including Queen ISABELLA I of Spain and CATHERINE OF ARAGON, the wife of King HENRY VIII of England.

Most Portuguese consider Saint Nuno a national hero. When the king of Castile was challenging the claim of João I to the Lusitanian crown, Nuno was made the constable or commander-in-chief of the Portuguese army. He led the army of João I to victory over the invading troops from Castile, an effort which culminated in the Battle of Aljubarrota of August 14, 1385.

After the death of his wife in 1387, Nuno resolved to remain celibate. He pursued a life of deep prayer, with special devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary and the EUCHARIST. He cared for the poor and built many churches and monasteries at his own expense. When peace was secured in 1423, he decided to give up his military career and enter the convent of the CARMELITES that he himself had established in Lisbon. Taking the name of Brother Nuno of Saint Mary (frei Nuno de Santa Maria), he gave away all of his wealth, much of it to needy veterans and widows. Nuno lived out the remaining eight years of his life as a simple Carmelite brother, but the people of his nation did not forget him. When he died on Easter Sunday, April 1, 1431, he began to be revered as "O Santo Condestável," the "Holy Constable."

In 1894 the Postulator General of the Carmelites introduced Nuno's cause for beatification. He was declared "Blessed" by Pope Benedict XV on January 23, 1918. Devotion to Blessed Nuno remained strong throughout the twentieth century, especially among members of the Carmelite Third Order, which traces itself to the Confraternity of Our Lady of Mount Carmel (also known as the Confraternity of the Holy Constable) begun by Nuno. Members of the Blue Army, dedicated to Our Lady of Fatima, likewise promoted devotion to him. The Blessed Nuno Society, originally begun at the Ourém Castle in Portugal, eventually moved its headquarters to Duluth, Minnesota.

The discovery of the original tomb of Blessed Nuno in 1996 intensified the cause for his canonization. In 2000 a volunteer at the Ourém Castle, Guilhermina de Jesus, prayed several novenas to Blessed Nuno after an accident blinded her in one eye. The restoration of her sight later that same year was officially proclaimed a miracle by a July 3, 2008, decree of the Congregation for the Causes of Saints. Pope Benedict XVI canonized Saint Nuno at St. Peter's Square on April 26, 2009, along with four others. In his homily, the Holy Father noted Saint Nuno's devotion to the Blessed Mother and his intense life of prayer and reliance on divine assistance. He held up the Holy Constable as "proof that in any situation, even military or in war time, it is possible to put into practice the values and principles of Christian life, especially if they are placed at the service of the common good and the glory of God."

Feast: November 6.

SEE ALSO CANONIZATION OF SAINTS (HISTORY AND PROCEDURE); HOSPITALLERS AND HOSPITAL SISTERS; MARY, BLESSED VIRGIN, ARTICLES ON; MILITARY ORDERS; MILITARY SERVICE; PORTUGAL, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Eliseo Battaglia, John Mathias Haffert, and Gabriel N. Pausback, Peacemaker Who Went to War: The Life of Blessed Nun'Alvarez Pereira, Precursor of Our Lady of Fatima (Whitefish, Mont. 2007).

Benedict XVI, "Holy Mass for the Canonization of Five New Saints: Arcangelo Tadini (1846–1912), Bernardo Tolomei (1272–1348), Nuno de Santa Maria Alvares Pereira (1360–1431), Gertrude Comensoli (1847–1903), Caterina Volpicelli (1839–1894)" (Homily, April 26, 2009), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2009/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20090426_canonizzazioni_en.html (accessed June 23, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Nuno de Santa Maria Álvares Pereira (1360–1431)," Vatican Web site (April 26, 2009), available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2009/ns_lit_doc_20090426_nuno_en.html (accessed May 31, 2009).

Andrew Rabel, "I Pray St. Nuno Blesses the World," Inside the Vatican Newsflash (April 15, 2009), available from http://catholicexchange.com/2009/04/17/117748/ (accessed June 24, 2009).

Robert L. Fastiggi
Professor of Systematic Theology
Sacred Heart Major Seminary, Detroit, Mich. (2010)

PÉREZ, LEONARDO, BL.

Layman, MARTYR; b. November 28, 1883, at Lagos di Moreno, Jalisco, Mexico; d. April 25, 1927, at Rancho de San Joaquín, Jalisco, Mexico; beatified November 20, 2005, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Leonardo Pérez Larios was raised in his parents' Catholic faith. He was known for his kindness, diligence in his studies, and strong work ethic. Although Leonardo experienced the call to priestly life, his father's death brought the obligation to care for his sisters. He worked as a clerk in a shop to support his family and contributed some of his earnings to support religious vocations.

Leonardo belonged to a Marian group that made vows of CHASTITY and met weekly for Eucharistic adoration. Those meetings were tests of faith after Mexico approved a 1917 constitution that restricted religious freedoms for Catholics. Restrictions included the requirement that Mass was to be celebrated only in church with a government official present. A Mexican law adopted in July 1926 made the restrictions so oppressive that Pope PIUS XI on November 18, 1926, promulgated the ENCYCLICAL Iniquis afflictisque (On the Persecution of the Church in Mexico).

Leonardo defied the law and regularly served at Masses held in homes. He was arrested on April 22, 1927, during a Mass and HOLY HOUR at the home of Josefina and Jovita Alba, siblings who sheltered Fr. José Trinidad RANGEL Montaño, a parish priest who refused to register with the government. The services were organized by Fr. Andrés SOLÁ Y MOLIST, a Claretian missionary who had been in hiding since 1926.

Federal soldiers arrested the two priests and Leonardo. Because he was dressed in black, the soldiers thought Leonardo was a priest, although he told them he was a Catholic layman. The three Catholics were imprisoned and transported in a garbage truck to the train station on April 24. The following day, they were martyred by a firing squad at Rancho de San Joaquín.

Leonardo was among thirteen Mexican martyrs beatified November 20, 2005, by Pope Benedict XVI. Cardinal José Saraiva Martins presided at the Mass at Jalsico Stadium at Guadalajara. He remarked that the martyrs were "privileged witnesses" to Christ's kingship; each had the awareness that "the reign of Christ's love was to be established, even at the expense of his own life." The pontiff, in a satellite message from Rome, said the martyrs were "a stimulus for defending the faith and having faith in modern society."

Feast: April 25.

SEE ALSO MEXICO (MODERN), THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Beatos Mexicanos, "Biografia: Leonardo Pérez Larios," 2005, available from http://www.beatificacionesmexico.com.mx/web/leonardo.php (accessed November 5, 2009).

Juan-Diego Brunetta, "Saints of Service," Columbia: The Online Edition, November 2007, available from http://www.kofc.org/un/eb/en/publications/columbia/detail/491215.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Santa Misa De Beatificación De 13 Mártires Mexicanos: Homilía Del Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, November 20, 2005, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20051120_beatificazioni_sp.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Pius XI, Iniquis afflictisque, On the Persecution of the Church in Mexico (Encyclical, November 18, 1926), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/pius_xi/encyclicals/documents/hf_p-xi_enc_18111926_iniquis-afflictisque_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

PERÓN, JUAN DOMINGO

Argentine military and political leader; b. Lobos, Argentina, October 8, 1895; d. Buenos Aires, July 1, 1974.

Juan Perón was a focal point of international controversy during and after the Second World War, when he was variously denounced as a socialist and a fascist. This led to his being both praised and condemned by elements within the Catholic Church.

Perón was born in a town near Buenos Aires into a lower-middle-class family. He was educated in Catholic schools and subsequently graduated from the Argentine Military Academy. Steadily promoted in rank, he spent much of the late 1930s serving as a military attaché and observer in various European countries, particularly Germany and Italy. He was evidently attracted to the authoritarian regimes of HITLER and MUSSOLINI, seeing in them lessons to be applied in his homeland.

Argentina maintained a neutral position during World War II, and Colonel Perón began to develop a parallel career in politics. In 1943 he joined with other officers in overthrowing the incumbent president, and was named minister of labor and social welfare in the new government. He transformed this hitherto unimportant government position into a major force for developing the consciousness and power of the proletariat. At the same time, he created a charismatic public image of himself as the hero of the industrial working class. He also expanded his role both in domestic and international affairs. His power base grew in 1944 when he was named both minister of war and vice president. By the end of the war, he was regarded not only as the real ruler of Argentina, but also as a spokesman for those in Latin America who rejected the dominance of the United States.

In order to command respect for Argentina's status in Latin America, Perón steadily increased the military forces of his country. Within five years the army grew to more than 100,000 men, with proportionate increases in the navy and air force. Ultimately, the Argentine fleet would include major warships, including an aircraft carrier, and new, often innovative, planes were added to the air force. Admittedly, there was a risk that what was intended to dramatize Argentina's leadership role in the region might provoke fear and antagonism in nearby countries. Brazil, which had long competed with Argentina for the role of dominant nation in South America, was particularly offended by Perón's action. Indeed, Perón initiated what became, over time, an arms race between the two countries.

The United States was particularly disturbed by Perón's posturing in political and military matters. Brazil had earned the goodwill of the United States by declaring war on the Fascist Powers and dispatching two infantry divisions to fight in the Anglo-American campaign in Italy. It also sent several fighter squadrons to aid in the American reconquest of the Philippines. This "positive" use of military force against global aggression contrasted sharply (in Washington's judgment) with the sinister intentions of Argentina, a country that had not supported the United States during the war. The militaristic path taken by Perón would continue to shape Argentine behavior long after his departure, notably in the invasion of Britain's Falkland Islands colony in 1982, a move that created serious issues for the United States.

Some have suggested that the U.S. government was behind a 1945 coup by Perón's rivals, who attempted to eliminate him by arresting and imprisoning him. His tremendous influence among the workers led to mass demonstrations in his favor, however, and he was released from prison. This reversal of fortune culminated in his election as president in 1946.

Between 1946 and 1956 Perón was at the pinnacle of his power. Proclaiming a "third way" between capitalism and communism, he announced grandiose plans for industrial expansion and total self-sufficiency, fashioning an Argentine socioeconomic program that borrowed heavily from the corporative and autarkical philosophies that he had admired in Italy and Germany. Inevitably, he developed a strong level of anti-U.S. propaganda, and he often denounced the forces of imperialism and colonialism. His main source of support remained the laboring masses, who proudly proclaimed themselves the descamisados, or "shirtless ones." He was aided to an enormous degree by the political and dramatic skills of his second wife, the actress Eva Duarte (1919–1952), who held virtually dictatorial powers in matters relating to welfare and popular culture. Although she was scorned by the traditional elite, her ability to project charm and to influence a wide variety of people was reflected in a much publicized visit to the VATICAN.

President Perón had established some Catholic connections himself during the immediate postwar period, when he provided sanctuary in Argentina for a considerable number of Fascist functionaries from Germany, Italy, and such satellite countries as Croatia. Many of these individuals had notorious records for crimes and atrocities, but they had managed to gain the patronage and protection of some Church officials in Europe. Such connections would prove to be embarrassing in international circles, however.

After the death of Eva Perón, her husband's fortunes began to decline as his dictatorial behavior aroused more and more resentment, his economic policies began to fail, and the Washington regime became more hostile. By 1955 he was engaged in a public quarrel with the Catholic hierarchy over matters relating to schools, Church property, and the right of the clergy to speak out on moral issues. Perón's clash with the Catholic hierarchy over matters such as divorce, press freedom, and his attempts to imprison his critics led to his excommunication in June 1955. Church leaders joined with wealthy landowners and powerful military commanders to demand his resignation, and even his working-class loyalists proved unable to save him. Perón fled Argentina and eventually established residence in Spain in 1960. However, his political movement, Peronismo, continued to command the loyalty of a large segment of the Argentine masses.

Political and economic weakness continued to plague Argentina throughout the 1960s, and in 1971 the incumbent president, General Alejandro Lanusse, decreed the right of Perón to return to Argentina as long as he abstained from seeking political office. Perónists quickly organized a campaign to elect Hector Campora as a stand-in president. This figurehead resigned the presidency in July 1973, within a few months of taking office. Perón, despite all previous agreements, ran for the vacated presidential seat in September and was elected with some 60 percent of the vote. His third wife, Isabel, became vice president. Perón's health had deteriorated significantly, however, and he died the following year. President Isabel Perón did not enjoy a long tenure either, for she was deposed in yet another coup in 1976.

In the long, unhappy history of Latin American dictators, Juan Perón was one of the most visible and memorable, not least because of his striking consort, whom her admirers called Evita. Some of them sought to have her proclaimed a saint on the strength of her charitable works. When ecclesiastical approval was not forthcoming, others established a virtual secular cult honoring her memory. Like most of his predecessors and successors, Perón ultimately fell afoul of the military. But his inability to manage relations with the Catholic Church was perhaps a portent of new things to come. In the years since Perón's regime, both the Vatican and the Latin American bishops have developed a wider range of approaches to dealing with the political, social, and economic problems that remain perennial in the Western Hemisphere.

SEE ALSO ARGENTINA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; FASCISM; LATIN AMERICA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Robert J. Alexander, The Perón Era (New York 1951).

George I. Blanksten, Perón's Argentina (New York 1953).

Robert D. Crassweller, Perón and the Enigmas of Argentina (New York 1996).

Joseph A. Page, Perón: A Biography (New York 1983).

Arthur P. Whitaker, The United States and Argentina (Cambridge, Mass. 1954).

Julia L. Ortiz-Griffin
Professor of Spanish Language and Literature
City University of New York (2010)

PERPETUAL ADORATION OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT, NUNS OF THE

(AP, Official Catholic Directory #3190) This cloistered community of nuns, with papal approbation, was dedicated to an apostolate of contemplative prayer, primarily through the perpetual adoration of the Blessed Sacrament. The order was founded at Rome, Italy, on July 8, 1807, by Bl. MOTHER MARY MAGDALENE OF THE INCARNATION (Catalina Sordini Movizzo, 1770–1824), a Franciscan sister from the convent on the island of Ischia in the bay of Naples. She was beatified by Pope Benedict XVI on May 3, 2008. The nuns, who take solemn vows, are engaged in constant prayer, including the Divine Office, before the exposed Blessed Sacrament. In the U.S. they are located in El Paso, Texas (1925), and San Francisco, Calif. (1928). Worldwide, the congregation has houses in Spain, Mexico, Chile and Africa.

SEE ALSO EUCHARISTIC DEVOTION; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nuns of Perpetual Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament Official Web site, available from http://www.blessedsacramentmonastery.com/.

John H. McNeely
Associate Professor of History
Texas Western College of the University of Texas, El Paso

EDS (2010)

PERSONALISM

It is a wonderful thing to be a PERSON—everyone is one—and yet further to be a personalist. People acknowledge their personhood and that of others each time they use a personal pronoun such as he, she, or they. But the depth of meaning conveyed by pronouns, in people's busy lives, usually remains implicit, at least until further reflection brings it to CONSCIOUSNESS. The task of philosophical reflection is to do just this, and that is no small matter, for such CONTEMPLATION acknowledges the value of the SELF in relation to the values presented to the self in the context of the whole of REALITY.

Characteristics of Personalist Philosophies. Philosophies that merit the name personalist give preeminence to three characteristics that are constitutive of the human composite—KNOWLEDGE, FREEDOM, and BEING.

Taken together in a distinctive UNITY, they refer to something of which it is no longer asked "What is it?" but "Who is it?" The recognition of this distinctive unity of any person brings philosophical inquiry close to such philosophies as IDEALISM and contemporary EXISTENTIALISM, but a proper understanding of the human person expands beyond these philosophies and into deeper terrain. For there emerges in the human person a distinctive mode of unity that transcends human nature even as it includes the unity of the shared SPECIES and the particularity of individual participation in that species. The result is to bring philosophizing to a unique kind of presence.

In this triad, knowledge plays a special role. As intellectual, the mind is transcendently open in principle to the full intelligibility of reality. But the other two features are also crucial for appreciating personal existence, namely, human freedom and human existence. While intelligence is the prerequisite for these other two, it is in exercising their capacity for knowledge that humans come to realize their distinctive and TRANSCENDENTAL character as persons. They possess a value-oriented freedom with an existential foundation in their singular and unique reality as persons. It is the unity among these features that the PHILOSOPHY of personalism renders explicit by identifying the cognitive, volitional, and ontological constituents of common nature and open INDIVIDUALITY. In sum, what is distinctive of personalism is the explicit recognition of the interplay of these features as grounded in the intrinsically open singularity of each individual.

An outright denial of these features occurs in MATERIALISM, and a selective overemphasis on one rather than another in an idealism of cognition or a spontaneity of the WILL. Taking one or another feature as absolute or exclusive leads to only a fragmentary understanding of personalized humanity. Thus, René DESCARTES' all but exclusive attention to ideas, or Immanuel KANT's separation of thought from being and still further of practical reason from speculative reason, or Friedrich NIETZSCHE's voluntarist embrace of the will-to-power do not qualify as personalism, nor does Jean-Paul SARTRE's absolutism of choice. For exclusive attention to knowledge or freedom or existence does not acknowledge the ontological center that is freely engaged in self-determination through participation in transcendent values. Among the several philosophies that do qualify as personalist, one finds a difference in the emphasis placed either upon the values that engage people's freedom or the being that is its foundation, so long as both are seen to be rooted in the unitary status of each person.

Origin of the Awareness of the Person. The explicit and growing awareness of the person occurred over more than two millennia and initially began in Etruria and Greece with the CULT of the goddess Persephone (Phersu). The term for the mask in her cult (prosopeion) was derived from the Greek (prosopon). Taken into the Latin persona, it melded the role of the mask in Roman theatre with the word for sounding through (personare). Whereas today the term person is used in the familiar sense of a differentiation of human gender (he, she), it originally arose from a dramatic and religious context. Subsequently, however, it served in an expanded sense in the first century BC by designating the concrete reality of individuals and their distinctive value, as when it was used in the law courts to identify those individuals who possessed special legal rights and duties that raised them beyond the generality of other humans. This meaning still reverberates in the value-constituted term citizen, with its attendant rights and obligations.

It is noteworthy, moreover, that the term rights has served in a more elevated sense that persists even into the twenty-first century, as can be seen in its secular usage within the grammar of human and personal rights, as in the "rights of man and natural law" and the "right to life." In the course of its history, the term served religious interests as well, as in the Alexandrian rendering of the HEBREW SCRIPTURES into Greek, with its reference to sacred Scripture as speaking its revealed words: "ex persona domini" (i.e., "out of the mouth of the Lord"). Later, with the Fathers of the fourth and fifth centuries and subsequent Church DOCTRINE the term was raised to its apogee in the articulation of the Holy Trinity in which the Godhead was celebrated as three divine Persons in the unity of the divine Nature. Inasmuch as humans come to be in and through the creative activity of the Divine Persons and in their divine image, humans were seen to be finite participants as persons. This usage gave to humans an unprecedented dignity and value that, even in those not confessing the Christian faith, lends an aura of exceptional dignity to the human term, as in the theme of "inalienable rights."

Different Expressions of Personalism. Among the nuances and variety of expressions of personalism, two especially may be singled out insofar as the one addresses and places central emphasis upon the role of value within the context of the person, whereas the other situates the person within the foundational context of being. Not surprisingly, an American version of personalism speaks most directly and positively to the value of freedom. The American Methodist Borden Parker BOWNE (1847–1910), in stressing the notion of person as the fundamental reality within the universe, found its dignity so overwhelming as to move from a transcendental EMPIRICISM that owed much to both Kant and George BERKELEY to a liberal THEOLOGY of personalism, in which God is immanent to human experience. Although he also owed much to William JAMES's pragmatism, Bowne developed his own method in close association with PROCESS PHILOSOPHY, and he placed great emphasis and pragmatic value on the role of the will and freedom by stressing "the volitional and practical nature of belief." His student, Edgar Sheffield BRIGHTMAN (1884–1953), gave expression to what became known as Boston Personalism, in which the human self is the fundamental metaphysical reality together with a finite understanding of God as an immanent participant in human affairs. He adapted his ideas from the philosophies of Alfred North WHITEHEAD and Charles HARTSHORNE.

Contemporary European authors recognized the centrality of the human person expressed in nuanced forms. Some expressed the idea of person in terms of value, whereas others emphasized the primacy of being, so that value-personalisms and ontological-personalisms both acknowledge the specific integrity of the person. Emmanuel MOUNIER (1905–1950), founder of the journal L'Esprit (1932) and author of The Personalist Manifesto (1950), stressed the communal sense of the person against the all-too-prevalent confusion of the personal with the individual. Whereas the individual was thought to preserve his or her identity by self-enclosure and consequently by merely external relations to others (les autres), Mounier insisted that the person preserved his or her unique identity by open engagement with others in a "personalist and communitarian" movement of the spirit.

Still others were drawn into an acknowledgment of the primacy of the person through the twentieth-century descriptive method of PHENOMENOLOGY developed by Edmund HUSSERL and applied to the examination of values by Max SCHELER (1874–1928). While resisting the later Husserl idealistic tendency to rest the first principle of experience in transcendental consciousness, Scheler readily accepted the earlier descriptive phenomenology of Husserl's Logical Investigations. Scheler's adaptation set forth the range of values and their intrinsic ordering within a hierarchy of objective values. In so doing, he placed the person as the "value of all values," to which everyone ought to be moved by the supreme value of love. In contrast to Kant's merely formalistic value of freedom, Scheler defended what he termed the material character of values—material in the sense of not merely formal and relatively empty, but rather as values embodied in their own objective selves and not simply in their relation to human consciousness and Kantian RATIONALISM.

The value-personalism of Dietrich von HILDEBRAND (1889–1977) contains a remarkable depth of insight into the formative role of values that shape the good of the human person. Beyond values that are subjectively satisfying for each individual and even beyond those that are objectively good lie a stratum of values that affect personal character and value in a deep and integral way. More intimate than singular actions performed by a person and through his or her power, they pervade all that touches the individual in more or less enduring fashion, in the way a friendship is not abolished even when interrupted by attention to particular actions. Such superactual values constitute the sphere of virtues, determining the good of each person in accord with the good proper to persons. They are superactual in that they embrace people in their deepest and most perfective degree. Deeper than singular actions directed towards specific goods, superactual values affect all that shapes integrity, that is, as an integer and a unique totality. Nor are they simply in a person's control, but rather have the power to affect as they call for an affective response. That is, people do not effect superactual values through their initiative but are affected by them in their affective response. Individuals are called to receive superactual values as beyond their control, for they are shaped by the transcendent power of the values. In a mysterious way people receive from superactual values a freedom as they participate in the values as in a transcendent good for themselves as persons. Such cooperative freedom is the highest gift anyone can both receive and participate in.

Just as some personalisms focus on the domain of value, other philosophies understand persons within the integral context of being. These might be called ontological personalisms. The ontological personalism of Gabriel MARCEL (1889–1973) articulates a personalism of the concrete in contrast to a system of functions. The most decisive distinction operative within his thought is that between problem and mystery. With this he sought to reach beyond the divisive manner in which the human person is so often identified with a systematic assembly of his functions and problems in search of solutions. Such an approach he termed primary reflection. Instead, in what he called secondary reflection, he saw a depth in the unitary totality of the human person not reached by such reductive inquiries, however useful they may be in other respects. In this sense Marcel speaks of the person as a mystery, not in the negative sense as simply unknowable, but in the positive fullness of a reality that transcends such an objective system of problems. Penetrating more deeply into the existential reality of the person, he speaks of the human person as concrete, thereby opening a path of reflection that transcends systematic OBJECTIVITY and raises the relation between persons to the level of intersubjectivity. No longer does an individual simply ask: What am I? but Who are we? Humans become available to others (disponibilité) in a shared interpersonal existence that entails both the hope of IMMORTALITY and participation as wayfarers in the mystery of being.

After the nineteenth century, in which the philosophical movements of idealism, empiricism, and POSITIVISM played a dominant role, the twentieth century saw a renewed interest in the philosophy of being, anticipated by Husserl's phenomenology, rendered thematic in his own way by Martin HEIDEGGER'S ONTOLOGY of Dasein and above all, broadly advanced in Catholic circles especially by Pope LEO XIII's call for the recovery of St. THOMAS's thought. The papal initiative expanded into a widespread and intensive study of the MIDDLE AGES that was already underway, but in which the liaison between theology and METAPHYSICS became a principal feature. The study was carried out vigorously in such centers as ROME, COLOGNE, Louvain, River Forest, Laval, and Toronto with special attention to the editing of the works of Thomas and others, already underway.

With his conversion to Catholicism in 1905, Jacques MARITAIN (1882–1973) undertook an intensive study of St. THOMAS AQUINAS, not so much in the strict spirit of a historian as in the potential application of Thomas's thought to the issues of the present day, by concentrating on metaphysics among other disciplines, by addressing a number of fields, and by bringing the metaphysics of being and the existential principle (esse, actus essendi) into play within EPISTEMOLOGY, political philosophy, and AESTHETICS. For the broad range of his interest, however, he never lost the primacy of his metaphysical approach, but maintained a growing awareness of the original and fundamental role played by the existential act in the deepening of knowledge. For all the comprehensive scope of his writings, Maritain never lost the sense of the central role of the person in relation to being, thought, and freedom, so that, while universal in scope, his contribution to an understanding of the person in modern life remained primary.

While the study of Maritain, Étienne GILSON, and others in the works of medieval thinkers had the effect of revitalizing the intellectual richness of twentieth-century thought, other sources of intellectual energy also arose. In relation to personalism, perhaps the most impressive was found in those philosophers who turned to the person under the new mode of reflection termed phenomenlogy. The fruits of phenomenology are evident in such thinkers as Scheler, von Hildebrand, and others not considered here. The task of bringing together the results of a more traditional metaphysics of being and its principles and causes with the modern philosophy of consciousness and its dedication to the description of the experience of the essences and their objective and intentional presence resulted in an expansion of the range and depth of conscious experience, inasmuch as it brought into play the methods of medieval causal explanation with the descriptive methodology of contemporary phenomenology.

Such a task engaged Edith STEIN (1891–1942), who was received in the religious life as Sr. Teresa Benedicta of the Cross. A respected student and assistant of Edmund Hussserl, she was thoroughly expert in the descriptive methods of phenomenology, though she seems to have had some reservations (along with those of her close friend Hedwig Konrad-Martius) regarding her master's exclusion of questions of existence from his analysis of essences. Upon converting to Catholicism she undertook a study of St. Thomas, initially through a study of the saint's Disputed Question on Truth (De Veritate), an issue that was of critical interest to the phenomenologist. But she did not forget her master, and for his seventieth birthday, she penned a fictional dialogue between Thomas and Husserl. More than that, she undertook an extended reflection titled On Finite and Eternal Being (published after her death in the dreaded Nazi death-camp of Auschwitz). In this impressive work she addressed her interpretation of being (ens) with special attention to the internal relation of ESSENCE (essentia) and EXISTENCE (esse) as constitutive of each and every being. She did not always agree with Thomas, sometimes preferring the position of John DUNS SCOTUS. This was not surprising, given her early work with the descriptive attention to essence (Eidos, Wesen), so characteristic of Husserl's phenomenolgy. Husserl, however, had concentrated on the methodical description of essences to the deliberate exclusion or bracketing of existence (epoche) because existence did not contribute to the formal intelligibility of the objects under analysis. For such essences are what they are and mean what they mean, whether existing or not. She departed from her master on this important point and strove to integrate both the essential character of the objects studied with their relation to the actuality of being, thus expanding the horizon of analysis to a philosophy of being.

One of the most developed integrations of the two distinct methods—that of contemporary phenomenology and that of traditional metaphysics of being—is found in the work of Karol Wojtyła (1920–2005; Pope JOHN PAUL II). His initial acquaintance with philosophy occurred through the manuals of SCHOLASTIC PHILOSOPHY, but his first formal academic study was given over to the theology of St. JOHN OF THE CROSS and Carmelite MYSTICISM, culminating in a doctoral dissertation at the Angelicum in Rome. After a brief service as a parish priest, he was commissioned to write a second doctorate, this time based upon the philosophy of the German phenomenologist Max Scheler. While he drew from the experiential approach of the descriptive method of phenomenology, he was not uncritical of some aspects of Scheler's thought and found the concept of practical reason in Immanuel Kant to be more faithful to ethical experience and ethical thought without, however, embracing Kant's critical idealism. Upon completion of the second doctorate (this one from the Jagiellonian University in Kraków), he was appointed to the chair of ethics in the newly reformed Catholic University of LUBLIN, where he taught from 1954 to 1957. Upon becoming auxiliary BISHOP, he held the chair until his election as PONTIFF in 1978. Immersed in the phenomenology of ethical experience, Wojtyła sought a more universal and fundamental ground of responsible freedom than he discerned in phenomenology. The Lublin Lectures contrasted the thought of both Kant and Scheler with the metaphysics of being in the texts of St. Thomas Aquinas. He placed particular emphasis upon the role of existence as the first actualizing principle in which the principles of the essential order (FORM, MATTER, SUBSTANCE, and ACCIDENT) received that energeia of which ARISTOTLE had spoken but were now understood as the power of existence (esse, actus essendi). With this, he integrated both the descriptive power of the method of contemporary phenomenology with the modern adaptation of the foundational philosophy of being in the existential thought of St. Thomas Aquinas. From his abiding interest in the person, he wrote a work on Love and Responsibility. This was followed by his major philosophical treatise entitled Osoba i Czyn (Person and Act), which roots the primacy of personal existence in the responsible exercise of free activity. His papal writings continued his reflections on the person, both in its singular and its communal aspects, with a distinctive ENCYCLICAL on human work (Laborem Exercens), in which he does not so much focus on the processes of modern industrial production as on the person of the worker, both in his singularity and in his communal participation. Moreover, in his theological writings he continued to think in personalist terms as a philosopher. Among his most noteworthy papal writings is the Encyclical dedicated to the relation between philosophy and theology, titled Faith and Reason, which celebrated the authenticity of philosophical reason even as it opened itself out to the transcendental heights of theological participation in the truths of divine Revelation. Paramount in the papal and pre-papal works is the author's steady gaze on the human person, on the responsible exercise of freedom, and on the interconnectedness that forms, not simply a human collectivity, but a community of persons (communio personarum) dedicated to the pursuit of the TRUTH and values already instilled in things by the Creator.

SEE ALSO AUSCHWITZ-BIRKENAU; ESSENCE AND EXISTENCE; EXISTENTIAL METAPHYSICS; FATHERS OF THE CHURCH; KAROL WOJTYŁA: EARLY YEARS; KAROL WOJTYŁA: POET, PLAYWRIGHT, PHILOSOPHER, AND PATRIOT; LABOREM EXERCENS; PERSON, DIVINE; VOLUNTARISM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Borden Parker Bowne, The Theory of Thought and Knowledge (New York 1897).

Borden Parker Bowne, Personalism (Boston 1908).

Edgar Sheffield Brightman, Persons and Values (Boston 1952).

Gabriel Marcel, The Mystery of Being (The Gifford Lectures 1949–1950), translated by G. S. Fraser (vol. 1), translated by René Hague (vol. 2); 2 vols.(Chicago 1950–1951).

Gabriel Marcel, Homo Viator: Introduction to a Metaphysics of Hope, translated by Emma Crawford (Chicago 1951).

Gabriel Marcel, "The Ontological Mystery" in the Eng. collection: The Philosophy of Existentialism, translated by Manya Harari, 6th ed. (New York 1966).

Jacques Maritain, True Humanism (London 1941).

Jacques Maritain, Existence and the Existent (New York 1957).

Jacques Maritain, The Person and the Common Good (Notre Dame, Ind. 1966).

Emmanuel Mounier, founder and editor of the French journal, L'Esprit (1932–).

Emmanuel Mounier, A Personalist Manifesto, Eng. trans. (New York 1938).

Emmanuel Mounier, Personalism, Eng. trans. (Notre Dame, Ind. 1952).

Max Scheler, Formalism in Ethics and a Non-Formal Ethics of Value, translated by M. S. Frings and R. L. Funk, 5th ed. (Halle, Germany 1913; repr. Eng. ed., Evanston, Ill. 1973).

Edith Stein (Sr. Teresa Benedicta of the Cross), Finite and Eternal Being: Collected Works, 9 vols. (Washington, D.C. 1986).

Edith Stein (Sr. Teresa Benedicta of the Cross), "Husserl and Aquinas. A Comparison," in Knowledge and Faith, vol. 8, translated by Walter Redmond (Washington, D.C. 2000, pp. 1–63).

Dietrich von Hildebrand, Christian Ethics (New York 1953).

Dietrich von Hildebrand, The Heart: An Analysis of Human and Divine Affectivity, edited by John Henry Crosby, new ed. (South Bend, Ind. 2007).

Karol Wojtyła (Pope John Paul II), Love and Responsibility, translated by H. T. Willetts (New York 1981).

Karol Wojtyła (Pope John Paul II), Lubliner Vorlesungen (Stuttgart, Germany 1981).

Karol Wojtyła (Pope John Paul II), Fides et Ratio (Faith and Reason), 1998).

Karol Wojtyła (Pope John Paul II), Osoba i Czyn (The Acting Person), translated by Andrzej Potocki (Dordrecht 1979) [For the 3rd Polish-Italian ed., see Persona e Atto, translated by Giuseppe Girgenti and Patrycja Mikulska (Milan 1999)].

For a short history of the development of the term person, with references to supporting literature, see Kenneth L. Schmitz, "The Geography of the Human Person," in: The Texture of Being (Washington, D.C. 2007), 9:149–167.

Kenneth Schmitz
University of Toronto
John Paul II Institute, Washington, D.C. (2010)

PETER KIBE KASUI AND 187 COMPANIONS, MARTYRS OF NAGASAKI (JAPAN), BB.

Also known as Petrus Kibe Kasui; four priests, one brother, 183 laity; d. various cities in Japan, 1603–1639; beatified November 24, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Peter Kibe Kasui and 187 companions, the martyrs of Nagasaki, were beatified in Japan on November 24, 2008. The previous day Pope Benedict XVI had reminded his audience in Rome that the 188 martyrs of Nagasaki represented only a small portion of the thousands of faithful who were executed in Japan. In his homily at the BEATIFICATION, Cardinal José Saraiva Martins commended each of these martyrs who had "laundered his robe in the blood of the Lamb" (Rv 7:14) and had become an example of the ultimate act of love. Set against the backdrop of shogun rule that closed all churches, forbid missionaries to enter the country, and executed an estimated 30,000 Christians, the courage of these faithful provides a shining example for others.

Of the 188 martyrs only five were religious; the rest were laity, mainly families, often with children. In addition to fifty-six spouses, at least twenty-six children died, some as young as one year, and several were teenagers. Many underwent torture. Persecution forced the Church underground, where it remained for almost two centuries, until the country once again opened its doors to foreigners. In 1865 missionaries were startled to find a vibrant, thriving Catholic community that had kept the Faith alive during those many years of suppression.

Fr. Peter Kibe Kasui was a minister of this clandestine church. After taking his Jesuit vows in 1622, he returned to Japan, knowing he faced possible persecution and death. He ministered in secret until his capture in 1639. His captors, hoping to induce him to deny his faith, bound him tightly and hung him with his head in a pit of offal. Yet Fr. Kibe still encouraged those around him, angering the guards, who cut him down from his bindings and speared him. Fr. Kibe was the last of the 188 martyrs to die. The others are listed as follows, arranged according to the locations where they died.

YATUSHIRO

In the Fukuoka Diocese, men were beheaded; women and children, crucified. Samurai Ioannes (John) Minami (b. c. 1568, Yamato) died December 8, 1603. Others in his village died the following day. His wife, Magdalena (b. c. 1560, Setsu-no-Kuni), and their seven-year-old adopted son, Ludovicus (b. c. 1596, Yamashiro), prayed together from their crosses.

Simon Takeda Gohyōe (Miyako), samurai, (b. c. 1568, Kyōto) died with his wife, Agnes Takeda (b. c. 1563, Ise), and his mother, Ioanna Takeda (b. c. 1548, Ise), who preached from her cross.

Later beheadings include Ioachim Watanabe Jirōzaemon (b. c. 1551, Yatsushiro; d. August 26, 1606); and catechists Michaël Mitsuishi Hikoemon (b. c. 1559, Yatsushiro) and his teenaged son, Thomas Mitsuishi (b. c. 1597, Yatsushiro), who both died January 11, 1609.

On the same day, Ioannes Hattori Jingorō (b. c. 1570, Muro) died from torture in prison, and his five-year-old son Petrus Hattori (b. c. 1604, Yatsushiro) knelt by his father's corpse, prayed, and offered his neck to the executioner, who missed. Petrus kept praying until his head was severed.

SENDAI

Baptized against his master's wishes, high-ranking samurai Leo Saisho Shichiemon (b. c. 1569, Jōnai; d. November 17, 1608) was executed three months later.

YAMAGUCHI

From the Hiroshima Diocese, Melchior Kumagai Motonao, samurai, was beheaded (b. c. 1554, Miiri; d. August 16, 1605, Hagi). Also Damianus, a blind catechist who spread the Faith with stories and songs, was beheaded, maimed, and thrown in a river (b. c. 1560, Sakai; d. August 19, 1605).

IKITSUKI

On November 14, 1609, Samurai Gaspar Nishi Genka (b. c. 1555, Ikitsuki), catechist of the Nagasaki Archdiocese, his wife, Ursula Nishi (b. c. 1555, Ikitsuki), and their son, Ioannes Nishi Mataishi (b. c. 1585, Ikitsuki), repeated the names of Jesus and Mary as they died. Notes placed with their heads announced it was because they were Christians.

ARIMA

Three families of samurai from the Nagasaki Archdiocese were burned alive on October 7, 1613. All had been born in Arima, but no records exist of most birthdates. Hadrianus Takahashi Mondo and his wife Ioanna Takahashi; Leo (Leon) Hayashida Sukeemon, his wife, Martha Hayashida, and their children, Magdalena (b. c. 1593, Arima) and Didacus Hayashida (b. c. 1601); and Leo (Leon) Takedomi Kan'emon and his son Paulus (b. c. 1589) died for their faith.

Later, Adam Arakawa (b. c. 1551, Arima), a sixty-year-old catechist from Amakusa, was imprisoned and tortured for months, then beheaded on June 5, 1614, in Shiki. His body, wrapped in nets and weighted with stones, was thrown into the sea.

KYOTO (MIYAKO)

On October 6, 1619, the largest group of martyrs—fifty-five people of all ages—were tied to crosses and set on fire. One of the families, whose members were all born in Toyko, included Ioannes Hashimoto Tahyōe, his pregnant wife, Thecla Hashimoto, and their five children—Catharina (13), Thomas (12), Franciscus (8), Petrus (6), and Ludovica (3). After the fire freed Ludovica from her bindings, she ran to her mother, who cradled her close as flames consumed them.

Others martyred that day include: Thomas Kian, b. Bungo (now Ōita); Thomas Ikegami, b. Hokuriku; Linus Rihyōe, b. Chūgoku, and his wife, Maria, b. Setsuno-Kuni; Cosmas, b. Kyōto; father of Franciscus Shizaburo, b. Kyōto; Antonius Dōmi, b. Yamato (now Nara); Ioachim Ogawa, b. Mino (now Gifu); Ioannes Kyūsaku, b. Kyōto, his wife, Magdalena, b. Kyōto, and their daughter, Regina (2), b. c. 1617, Kyōto; Thomas Koshima Shinshirō, b. Yamashiro, and his wife Maria, b. Yamashiro; Gabriel, b. c. 1549, Owari (now Aichi); Maria, b. Yamashiro, and her daughter, Monica (4), b. c. 1615, Yamashiro; Martha, b. Kawachi (now Ōsaka), and her son, Benedictus (2), b. c. 1617, Kawachi (now Ōsaka); Maria, b. Tanba, and her son Sixtus (3), b. c. 1616, Tanba; Monica, b. Mino (now Gifu); Thomas Tōemon, b. Owari (now Aichi), and his wife, Lucia, b. Owari (now Aichi); Rufina, widow, b. Owari (now Aichi), and her daughter, Martha (7), b. c. 1612, Owari (now Aichi); Monica, b. Ōmi (now Shiga); Emmanuel Kosaburō, b. Tanba; Anna Kajiya, widow, b. Tanba, and her son, Thomas Kajiya Yoemon, b. Tanba; Agatha, b. Ōmi (now Shiga); Maria Chūjō, b. Bungo (now Ōita); Hieronimus Sōroku, b. Aki (now Hiroshima), and his wife, Lucia, b. Aki (now Hiroshima); Ioannes Sakurai, b. Bungo (now Ōita), and his daughter-in-law, Ursula Sakurai, b. Bungo (now Ōita); Mancius Kyūjirō, b. Kyōto; Ludovicus Matagorō, b. Kyōto; Leo Kyūsuke, b. Owari (now Aichi), and his wife, Martha, b. Owari (now Aichi); Mencia, widow, b. Ōmi (now Shiga), and her young daughter, Lucia, b. Ōmi (now Shiga); Magdalena, b. c. 1616, Owari (now Aichi); Didacus Tsūzu, b. Kyōto; Franciscus, b. Kyōto; and Maria, b. Tanba.

KUMAMOTO

Between 1619 and 1636, eighteen members of the Kagayama and Ogasawara families died for their faith.

The first beheading was of the samurai Didacus (Diego) Kagayama Haito, governor of Kokura (b. c. 1565, Takatsuki; d. October 14, 1619, Kokura). The executions of his cousin Balthasar (Belshazzar) Kagayama Hanzaemon (b. c. 1572, Takatsuki), and his four-year-old son Diego (b. c. 1615, Hiji) followed. The daimyo, or feudal lord, Hosokawa Tadaoki (1563–1646), had ordered their deaths.

On January 30, 1636, a mass execution of the Ogasawara family included Ogasawara Yosaburō (Ogasawara Gen'ya); his wife, Ogasawara Miya Luisa; and their nine children, all born in Kokura, whose birthdates are unknown. Along with the Ogasawara sons (Genpachi, Sasaemon, Sayuemon, Shiro, Goro, and Gonnosuke) and daughters (Mari, Kuri, Tsuchi), four servants of the Ogasawara family were also decapitated in the courtyard of a Buddhist temple. The family left behind a legacy of letters, a testament to their strong faith, from their forty-day imprisonment prior to their deaths.

TOYKO (EDO)

Often called the Great Martyrdom of Edo, a large group massacre occurred in Tokyo on December 1, 1623, and included Ioannes (John) Hara Mondo (b. Usui, Chiba) as part of a group of forty-seven secularists, along with three priests who were beatified in 1867, along with a group of 205 martyrs. Samurai Ioannes Hara Mondo was honored in this beatification, because he, too, burned alive that day.

HIROSHIMA

The three martyrs of Hiroshima were: Franciscus Tōyama Jintarō, samurai (b. c. 1600, Yamanashi; d. February 16, 1624), who was killed first; Matthias Shōbara Ichizaemon (Matias Shobara Tchizaemon) (b. c. 1587, Aki [now Hiroshima]; d. February 17, 1624); and Ioachim (Joachim) Kurōemon, catechist (b. c. 1559, Aki; March 8, 1624), who like Matthais was crucified.

UNZEN

A total of twenty-nine Christians from the Nagasaki Archdiocese drowned in the Shimabara River or were scalded to death in the sulfur springs of Unzen. Among them were several children who were horribly tortured. One of the models of constancy was Paulus (Paul) Uchibori Sakuemon (b. Fukae), whose three young sons were tortured before him. Balthasar Uchibori (b. Fukae), and his two younger brothers, Antonius (b. c. 1609, Fukae) and Ignatius (b. c. 1622, Fukae), had three fingers cut off on each hand. Five-year-old Ignatius held his bloody hands up and uttered no complaint. The three boys were then taken and drowned on February 21, 1627.

Still Paul Uchibori did not renounce his faith. After he had endured more torture, he and a group of martyrs were taken to the hot springs and repeatedly plunged into the water until they died. He died at Unzen on February 28, 1627. Guards stabbed some of the faithful and then poured sulfurous water over the wounds, hoping the pain would make them renounce their faith. The following stayed true to God and died for their beliefs on February 28, 1627:

Gaspar Kizaemon, b. Arie, and his wife, Maria Mine, b. Kuchinotsu; Gaspar Nagai Sōhan, b. Kuchinotsu; Ludovicus Shinzaburō, b. c. 1601, Kuchinotsu; Dionisius Saeki Zenka, b. Fukae, and his son, Ludovicus Saeki Kizō, b. Fukae; Damianus Ichiyata, b. Antoku Koba; Leo Nakajima Sōkan, b. Fukae, and his son, Paulus Nakajima, b. Fukae; Ioannes Kisaki Kyūhachi, b. Fukae; Ioannes Heisaku, b. Arie; Thomas Uzumi Shingoro, b. c. 1575, Kuchinotsu; Alexius Sugi Shōhachi, b. c. 1602, Amakusa; Thomas Kondō Hyōemon, b. c. 1564, Mogi; and Ioannes Araki Kanshichi, b. c. 1593, Koga.

The following were martyred at Unzen on May 17, 1627:

Ioachim Mine Sukedayū, whose wife had died earlier from torture, b. c. 1567, Kuchinotsu; Paulus Nishida Kyūhachi, b. c. 1553, Fukae; Maria, b. c. 1591, Fukae; Ioannes Matsutake Chōzaburō, b. c. 1589, Fukae; Bartholomeus Baba Han'emon, b. c. 1574, Fukae; Ludovicus Furue Sukeemon, b. c. 1590, Arie; Paulus Onizuka Magoemon, b. c. 1563, Hachirao; Ludovicus Hayashida Sōka, b. c. 1560, Arie; Magdalena Hayashida, b. c. 1559, Arie; Paulus Hayashida Mohyōe, b. c. 1592, Arie.

YONEZAWA

The following Christians from the Niigata Diocese were executed at Okusanbara on January 12, 1629:

Ludovicus Amagasu Iemon; Michaël Amagasu Tayemon, b. c. 1594, his wife, Dominica Amagasu, b. c. 1606, Wakamatsu, and their daughter Iusta (3), b. c. 1626; Vincentius Kurogane Ichibiyōe, b. c. 1603, his wife, Thecla Kurogane, b. c. 1611, Sado, and their daughter Lucia (1), b. c. 1628; Maria Itō and her children, Marina Itō Chōbo, Petrus Itō Yahyōe, and Matthias Itō Hikosuke; Timotheus Ōbasama Jirōbyōe and his wife, Lucia Ōbasama; Ioannes Gorōyōe, b. c. 1549; Ioachim Saburōbyōe, b. Wada; Ioannes Banzai Kazue, his wife, Aurea Banzai, and their child, Antonius Banzai Orusu, b. c. 1617; Paulus Sanjūrō, his wife, Rufina Banzai, and their children, Paulus (5), b. c. 1624, Martha (1), b. c. 1628; Simon Takahashi Seizaemon and her daughter, Thecla Takahashi, b. c. 1616; Paulus Nishihori Shikibu, b. c. 1598; Ludovicus Jin'emon, b. c. 1549, and his wife, Anna, b. c. 1549; Mancius Yoshino Han'emon and his wife, Iulia Yoshino; Antonius Anazawa Han'emon and his son, Paulus Anazawa Juzaburō; Andreas Yamamoto Shichiemon; Ignatius Iida Soemon; Ioannes Arie Kiemon and his son, Petrus Arie Jinzō; Alexius Satō Seisuke, b. Shindōgadai (now Shimo Hanazawa), husband of Lucia Satō, and their child, Elisabeth Satō (3), b. c. 1626; Paulus Satō Matagorō, b. Shindōgadai; N. Shichizaemon and his wife, Magdalena, and their daughters, Shichizaemon and Magdalena, born around 1624 and 1626 in Shindōgadai.

The following were executed on January 12, 1629, in Nukayama; many are spouses of martyrs listed above:

Lucia Iida, b. Nukayama; Crescentia Anazawa and sons Romanus Anazawa Matsujiro, b. c. 1615, Nukayama, and Michaël Anazawa Osamu, b. c. 1618; Maria Yamamoto and daughter Ursula, b. c. 1626, Nukayama; Magdalena Arie, b. Nukayama.

These sacrificed their lives on January 12, 1629, at Hanazawa:

Alexis Choemon, b. c. 1603, Hanazawa; Candidus "Bōzu," b. c. 1615, Hanazawa; Ignatius, b. c. 1628, Hanazawa.

Three martyrs died in 1633: Michaël Kusuriya, known as the "Good Samaritan of Nagasaki" (d. July 28, 1633, Nishizaka), was burned alive. Jesuit Nicolaus Fukunaga Keian (b. c. 1570, Nagawara; d. July 31, 1633, Nishizaka), was the first to die by pit hanging. Jesuit priest Iulianus Nakaura, who secretly gave help and administered the sacraments to believers (b. c. 1567, Nakaura), died October 21, 1633, in Nishizaka.

Three others also suffered pit hangings: Japanese Jesuit priest Didacus (Diego) Yūki Ryōsetsu, b. c. 1574–1575, Awa, Tokushima; d. February 25, 1636, Ōsaka; Augustinian priest Thomas Ochia (Kintsuba) Jihyōe (Thomas of Saint Augustine), b. c. 1602, Ōmura; d. November 6. 1637, Nishizaka; and Jesuit priest Petrus Kibe Kasui, b. c. 1587, Kibe; d. July 4, 1639, Edo. It is the latter's name under which this group of 188 martyrs is organized.

SEE ALSO Apostasy; Augustinians; Japan, Martyrs of; Japan, The Catholic Church in; Jesuits; Martyr.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

St. Alphonsus, Victories of the Martyrs, edited by Eugene Grimm (New York 1888), 401–421.

Benedict XVI, "Solemnity of Our Lord Jesus Christ, King of the Universe," (Angelus, November 23, 2008), available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/angelus/2008/documents/hf_ben-xvi_ang_20081123_en.html (accessed November 27, 2009).

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Beatificación de Pedro Kibe Kasui y 187 Compañeros Mártires: Homily of Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, November 24, 2008, available (in Spanish) from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20081124_beatif-giappone_sp.html (accessed November 27, 2009).

Carol Glatz, "Cardinal Beatifies Japanese Martyrs," The Catholic Herald, November 28, 2008, available from http://www.

catholicherald.co.uk/articles/a0000428.shtml (accessed November 27, 2009).

Marta Lago, "Nagasaki Martyrs to Draw Record Crowd," Zenit, December 12, 2007, available from http://www.zenit.org/article-21265?l=english (accessed November 27, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Beatificación de los Siervos de Dios Pedro Kibe Kasui y 187 Compañeros Mártires (1603–1639)," Vatican Web site, November 28, 2008, available (in Spanish) from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2008/ns_lit_doc_20081124_giappone_sp.html (accessed November 27, 2009).

"Petrus Kibe Kasui and 187 Companion Martyrs of Japan," The Hagiography Circle, available from http://newsaints.faithweb.com/martyrs/Japan03.htm (accessed November 27, 2009).

Laurie J. Edwards
Independent Scholar
Reidsville, N.C. (2010)

PETKOVIĆ, MARIA OF JESUS CRUCIFIED, BL.

Baptized Marija and also known as Maria; foundress of the Congregation of the Daughters of Mercy of the Third Order Regular of St. Francis; b. December 10, 1892, Korčula, an island in Blato, Croatia; d. July 9, 1966, Rome; beatified June 6, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Maria Petković was the sixth of eleven children born to Antun Petković-Kovac and Maria Marinovic. Her parents were wealthy and generous to the poor. Maria shared their concern for others. Her ministry included service with the Association of the Good Shepherd, a group that visited the sick and prepared children for FIRST COMMUNION. She discerned a religious vocation in 1906, and discussed her calling with Bishop Josip Marcelic, who became her spiritual advisor.

When Maria's father died in 1911, she helped care for her siblings and continued to educate other children. Maria started the Society of Catholic Mothers in 1915. Two years later, she became responsible for guiding members of the Third Order Franciscans. She also helped in the Servants of Charity soup kitchen.

Maria entered the Servants of Charity on March 25, 1919. In May, the superior died and some of the nuns returned to Italy. Maria was charged with the apostolate, and Bishop Marcelic directed her to follow the example of the crucified Jesus. Maria asked that the sisters follow the Rule of the Third Order Franciscans. By the winter of 1919, Maria had opened a childcare center, orphanage, and recovery center.

The following August, she wrote the constitution for the new order. The Congregation of the Daughters of Mercy was inaugurated on the October 4 feast of St. FRANCIS OF ASSISI, and the founder took the name Maria of the Crucified Jesus. Mother Maria served as superior general from 1920 through 1952. She opened forty-six communities, traveling through Croatia, Italy, and Latin America. The sisters ministered in hospitals, nursing homes, nursery schools, parishes, and seminaries.

While in Rome, Mother Maria became ill and was partially paralyzed three years before dying on July 9, 1966. Pope John Paul II issued the decree for BEATIFICATION after the miraculous rescue in 1988 of the crew from a sunken Peruvian submarine, the Pacocha. At Mother Maria's beatification at Harbour Square at Dubrovnik, the pope observed that she chose to consecrate herself to God and to "fulfill her aspiration to total devotion to the spiritual and material well-being of those most in need."

Feast: July 9.

SEE ALSO CROATIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; FRANCISCANS, THIRD ORDER REGULAR; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nenad N. Bach, "Croatia Prepares for Papal Visit," Croatian World Network, May 24, 2003, available from http://www.croatia.org/crown/articles/7638/1/S-Croatia-Prepares-for-Papal-Visit-JP-IIs-100th.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

"Documentary on Miracle of Pacocha Submarine Debuts in Peru," CNA: Catholic News Agency, June 5, 2007, available from http://m.catholicnewsagency.com/new.php?n=9547 (accessed November 5, 2009).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Sister Marija Propetoga Isusa Petković" (Homily, June 6, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030606_dubrovnik_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

PIANZOLA, FRANCESCO, BL.

Priest and founder of the Congregation of Oblate Priests of the Diocese of Vigevano and the Missionary Sisters of the Immaculate, Queen of Peace (Pianzoline), Mortara, Italy; b. Sartirana Lomellina, Italy, October 5, 1881; d. Mortara, Italy, June 4, 1943; beatified October 4, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Francesco Pianzola was born in a town of 1,800 inhabitants in the province of Pavia in northern Italy. A local priest, Don Carlo Moretti, recognized an unusual piety in the child and became his spiritual guide. Francesco entered the seminary and on March 16, 1907, was ordained at the Cathedral of Vigevano.

Fr. Francesco dedicated himself to bringing the GOSPEL to the local people. He conducted hundreds of local missions and religious seminars and focused attention on the youth, working women, factory and field workers, and rice weeders of the province. He encouraged other priests to take up his method of bringing the word of God out of the churches and to the people where they lived and worked. In 1908, with some fellow priests, Fr. Francesco organized the diocesan Congregation of Oblate Priests. On May 8, 1919, in Mortara, he founded the Institute of the Missionary Sisters of the Immaculate, Queen of Peace, known as the Pianzoline, to provide religious education to the area's boys and girls and to promote the social welfare of workers. The original members of the group were six young women who believed in the missionary work of Fr. Francesco and wanted to support the diocesan priest in ministering to those in both spiritual and temporal need. Today, the Pianzoline continue their work in Europe, Central and South America, and Africa.

Fr. Francesco was known as "the holy priest of the rice weeders"; in his work, he shared the hardships and frustrations of those he served. Prior to Fr. Francesco's elevation, during a pastoral visit to Vigevano and Pavia, Pope Benedict XVI observed that Fr. Francesco was "motivated by an ardent evangelical spirit" and "was able to respond to the forms of spiritual poverty of his time with a courageous missionary approach." At the Mass of BEATIFICATION in 2008, with more than six thousand people in attendance, Cardinal José Saraiva Martins said the new blessed dedicated himself "to love and to travel among his people, giving everything to everyone, wanting to possess nothing, content to live in communion with the Lord and to consider himself and call himself 'Don Niente.'"

Feast: June 4.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "Pastoral Visit to Vigevano and Pavia (Italy): Eucharistic Celebration" (Homily, April 21, 2007), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2007/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20070421_vigevano_en.html (accessed October 2, 2009).

Diocese of Vigevano, "Biografia" (of Blessed Francesco Pianzola), available from http://www.diocesivigevano.it/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=291&Itemid=180 (accessed October 2, 2009).

Diocese of Vigevano, "Beatification of Fr. Francesco Pianzola at the Cathedral of Vigevano: Homily of Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," October 4, 2008, available from http://www.diocesivigevano.it/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=304&Itemid=166 (accessed October 3, 2009).

Vittorio Morero, Francesco Pianzola: Per una Chiesa giovane (Turin, Italy 2007).

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York, N.Y. (2010)

PICCO, EUGENIA, BL.

Known as Anna Eugenia, also known as Maria Angela; professed sister of the Little Daughters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary; b. November 8, 1867, at the town of Crescenzago, district of Milan, Italy; d. September 7, 1921, at Parma, Italy; beatified October 7, 2001, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Anna Eugenia Picco was the daughter of Giuseppe Picco, a famous musician, and Adelaide Del Corno. Because Eugenia's parents were entertainers who toured constantly, her grandparents raised her. That changed when her mother returned home alone, leaving Eugenia to conclude that her father had died. Adelaide raised her daughter in what was described as an irreligious, morally corrupt environment. Eugenia found solace in praying daily at the Basilica of St. Ambrose.

Eugenia was twenty when she discerned a religious vocation. She discussed it with Ursuline Sisters in Milan. They asked Agostino Chieppi, a priest from Parma, to accept her in the congregation he founded, the Little Daughters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary. He agreed, and Eugenia made her final vows in 1894. Her ministry included service as novice mistress, archivist, general secretary, and member of the council. From 1911 until her death a decade later, she served as superior general. Within the congregation, Mother Eugenia was known for excellent management skills. She was also recognized for her devotion to the Eucharist and her CHARITY to the poor, especially children.

During WORLD WAR I (1914–1918), Mother Eugenia reached out to people traumatized by the devastation of the "Great War." She comforted war victims while suffering the effects of a degenerative bone disease. The condition, diagnosed when she was an adult, led to the amputation of her right leg in 1919. Mother Eugenia died on September 7, 1921, in Parma.

Pope John Paul II declared Father Chieppi VENERABLE on December 21, 1992. The pontiff declared Mother Eugenia venerable on December 20, 1999, and beatified her on October 7, 2001, at St. Peter's Square. The Holy Father remarked that Mother Eugenia "took upon herself the poverty of the people responding to the needs of the young and of needy families and assisting the victims of the war that in this period made Europe suffer." The Holy Father spoke again about Bl. Eugenia on October 8 in an address to pilgrims at St. Peter's Square. He observed that, "the experience of illness, especially in the last years of her life, purified her soul. She can now teach everyone how to face difficult situations with the help of grace."

Feast: September 7.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of 7 Servants of God (Homily, October 7, 2001)," Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2001/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20011007_beatification_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

John Paul II, "Address of John Paul II to the Pilgrims Who Had Come for the Beatification of Ignatius Maloyan, Nikolaus Gross, Alfonso Maria Fusco, Tommaso Maria Fusco, Émilie Tavernier Gamelin, Eugenia Picco, Maria Euthymia Üffing" (October 8, 2001), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/speeches/2001/october/documents/hf_jp-ii_spe_20011008_beatification_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

PIDAL Y CHICO DE GUZMÁN, MARÍA MARAVILLAS DE JESÚS BATTISTA, ST.

Baptized María Christina Luisa Ildefonsa Patricia Josefa, name also given as Mother Maravillas de Jesús; Discalced Carmelite and founder of the Association of Saint Teresa; b. November 4, 1891, Madrid, Spain; d. December 11, 1974, Carmel of Aldehuela, Madrid; beatified May 10, 1998; canonized May 4, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

María Pidal was born to devout parents. Her father, Luis Pidal y Mon, the marquis of Pidal, was the Spanish ambassador to the HOLY SEE, and her mother, Cristina Chico de Guzmán, was also a faithful Catholic. Despite María's youthful piety—she made a vow of CHASTITY at age five—she did not enter religious life until she was nearly thirty because her mother initially disapproved of her desire to become a NUN. In the meantime, María completed her schooling and cared for her ailing father. Six years after his death, drawn to the CARMELITES after reading the works of JOHN OF THE CROSS and TERESA OF ÁVILA, María entered the Escorial Carmel in Madrid and was professed in 1921.

After taking final vows in 1924, María, with three other sisters, founded the Carmel of Cerro de los Ángeles at the geographical center of Spain in 1926. Her purpose was not to break with the Discalced Carmelites, but rather to focus on living out the charisms of Teresa of Ávila and John of the Cross.

The new Carmel grew quickly, and in 1933 María established another CONVENT in Kottayam, India, which also expanded rapidly. Even when her community was displaced during the Spanish Civil War (1936–1939) and had to live in an apartment in Madrid, their numbers continued to increase. In September 1937, they opened a Carmel in the Batuecas near Salamanca. Following the war, in 1939, the sisters restored the Cerro de los Ángeles monastery. Later, the convents at El Escorial and Ávila were also rebuilt.

Mother María established other Carmels in Mancera de Abajo, Duruelo, Cabrera, Arenas de San Pedro, San Calixto, Aravaca, Talavera de la Reina, La Aldehuela, and Montemar-Torremolinos. She humbly served as prioress of every community she founded. To bind them together, Mother María obtained Vatican approval for the Association of Saint Teresa in 1972.

Despite her exterior life of joyful service, Mother María experienced complete aridity in PRAYER, a "dark night of the soul" that only her spiritual directors knew she underwent. Her ASCETICISM, extreme poverty, and numerous responsibilities weakened her health. She received last rites on the Feast of the IMMACULATE CONCEPTION (December 8) in 1974. In her last moments, she repeatedly murmured, "What happiness to die a Carmelite!"

During his HOMILY for her BEATIFICATION on May 10, 1998, Pope John Paul II observed that María Maravillas de Jesús used her fame "to attract many souls to God.... She lived with heroic faith, formed in response to an austere vocation, by putting God at the center of her life." She was recognized for heroic virtues on December 17, 1996, and had a miracle officially attributed to her INTERCESSION on December 18, 1997. She was canonized on May 4, 2003, and recognized for her "heroic faith" despite adversity.

Feast: December 11.

SEE ALSO CARMELITES; CARMELITES, DISCALCED; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SPAIN (THE CHURCH DURING THE SPANISH REPUBLIC AND THE CIVIL WAR: 1931–1939).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 12 (1998): 599.

Felipe Bacarreza, "Vida mística de la Madre Maravillas de Jesús, su alma," Humanitas 50, no. 13 (Fall 2008): 434–436.

John Paul II, "Homilia do Papa João Paulo II durante a cerimónia de beatificação de doze servos de deus" (Homily, May 10, 1998), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/1998/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_10051998_po.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

John Paul II, "Apostolic Journey of His Holiness John Paul II to Spain" (Homily, May 4, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030504_canonization-spain_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

"St. María Maravillas de Jesús Pidal y Chico de Guzmán (1891–1974)," L'Osservatore Romano 1792 (May 7, 2003): 5.

Maravillas of Jesus: The First Discalced Carmelite Saint Canonised in the 21st Century (Strasbourg, France 2004).

Si tu le laisses faire: Mère Maravillas de Jésus, Carmélite Déchaussée, 1891–1974 (Montsûrs, France 1993), French translation of Si tú le dejas: Vida de la Madre Maravillas de Jesus, Carmelita Descalza (Madrid 1976).

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Elizabeth-Jane P. McGuire
Doctoral Candidate, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

PILSUDSKI, JOZEF

Polish political and military leader; b. December 5, 1867, Zulow (near Vilnius), Russian Empire (now Lithuania); d. May 12, 1935, Warsaw, Poland; Aliases and Pseudonyms: Ziuk, Wiktor, Mieczyslaw, Pan Marian, Grandfather, Marshal, Commandant.

Jozef Pilsudski was born into a minor, impoverished noble family, in which his mother, Maria Pilsudska (née Billewicz) instilled within him an extraordinarily strong Polish patriotism. This manifested itself in clandestine activity ranging from organizing reading groups for Polish literature to contact with radical, anti-Tsarist revolutionary groups. Although Maria Pilsudska was a firm and faithful Catholic, Pilsudski was never a strong believer. By the time he joined the Polish Socialist Party (Polska Partia Socjalistyczna or PPS) in 1892, he had fallen completely away from the faith and married his first wife in the Evangelic-Augsburg Confessional Church in 1899. Pilsudski returned to the Catholic Church in 1916. However, his true devotion was to Poland.

Socialist Thought and Connections. Pilsudski lived the difficult life of an itinerant, underground agitator while in the PPS, moving throughout Europe and even briefly in the United States. He wrote voluminously for and edited several periodicals for the PPS. Pilsudski was familiar with the ideas of many activists of international socialism, but found them useful only if they served the cause of Polish independence, which generally meant effective attacks on the Tsarist government.

Due to ideological struggles within the PPS, Pilsudski turned his attention to developing a military arm of the party. He became an expert on the January Uprising (1863) and the Russo-Japanese War (1904–1905). Pilsudski also created the Riflemen's Association, which was the genesis of the Polish Legions. The Polish Legions fought under Austrian command against Russia during World War I. Pilsudski's military achievements made him a legend.

After the collapse of Russia in 1917, the interests of the Central Powers and the Polish legionnaires diverged sufficiently so that many legionnaires, including Pilsudski, refused to take an oath of loyalty to the Central Powers and were imprisoned. In November 1918, Pilsudski was released and arrived in Warsaw. His arrival brought with it the restoration of Polish independence. His status as national hero was permanently established when he defeated communist Russia in the war of 1919 to 1921.

Domestic Issues. Due to a lack of a clear system of political authority, Pilsudski, Ignacy PADEREWSKI, and Roman Dmowski (1864–1939) agreed to share power for the sake of Poland. Their uneasy relationship lasted until the Polish Parliament (the sejm) was formed, assumed power, and backed Pilsudski, who tried to institute a federal vision of Poland over that of the ethnic national vision of Dmowski. Whereas the ethnic national vision assumed that a natural unity existed between culture and politics, the federal vision assumed that different cultures could find unity within the same polity. The federal vision of Pilsudski was only partially realized, and interwar Poland can be characterized as chiefly Dmowskiite.

The borders of the Second Republic were formed by the Treaty of Versailles (1919), messy plebiscites, the seizure of Vilnius (1920), and the Treaty of Riga (1921); these aforementioned events allowed for the incorporation of minorities into the Polish state, but often in strained relations with ethnic Poles. Pilsudski assumed that the sejm would be sufficiently able to handle these issues as long as its members did not act out of ambition or avarice.

By 1923 he was bitterly disappointed and retired from politics convinced that the sejm was contributing to the insecurity of Poland. In May 1926, Pilsudski became so disgusted with the increasingly chaotic state of affairs that he seized power in a coup d'etat and ruled until his death in 1935. During his quasi-dictatorship, he did not manage domestic affairs directly, but set parameters of conduct for the sejm. He dominated military and foreign policy, as he had during the early years of the Second Republic.

Foreign Policy. Pilsudski considered Soviet Russia the more dangerous and immediate threat to Poland, and Germany a long term, but perhaps greater, threat. In regard to the latter, the establishment of the Franco-Polish Alliance was pivotal, but ultimately useless. In regard to the former, Pilsudski attempted to strengthen the Polish military and also to establish positive relationships and alliances with neighbors, especially the Baltic states. It should be noted that Prometheanism, "the goal of breaking up Soviet Russia into independent national states," as defined by Anna Cienciala and Titus Komarnicki in From Versailles to Locarno, ultimately had more the character of propaganda than substantive foreign policy. Security proved elusive and Poland never achieved adequate security.

The Vatican. Poland had good relations with the VATICAN, chiefly through the understanding that Pilsudski had with the nuncio, Achille Ratti, later Pope PIUS XI. The major point of contention between Poland and the Vatican was the existence of both Eastern Rite Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Churches in Poland. The Vatican wanted only the former and not the latter; the Orthodox desired the reverse. Pilsudski wanted an autocephalous Polish Orthodox Church to lure Orthodox Christians, many of whom were minorities, away from Moscow and toward Warsaw. This was established in 1925, the same year that the concordat was ratified between Poland and the Vatican.

Legacy. M.B. Biskupski notes in The History of Poland, "Consciously, Pilsudski had made himself the symbol of Poland restored, and his death automatically posed the question of whether Poland could endure without him." Those who followed him ruled poorly, trying to institutionalize a style of governance Pilsudski never codified. Pilsudski is interred with Polish kings at the Wawel in Kraków. His heart is interred with his mother in Vilnius. Only JOHN PAUL II rivals him in the esteem of his fellow Poles.

SEE ALSO COMMUNISM; EASTERN CHURCHES; ORTHODOX AND ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCHES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M.B. Biskupski, The History of Poland (Westport, Conn. 2000).

Anna M. Cienciala and Titus Komarnicki. From Versailles to Locarno: Keys to Polish Foreign Policy, 1919–1925 (Lawrence, Kan. 1984).

Norman Davies, White Eagle, Red Star: The Polish-Soviet War, 1919–1920 (London 1983).

Waclaw Jedrzejewicz, Pilsudski: A Life for Poland (New York 1982).

Jozef Pilsudski, The Memories of a Polish Revolutionary and Soldier, translated by D.R. Gillie (London 1931).

Jozef Pilsudski, Pisma Zbiorowe, collected works (Warsaw 1937–1938).

Joseph Rothschild, Pilsudski's Coup d'Etat (New York 1966).

Timothy Snyder, The Reconstruction of Nations: Poland, Ukraine, Lithuania, Belarus, 1569–1999 (New Haven, Conn. 2003).

Rev. Michael A. Gizik SJ
Instructor of History and Religion
Canisius High School, Buffalo, N.Y. (2010)

PIUS XII, POPE

Pontificate: March 2, 1939, to October 9, 1958; b. Eugenio Maria Giuseppe Giovanni Pacelli, Rome, March 2, 1876; d. October 9, 1958, Castle Gandolfo, Italy (near Rome); declared VENERABLE on December 19, 2009, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Eugenio Pacelli appeared destined for the PAPACY. His father and grandfather worked for the popes; his brother was a papal lawyer. After he was ordained in 1899, he studied canon law, attended the papal diplomatic school, entered the papal diplomatic service, and in 1917 was named nuncio to Bavaria, where he carried BENEDICT XV's peace note to the German emperor. He remained in Bavaria after WORLD WAR I, confronted Communists during the Red Bavarian Revolution, and in 1920 was appointed nuncio to the new German Republic, where he negotiated concordats with Bavaria and Prussia.

In 1929, PIUS XI (1922–1939) named Pacelli a cardinal and appointed him papal secretary of state. During the following decade he became the pope's chief adviser and factotum, carrying out the pontiff's policy of negotiating concordats, including the controversial Reichskonkordat with Nazi Germany in 1933. He traveled extensively and helped the pope in his confrontations with the totalitarian states and in dealing with violent anticlerical persecutions in Spain and Mexico. In 1937 he helped Pius XI edit Mit Brennender Sorge, the encyclical protesting German violations of the Reichskonkordat and denouncing Nazi racism and statism.

Pope Pius XII (1939–1958). Born Eugenio Maria Giuseppe Giovanni Pacelli, Pius XII is shown with his arms outstretched, on Oct. 15, 1943, during his inspection tour of the Italian capital after the August 13 American air raid in World War II. AP IMAGES

Political Pontificate. Pacelli was elected pope after a short conclave on March 2, 1939. Because of the international crises during his pontificate, Pope Pius XII became the most political pope of modern times. Immediately he had to face the outbreak of WORLD WAR II, and then, even before the war ended, he had to contend with the Cold War, as the Soviets moved into Eastern and Central Europe, subjecting the Church there to their domination.

Less confrontational toward the Italian and German dictators than his predecessor, Pius XII hoped to prevent the outbreak of World War II through diplomatic negotiation and offered the contending powers his services for mediation. When his initial mediation was unsuccessful, he served as a secret conduit and guarantor of peace offers from anti-Hitler Germans to the British government. These negotiations fell through, and Pius maintained strict neutrality thereafter, still offering to mediate the conflict even to the end of the war in 1945. In his Christmas messages and other statements, he condemned wartime violence but avoided specific condemnations of individual nations.

He tried unsuccessfully to prevent Italian entry into the war—and then wanted above all to prevent any destruction of the historical monuments and treasures of ROME. This task took on added urgency after the Germans occupied Rome from September 1943 to June 1944. During this vacuum of Italian political power, Romans viewed him as protector of the city and looked to him for leadership as he beseeched both Germans and Allies to spare Rome from destruction. He welcomed the liberation of Rome by the Allies, but he feared Communist infiltration into the partisan bands that attacked German occupiers in northern Italy. During the war, the HOLY SEE dispensed charity with its limited resources, aided refugees, and maintained files of prisoners of war to keep their families informed.

In 1944 his secretary of state, Luigi MAGLIONE, died. Pius did not replace him; he handled diplomatic matters himself for the rest of his pontificate. When the war ended, he took on the task of fighting Communist elements in the new Italian Republic; he threatened excommunication for Italians who voted Communist in the 1948 elections. He condemned the Soviet takeover of Eastern Europe and the Communist regimes' imprisoning bishops in Poland, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia. He forcefully protested the Soviet crushing of the Hungarian Revolution in 1956 and condemned membership in the Communist Party everywhere. He spent much of his time after the war drafting speeches and other writings and addressing the many groups visiting the Vatican. He died in October 1958, something of a Cold Warrior unto his last days.

Pius and the Holocaust: The Controversy. In his last years and shortly after he died, Pius received accolades from all people, including Jews, for his services to humanity during World War II, for being a moral beacon, and for helping victims of Nazi persecution. Then, five years after he died, the German playwright Rolf Hochhuth presented his play Der Stellvertreter (The Deputy), in which he portrayed the pope as a cold, calculating pontiff who refused to condemn the German takeover of Europe, who saw Nazi Germany as a bastion against Soviet Communist expansion into Eastern and Central Europe, and who was more interested in protecting Vatican investments than in protesting German atrocities, especially the HOLOCAUST (SHOAH). Hochhuth's charges were championed to a lesser degree by other writers, and this led to a response from defenders of Pius.

The Holy See published, from 1965 to 1981, a series of diplomatic documents to refute the criticism, demonstrating that the pope had not collaborated with the Germans and had in fact protested the persecutions, albeit in words couched in papal rhetoric. The controversy died down for a few years and then was reignited in 1999 when the English journalist John Cornwell published Hitler's Pope, arguing that Pius's tepid response to the Holocaust served to embolden the Germans in their persecution of the Jews.

The renewed controversy in the early twenty-first century was somewhat more scholarly, with new approaches to the documents, including those found in the opening of some of the VATICAN ARCHIVES. Despite the fact that Pius himself said both in public and in private on more than one occasion that he believed a strong specific protest would make things worse for Catholics in the occupied lands, as well as for Jews, critics of the pope have rejected this explanation and instead have centered their arguments on a number of charges:

1. That the pope favored Germany because he had lived there as nuncio and admired the Germans. Papal supporters argue that Pius liked German culture but abhorred the Nazi regime, as he demonstrated in numerous formal complaints while he was secretary of state.
2. That Pius did not want to create a crisis of conscience for the Germans, forcing them to choose between their state and their Church. Papal supporters say that Pius believed that such a choice would place German Catholics in an untenable situation, that most would have resisted the pope anyway, and that avoiding criticism kept the churches open in Germany.
3. That Pius did not want to criticize Nazi Germany because doing so would weaken it and thereby open the door to Soviet Communist expansion into Central Europe. Papal supporters argue that he rebuffed German attempts to get him to support the invasion of the Soviet Union in 1941, and he moderated Pius XI's strictures forbidding Catholics to support Communists by specifically allowing American Catholics to support the Soviets during the war.
4. That Pius feared the destruction of historic Rome and therefore did nothing to antagonize the Germans during the occupation, and further, did not protest the roundup of the Roman Jews in October 1943. Papal supporters say that the pope was equally determined to prevent Allied destruction of Rome, that he offered papal gold to meet German demands on the Jews, that he instructed his secretary of state to threaten the Germans with a strong protest (which had the same effect as an actual protest), and that he opened convents and monasteries to the Jews.
5. That the pope was not overly concerned with the destruction of the Jews because of centuries of official Church anti-Judaism. Papal supporters argue that he did not vociferously protest German atrocities against the Poles, an eminently Catholic people, either, because he believed that any protest would simply make matters worse for the persecuted.

6. That Pius hoped to mediate the conflict and therefore believed that his condemnation of the Germans would lessen his chances of doing so. His supporters point to numerous statements, which, while couched in papal rhetoric, still were understood by the Germans as condemning them.

In sum, the pope's critics argue that Pius was too timid and unwilling to use his prestige to condemn the Germans, while his supporters say that he preferred to use quiet diplomacy to pursue his aims, and in fact, saved many Jews by doing so. For those critics who, when told that a papal denunciation would have made things worse, ask what could have been worse than the total destruction of the Jews, defenders say that no one, not even the Allied leaders, believed that such a horrible atrocity was possible, that the Germans were bent on killing all the Jews. Moderate critics point out that while a protest probably would not have moved the Nazis to halt the persecutions, it might have encouraged those Catholics who were in a position to help individual Jews to do so. Finally, in many cases, both critics and defenders have confused the pope's two roles, as leader of the Church and as VICAR OF CHRIST. They have also failed to recognize that although Pius was the pope, there were many clergy throughout Europe, both bishops and priests, over whom he had little control, or even knowledge of their behavior, so that he was neither liable for blame nor worthy of praise for their actions.

While it is believed that opening of the Vatican Archives will shed more light on the controversy, few historians believe it will substantially change views. Furthermore, the controversy has taken on a life of its own that in many ways has more to do with current views of the Church and the clergy than with the Holocaust itself. Pius has become the symbol of an imperial papacy, an attractive target for anticlericals and the champion of conservative Catholics.

Papal Teaching. Pius was a popular pope during his lifetime, and he was the first pope of the media age. His writings were voluminous, including speeches, allocutions, apostolic exhortations, and letters, and he wrote forty-six encyclicals, many of which were, in the popular mind, invested with the authority of infallibility. His major encyclicals were Summi Pontificatus (1939), in which he addressed the problems of the age, particularly those which had led to World War II; Divino afflante Spiritu (1943), in which he encouraged biblical research based on the original texts; Mystici Corporis Christi (1943), advancing the doctrine of the Church as the mystical body of Christ; Humani generis (1950), in which he suggested that physical evolution might be possible but that God directly created each individual human soul (he also condemned the notion of polygenism, the idea that all human beings are not necessarily the descendants of one person, ADAM); and Mediator Dei (1947) which relaxed some liturgical regulations and encouraged lay participation in the Mass.

Pope Pius XII exercised the first use of papal infallibility since Pius IX enunciated the doctrine in the nineteenth century. In his apostolic constitution Munificentissimus Deus (November 1, 1950), he defined, EX CATHEDRA, the DOGMA of the ASSUMPTION OF MARY, that the mother of Christ was bodily assumed into heaven.

While Pius held only two consistories, he appointed enough non-Italian cardinals to break Italian domination of the College of Cardinals.

Pope Pius XII died in October 1958. Over the years the cause for his beatification was promoted, with success in May 2007, when he was cited for his "heroic virtue" by the Congregation for the Cause of the Saints.

Conclusion. Pope Pius XII was an intensely spiritual person, as his writings attest. However, his long career in the papal curia and diplomatic service made him appear to be the quintessential papal bureaucrat. Although trained in diplomacy, he ascended the papacy at a time when Vatican diplomacy could hold no sway against the Nazi and Soviet dictatorships. Faced with the terrible choice between being the leader of the Church, working to maintain freedom for Catholics to practice the Faith, or exercising his prophetic role as the Vicar of Christ, denouncing injustice regardless of the consequences, he chose the first role, believing that he could do little anyway for all the unfortunates—Catholics as well as Jews—caught up in the Nazi and Soviet terrors.

Pius, while inwardly shy, projected an ethereal, remote, otherworldly image and was universally held to be the paragon of what a pope should be. He was everywhere praised, and during his pontificate was probably the most popular person in the Western world. That image suffered in comparison to the attractiveness of his successor, Pope JOHN XXIII, and by the great changes in society, technology, politics, and religious practices in the decades after his death. Pius was the last of the imperial popes, and historical opinions of his pontificate are as conflicted as the great crises he lived through and tried to influence.

He was declared venerable by Pope Benedict XVI on December 19, 2009. This declaration signifies that his cause for canonization has been accepted and that Pius XII practiced all the virtues to a heroic degree.

SEE ALSO COLD WAR AND THE PAPACY; HITLER, ADOLF; HUMANI GENERIS; HUMANI GENERIS UNITAS; JEWISH-CATHOLIC RELATIONS (PUBLIC); JEWISH-CATHOLIC RELATIONS (THEOLOGICAL DIMENSIONS OF); JEWS, POST-BIBLICAL HISTORY OF THE; MUSSOLINI, BENITO; UNITED STATES RELATIONS WITH THE PAPACY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

There is no objective biography of Pope Pius XII. Most of the works written about him have centered on the controversy of the Holocaust. His encyclicals can be found in Acta Apostolicae Sedis (1939–1958) and on the Internet from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/pius_xii/encyclicals/ (accessed March 3, 2008).

There is a handy compilation of his addresses in Vincent A. Yzermans, ed., The Major Addresses of Pope Pius XII, 2 vols. (St. Paul 1961).

On the Holocaust and the Cold War, the following are useful:

Pierre Blet, Pius XII and the Second World War, According to the Archives of the Vatican, translated by Lawrence J. Johnson (New York 1999).

Pierre Blet, Robert Graham, Angelo Martini, and Burkhart Schneider, eds. Actes et documents du Saint Siège relatifs à la Seconde Guerre mondiale, 11 vols. (Vatican City 1965–1981).

Joseph Bottum and David G. Dalin, eds. The Pius War: Responses to the Critics of Pius XII (Lanham, Md. 2004).

Owen Chadwick, The Christian Church in the Cold War (London 1993).

John S. Conway, "The Vatican, Germany and the Holocaust," in Papal Diplomacy in the Modern Age, edited by Peter C. Kent and John F. Pollard (Westport, Conn. 1994), 105–120.

Frank J. Coppa, The Papacy, the Jews and the Holocaust (Washington, D.C. 2006).

John Cornwell, Hitler's Pope: The Secret History of Pius XII (New York 1999).

Carlo Falconi, The Silence of Pius XII, translated by Bernard Wall (Boston 1970).

Rolf Hochhuth, Der Stellvertreter (The Deputy), translated by Richard and Clara Winston (New York 1964).

Peter C. Kent, The Lonely Cold War of Pope Pius XII: The Roman Catholic Church and the Division of Europe, 1943–1950 (Montreal 2002).

Giovanni Miccoli, I dilemmi e i silenzi di Pio XII (Milan 2000).

Ronald J. Rychlak, Hitler, the War, and the Pope (Columbus, Miss. 2000).

José M. Sánchez, Pius XII and the Holocaust: Understanding the Controversy (Washington, D.C. 2002).

José M. Sánchez
Professor Emeritus of History
Saint Louis University, St. Louis, Missouri (2010)

POLANYI, MICHAEL

Physical chemist and philosopher; b. Budapest, Hungary, March 11, 1891; d. Oxford, England, February 22, 1976.

Michael Polanyi, whose given name was Mihály Lazar Pollacsek, was born into a nonobservant Jewish family that had come to Budapest from Vienna. Polanyi's father died in 1905, so his mother, Cecile Wohl, was a major influence during Polanyi's formative years. She led extended discussions of socialism, art, and literature in the household, and Polanyi's later willingness to move from science to social analysis, economics, PHILOSOPHY, THEOLOGY, and aesthetics may have been influenced by his exposure to and participation in these wide-ranging discussions.

Polanyi's older brother, Karl, advocated a kind of Christian socialism. Karl would go on to write The Great Transformation: The Political and Economic Origins of Our Time (1944). Michael, meanwhile, perhaps goaded by debating with his brother, but also guided by his experience as a successful scientist, became a resolute defender of individual liberties in thought, economics, social organization, and theology (cf. Logic of Liberty: Reflections and Rejoinders, 1951).

Scientific Achievements. While completing a degree in medicine at the University of Budapest in 1913, Polanyi's work on biochemistry led him to propose a novel theory of the forces at work in adsorption (Scott and Moleski 2005, p. 25). Polanyi's work was interrupted when he was drafted to serve as a medical doctor in the Austro-Hungarian army, but various sick leaves and light-duty assignments let him pursue a Ph.D. in physical chemistry, which he completed in 1919.

Over the next twenty-five years, Polanyi made noteworthy contributions in X-ray crystallography, theories of crystal strength, the adsorption of gases, and reaction kinetics. This last area, which is the study of how energy is exchanged and released in chemical reactions, was the topic that most intrigued Polanyi. His work in this field culminated in a groundbreaking work, Atomic Reactions (1932), which gave one of the first accounts of how molecules are broken up by energetic collisions, and of how new molecules can then be formed from the materials that result from these collisions. Polanyi was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1944, and he received many other honors for his work, both in science and philosophy.

Epistemology of Personal Knowledge. The experience of two world wars, unemployment, inflation, economic depression, and the rise of totalitarian forms of socialism caused Polanyi to wonder why Europe had taken such a self-destructive turn. He decided that a false philosophy of science had fed the fires that were consuming the foundations of the Western tradition. "I start by rejecting the ideal of scientific detachment," he wrote in 1958, adding that he wanted "to establish an alternative ideal of knowledge, quite generally" (Polanyi 1958, p. vii).

Based on his experience of making scientific discoveries, Polanyi asserted that "all knowledge is ... tacit or is rooted in tacit knowing" (Polanyi 1974, p. 61). He believed that the structures of formal reasoning, articulation, objectivity, and proof depend upon informal reasoning, personal perceptions, subjective commitments, and intuitive evaluation. Because he showed that science itself depends upon personal knowledge, he expected that his fiduciary philosophy would spur a revival of religious awareness: "Once religious faith is released from pressure by an absurd vision of the universe ... there will open up instead a meaningful world which could resound to religion" (Polanyi 1966, p. 92).

Theological Concerns. Polanyi was baptized as a Catholic in 1919, but he was married before a justice of the peace and never took Communion. Nevertheless, he saw himself as a Christian, advocated that his fellow Jews should adopt the Christian framework, and used the Protestant principle of free inquiry and independent judgment as a model of scientific freedom of thought.

Opinions are sharply divided about the meaning and value of Polanyi's concept of God, and an entire issue of Zygon: Journal of Religion and Science (vol. 17, 1982) was devoted to exploring this vexing question. In Theology in a Polanyian Universe: The Theology of Thomas Torrance (1994), Colin Weightman argued that Thomas Torrance, Richard Gelwick, and other theologians have glossed over Polanyi's ontological ATHEISM. Many Catholic theologians have found Polanyi's philosophy of personal knowledge and tacit knowing very enriching for theological EPISTEMOLOGY and apologetics. Most notable among those who have advocated this view is Avery Dulles in The Craft of Theology: From Symbol to System (1992).

SEE ALSO APOLOGETICS, HISTORY OF; CONSCIOUSNESS: METHODOLOGY (PHILOSOPHY); METHODOLOGY (THEOLOGY); ONTOLOGISM; PHILOSOPHY AND SCIENCE; SCIENCES, CLASSIFICATION OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WORKS BY MICHAEL POLANYI

The Regenstein Library, University of Chicago, has the largest collection of Polanyi's extant correspondence, notes, and related materials in its Michael Polanyi Papers collection, as well as 150 taped interviews about Polanyi.

Science, Faith and Society (Chicago 1946).

The Logic of Liberty: Reflections and Rejoinders (London 1951).

Personal Knowledge: Towards a Post-Critical Philosophy (Chicago 1958).

The Study of Man (Chicago 1959).

The Tacit Dimension (Garden City, N.Y. 1966).

Knowing and Being, edited by Marjorie Grene (Chicago 1969).

Meaning, with Harry Prosch (Chicago 1975).

Society, Economics and Philosophy: Selected Papers, edited by R. T. Allen (New Brunswick, N.J. 1997).

WORKS ABOUT MICHAEL POLANYI

Tradition and Discovery: The Polanyi Society Periodical, published in St. Joseph, Missouri, since 1984, is dedicated to the thought and legacy of Michael Polanyi. Information and online editions of the journal, as well as information about Polanyi himself, are available from the Polanyi Society at http://www.missouriwestern.edu/orgs/polanyi/ (accessed March 3, 2008).

John V. Apczynski, Doers of the Word: Toward a Foundational Theology Based on the Thought of Michael Polanyi (Missoula, Mont. 1977).

Richard Gelwick, The Way of Discovery: An Introduction to the Thought of Michael Polanyi (New York 1977).

Robin Hodgkin and Eugene Wigner, "Michael Polanyi: 1891–1976," Biographical Memoirs of Fellows of the Royal Society 23 (1977): 421–422.

Esther Lightcap Meek, Longing to Know: The Philosophy of Knowledge for Ordinary People (Grand Rapids, Mich. 2003).

Maben Walter Poirier, A Classified and Partially Annotated Bibliography of Michael Polanyi, the Anglo-Hungarian Philosopher of Science (Toronto 2002).

Harry Prosch, Michael Polanyi: A Critical Exposition (Albany, N.Y. 1996).

Andy F. Sanders, Michael Polanyi's Post-Critical Epistemology: A Reconstruction of Some Aspects of "Tacit Knowing" (Amsterdam 1988).

Drusilla Scott, Everyman Revived: The Common Sense of Michael Polanyi, with introductions by Lesslie Newbigin and Thomas Torrance (Grand Rapids, Mich. 1995).

William T. Scott and Martin X. Moleski, Michael Polanyi: Scientist and Philosopher (New York 2005).

Colin Weightman, Theology in a Polanyian Universe: The Theology of Thomas Torrance (New York 1994).

Rev. Martin X. Moleski SJ
Professor, Department of Religious Studies and Theology
Canisius College, Buffalo, New York (2010)

POLONI, VINCENZA MARIA, BL.

Baptized Francesca Maria Luigia; cofounder of the Institute of the Sisters of Mercy of Verona; b. January 26, 1802, Verona, Italy; d. November 11, 1855, Verona; beatified September 21, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Luigia was the youngest of twelve children born to Gaetano and Margherita Biadego. Religion and concern about the vulnerable were important values to her family. Luigia helped care for the children in her family, worked in her father's shop, and helped her brother manage a farm.

Luigia discerned her vocation after meeting Fr. Charles Steeb, a German priest who came to Verona to study and stayed to minister to the poor. She cared for the sick and dying at Fr. Steeb's Pio Shelter. Luigia's service also included ministering unconditionally during an 1836 cholera outbreak.

When Fr. Steeb asked Luigia to cofound a community of women religious, she accepted. The priest drew inspiration from St. Vincent de Paul as he wrote rules for the community dedicated to serving the sick and elderly. Luigia and Fr. Steeb started the Institute of Sisters of Mercy of Verona on November 2, 1840. She and three women moved into two rooms at the Pio Shelter and lived as a religious community.

As more women joined them, the community bought a house. On September 10, 1848, Luigia and twelve women took vows of POVERTY, CHASTITY, and OBEDIENCE. Luigia took the name Vincenza Maria and headed the community for the next fifteen years. Mother Vincenza Maria's ministry included care of the elderly, sick, and orphans. She advised the sisters to see Jesus in everyone they met, and told them, "the poor are our masters."

Mother Vincenza Maria was diagnosed with cancer and lived for several years afterward. During the last ten days of her life, Fr. Steeb administered the Sacrament of the Sick to her. Mother Vincenza Maria died on November 11, 1855, in Verona. At that time, the community consisted of forty-eight sisters. In the twenty-first century, more than one thousand Sisters of Mercy of Verona minister in Europe, Africa, and Latin America.

Pope PAUL VI beatified Fr. Steeb on July 6, 1975, and Pope Benedict XVI beatified Mother Vincenza Maria on September 21, 2008. Archbishop Angelo Amato represented the pope at the liturgy at the Verona Sports Palace. The archbishop observed that Bl. Vincenza Maria displayed charity and God's mercy when ministering to others.

Feast: November 11.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SISTERS OF MERCY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Elena Cardinali, "Madre Poloni Modello Della Carità," L'Arena, September 22, 2008, available from http://www.istsorellemisericordia.it/cm/ambienti/sorelle_misericordia/unica/allegati/minisiti/2008923126350.arena_22settembre2008.pdf (accessed November 5, 2009).

"Vincenza Maria Poloni beata il 21 settembre 2008," available from http://www.vincenzapoloni.it (accessed November 5, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

POPE JOHN PAUL II CULTURAL CENTER

The cultural center that takes its name and inspiration from Pope JOHN PAUL II is located in Washington, D.C., adjacent to the Basilica of the NATIONAL SHRINE OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION and The CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA. The center was conceived in the mid-1980s by Bishop Adam MAIDA of Green Bay, Wisconsin (now Cardinal Maida, archbishop of Detroit). The inspiration for the center came from Pope John Paul's call for renewed evangelization in the new millennium. After several iterations, the building design of architect Leo Daly was approved, and ground was broken in 1997.

The Pope John Paul II Cultural Center opened on March 21, 2001. In attendance were President George W. Bush, members of the College of Cardinals, bishops from across the country, and donors and friends from around the world. Facilities include a library, auditorium, and conference rooms. The center is overseen by a board of directors, chaired by Adam Cardinal Maida and comprised of members of the hierarchy and laity from across the United States. In addition, there are over 200 active "Trustees" who advise the center.

Among the main features of the John Paul II Cultural Center are a contemplative chapel, state-of-the-art exhibits, and interactive media activities designed to provide visitors an experience that inspires faith, promotes religious values, and fosters respect for diverse cultural backgrounds. The five main galleries explore various facets of the Catholic faith, including: (1) the history of the Church and the papacy; (2) how faith is celebrated around the world; (3) the relationship between the human and the physical world; (4) ways that God's presence is expressed in art; and (5) world cultures and their relationship to the Catholic Church. The permanent collection highlights Marian themes and treasures spanning the life of John Paul II.

Another integral part of the center is its academic component, the Intercultural Forum for Studies in Faith and Culture, which has taken center stage since the death of John Paul II. The board of directors believes that an exploration of the faith traditions and the study of the late Holy Father's own writings will provide living witness to the greatness of the late pope. Both permanent and visiting scholars can therefore conduct research and study themes related to the impact of the PAPACY on world cultures and the promotion of values relating to the dignity of the human person. A particular focus has been Catholic-Muslim dialogue. The Intercultural Forum also hosts lectures throughout the year.

SEE ALSO FROM ROME TO CAIRO AND BEIJING: JOHN PAUL II ON FAMILY AND HUMAN RIGHTS; JOHN PAUL II AND INTERRELIGIOUS DIALOGUE; JOHN PAUL II INSTITUTE ON MARRIAGE AND FAMILY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Pope John Paul II Cultural Center Web site, available from http://www.jp2cc.org (accessed March 3, 2008).

G. Michael Bugarin
Director
Pope John Paul II Cultural Center

Hugh M. Dempsey
Deputy Director
Pope John Paul II Cultural Center (2010)

PORTILLO, ALVARO DEL

Bishop, prelate of personal prelature; b. Madrid, March 11, 1914; d. Rome, March 23, 1994.

Alvaro del Portillo held doctorates in civil engineering, history, and CANON LAW. In 1935 he joined OPUS DEI, a predominantly lay organization founded by St. José María ESCRIVÁ for the spiritual, ascetical, and doctrinal formation of persons in the world. As a close associate and collaborator of Escrivá, del Portillo remained with him during much of the Spanish civil war (1936–1939).

After the civil war, del Portillo worked with Escrivá to rebuild Opus Dei in Spain and foster its spread elsewhere. As a layman, he traveled to Rome in 1943 on the founder's behalf in order to introduce the new organization to Pope PIUS XII and curial officials and to prepare for the establishment there of its international headquarters. On June 25, 1944, del Portillo became one of the first three members of Opus Dei to be ordained as a priest.

Del Portillo was secretary general of Opus Dei from 1940 to 1947 and again from 1956 to 1975. From 1947 to 1950 he was counselor (regional director) of Opus Dei in Italy, and from 1947 to 1956 also served as its procurator general. He was first rector of the Roman College of the Holy Cross, a position he held from 1948 to 1953. He often accompanied Escrivá on trips to prepare for or consolidate the apostolic work of Opus Dei in Europe and, between 1970 and 1975, in Latin America.

In the preparatory phase for the Second Vatican Council, del Portillo was president of the preparatory commission for the laity and was among the first 100 periti (Theological Advisors) to be named. During Vatican II he served as secretary for the Commission on Clerical Discipline and the Commission of the Christian People.

Beginning in the 1950s, successive popes—Pius XII, JOHN XXIII, PAUL VI, and JOHN PAUL II—named del Portillo a consultor to various dicasteries and other bodies of the HOLY SEE. Among these were the Congregation for Religious, the Commission for the Revision of the Code of Canon Law, the Congregation for the DOCTRINE OF THE FAITH, the Congregation for the Clergy.

Personal Prelature. Following Escrivá's death in Rome on June 26, 1975, a general congress of Opus Dei on Sept. 15, 1975 unanimously elected del Portillo to head the association of the faithful as its founder's first successor.

During the next 19 years, Opus Dei grew from approximately 60,000 members to approximately 77,000 while beginning apostolic activities in 21 new countries in Latin America, Africa, Europe, Oceania, and Asia. In the United States, where it was introduced in 1949, the number of cities with centers of Opus Dei rose from eight to seventeen, and apostolic activities were begun in several other places.

Another major initiative of Opus Dei during these years was the establishment in 1984 of the Roman Atheneum of the Holy Cross, with faculties in theology, canon law, and philosophy.

By the Apostolic Constitution Ut sit (Nov. 28, 1982) Pope John Paul II created the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei, the first personal prelature of the Church, and named del Portillo its first prelate. Pope John Paul II ordained del Portillo titular bishop of Vita on Jan. 6,1991. Finally, in 1992, a cherished goal of del Portillo's was realized when, on May 17th, Pope John Paul II beatified Escrivá. On October 6, 2002, John Paul II canonized Escrivá.

In 1994, del Portillo suffered a heart attack and died in the early morning of March 23.

SEE ALSO SPAIN (THE CHURCH DURING THE SPANISH REPUBLIC AND THE CIVIL WAR: 1931–1939).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Peter Berglar, Opus Dei: Life and Work of Its Founder Josemaria Escrivá (Princeton 1994).

John F. Coverdale, Uncommon Faith: The Early Years of Opus Dei, 1928–1943 (New York, 2002).

Alvaro del Portillo, Faithful and Laity in the Church (Shannon, Ireland 1972); On Priesthood (New Rochelle, NY 1974); Meeting the Press: Two More Interviews on Opus Dei (New Rochelle, NY 1984); Intervista sul Fondatore dell'Opus Dei, a Cura di Cesare Cavalleri (Milan 1992).

John Paul II, Ut Sit (Apostolic Constitution November 28, 1982), Opus Dei Web site, available from http://www.opusdei.us/art.php?p=218.

Dominique Le Tourneau, What Is Opus Dei? (Dublin 1987).

Opus Dei Official Web site, available from http://www.opusdei.us/ (accessed October 23, 2009).

Russell Shaw
Freelance Writer
Washington, D.C.

EDS (2010)

POVEDA CASTROVERDE, PEDRO, ST.

Priest, MARTYR, scholar, educator, founder of the TERESIAN INSTITUTE, Carmelite tertiary; b. December 3, 1874, Linares, Spain; d. July 28, 1936, Madrid, Spain; beatified October 10, 1993; canonized May 4, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Although from youth Pedro Poveda Castroverde desired to become a priest, his family experienced financial difficulties, and after having begun his studies, he lacked the means to continue them at the diocesan seminary at Jaén. Fortunately, he was offered a scholarship by the bishop of Guadix to attend his seminary in southern Spain. Following ordination in 1897, Fr. Poveda taught in that seminary. In 1900 he earned his licentiate in THEOLOGY at Seville and then worked in Guadix. In 1906 he was appointed canon of the Basilica of Covadonga in Asturias. Later, he returned to his first seminary at Jaén to teach theology, among other duties.

Throughout his adult life, Poveda's primary apostolate was education. He built an elementary school and started workshops for the cave dwellers of Guadix. In 1911 he founded St. Teresa of Avila Academy as a residence for students, which became the basis for the Teresian Institute, an organization that was dedicated to the development of teachers. The institute received diocesan and civil approval in Jaén and then VATICAN approbation in 1924. Additionally, Poveda initiated pedagogical centers, opened the first Spanish university residence for women in Madrid (1914), and served as the spiritual director of Los Operarios Catechetical Center. He also continued to take an active role in teacher formation. He published articles and pamphlets and founded several periodicals to advance pedagogy in Spain.

After moving to Madrid in 1921, Poveda was appointed chaplain to the Royal Palace and sat on the Central Board Against Illiteracy. He continued to guide the Teresian Institute as it spread to Chile and Italy (1934), until he was killed at the beginning of the Spanish Civil War (1936–1939). When martyred for the Catholic faith, he identified himself to his persecutors by stating simply, "I am a priest of Christ."

Pope John Paul II, upon beatifying Poveda, noted that "his apostolic desires focused on promoting the evangelizing presence of Christians in the world, mainly in the field of teaching and culture." The miracle necessary for his canonization was approved by the Congregation for the Causes of Saints on January 22, 2003. On May 26, 1994, Antoni (Antonio) Llabrés Cerdá was born after a difficult labor with a fever and insufficient oxygen. He was soon diagnosed with meningitis and sepsis from beta-hemolytic streptococci. The INTERCESSION of Poveda having been sought, the boy's health improved unexpectedly on May 29, leading to a full recovery. Such a complete and rapid recovery was determined to be miraculous.

Poveda was canonized by John Paul II in Madrid during a Mass celebrated at the Plaza de Cólon, which the Spanish royal family attended. In his HOMILY following the canonization, the pope stressed Poveda's work in education, particularly among the poor, and his efforts to inculcate Christianity in all aspects of the professional lives of Christians, so they might contribute to a more just world. The pope noted that Poveda life's culminated in "the crown of martyrdom."

Feast: July 28.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SPAIN (THE CHURCH DURING THE SPANISH REPUBLIC AND THE CIVIL WAR: 1931–1939).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 96 (2004): 185–187.

Pilar Alastrué, Inquietud y conquista (Madrid 1976).

"Biography of the New Saints Canonized in Spain on 4 May," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (May 7–19, 2003): 4.

"Crónica de viaje apostólico," L'Osservatore Romano, Spanish edition (May 9–19, 2003): 10–11.

Dolores Gómez Molleda, La escuela, problema social: En el centenario de Poveda (Madrid 1974).

Dolores Gómez Molleda, Pedro Poveda et son temps (Paris 1974).

Dolores Gómez Molleda, Pedro Poveda: Interior Man, translated by M.T. Cuervo and J.M. Murray (New York 1975).

John Paul II, "Apostolic Journey of His Holiness John Paul II to Spain" (Homily, May 4, 2003), Vatican Web site, available at http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030504_canonization-spain_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

John Paul II, "Homilía durante la solemne misa de canonización de cinco beatos, domingo 4 de mayo: Testigos de la Resurreción," L'Osservatore Romano, Spanish edition (May 9–19, 2003): 9.

Pilar Linares Pérez, Pedro Poveda, 1874–1936: Pedagogo y humanista (Ceuta, Spain 1996).

Marisa Rodríguez Abancéns, Pedro Poveda: Gentle Challenge (Dublin 2003).

Agustín Serrano de Haro, Una figura del pensamiento español: Don Pedro Poveda Castroverde: Diseño biográfico (Madrid 1974).

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Albert Edward Doskey
Doctoral Student in Historical Theology
The Catholic University of America (2010)

PRAETER INTENTIONEM

Praeter intentionem is the Latin term meaning beside or beyond the intention. It is an often central concept in Catholic moral PHILOSOPHY and THEOLOGY. The Catholic tradition recognizes the sources of moral acts to include the object chosen, the end or intention in view, and the circumstances of the ACT. Knowing what praeter intentionem is can help to determine what intention the moral AGENT has in view, and thereby the true scope of the agent's responsibility. The concept of praeter intentionem is especially relevant to moral problems of complicity, SCANDAL, and justifiable killing. It is also a concept required by double-effect reasoning.

ARISTOTLE takes the idea of praeter intentionem to be what is accidental to an act (Physics 196b 25). This term refers to something that pertains to an act but is not of its essential or substantial nature. Of effects outside of one's intention, some are foreseen and others are unforeseen. Aristotle observes that unforeseen effects of one's acts, perhaps because of CHANCE, are an undeniable part of moral life. Barring negligence, one is not responsible for the unforeseen, as one was ignorant of it. And one's responsibility for foreseen effects is morally different from the responsibility that one incurs for what one intends.

St. THOMAS AQUINAS writes of what is praeter intentionem of an act; he explains that one may foresee killing a human being in self-defense without intending to kill that person. He regards what is praeter intentionem as willed indirectly. Aquinas writes that "there is nothing to prevent one act from having two effects, of which only one is intended by the agent and the other is outside of his intention" (Summa theologiae 2a-2ae, q. 64, a. 7). In this case, one may act in self-defense, intending to save one's life, while foreseeing but not intending that the aggressor die (for one can merely foresee and not intend certain effects of one's acts). Although some secular and consequentialist moral philosophers maintain that one must intend all foreseen effects of one's acts, this position is unwarranted, as another example shows.

Joseph Mangan, S.J., recalls in "An Historical Analysis of the Principle of Double Effect" (March 1949), the story of Eleazar in a battle in 1 Maccabees 6. To topple the enemy king, who was riding on an elephant, Eleazar saw that his only success lay in stabbing the underbelly of the beast. Because he would be under the beast, Eleazar foresaw that his own death would follow, but he did not thereby intend suicide. It is most reasonable to believe that one may intend a good act, such as defeating an enemy king, while foreseeing the undesired effect of losing one's own life in so doing.

Catholic teaching also uses double-effect reasoning to explain the moral difference between EUTHANASIA and terminal sedation. The Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith's Declaration on Euthanasia (1980) recalls Pope PIUS XII's teaching that pain suppression by narcotics is permitted, even if one foresees that the use of narcotics will shorten life, provided this does not prevent the carrying out of other religious and moral duties. The document observes, "In this case, of course, death is in no way intended or sought, even if the risk of it is reasonably taken; the intention is simply to relieve pain effectively..." (Declaration on Euthanasia III). This terminal sedation, unlike euthanasia, foresees but does not intend death. Euthanasia is prohibited because it intrinsically includes an intention to alleviate pain only by killing the patient.

Aquinas maintains that one may have mitigated or even no responsibility for the effects that are outside of one's intention. In the moral analysis of an action, the end of the act, regardless of one's intentions, tells one the SPECIES, or kind, of act with which one is dealing. One intends an end through seeking its object, the SUBSTANCE of the act. Aquinas holds that "intention" is said of the end and that "choice" is said of the means to the end of an act (Summa theologiae 1a, q. 19, a. 9 ad 1). But intention thus governs both the means and the end of an act. The means can be seen as a proximate end relative to a remote end, and so the concept of praeter intentionem may be relevant to the analysis of that action's end. The means cannot be said to be praeter in- tentionem, for one typically wills the means and end by one act. No EVIL means can be justified by a GOOD end.

The concept of praeter intentionem does not allow one to excuse oneself of responsibility for a sinful act on the grounds that one did not directly intend evil. Since evil is undesirable in itself, an evil act's inordinateness is always praeter intentionem of the sinner. Evil is therefore intended only to avoid another evil, or to obtain another good. The same is true of the inordinateness of an act and the fact that an act departs from right reason. So too, one does not intend the PUNISHMENT that is due for a sin. Thus, although the evil effects of a sin are beside the sinner's intention qua evil, these effects necessarily fall within the intention of the sinner by virtue of being essential to the nature of the act that he chooses.

Aside from the intention of the moral agent, the Catholic philosophical tradition has recognized that acts themselves may have intentions. That is, acts tend by their nature to certain effects. Some acts (e.g., FORNICATION, nuclear bombing) cannot be made good by any intention on the part of an agent. If any good comes from such acts, it is beside the intention of the act. These acts are intrinsically evil and bring harm to people regardless of an agent's intentions. Just as in the physical order man cannot breathe unaided under water, in the moral order sinful acts by their nature cannot but destroy man's spiritual, if not physical, BEING.

However, what is done through IGNORANCE or on account of force may be inculpably beside the intention of the agent. Also, in an exclusionary role, praeter intentionem explains how an act that is materially unjust may not be formally an act of injustice. Thus one may say something false, thinking it to be true. One would not be guilty of a lie, since the falseness is beside the speaker's intention.

What classifies acts in the moral order is not what is praeter intentionem, but what is within their intention. A clear concept of praeter intentionem requires one to claim all that is essential and intended in one's acts and be free of responsibility for what is not.

SEE ALSO ABORTION; CIRCUMSTANCES, MORAL; DOUBLE EFFECT, PRINCIPLE OF; END; FINIS OPERANTIS; FINIS OPERIS; INTENTION, PURITY OF; INTENTIONALITY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Joseph M. Boyle Jr., "Praeter Intentionem in Aquinas," The Thomist 42, no. 4 (1978): 649–665.

T.A. Cavanaugh, Double-Effect Reasoning: Doing Good and Avoiding Evil (Oxford 2006).

Joseph Mangan, "An Historical Analysis of the Principle of Double Effect," Theological Studies 10, no.1 (March 1949): 41–61.

Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Declaration on Euthanasia (Rome 1980), available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/ (accessed February 5, 2008).

Rev. Andrew Jaspers SJ
Resident Instructor, Department of Philosophy
Creighton University, Omaha, Nebraska (2010)

PRECA, GEORGE, ST.

Priest, founder of the Society of Christian Doctrine (an Institute of Consecrated Life), evangelizer, Carmelite tertiary; b. February 12, 1880, Valletta, Malta; d. July 26, 1962, Santa Venera, Malta; beatified May 9, 2001; canonized June 3, 2007, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

George (Ġorġ in Maltese) Preca was the seventh of nine children. Having been inspired by the example of Blessed Ignatius FALZON and having completed his studies at the lyceum, Preca entered the diocesan seminary, where he distinguished himself in his studies. He was ordained to the priesthood on December 22, 1906.

Even before his ordination, Preca was inspired to devote his life to catechetical ministry. In the town of Hamrun, he gathered a group of young men and catechized them, first entering their company by offering cigarettes, hoping later to lead them to spiritual realities. These young men would become the Society for Christian Doctrine. Preca originally gave the group another name, museum, after the facetious name for the rundown building in which the group first met. The name was adopted as an acronym that stood for Magister Utinam Sequatur Evangelium Universus Mundus (Divine teacher, may the whole world follow your GOSPEL).

This innovative group raised suspicion in the diocesan curia. In 1909 the vicar general ordered Preca to close all the centers and cease the gatherings of young men. Preca obeyed, but the ban was lifted after parish priests protested. In 1910 Preca founded a women's branch of the group, but difficulties continued. In 1914 and 1915, in response to critical articles about the society in the local press, Preca required that members take a vow of meekness. After some changes, the bishop canonically established the Society of Christian Doctrine on April 12, 1932. The society's members were celibate lay men and women who lived a life of PRAYER and maintained an apostolate of catechesis to both adults and children. The society expanded to Australia in 1952 and later to other countries.

Preca held great devotion to the Word of God as shown through the sacred scriptures and in the INCARNATION. Preca preached the Gospel in a plain style, stressing both the justice and mercy of God, and he translated parts of the BIBLE into Maltese so that more people could read it. His devotion to the Incarnation was such that he made Verbum Dei caro factum est (The Word of God became flesh) the motto of the society, and society members wear a badge with these words.

Preca also demonstrated great devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and in particular to her brown scapular, Our Lady of Good Counsel, and Our Lady of the Miraculous Medal. He was known to have preternatural gifts, including knowledge of hearts and the future. Preca was one of three Maltese beatified by Pope JOHN PAUL II on his May 2001 visit to Malta.

The miracle necessary for Preca's canonization was approved by the Congregation for the Causes of Saints on February 22, 2007. A few days after Eric Catania was born on June 15, 2001, in Malta, he was diagnosed with an acute liver disorder. The boy was moved to a London hospital, where he was considered for a transplant. Meanwhile, the INTERCESSION of Bl. George Preca was sought by Eric's parents, who placed a relic of Preca on Eric's abdomen. The miracle occurred between July 19 and 20, when, with clear indications of insufficient liver function and ascites, the boy's liver began to heal. His complete recovery was determined to be miraculous.

In a homily following the canonization of Preca, Pope Benedict XVI noted Preca's witness to holiness and evangelization. The pope spoke of the Johannine statement of the Incarnation that directed Preca's life, and of the pious utterances with which Preca always spoke to God.

Feast: May 9.

SEE ALSO MALTA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 100 (2008): 5–7.

Benedict XVI, "I santi, capolaveri della Sapienza di Dio," L'Osservatore Romano (June 4–5, 2007): 4–5.

Benedict XVI, "Mass of Canonization of Four New Saints, St. Peter's Square: Trinity Sunday, 3 June 2007," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (June 6–23, 2007): 6–7.

"Biography of the New Saints Canonized 3 June," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (June 6–23, 2007): 5.

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Blessed George Preca," Vatican Web site, June 3, 2007, available from http://www.vatican.va/ news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20070603_preca_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Society of Christian Doctrine M.U.S.E.U.M., "Saint George Preca (1880–1962): Founder of the Society of Christian Doctrine," available from http://www.sdcmuseum.org/.

Venerable George Preca, 1880–1962: His Life and His Vision for the Laity, translated by Margaret Mortimer (Żabbar, Malta 1999).

Emanuel P. Magro
Sacred Heart Minor Seminary, Victoria, Malta

Albert Edward Doskey
Doctoral Student in Historical Theology
The Catholic University of America (2010)

PRECIOUS BLOOD SISTERS

This entry contains the following:

I. ADORERS OF THE BLOOD OF CHRIST
Sister Angelita Myerscough/EDS

II. SISTERS OF THE MOST PRECIOUS BLOOD
Sister Mary Patrice Thaman/EDS

III. SISTERS OF THE PRECIOUS BLOOD
Sister Mary Gutman/EDS

I. ADORERS OF THE BLOOD OF CHRIST

(ASC, Official Catholic Directory, #0100) This religious community is one of several congregations of religious women who owe their origin, directly or indirectly, to the influence of St. Gaspare del BUFALO. This particular congregation was founded by St. Maria De MATTIAS (canonized by Pope John Paul II on May 18, 2003) in 1834 in Acuto, Italy, according to the plan of St. Gaspare del Bufalo and under the direction of Giovanni MERLINI. Dedicated principally to the education of the poor, the sisters opened 65 schools in central Italy before the death of the foundress in Rome (1866).

On Oct. 17, 1860, a group of Precious Blood Sisters, who had been established originally at Steinerberg, Switzerland, in 1845, and who later moved, because of government hostility, to Gurtweil, Baden, Germany, formally joined the Italian foundation. Ten years after this amalgamation the Gurtweil sisters opened a school in the U.S. at Piopolis in southern Illinois, when the KULTURKAMPF threatened them in Baden. While the majority of the sisters who went to America between 1870 and 1873 became an independent congregation (Sisters of the Most Precious Blood of O'Fallon, MO), the few sisters remaining at Piopolis under the direction of Mother Clementine Zerr, the novice mistress, continued under the Italian affiliation. When Mother Clementine was approved as superior of the U.S. foundation by the superior general, she transferred headquarters to Ruma, IL, in 1876. Subsequently, the sisters extended their work through Illinois, Missouri, and the Great Plains states, with a second central house and novitiate in Wichita, KS. The small band of German sisters who remained in Europe found a permanent home in 1879 in Banja Luka, Bosnia, whence new foundations were later made in Germany, Austria, Switzerland, and Poland. Sixteen sisters, brought from Banja Luka to the U.S. in 1906 by Mother Pauline Schneeberger, formed the nucleus of a third U.S. province with its central house in Columbia, PA.

In 1855 PIUS IX granted initial approbation to the congregation; final papal approval of the constitutions was given in 1897. The spiritual ideal of the congregation is centered in the mystery of Redemption through the Blood of Christ, which the sisters worship in particular through daily Eucharistic adoration. Their active apostolate consists primarily of work in schools and hospitals. The generalate is in Rome. There are three U.S. provinces: Ruma (1876), Wichita (1929) and Columbia (1925). In 2009 there were 1,649 sisters living in 319 houses spread throughout the world (Catholic Almanac 2010, p. 487).

SEE ALSO EUCHARISTIC DEVOTION; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Adorers of the Blood of Christ Official Web site, available from http://www.adorers.org/aboutadorers.aspx (accessed November 4, 2009).

Antonietta Maraone, ASC, In the Sign of the Covenant: Story of the Adorers of the Blood of Christ (St. Louis, 2002).

Sister Angelita Myerscough AdPPS
Instructor in Theology
St. Louis University, St. Louis, Mo.

EDS (2010)

II. SISTERS OF THE MOST PRECIOUS BLOOD

(CPPS, Official Catholic Directory #3270) This religious community is one of several congregations of religious women who owe their origin, directly or indirectly, to the influence of St. Gaspare del BUFALO. It was given papal approbation and has its motherhouse in O'Fallon, MO. The community was founded originally in 1845 at Steinerberg, Switzerland, by Rev. Karl Rolfus and Magdalena Weber (Mother Teresa) to honor the Precious Blood in convents of perpetual adoration. In 1848 the Swiss government forced the young community into exile, and a new settlement was made at Ottmarsheim in the Alsace region of France. Some eight years later, at the invitation of Rev. Herman Kessler, 18 sisters went to Gurtweil, in Baden, Germany, to establish a school and open a home for delinquent girls. The combined responsibilities of perpetual adoration and the active apostolate of teaching posed serious problems. The conflict was resolved in 1860 when the sisters of Gurtweil separated from those of Ottmarsheim and became affiliated with the Sisters Adorers of the Most Precious Blood, a congregation dedicated to the active apostolate.

Difficulties with the government in Baden, which sought to establish nondenominational schools, led the sisters to answer a call for teachers from Rev. Blasius Winterhalter of St. John's, IL (later Belle Prairie, now Piopolis), in the Diocese of Alton (now Belleville). On Feb. 2, 1870, nine sisters set sail for America; others followed in the next few years. The majority of these sisters soon separated themselves from the European congregation and became known as the Sisters of the Most Precious Blood of O'Fallon, MO. This was accomplished in 1874 with the assistance of Archbishop Peter Kenrick of St. Louis, MO, and his vicar-general, Henry Muehlsiepen. Mother Augusta Volk was the first superior general of the new community to which the Holy See granted final approval in 1938.

The congregation is engaged in academic education, catechetics, pastoral ministries, social outreach, care of elderly, parish ministries, and foreign missions. In 2008 there were 197 members of this community (Official Catholic Directory 2008, p. 1714).

SEE ALSO EUCHARISTIC DEVOTION; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Constant M. Klein, CPPS, History of the Sisters of the Most Precious Blood (O'Fallon, MO 1943).

The Sisters of the Most Precious Blood of O'Fallon, Missouri Official Web site, available from http://www.cpps-ofallon.org/index.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

Sister Mary Patrice Thaman CPPS
Associate Professor of History
Marillac College, Normandy, Mo.

EDS (2010)

III. SISTERS OF THE PRECIOUS BLOOD

(CPPS, Official Catholic Directory, #3260) This religious community is one of several congregations of religious women who owe their origin, directly or indirectly, to the influence of St. Gaspare del BUFALO. It has papal approbation and its motherhouse is located in Dayton, OH. The community originated in 1834 at Castle Loewenberg in the Diocese of Chur, Switzerland. Mother Maria Anna Brunner, the foundress, was then an elderly widow and the mother of six children. In the previous year, during a pilgrimage to Rome for the Holy Year of 1833, she came in contact with the Society of the Precious Blood, whose founder was St. Gaspare del Bufalo. Inspired by his example, she determined to devote her remaining years to the adoration of the Precious Blood and to the spreading of this devotion. After returning to Castle Loewenberg, she soon attracted a sufficient number of associates to keep up nocturnal adoration before the Blessed Sacrament. By the time of her death in 1836 the nucleus of the future congregation was formed and its main features indicated. Her eldest son, Bl. Father Francis de Sales BRUNNER, guided the early years of the community and eventually transferred it to the U.S.

In 1844 three of the sisters went to Peru in northern Ohio. About six months later a permanent foundation was made at New Riegel, OH, where there now stands a convent adapted for the use of a cloistered group that was later formed within the congregation. The motherhouse in the U.S. was transferred from New Riegel to Maria Stein, OH, in 1846, and then to Dayton in 1923. The U.S. community was granted final approval by the Holy See in 1946.

In accord with the primary purpose of the foundress, daily Eucharistic adoration is maintained in the community's principal houses. In fulfillment of Mother Brunner's secondary aim, the sisters from the beginning engaged in academic education and catechetics. Gradually their apostolate broadened to include care for the sick and the aged, healthcare, retreats and spiritual direction, social outreach to immigrants and homeless, and pastoral ministries. In 2008 there were 198 members of this congregation (Official Catholic Directory 2008, p. 1714).

SEE ALSO EUCHARISTIC DEVOTION; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Sisters of the Precious Blood Official Web site, available from http://www.preciousbloodsistersdayton.org/ (accessed November 20, 2009).

Sisters of the Precious Blood, Not with Silver or Gold: A History of the Sisters of the Congregation of the Precious Blood, 1834–1944 (Dayton 1945).

Sisters of the Precious Blood, The Legacy Continues: Stories of Precious Blood Sisters Continuing the Legacy of Mother Maria Anna Brunner (Dayton 2003).

Sister Mary Octavia Gutman CPPS
General Councilor and Secretary-General
Congregation of the Sisters of the Precious Blood, Dayton, Ohio

EDS (2010)

PROTOEVANGELIUM OF JAMES

This apocryphal or noncanonical gospel, purporting to be the work of James, perhaps the brother of the LORD (cf. Gal 1:19, Jas 1:1), bears the double title Genesis Marias, apokalupsis Iakoob (The Nativity of Mary, Revelation of James) on the earliest extant manuscript of the text (Testuz 1958). Copied in Greek either during the fourth century (Cullmann 1991) or even as early as the third (Testuz 1958), this earliest extant exemplar was discovered only in 1958. Its more common title, Protoevangelium of James (PJ), originated in the sixteenth century with the French philologist Guillaume Postel (1510–1581). Origen (185–254) had called it The Book of James.

The mariologist René Laurentin characterized the content of PJ as an "exégèse midrashique" (midrashic exegesis) of the INFANCY NARRATIVES presented in the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke. Indeed PJ presupposes these canonical accounts of the infancy of Jesus. The earliest papyrus redaction (Bodmer Papyrus 5), even if copied as early as the third century, nevertheless reflects the development of an older text from around 150, since JUSTIN MARTYR (d. 165) mentions both the birth of JESUS in a cave (18–20) and the genealogical descent of the Virgin MARY from DAVID (10.1), two details that derive from PJ. Clement of Alexandria (c. 150–c. 215) refers in Stromateis 7.93 to the midwife attending Mary "who was found to be a virgin" after the birth of Christ (PJ 20). Origen (c. 185–c. 254) in commenting on Mt 13:55–56 alludes to the tradition in PJ 9.2 that the brothers of Jesus were children of Joseph from a marriage prior to that with Mary: They thought, then, that He was the son of Joseph and Mary. But some say, basing it on a tradition in the Gospel of Peter, as it is titled, or "The Book of James" that the brethren of Jesus were sons of Joseph by a former wife, whom he married before Mary. Now those who say so wish to preserve the honor of Mary in virginity to the end. (Commentary on Matthew, 10.17; tr. John Patrick, The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 10:424, cited by Terian 2008, "Introduction" p. xvii, n. 25). The original Greek text of PJ gave rise to translations and in some cases highly embellished versions in Syriac (likely fifth century), Georgian (seventh century), Latin (ninth century), Armenian (ninth, thirteenth/fourteenth, and fifteenth/sixteenth centuries), Arabic (tenth century), Coptic (Sahidic fragments of the tenth/eleventh century), and Ethiopic (heavily paraphrased) manuscripts. A secure original text remains yet to be achieved.

Widely popular throughout the East, PJ took longer to circulate throughout the Western Church, owing not only to its opposition on theological grounds primarily by St. JEROME (342–420) and its consequent condemnation by Popes DAMASUS (reigned 366–384) and INNOCENT I (reigned 401–417), but also because of the distasteful aspect of its legends (the skeptical Salome's probing of the Virgin). PJ ranks among the series of Infancy narratives rejected by name in the Decretum gelasianum. Nevertheless, the material of PJ was incorporated into the Latin Gospel of pseudo-Matthew (a composite of PJ and the Gnostic Gospel of Thomas) at an early date and gained wide currency throughout the West, especially once JAMES OF VORAGINE (d. 1298) incorporated it into his hagiographical compendium The Golden Legend (c. 1265). It is noteworthy that, although in the wake of the Council of TRENT, Pope St. PIUS V (reigned 1566–1572) removed the office of St. Joachim from the Roman BREVIARY (1568) and suppressed the text of the PRESENTATION OF MARY in the Temple, both were restored later.

Context. PJ emerged in a polemical context that witnessed vehement Jewish attacks on the Christian doctrine of the virginal conception and birth of Jesus. Although Matthew and Luke earlier had discreetly addressed the widespread slander that Jesus was the illegitimate offspring of a Roman soldier named Panthera (a jest skewing the Greek parthenos or virgin), PJ underscores quite vividly the absolute sinlessness and inviolate virginity of Mary before, during, and after childbirth. The overarching theme of PJ is the glorification of the ever-virgin Mary and her indispensable role in bringing salvation history to its culmination in the virginal birth of CHRIST.

Contents. PJ recounts the miraculous conception and birth of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the daughter of the prosperous but sterile Joachim ("established by God") and Anna ("grace"). These names derive from the Old Testament (Daniel 13:1–4; 1 Sam 1:19–20). The generosity of Mary's parents prompts them to divide their wealth into three parts: the first for the upkeep of the Temple and the priests, the second for the poor, and the remaining third for the needs of their own household. Despite their heroic charity, Joachim is dispelled from the Temple because of his childlessness, and Anna endures the mockery of her handmaid because of her barrenness. Joachim withdraws in shame to shepherd his flocks in the pastures near BETHLEHEM, and Anna bemoans her sterility at home beneath a laurel tree. Joachim and Anna separately receive news from a heavenly messenger that a daughter will be born to them, and this child will become in due course the mother of the long-awaited MESSIAH. They meet at the Golden Gate of JERUSALEM, where they embrace and kiss. In their piety, they vow to present their offspring to the Lord for his exclusive service.

Upon giving birth to Mary in due course, Anna glorifies the Lord in terms that echo the MAGNIFICAT of Mary (Lk 1:46–55; cf. canticle of Hannah, mother of SAMUEL, 1 Sam 2:1–10). Mary's parents, in fulfillment of their vow, present her in the Temple when she reaches the age of three, and on the third step she dances for joy with her feet (cf. her ancestor David dancing before the ARK OF THE COVENANT, 2 Sam 6:14, 16). Mary remains in the Temple until the age of twelve, "nurtured like a dove and given food from the hand of an angel"(PJ 8:2).

When Mary reaches puberty, the high priest is inspired to summon the widowers of ISRAEL to the Temple. He places their staves before the holy of holies and prays for a sign; as he redistributes them, a dove flies out of the rod of JOSEPH and alights on Joseph's head. The widower Joseph, already considerably advanced in years and with children of his own, undertakes the care and guardianship of the Virgin Mary. Meanwhile, Mary begins to weave a curtain for the holy of holies in the Temple.

Drawing on the canonical accounts in Luke, PJ describes the archangel GABRIEL's annunciation to Mary (cf. Lk 1:26–38) and Mary's visitation to her kinswoman Elizabeth (cf. Lk 2:39–56). In the sixth month of her pregnancy, Mary faces the doubt and bitterness of Joseph, who blames himself for the neglect that led to Mary's seeming disgrace (cf. Mt 1:18–25). After a trial by ordeal involving the mysterious "water of the conviction of the Lord," the high priest determines that neither Mary nor Joseph have impaired Mary's virginity (PJ 16:1).

In obedience to a census decreed by Caesar Augustus, Joseph and Mary travel to Bethlehem where Mary gives birth to Jesus in a cave (cf. Lk 2:1–7). At this point Joseph utters a monologue that describes all creation suddenly pausing as Mary, overshadowed by a bright cloud, gives birth to Christ in the cave. When the midwife announces to Salome that a virgin has given birth, the latter ridicules the notion, declaring that unless she can test Mary's condition by placing her finger on the Virgin's maidenhead, she refuses to believe the mystery proclaimed to her (cf. THOMAS the Apostle's skeptical boast about Christ's RESURRECTION, Jn 20:25). Because Salome dares to touch the person of Mary, the ark of the new covenant, she, like Uzzah in 2 Samuel 6–7, is punished by the Lord, although she is not killed; instead, her hand feels consumed by fire and withers. Upon repenting of her doubt concerning the virginitas in partu, Salome touches the Christ child and finds healing and joy. After the visit of the MAGI to Bethlehem (cf. Mt 2:1–12) and Herod's slaughter of the innocents (cf. Mt 2:16–18), Mary wraps the child Jesus in swaddling clothes and lays him in an ox-manger (cf. Lk 2:7).

The last section presents perhaps the most bizarre scenario of the piece. When Elizabeth flees with the infant John into the hill country, a mountain is rent asunder and receives them. Meanwhile Zechariah, who refuses to reveal to Herod's soldiers the whereabouts of his son, is slain in the forecourt of the Temple (cf.

slaughter of Zechariah, 2 Chron 24:20–22). Amid the wailing and mourning of the faithful, the body of Zechariah goes missing, and his blood congeals into a stone. The priests then cast lots for Zechariah's successor, and thus the Holy Spirit chooses Simeon who later encounters the Holy Family at the presentation of Christ in the Temple (cf. Lk 2:25–35).

Theological Significance. The theological implications of PJ far exceed its historical reliability. The work emphasizes the holiness of Mary, who is conceived in purity and remains a virgin throughout her life. The failing generative faculties of her parents suggest that she is conceived with little or no carnal desire. Although the GOSPEL makes no clear allusion to an IMMACULATE CONCEPTION per se, Mary's conception and birth do not arise from lust, hence she stands to inherit from her parents a chaste, though loving, disposition. Dedicated to the Lord from her infancy, Mary serves God in purity and humility first in the Temple, then in the house of Joseph.

PJ accounts for the primitive reference to the Lord's "brothers and sisters" and at the same time safeguards Mary's virginity by presenting Joseph as an elderly widow with children from his previous marriage. This depiction of Joseph as an old man certainly has had its effect on Christian iconography in both East and West, although St. Jerome and St. BERNARD (1090–1153) insist that Joseph in fact preserved his virginity and entered into a celibate marriage with Mary at an early rather than later age. James of Voragine presents an odd, rather convoluted genealogy of St. Anne to account for the virginity of both Mary and Joseph on the one hand and the scriptural mention of the brethren of the Lord on the other. St. Jerome, confident in his understanding of HEBREW LANGUAGE and nuance, simply identifies the brethren of the Lord as his cousins.

The high CHRISTOLOGY advanced by PJ and the ignorance surrounding Jewish attitudes toward vowed virginity as manifested, for instance, in the conceit of a community of consecrated virgins living in the Temple at Jerusalem point to a non-Jewish source of the Gospel. In fact its predilection for consecrated community life and its insistence on the perpetual virginity of Mary may hint at an Alexandrian origin.

By its myriad details about Mary's birth, infancy, and marriage, PJ furnishes early, though not the only, support for the Church's explicit teachings regarding the conception and birth of Mary, her perpetual virginity, and her motherhood of God the Son. The Arabic version has Mary conceive Christ through the ear. This underscores the observation of St. AUGUSTINE (354–430) that Mary conceived Christ in faith before she conceived him in her womb.

Influence on Marian Piety. The three feasts of Mary's Conception (December 8), Nativity (September 8), and Presentation in the Temple (November 21), plus the feasts of her parents (July 26–St. Anne, August 16–St. Joachim; now combined on July 26 in the general Roman calendar), all trace their inspiration to PJ. Indeed Marian piety finds additional expression in devotion to Ss. Joachim and Anne, whereas the ambivalent treatment of St. Joseph by PJ could scarcely be credited with having generated much veneration of the humble carpenter from NAZARETH.

Perhaps the most renowned example of the far-reaching influence of PJ on Western art remains the cycle of frescoes of Mary's life by GIOTTO DI BONDONE (1267–1337) in the Arena Chapel (also known as the Scrovegni Chapel) in Padua completed around 1305. Marian art in both the East and West continues to draw on these themes. In addition to influencing venerable liturgical traditions, these feasts also inspired extended prayerful reflection on these mysteries and their further elucidation both in homiletic literature, particularly in the East, and in doctrinal development.

SEE ALSO ANNE AND JOACHIM, SS.; HEROD ANTIPAS; JOHN THE BAPTIST, ST.; LUKE, GOSPEL ACCORDING TO; MARIAN FEASTS; MATTHEW, GOSPEL ACCORDING TO; NATIVITY OF MARY; ORIGEN AND ORIGENISM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Marius Chaine, Apocrypha de Beata Maria Virgine, vols. 39, 40 (Louvain, Belgium 1962).

Oscar Cullmann, "Infancy Gospels," in New Testament Apocrypha, vol. 1, Gospels and Related Writings, edited by Wilhelm Schneemelcher, translated by R.McL. Wilson, rev. ed. (Louisville, Ken. 1991), 1: 414–469, esp. 421–451.

Albert Fuchs, Die griechischen Apokryphen zum neuen Testament, vol. 2 (Linz, Austria 1978).

Albert Fuchs, Konkordanz zum Protoevangelium des Jakobus, vol. 3 (Linz, Austria 1978).

Jacobus de Voragine [James of Voragine], "De nativitate beatae Mariae virginis," in Legenda aurea vulgo "Historia lombardica" dicta, edited by Th. Graesse (Melle, Germany 1898; reprint 2003), 131: 585–595.

René Laurentin, Les évangiles de l'enfance du Christ: Vérité de Noël au-delà des mythes. Exégese et sémiotique, historicité et théologie (Paris 1982).

Frédéric Manns, "Essais sur le Judéo-Christianisme," in Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, Analecta 12 (Jerusalem 1977), 69–144.

Harm Reinder Smid, Protevangelium Jacobi: A Commentary, translated by G.E. van Baaren-Pape (Assen, The Netherlands 1965).

Émile de Strycker, ed., La forme la plus ancienne du Protévangile de Jacques recherché sur le Papyrus Bodmer 5 avec une édition critique du texte grec et une traduction annotée (Brussels 1961).

Abraham Terian, The Armenian Gospel of the Infancy: With Three Early Versions of the Protevangelium of James (Oxford, U.K. 2008).

Michel Testuz, ed., Papyrus Bodmer V: Nativité de Marie (Geneva 1958).

Constantinus Tischendorf, Evangelia apocrypha (Leipzig, Germany 1853; reprint Hildesheim, Germany 1966), 1–50.

Rev. Neil J. Roy
University of Notre Dame
Notre Dame, Ind. (2010)

Q

QUIETISM

In the most specific sense, "Quietism" refers to the doctrine of total passivity taught by the Spanish priest Miguel de MOLINOS (circa 1628–1697), who had attained considerable notoriety for his 1675 work, A Spiritual Guide (Guia espiritual). Questions of orthodoxy, though, resulted in a censure of sixty-eight propositions of Molinos by a decree of the Holy Office issued on August 28, and confirmed on November 20, 1687, by the constitution Caelestis pastor of Pope INNOCENT XI (Denzinger-Hünermann (D-H) 2005, 2201–2269). Quietism, therefore, is best described as an exaggeration of orthodox spirituality. It is, at base, a recurrence of the ultra-supernaturalism that has both plagued and stimulated the Church from its earliest years. It is thus akin to but different from every other form of ILLUMINISM and enthusiasm that has existed in the Church in the past.

"Quietism" is also used in reference to the spiritual movement of "pure love," associated with the French widow Jeanne-Marie Bouvier de la Motte GUYON, also known as Madame Guyon (1648–1717), and the Archbishop of Cambrai, François FÉNELON (1651–1715), who supported her. This spiritual movement, sometimes called "Semi-Quietism" (Fastiggi 2007, p. 899), was censured by a board composed of Bishop BOSSUET, Bishop de NOAILLES, and Fr. TRONSON, the superior of the SULPICIANS, in the thirty-four Articles of Issy of 1695. Archbishop Fénelon, however, subsequently authored several treatises attempting to explain and defend the doctrine of pure love, a habitual state in which souls "should no longer care about their own perfection, the practice of the virtues, or their own salvation" (Fastiggi 2007, pp. 900–901). Bishop Bossuet attacked Fenelon's defense of pure love, and controversy between the two prelates ensued. Pope INNOCENT XII intervened by means of his papal brief Cum alias ad apostolatus of March 12, 1699, which sided with Bossuet and listed thirty-four errors of Fénelon (D-H, 2351–2374). While some have interpreted Innocent XII's brief as an effort to place "acquired contemplation" itself under suspicion (Sluhovsky 2007, p. 134), others have understood the pope's intervention as protecting authentic CONTEMPLATION from an alleged need for detachment from the virtues and concern for one's own salvation (Fastiggi 2007, p. 901).

History. The Messalians of Asia Minor in the fifth and sixth centuries claimed to practice continual prayer and encouraged a spirit of complete indifference. They taught that those who reached a spiritual state free of all passion (apatheia) were exempt from works of penance or recourse to the sacraments. Both the local Synod of Side in Pamphilia (c. 388) and the ecumenical Council of Ephesus (431) censured the Messalians.

In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, the monks of Mt. Athos, led by Gregory PALAMAS (c. 1296–1359), were called Hesychasts or Quietists because they encouraged a state of inward quietude (hēsuchia) acquired by the frequent repetition of the JESUS PRAYER. These monks developed a spiritual theology centered on divinization or theosis by means of the uncreated "energies" of God. Some of them also claimed to experience the so-called Taboric light similar to the light that surrounded Jesus during his TRANSFIGURATION (Mt 17:1–7; Mk 9:2–8; Lk 9:28–36). This form of Quietism was attacked by some, such as BARLAAM OF CALBARIA (c. 1290–1350), and condemned in two Constantinopolitan synods of 1342. Eventually, however, it was upheld as orthodox by a synod of 1347 held by the Byzantine emperor John VI Cantacuzenus. It is important to distinguish this type of Byzantine Quietism (Fastiggi 2007, p. 899) from the seventeenth-century Quietism of Molinos and the Semi-Quietism of Madame Guyon.

In the West, the Brethren of the Free Spirit were said to claim an entire passivity along with an antinomian outlook on morality, that is, one that freed them from the obligation to obey the commandments. Because of this, as well as their apparent claim to be exempt from the sacraments and Church authority, the Brethren were condemned by Pope BONIFACE VIII in his bull Saepe sanctam ecclesiam of August 1, 1296 (D-H, 866). The BEGUINES AND BEGHARDS were loosely organized religious communities of men and women. Suspected of Quietist tendencies, they were condemned at the Council of Vienne in 1312 for maintaining, inter alia, that the state of perfection renders a person incapable of sinning (D-H, 891), and that meditation on Christ's Sacred Humanity is an imperfection and a departure from true contemplation (D-H, 898). In a similar manner, twenty-six propositions of the Dominican Meister ECKHART (c. 1260–1328) were censured by Pope JOHN XXII's constitution, In agro dominico, of March 27, 1329. Among the condemned propositions was the apparent claim that we should not attempt to avoid sin if God wishes, in some way, for us to sin (D-H, 964).

The Devotio Moderna of medieval Germany, which seemingly preferred to feel compunction rather than define it, did much to separate theology from MYSTICISM. As a result, the area of man's highest aspirations was left open to sentimentalists who felt called to contemplation by experiences not transcending their own emotional upheavals, and Quietists who neglected everything to drift in their spiritual daydreams became self-proclaimed experts in matters spiritual.

The antecedents, then, of seventeenth-century Quietism in Italy are manifold, but it would be impossible to trace a causal nexus positively influencing Molinos and his adherents. It is true that the aberrations of the ALUMBRADOS of southern Spain were condemned only in 1623, and although many of their confessed tenets are similar to those of Molinos, the movement was vigorously repudiated by him. It was rather the contemporary scene that provided the fertile ground for Quietism. In the seventeenth century European spirituality was devoted to schools and to controversy. The Jansenist crisis was just abating when a new struggle developed between the adherents of the Ignatian method of meditation and those who saw in it the denial of the contemplation espoused by the great Spanish and French mystics of the preceding century. The protagonists exaggerated the approved spiritual doctrines, literalized the symbols and figures of the canonized authors, and in general made man's approach to God in prayer a matter of partisanship.

Foremost in the ranks of those defending the primacy of contemplation were Juan Falconi (d. 1638), Francis Malaval (1627–1719), the gentle recluse of Marseilles, Pier Matteo Petrucci (1636–1701), later to become a curial cardinal, and the enigmatic figure of Miguel de Molinos; all were to see their writings placed on the Index. Since none of these authors ever claimed to set forth a new conception of the spiritual life, it is only by reference to the orthodox doctrine of approved writers that one can recognize their version as a caricature of Catholic mysticism.

Quietist Teachings. Whereas sound doctrine holds that there is a state of contemplative passivity in which God acts in man by His operating grace and which one reaches normally only after exercising oneself in the ascetical life for a long time, the Quietists held, paradoxically, that the way of passive contemplation is acquired at will by the very cessation of every operation. Using the language of Sts. TERESA OF AVILA and JOHN OF THE CROSS, the Quietist opened the door to illuminism, because he looked upon his own intellectual activity as a refusal to adore God in spirit and in truth, as God alone must work in the soul. So adamant were they in removing the mental images on which meditation feeds that, for them, even the consideration of the Sacred Humanity itself was a distraction to be rejected. According to Malaval, meditation on Christ's humanity keeps people away from real devotion and the authentic gaze of true contemplation. This contemplative gaze, then, became the sole measure of true mysticism and was for the Quietist a single act unbroken even by sleep.

Given their error concerning the fundamentals of contemplation, it is not surprising to discover the bizarre nature of their practical moral conclusions. This way of obscure faith offers no consolations, for these are a betrayal; it cares nought for yearnings for perfect happiness, for they would be an expression of self-will and not God's; and it despises any reflection on self, for that is base infidelity to grace. As a result, the movement leaves no opportunities for the acts of virtues; prayers of petition, examinations of CONSCIENCE, and even confession itself become impossible for the soul perfected in the way of darkness and aridity, for these elements necessarily involve conscious activity on the soul's part.

These tendencies are apparent in the sixty-eight propositions of Molinos condemned in 1687 (D-H, 2201–2269). Among the more prominent errors are the following assertions: contemplative self-annihilation does away with the soul's own esse operativo or operative being (D-H, 2205); the "interior way" (via interna) makes the soul entirely indifferent to reward, punishment, heaven, or hell (D-H, 2207); in the passive state of contemplation, there is no longer any concern for perfection, virtues, sanctity, or salvation (D-H, 2212); those in the state of annihilation should no longer care about temptations (D-H, 2217), sensible images (D-H, 2218), or discursive prayer (D-H, 2219); those in the passive state should detach themselves from devotion to the Blessed Virgin and the humanity of Christ because these involve sensible objects (D-H, 2235); God sometimes permits a demon to cause perfect souls to commit carnal acts in order to humiliate them, and these acts, therefore, are not sinful (D-H, 2241); by means of true contemplation, some souls reach a state of impeccability in which they can longer commit sins, either mortal or venial (D-H, 2257); having reached such a state, these souls should no longer make use of the sacrament of confession (D-H, 2260), and they can choose for themselves whatever seems good for them (D-H, 2266).

The antinomian aspects of Molinos's Quietism might have provided a cover for his own immoral activities. Accusations of immorality, particularly from two women he had directed, led to his arrest in 1685. After two years of interrogation and investigation, Molinos confessed to his guilt, and he lived out the remainder of his life (until 1697) in confinement and penance.

SEE ALSO Antinomy; Brothers and Sisters of the Free Spirit; Hesychasm; Ignatian Spirituality; Index of Prohibited Books; Jansenism.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jordan Aumann, O.P., Christian Spirituality in the Catholic Tradition (London 1985), 232–240.

Heinrich Denzinger and Peter Hünermann, Enchiridion symbolorum definitionum et declarationum de rebus fidei et morum, 40th ed. (Freiburg 2005).

Georges Dole, "La querelle quiétiste et l'exil de Fenélon," Nouvelle Revue Théologique 129, no. 1 (January–March 2007): 87–93.

Elfrieda Dubois, "Fénelon and Quietism," in The Study of Spirituality, edited by C. Jones et al. (New York 1986), 408–415.

Paul Dudon, Le Quiétiste espagnol: Michel Molinos (Paris 1921).

Robert L. Fastiggi, "Quietism," in Encyclopedia of Catholic Social Thought, Social Science and Social Policy, vol. 2, edited by Michael L. Coutler et al. (Lanham, Md. 2007), 899–901.

Reginald Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., The Three Ages of Interior Life, translated by Timothea Doyle, 2 vols. (St. Louis 1947–1948), 2:289–292.

Ronald A. Knox, Enthusiasm: A Chapter in the History of Religion (New York 1950), 231–355.

Eulogio Pacho and Jacques Le Brun, "Quiétisme," in Dictionnaire de Spiritualité, vol. 12 (Paris 1986), 2756–2842.

Pierre Pourrat, Dictionnaire de théologie catholique, edited by Alfred Vacant et al. (Paris 1903–1950), 13.2:1537–81.

Pierre Pourrat, Christian Spirituality, vol. 4, translated by W.H. Mitchell and S.P. Jacques (Westminster, Md. 1955), 164–232.

Moshe Sluhovsky, Believe Not Every Spirit: Possession, Mysticism & Discernment in Early Modern Catholicism (Chicago 2007).

Rev. Thomas K. Connolly
Dominican House of Studies
Washington, D.C.

Robert L. Fastiggi
Professor of Systematic Theology
Sacred Heart Major Seminary, Detroit, Mich. (2010)

R

RANGEL, JOSÉ TRINIDAD, BL.

Martyred priest; b. June 4, 1887, Dolores Hidalgo, Guanajuato, Mexico; d. April 25, 1927, Rancho de San Joaquín, Jalisco, Mexico; beatified November 20, 2005, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

José Trinidad Rangel Montaño was ordained in 1919. He served as a parish priest and was known for his zeal in support of his parishioners. Two years before his ordination, Mexico adopted a constitution that limited religious freedoms for Catholics. Restrictions included the requirement that a government official be present when Mass was celebrated. A Mexican law adopted in July 1926 tightened those restrictions, prompting Pope PIUS XI to promulgate the ENCYCLICAL Iniquis afflictisque (On the Persecution of the Church in Mexico) on November 18, 1926.

The following year, Fr. Rangel was ministering in the city of Silao when the mayor ordered him to register with the government. Fr. Rangel refused and fled to the city of León, where he was sheltered by siblings Josefina and Jovita Alba. In León, he met Fr. Andrés SOLÁ Y MOLIST, a Claretian missionary who had been in hiding since 1926.

In April 1927, Fr. Rangel's brother Agustín urged him to seek refuge in the United States. Instead, he secretly celebrated HOLY WEEK in San Francisco del Rincón, administering the sacraments and visiting hospitalized people. On April 22, federal soldiers arrested Fr. Rangel and took him to a seminary that had been converted into military headquarters. On April 24, Fr. Rangel was transported in a garbage truck to the train station and taken to León Lagos de Moreno. Fr. Rangel never denied that he was a priest and spoke freely about his ministry. He was tortured and executed by a firing squad on April 25 for violating government regulations about celebrating Mass. Also martyred that day were (Bl.) Fr. Solá y Molist and (Bl.) Leonardo PÉREZ Larios, a layman arrested at a secret Mass.

Pope JOHN PAUL II declared Fr. Rangel VENERABLE on June 22, 2004, and the priest was among thirteen Mexican martyrs beatified on November 20, 2005, by Pope Benedict XVI. Cardinal José Saraiva Martins presided at the BEATIFICATION Mass at Jalsico Stadium at Guadalajara. He observed that the martyred priests followed the example of the Good Shepherd. The pontiff, in a satellite message from Rome, described the martyrs as "a stimulus for defending the faith and having faith in current society."

Feast: April 25.

SEE ALSO MEXICO (MODERN), THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Beatos Mexicanos, "Biografia Phro: José Trinidad Rangel," 2005, available from http://www.beatificacionesmexico.com.mx/web/trinidad.php (accessed November 5, 2009).

Juan-Diego Brunetta, "Saints of Service," Columbia: The Online Edition, November 2007, available from http://www.kofc.org/un/eb/en/publications/columbia/detail/491215.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Santa Misa de Beatificación de 13 Mártires Mexicanos: Homilía del Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, November 20, 2005, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20051120_beatificazioni_sp.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Pius XI, Iniquis afflictisque, On the Persecution of the Church in Mexico (Encyclical, November 18, 1926), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/pius_xi/encyclicals/documents/hf_p-xi_enc_18111926_iniquis-afflictisque_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

RAPTURE

The term rapture, derived from the Greek harpazō and the Latin raptus, has the general meaning of something being quickly snatched away or taken by force. Since the earliest centuries of the Church, Christian writers have used the term to describe a particularly elevated kind of mystical experience or ECSTACY (cf. TERTULLIAN (c. 160–235), Against Marcion, V, 8). In the latter nineteenth century certain Protestant fundamentalist circles began using the term with reference to the "end times." In both cases, biblical texts that include forms of harpazō form a basis for the use of the term in Christian life and literature. The present understanding is also profoundly affected by a long history of extrabiblical developments.

Mystical Rapture. Paul's statement that he was "caught up into Paradise and heard ineffable things, which no one may utter" (2 Cor 12:4; NAB) is the most prominent biblical description of mystical rapture. In the later tradition of Christian MYSTICISM, general characteristics of rapture (as distinct from other deep experiences of union with GOD) include the following: It comes suddenly, without warning; one has the awareness of being irresistibly acted upon by God; one is completely entranced interiorly, temporarily losing some or all physical and mental faculties; and blissful supernatural knowledge is infused.

The term rapture is applied with different nuances by various mystics, and some use other terms for what appears to be the same phenomenon. St. TERESA OF AVILA, for example, names "suspensions," "transports," "flights of the spirit," and "impulses" (1976), whereas the Rhineland and Flemish mystics such as HADEWIJCH of Antwerp and Jan van RUYSBROECK speak of a "storm of love" (Underhill 1911). All of these seem to manifest the general features named above.

The extreme character of these experiences sometimes leaves the body exhausted, in pain, or out of joint, but if rapture is genuine its long-term effects will be beneficial. Authentic raptures usually occur at an advanced point in the mystical life, when the mystic is undergoing the final PURIFICATION before entering the culminating spiritual marriage. Spiritual teachers agree that these experiences are not to be sought after, especially because of the great danger of false raptures induced by causes such as mental illness, emotional or physical stress, overwrought imagination, or malevolent spirits.

End Times Rapture. Quite different is the notion of a coming rapture toward the end of the world, when Jesus Christ will return secretly to earth. In this scenario, popular among contemporary fundamentalists and evangelical Protestants, Jesus will "snatch away" his true followers into heaven, leaving behind everyone else to suffer the tribulation that will punish the world before his final coming in glory.

Rapture teachers claim biblical support for the notion in several texts. The passage most cited is 1 Thes 4:17, which says that believers who are still alive at Christ's coming "will be caught up [in the Latin Vulgate translation, rapiemur] together with [those who have died] in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air" (NAB). Also quoted are Jesus' words in Mt 24:40–41 (as well as the parallel passage in Lk 17:34–35), which speak of a coming judgment in which "one will be taken and one will be left."

Until historically recent times, however, the notion of a secret rapture has been conspicuously and consistently absent from the various interpretations of these passages by Catholic, Orthodox, and Protestant writers alike. Paul's words have been viewed simply as a reference to Christ's final coming in glory. Jesus' words have been taken to refer either to the terrifying events surrounding the fall of JERUSALEM in AD 70 or to the final judgment day when, "as it was in the days of Noah" (Mt 24:37), the wicked will be swept away in judgment while the righteous are left to stand secure.

Nowhere, in fact, among ancient or medieval Christian teachers, nor even among the leaders of the Protestant Reformation, do we find clear historical evidence for belief in a secret rapture. Similar notions appeared occasionally, however, in early America. In the eighteenth century, for example, Increase Mather (1639–1723), a Puritan minister in Boston, wrote of Christians being "caught up in the air" before the world was consumed by divine judgment. In 1788 Morgan Edwards (1722–1795), a Baptist pastor and educator in Philadelphia, taught that Christians would be taken to heaven three and a half years before Christ judged the world (although he admitted that few of his contemporaries embraced such a belief).

Ironically, the writer of that period whose end-times ideas came closest to the modern rapture teaching was a Chilean Jesuit, Manuel de LACUNZA Y DÍAZ. His Coming of Messiah in Glory and Majesty, first published in Spanish in 1812, proposed that toward the end of the world, Jesus would snatch from the earth faithful Catholics who regularly received the Eucharist. They would remain safe with him for forty-five days while terrible judgments chastised the world. Then they would accompany him when he returned to judge the world.

The rapture teaching as commonly presented today did not appear until later in the nineteenth century. Two sectarian religious leaders in England, Edward IRVING and John Nelson DARBY, developed and promoted the secret rapture belief among their respective followers. Irving had translated Lacunza's book into English in 1827 and so may have adapted Lacunza's ideas for his purposes.

The more fully developed rapture notions of these teachers were transplanted to North America through Darby's visits there and his influence on several nineteenth-century revivalist preachers. They gained widespread popularity through the publication of The Scofield Reference Bible (1909), which sold nearly two million copies within thirty years after its appearance. American attorney Cyrus Ingerson SCOFIELD, who produced the extensive commentary within this edition of the King James Bible, presented belief in the rapture as part of the system of biblical interpretation developed by Darby and known as dispensationalism.

In more recent times, the rapture notion has received extensive publicity as the premise of the Left Behind series of novels by Tim LaHaye (1926–) and Jerry B. Jenkins (1949–), which sold more than 43 million copies between 1995 and 2007. Numerous popular television preachers also make the rapture an essential part of their message, most notably Jack van Impe (1931–), who has focused largely on end times subjects since the 1950s.

Many contemporary scholars criticize the dispensationalist doctrine of the rapture on both biblical and theological grounds. They say the imagery of the Thessalonians text needs to be interpreted in view of its background in Jewish APOCALYPTIC literature, in which it is not uncommon for visionaries to be snatched up to heaven. This genre of writing is not intended to provide literal descriptions of past or future events, but rather to offer a mythic framework of hope to communities in crisis.

The larger context of 1 Thes 4:17 indicates that Paul's main purpose is to reassure grieving Christians that a day is coming when the dead and the living will be equal and together again as one community with the Lord. The dispensationalist doctrine of the rapture, on the other hand, stresses separation, VENGEANCE, and destruction rather than reconciliation, HOPE, and constructive activity. An adequate understanding of rapture must be approached by careful study of the full range of biblical and post-biblical insights into how God acts powerfully and salvifically within human lives and communities.

Critics of the secret rapture teaching—including many evangelical Protestants—have observed that, like certain other essentials of dispensationalist thought, such a belief easily leads to despair about the world's future and indifference toward efforts to improve it. The notion also implies that God will spare his people from SUFFERING rather than make use of it for their benefit. Catholic critics in particular have noted that rapture believers often display hostility toward the Church and insist that if Catholics reject fundamentalist teachings, they will be "left behind" by Christ when he returns secretly.

The "Statement on Left Behind Books and Videos" by the Catholic Conference of Illinois (2003) urged the faithful to reject the rapture belief, which apparently had found its way into some Catholic catechetical and educational settings. The bishops identified the Left Behind literature as "a tool for active promotion of a fundamentalist theology of the end times in conflict with Catholic teachings" and "a vehicle for anti-Catholic sentiments." They urged the removal of such books and videos from Catholic institutions and called on "those responsible for faith formation to provide planned, coherent, and informed catechesis to all age groups about Church teachings on the end of the world, based on Scripture and Tradition."

SEE ALSO DISPENSATIONAL THEOLOGY; MYSTICI CORPORIS; REVELATION, BOOK OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Catholic Conference of Illinois, "Statement on 'Left Behind' Books and Videos," Catholic Post, June 22, 2003.

Manuel Lacunza, Coming of Messiah in Glory and Majesty, 2 vols., translated by Edward Irving (London 1827).

Andrew T. Lincoln, "Paul the Visionary: The Setting and Significance of the Rapture to Paradise in 2 Corinthians 12:1–10," New Testament Studies 25 (1979): 204–220.

Carl E. Olson, Will Catholics Be Left Behind? A Catholic Critique of the Rapture and Today's Prophecy Preachers (San Francisco 2003).

Earl J. Richard, First and Second Thessalonians, Sacra Pagina Series, vol. 11, ed. Daniel J. Harrington (Collegeville, Minn. 1995), 224–248.

Teresa of Avila, "Spiritual Testimony 59," in The Collected Works of St. Teresa of Avila, vol. 1, translated by Kieran Kavanaugh and Otilio Rodriguez (Washington, D.C. 1976), 355–361.

Paul Thigpen, The Rapture Trap: A Catholic Response to "End Times" Fever (West Chester, Pa. 2001).

Thomas Aquinas, "Of Rapture," Summa Theologica, 2a-2ae, q. 175.

Evelyn Underhill, "Ecstasy and Rapture," in Mysticism: A Study in the Nature and Development of Man's Spiritual Consciousness (London 1911), 427–452.

Mary Frohlich
Associate Professor of Spirituality
Catholic Theological Union, Chicago

Paul Thigpen
Executive Director
The Stella Maris Center for Faith and Culture, Savannah, Ga. (2010)

RAVASCO, EUGENIA, BL.

Founder of the Congregation of the Daughters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, also known as the Ravasco Institute; b. January 4, 1845, Milan, Italy; d. December 30, 1900, Genoa, Italy; beatified April 27, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Eugenia Ravasco was the third of six children born to Francesco Matteo and Carolina Mozzoni Frosconi. Her mother died when she was three, and her father and elder brother Ambrose moved to Genoa. Eugenia remained in Milan, where a pious aunt raised her until 1852, when her father reunited the family in Genoa. After her father died in 1855, Eugenia lived with a devout aunt and uncle and their ten children. She and her family became concerned about Italy's anticlerical atmosphere and its effect on Ambrose.

When Eugenia's uncle died in 1862, she helped raise the family. She and her aunt tried unsuccessfully to save Ambrose from anti-Catholic influences. In 1863 Eugenia discerned a religious vocation and began teaching catechism to poor girls who lived on the street. Other women joined in that ministry, and Eugenia founded the Congregation of the Daughters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary on December 6, 1868. Also known as the Ravasco Institute, the congregation taught catechism and opened secular schools for the poor.

Mother Eugenia served as the congregation's superior for the remainder of her life. In 1878 she opened a school to teach girls and prepare Christian teachers. She also traveled throughout Italy, France, and Switzerland to establish new communities, teach, and give direction to sisters. She also ministered to the dying, the imprisoned, and people who fell away from the Church.

Mother Eugenia died of natural causes on December 30, 1900, in Genoa. The congregation she founded currently ministers in Italy, Switzerland, Albania, Africa, Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Mexico, Paraguay, Venezuela, and the Philippines. The sisters serve in schools, parishes, and missions. They maintain their founder's dedication to young people, the poor, and the promotion of the dignity of women.

Pope John Paul II declared Mother Eugenia VENERABLE on July 1, 2000. On July 5, 2002, the pope signed the decree recognizing the cure of a Bolivian girl, a miracle obtained through Venerable Eugenia's INTERSESSION. The pope beatified her on April 27, 2003, at St. Peter's Square. The pontiff remarked that Bl. Eugenia "joyfully devoted her whole life to young people and the poor. With foresight, she was able to open herself to the pressing needs of the mission, with special concern for those who had 'fallen away' from the Church."

Feast: December 30.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SACRED HEARTS OF JESUS AND MARY, CONGREGATION OF THE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six New Servants of God" (Homily, April 27, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030427_beatification_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Eugenia Ravasco (1845–1900)," Vatican Web site, April 27, 2003, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20030427_ravasco_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Colegio Eugenia Ravasco, "Beata Eugenia Ravasco (1845–1900)," 2005, available from http://www.colegioeugeniaravasco.edu.ve/rav/vida_eug_rav.asp (accessed November 5, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

REDEMPTION (THEOLOGY OF)

Central to the Christian message is the announcement that only in Jesus is salvation to be found (cf. Acts 4:12; 1 Tim 2:4–6). The term redemption designates the mystery of God's deliverance of mankind from the evil of sin and death, as well as its restoration to grace by the supreme act of divine power and merciful love achieved and manifested in Christ's death and resurrection. This redemptive act spans the whole of human history in its effects, for "God wishes all men to be saved and to come to knowledge of truth" through the "one mediator of God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave Himself as a ransom for all" (1 Tm 2:4–6). Thus, all redemption before Christ moves toward him, preparing for and anticipating his act, and all later redemption flows from him.

THE MEANING OF REDEMPTION

God's gracious initiative in sending his only son into a fallen world is a profound mystery, rooted in Trinitarian love. Salvation ultimately consists in sharing that divine life through insertion into Christ, who said, "Without me you can do nothing" (Jn 15:5). Since God is love (1 Jn 4:8, 4:16), his attitude toward his creatures, however sinful, does not have to be changed. He initiates SALVATION by sending his son to the cross (Rom 8:32; Jn 3:16). What scripture characterizes as God's wrath is his love experienced by unrepentant sinners refusing to open their hearts to God (Rom 1:18–32). Hence, the change effected by the INCARNATION has to take place in this world. Jesus shatters hardened hearts in order to share his divine life of love with sinners summoned to REPENTANCE. That feat has been described in various ways in scripture and Christian tradition.

Redemption is one of many images or metaphors employed to identify the change in man's state accomplished by Christ's death on the cross. It is borrowed from the Old Testament, where God redeemed Israel from bondage. Its metaphorical employment is manifested not only by the proliferation of other images seeking to portray salvation in Christ (e.g., liberation, JUSTIFICATION, reconciliation, substitution, sanctification, Body of Christ, the vine) but also by the refusal to identify the one to whom the RANSOM is paid. God can be beholden to no creature. Furthermore, though the Old Testament supplies the basic language applied to Jesus and his work, insofar as he surpasses all Jewish expectations, the Old Testament categories must be reinterpreted from Christ; they attempt to capture the mystery of God's only son, who was denied, abandoned, and betrayed by his followers, yet who rose from the dead to offer them forgiveness and peace, establishing in his own person an indestructible union of God and man (Jn 20:19–23; Eph 2:14–21). God's love thus evokes a response of love from sinful hearts and joins men to himself in his son, the head of the Church, his body. Hence, a double application of analogy is required: from human experience of redemption to God's acting in the ancient covenant, and from the old covenant to Jesus, the new covenant. Indeed, almost all salvific terms from the Old Testament are ultimately identified with Jesus. Despite the inability of any human analogy to capture the full reality of Jesus Christ, "in whom are revealed all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col 2:3)—all was created in, through, and for him (1 Cor 8:6; Col 1:16–17; Jn 1:3–10)—some analogies, images, or metaphors must be employed. For divine revelation supplies men with some intelligibility of what the son accomplished on earth in order that they might respond freely to his gift of forgiveness and accept him into their lives. Without freedom's response, God's love cannot pervade human hearts and effect salvation, a sharing in his life.

The New Testament refers redemption primarily to Jesus's freely accepted death on the cross, the price paid for salvation (see 1 Cor 6:19–20; Ti 2:13–14). Redemption in or through Christ's blood joins the mercantile analogy of buying back to the Old Testament imagery of sacrifices by which God is propitiated (1 Pt 1:18; Acts 20:28). Although such transactions and sacrifices rightly presuppose and reflect inner-worldly justice, they fail to encapsulate the justice of God, which mercifully justifies sinners (Rom 3:23–26). JUSTICE and MERCY are both attributed to God in human attempts to approximate the mystery of infinite love. Justice is essential for the functioning of human society and provides the moral intelligibility required for human freedom. Furthermore, without a notion of justice, God's mercy cannot be recognized. Finally, God's self-giving, justifying love requires from men a conversion, which is difficult and seems penal, the just penalty for sin.

While all analogies limp, the language of redemption and sacrifice is necessary to communicate the significance of what God's son accomplished in history: He emptied himself to fill others (Phil 2:6–11; 2 Cor 8:9); he empowered men to enter into a new relation of saving intimacy with God. He taught sinners what love involves: giving one's life for others in obedient fidelity to the Father (Jn 12:27–28; 15:13; 17:26). Then by rising from the dead, Jesus proved that love is stronger than death and sin. Resurrected, he bestows his Spirit on his disciples to join them in love to himself and over him to the Father. Hence, although the term redemption in the New Testament refers primarily to the cross, by extension it comprises the Resurrection so that its effects might be manifested. Analogously, it can refer to Jesus's whole life, in which he was constantly revealing himself, that is, giving himself, to men and preparing his disciples for the mystery of love to be revealed fully on Good Friday and Easter Sunday. Since Jesus lives in the Church, his body, through the Spirit and is really present in the Eucharist, believers can have an experience of redemption through him.

Salvation history traces a pattern of God's redemptive activity and will provide many of the theological categories within which Christian theology will reflect upon the decisive and definitive redemption that God works on behalf of mankind in and through Christ. Although a complete theology of redemption must include all that can be known of God's act of deliverance and restoration, Christian theology has concentrated on the revelation of the New Testament, which marks the "fullness of time" in SALVATION HISTORY, when "God sent his Son, born of a woman ... that he might redeem ... that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal 4:4).

For the New Testament writers, redemption may refer to the purpose of Christ's work in its total accomplishment (e.g., Rom 8:23; Eph 4:30; Rv 5:9) or in its partial accomplishment on Earth (e.g., Eph 1:7; Col 1:14). The term also designates the plan of Christ's work (e.g., Rom 3:24; Ti 2:14). Finally, redemption and its cognate forms can refer to the very accomplishing of the work of Christ in terms of what is done and how the work is effective.

This article considers Redemption chiefly as a process in which the redeeming activity of God is mediated in and through the life and death and resurrection of the Incarnate Word. The investigations are polarized to the side of Redemption as it is something objective. This is to say that the Redemption is considered as the decisive and definite act of God in Christ on behalf of mankind so that, as regards the divine activity in this order of things, redemption is accomplished "for once and for all" (Heb 9:26). In the consideration of Redemption as objective, the focus is on God's efficient activity rather than on man's reception of and response to the redemptive act of God.

The objective of this article is to present a doctrinal survey that indicates the main lines of theological reflection upon this mystery. This article is not an effort to construct an integral theology of the Redemption according to any one soteriological theory. The Redemption is a mystery properly so called. In certain epochs and according to certain schools of theology, different aspects of the mystery have been put in relief while others have been passed over almost unnoticed. No single theory of the Redemption has ever been total or complete. The investigation proceeds, in general, through scriptural themes and dogmatic formulations by the Church, the doctrinal context of the Redemption, and, finally, theories of the Redemption considered within the doctrinal context.

SCRIPTURAL THEMES AND DOGMATIC FORMULATIONS

These themes and formulations serve as points of departure for the reflections of the Church and the articles of FAITH toward which are addressed the theological questions for an intelligence of the mystery.

Scriptural Themes. There are seven themes that can be derived from the New Testament as theological points of departure for the inquiring Christian who asks the question: How and by what means is man delivered from the evil of sin and restored to grace with God Although not all these themes are equally central in the mystery, each of them, nonetheless, provides a clue for insight into the various aspects of the mystery.

First, redemption is revealed as achieved by the very fact that the Word of God assumes human nature and becomes the mediator between God and man. The theme is derived from the Fourth Gospel. The sources are also Pauline (e.g., 1 Tm 2:5; Heb 8:6; 9:15). Compare the reestablishment of all things in Christ (Eph 1:10; Col 1:15–20) and the Christ-Adam parallel (Rom 5:12–19; 1 Cor 15:21–22, 45–49). Second, redemption is accomplished through Christ's giving his life as a price of purchase, or ransom, as it were (Mk 10:45; 1 Cor 6:20; 7:23; 1 Tm 2:6; Ti 2:14; 1 Pt 1:18–19; Rv 5:9). Third, redemption is effected through the suffering and death of Christ, undergone because of SIN and on behalf of sinners (Jn 1:29; Rom 4:25; 5:6–21; 1 Cor 15:3; 2 Cor 5:15; Gal 2:20; Eph 5:2; Col 2:13–14).

Fourth, redemption is performed through the sacrifice of Christ offered on the cross (from the account of the institution of the Eucharist in the Synoptic Gospels; the Epistle to the Hebrews; Rom 3:25; 1 Cor 5:7; Eph 5:2; 1 Jn 4:10). Fifth, redemption is acquired through Christ's victory over the devil (Jn 14:30; Col 1:13; 2:15; 1 Jn 3:8), sin, and death (Rom 5:21; 6:6–23; 8:3; 1 Cor 15:20–58).

Sixth, redemption is attained through the obedience of Christ (Jn 10:18; 14:31; Phil 2:5–11).

Seventh, Redemption is carried out by the RESURRECTION OF CHRIST (Rom 1:4; 4:25; 1 Cor 15; 2 Cor 5:15), and his INTERCESSION in heaven with the Father (Rom 8:34; Heb 7:25).

These themes are scattered throughout the New Testament. The texts cited are simply some examples in the scriptures whence these themes can be derived. They converge on the central truth of Christian revelation—man's deliverance from sin and his restoration to union with God by means of Christ's coming, his life, and especially his death and Resurrection. The New Testament authors scarcely go beyond the statement of the mystery. They illustrate various aspects of the mystery with comparisons to similar things in the world of man.

The redemption wrought by God in Christ is something absolutely and entirely unique. Faith in the redemption accomplished by Christ was a living experience far richer than the New Testament author's attempted formulations of the experience. These writers formulated their experience not to set out ideas in a system, but rather to set out ideas in various contexts and on different occasions in order to foster the faith and sustain this living experience in the infant Church.

God invites man to participate in the mystery and intends that man read out of his living experience of the mystery some understanding of the reasons why. This is precisely what happened in the Church when these scriptural themes became the points of departure for the subsequent theological reflections made within the living experience of the Redemption.

Dogmatic Formulations. Definitions of the Church are usually formulated in response to questions raised in controversy or in answer to a heresy.

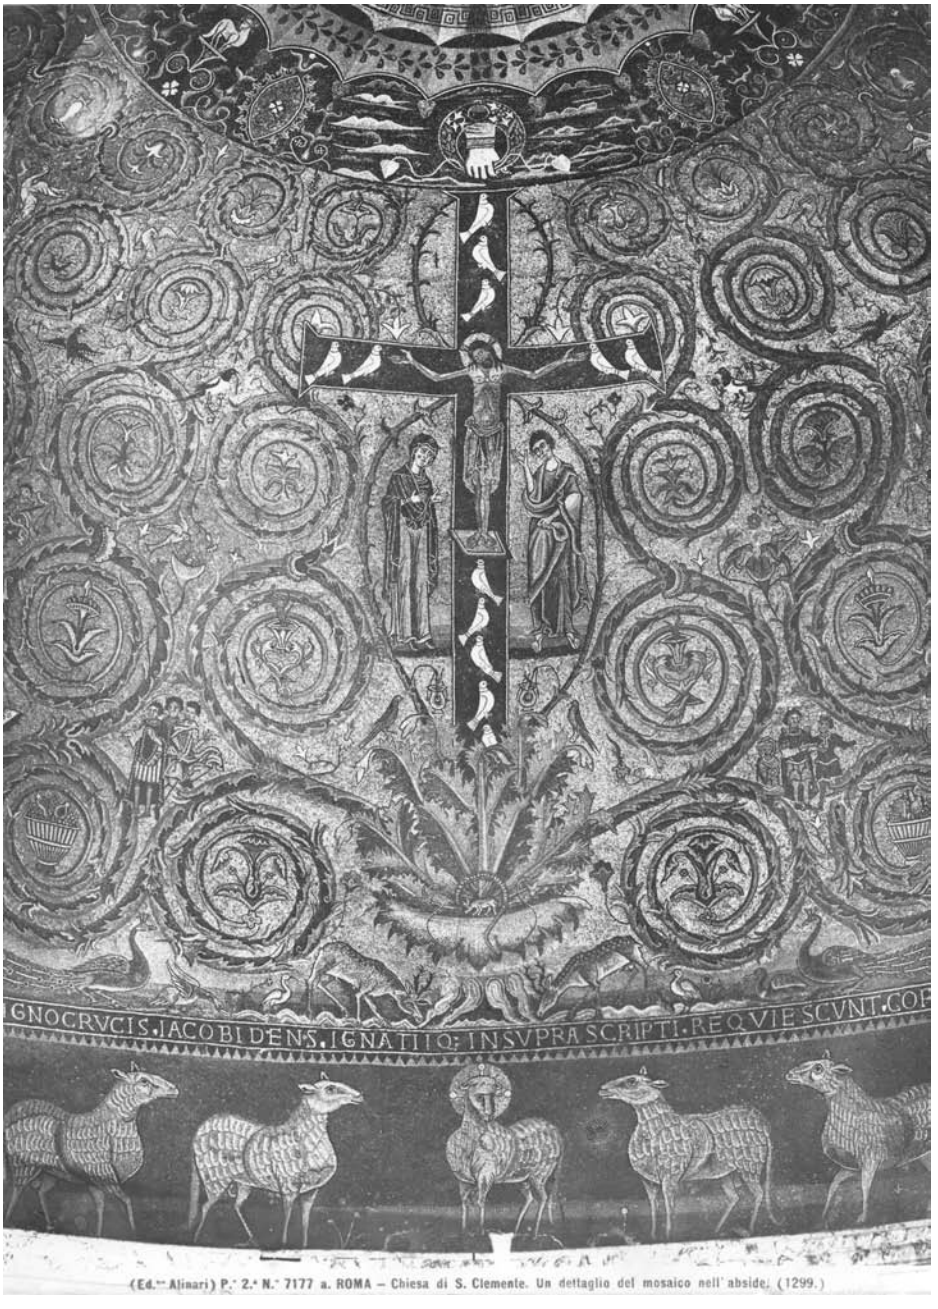
Before the Council of Trent. There are no salient pronouncements on the subject of the Redemption by the authoritative teaching Church before the Council of TRENT. No serious controversies arose in the Church over the redemptive work of Christ before the Council of Trent. It is true that the logic of the early Christological heresies and Pelagianism could have had repercussions in the doctrine of the Redemption, but unorthodoxy did not press its principles into applications in this field of the faith. The Church was satisfied to aim its anathemas at the principles themselves.

The creeds can be considered the earliest formulations of the faith on the Redemption. Employed for catechetical and baptismal purposes, the creeds are statements of the fundamental articles of the faith with a minimum of doctrinal development. In the earliest creeds, the belief in Christ as SAVIOR is professed. There is a recital of the great events of his life: Christ is born, is crucified, is buried, and rising on the third day sits at the right hand of the Father. Forgiveness of sins and life eternal are confessed, at least in an implied manner, as the fruits of the life and death and Resurrection of the Savior (cf. Denzinger-Hünermann, Enchiridion symbolorum 1–30),

As such, creeds develop further; one may note that a reason is assigned for the coming of the Savior. Thus, in the NICENE CREED: "For us men and for our salvation He came down and was enfleshed, made man, suffered, and rose on the third day, [and] ascended into heaven" (ibid. 125). The Creed of Constantinople in 381 goes one doctrinal step further by inserting: "crucified also for us under Pontius Pilate" (ibid. 150).

Until the time of the Council of Trent, the faith of the Church relative to the Redemption appears in certain doctrinal pronouncements, but it does so incidentally, with other subjects. The doctrine is usually expressed in the terminology of the scriptures or of the creeds and without any real doctrinal advance (cf. ibid. 539, 700, 801, 852). It is in the fourteenth century that the concept of MERIT as applied to Christ's sufferings and death begins to appear in the ecclesiastical documents (ibid. 1027, 1347).

Council of Trent and After. Significant doctrinal advances were made within the formulations issued by the Council of Trent. In defining the hereditary character of ORIGINAL SIN, the council employed the notion of merit to explain the forgiveness of sins (ibid. 1513). The concept of satisfaction is also adjoined to the notion of merit to explain the manner in which man is redeemed by Christ (ibid. 1529). (The meaning of merit and satisfaction as applied to the Redemption will be taken up later; only the employment of these concepts is noted here.)



This notion of satisfaction for sins offered to God in the sufferings of Christ is mentioned again in the council's treatment of the sacrament of Penance (ibid. 1689–90; cf. 1713). As Jean Rivière remarks: "In these passages there is no question of a doctrinal definition. This was not called for. Nevertheless, by the very fact of being included in the solemn decree of justification the two categories of merit and satisfaction which were already current in the schools as describing the work of Christ acquired a kind of official character" (Dictionnaire de théologie catholique 13.2:1919). The sacrificial character of the Redemption was affirmed by the Council of Trent in its defense of the Holy Mass, against the objections of the reformers (Denzinger-Hünermann Enchiridion symbolorum 1739–42).

In 1555, while the council was still in session, Pope PAUL IV condemned the proposition of the Socinians that "Jesus Christ did not submit to the most cruel death of the cross to redeem us from sins and from eternal death and to reunite us with the Father unto eternal life" (ibid. 1880).

This formula affirms the objective character of the Redemption against those who would see in the PASSION OF CHRIST only the value of an example (an opinion that was to be proposed again by certain nineteenth-century liberal Protestant theologians).

Modern Times. VATICAN COUNCIL I included in its program a general schema on Christian doctrine in which the doctrine of the Redemption was to have had a prominent place. The schema included a canon that would have declared heretical the affirmation that Christ could not and did not truly and properly satisfy for sins; that vicarious satisfaction of one mediator for all men is repugnant to divine justice. These canons do not have the authority of a pronouncement of the Church, but they manifest the thinking of the Church current at that period.

Summary. In great part, these formulations from the Magisterium are paraphrases of the themes derived from the text of scripture. The teaching Church puts particular insistence on the role of the sufferings and death of Christ in the work of redemption, but not more emphasis than the New Testament itself does (cf. 1 Cor 1:23–25; 2:2).

Redemption Motifs. This twelfth-century mosaic of combined Redemption motifs is located on the apse of the Church of St. Clemente in Rome. At the center of the work is the Crucifixion surrounded by curving vines of flowers, and food and drink. You can also see a river flowing from beneath the Cross with animals drinking from it. At the very bottom of the mosaic, there are lambs flanking the Lamb of God. At the very top of the mosaic, you can see the hand of God.

In the mind of the Church, the death of Christ has the value of a supreme lesson for and example to mankind. But more than that, Christ's sacrificial death is objectively and sovereignly efficacious in the work of delivering man from the evil of sin and of reestablishing the union between God and man.

There is a doctrinal advance in Trent's explanation of that efficacy by way of the theological categories of merit and satisfaction. The council did not canonize any particular theory of merit or of satisfaction in relation to the work of the Redemption. Neither did it sanction any theory of sacrifice. The council and the subsequent official teaching of the Church do, however, direct that authentic Catholic theology will explain the manner of the Redemption within some valid conception of merit and satisfaction. That is, the work of Christ somehow earns or acquires the deliverance from sin and the reunion of man with God; Christ in his sacrificial death in some real way compensates for the evil of sin and thereby becomes for man "God-given wisdom, and justice, and sanctification, and redemption" (1 Cor 1:30). In employing these categories of merit and satisfaction, the Church has interpreted the data of revelation and sanctioned some principal currents of doctrine in tradition.

THE CHURCH FATHERS ON REDEMPTION

The thoughts of the FATHERS OF THE CHURCH on the mystery of the Redemption are unsystematic, and their views are not always clear-cut or precise. It is therefore difficult, if not impossible, to summarize their doctrine briefly, accurately, and without distortion.

Problems in Patristic Thought and Method. The Fathers' doctrine on the Redemption contains fixed elements derived from scripture, the creeds, and the liturgy. In the early Church, especially among the Greeks, the decisive moment of the Redemption in the life of the Incarnate Word is never pinpointed. In the West, the sufferings and death of Christ very soon became the events that specially focus the act of redemption, whereas in the theology of the East one finds a moving viewpoint, according to which it is sometimes the very fact of the Incarnation in which redemption is accomplished, sometimes the total life of Christ. Yet even in the East there is a marked emphasis on the death of Christ.

In the scriptures, the Redemption is something God does in and through Christ for the SALVATION of sinful men. But redemption is also something that Christ, as man, offers to God on man's behalf. The redemption is a work that takes place in God and in man with an effectivity, apparently, in opposite directions. The Greek Fathers tend to emphasize the first conception; the Latin Fathers, the second. Though both conceptions might be affirmed side by side, an emphasis on one tends to become an underestimation of the other.

Furthermore, a writer's general approach to the Christian religion will exercise a determining influence on his doctrine of the Redemption. If Christianity is conceived of primarily as a code of conduct, redemption through the teaching, example, and inspiration of Christ will become a key concept. If Christianity is considered a cult rather than a code, redemption will take place through some religious event or experience in which the faithful are to participate.

In the West, cult is considered generally after the manner of an exchange. Christ offers his humanity in loving obedience to the Father in the event of his sacrificial death to obtain from the Father for sinful mankind forgiveness of sins and eternal life. The faithful participate objectively in this exchange because Christ performs the work in the name of all mankind.

In the East, cult is a mystical transplantation rather than a sacrificial exchange. Man does not so much achieve something as experience something in cultic action. The Word of God is made flesh, and by living in human history he releases into the world of men a new dynamism that is able to effect a moral reorientation and a mystical transfiguration. As a power of moral reorientation, the Christian dynamism is able to rescue man from the power of evil. As a power of transfiguration, it is able to cure him of his involvement in sin, his weakness and death, and all the other deprivations consequent to the Fall. The faithful participate objectively in this power because it has been made available to the experience of all in the life of the Church. Such divergent conceptions will set a theology of redemption on different courses.

Views of the Fathers. Historians of doctrine—both Catholic and non-Catholic—trace different patterns of thought and divergent lines of progress in the development of the doctrine in tradition. Each of these authors can adduce long lists of impressive names and pages of patristic dicta to support his conclusions.

The monumental work of the French theologian Jean RIVIÈRE (1878–1946) defended a fundamental unity of doctrine in tradition against the works of Albrecht RITSCHL, Louis Auguste SABATIER, and Adolf von HARNACK. For the theology of Ritschl, see Ernest Bertrand's Une Nouvelle conception de la rédemption (Paris 1891); for Sabatier, see his Doctrine of the Atonement and Its Historical Evolution, translated by V. Leuliette (London 1904); for Von Harnack, see History of Dogma, translated by Neil Buchanan et al., 7 v. (New York 1961) 3:310–315; 5:55–60. These three authors underline the discordance between scripture and tradition, between the Greek and Latin Fathers, and between primitive Christianity and the Middle Ages. The disunity is certainly not so serious and sharp as Rivière's adversaries contended. But neither is there such an obvious unity as Rivière seemed to propose amid the multiplicity of divergent ideas found in the writings of the Fathers (see G. Oggioni in Problemi e orientamenti di teologia dommatica [Milan 1957], 2:312–314, 318).

Rivière ably defended a unity in the tradition of the East and the West, and of the ancient and the modern in exposing a line of doctrinal development that leads to a theory of vicarious moral satisfaction. But he did this at the expense of failing to integrate into a theology of the Redemption other important scriptural themes and significant developments in tradition. In a section titled "Definitive Organization in the Catholic Church," Rivière wrote, "Upon the basis of the Anselmian system, with some superficial modifications, the Catholic dogma of the Redemption rapidly took the form which it has today" (Dictionnaire de théologie catholique 13.2:1947).

Most Catholic theologians in the twenty-first century, however, find that judgment deficient and one-sided. There has been an extensive renewal of biblical studies in the Church and a return of theology to a critical study of the sources of the faith. This renewal and return have exerted a full and fruitful influence on the theology of the Redemption. It is being seen with an ever greater clarity that a theology of the Redemption that pays exclusive attention to the death of Christ and explains its redemptive value chiefly in terms of a moral satisfaction offered God for the sins of men is an unbalanced and impoverished theology. Besides, it is a theology not altogether faithful to the rich data in scripture and tradition.

REDEMPTION IN A DOCTRINAL CONTEXT

In the twentieth century, the doctrine of the Redemption began the process of an awakened and rapidly unfolding development. The development is the result of an effort to integrate the modern scholarship in scripture and the more recent critical studies on the history of doctrine. The development is also in terms of an extension of the field of inquiry as new questions, new methodology, and new contexts are introduced into the investigations. In view of this theological unfolding, it is not out of place to examine the doctrinal context of the Redemption.

"Context" in this sense refers to the galaxy of subjects, issues, and related divine and human facts that are to be related and integrated into a comprehensive theology of the Redemption. "Doctrinal," meanwhile, implies that what is said of these matters is verifiable in the commonly accepted doctrines of reputable theologians, biblical exegetes, and other scholars.

There are other reasons to examine this doctrinal context. First, the context provides a framework in which to organize the reflections of the more important Fathers of the Church. Second, the context affords a frame of reference in which to situate the systems of the theologians as well as those areas of present doctrinal development. The Redemption is the mystery of God's redeeming act in and through Christ whereby mankind is delivered from the evil of sin and reunited in grace with God. This general definition implies three fundamental and distinct subjects related in the mystery: (1) the redeeming activity of God in and through Christ;(2) the evil of sin; and (3) the reunion in grace. These subjects, in their theological implications, are the three dimensions, as it were, of the doctrinal context of objective redemption.

The Divine Redeeming Act. The Redemption must be considered as an act accomplished both by God and by Christ. There are two phases, as it were, in the salvific act of God's merciful love.

The Redeeming Act of God through Christ. The origin of the Redemption is the absolutely free love and MERCY OF GOD, who wills to incarnate his son and send him into the world and into human history to deliver mankind from the evil of sin and to reunite man with himself. This statement indicates that the initiative in the redeeming act is with God. The motive is God's free love and mercy offering for man's Redemption, nothing less than the gift of Himself. The means by which the redeeming act is accomplished is the Word made flesh in his human life. The purpose is to deliver man from the evil of sin in order to unite man with God. God's act is a deliverance from something and into something. It is a deliverance acquisition. God enables Christ as man to undertake and accomplish the work of deliverance and reunion by inspiring Christ with that love and obedience whereby the Word Incarnate freely performs in his life and in his humanity that work of liberation and ATONEMENT.

This affirmation declares that the divine redeeming activity is essentially performed by means of the human acts of the Word Incarnate motivated by love and obedience. As human acts performed in his humanity, these acts operate in the physical order. As inspired by love and obedience, these acts are operative in the moral order. Consequently, there are two parallel effectivities able to be considered in Christ's acts: a physical effectivity and a moral effectivity. As physical, Christ's acts are related to the effects that the very acts themselves produce as a result of their own operative efficiency. As moral, Christ's acts obtain a moral right that God acts to produce some effect.

God raises Christ from the dead in order that the crucified and risen Lord might be able to communicate to mankind his grace of deliverance and reunion. This proposition proposes that the act of God resurrecting Christ is an essential part of the activity of God redeeming, so that the sufferings and death of Christ are not to be considered as redemptive independently of the Resurrection. It implies besides that it is by means of the Death-Resurrection event, two aspects of one mystery, that Christ, "who was delivered up for our sins, and rose again for our justification" (Rom 4:25), becomes, for mankind, "God-given wisdom, and justice, and sanctification, and redemption" (1 Cor 1:30).

The Redeeming Act of Christ. Although the divine redeeming activity has its first and eternal origin in the love of the Blessed TRINITY for sinful man (Eph 2:4), in a second moment and in "the fullness of time God sent his Son ... that he might redeem ... that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal 4:4–5). Christ is the mediator of God's redeeming activity, becoming himself for mankind the cause of their deliverance from sin and the cause of their reunion with God in grace.

The Incarnate Word exercises this function of mediating the redemptive act of God in four ways: (1) in the fact of his becoming man; (2) in the mediation of his life as messiah-king, as prophet-teacher, and as high priest; (3) in the mediation of his death as victor, as redeemer, as priest-victim; and (4) in the mediation of his Resurrection as savior and as intercessor.

In the very fact of the Word of God's becoming man there is an assumption by the Word not only of a human nature but also of a redemptive history. The INCARNATION is an actual and decisive event, an intervention in the current of human history. It is an event capable, in itself, of interrupting the processes of human history and of setting history on the course of a new direction.

The redeeming activity of God is mediated by Christ as messiah-king. Christ establishes the KINGDOM OF GOD and the new covenant by making disciples and winning their faith, love, and loyalty. In making disciples and in giving them the new law, he establishes the lines of that community in which deliverance from the evil of sin and reunion with God might take place and, when realized in the members, might be lived in freedom.

As prophet-teacher, Christ instructs mankind in the way of God's salvific will, in the way of response to God. Christ points out the way of life and the way of death; what is true and what is a lie. Christ becomes for mankind the way, the truth, and the life in order that men might know how they are to be delivered from evil and from what evil they are to be liberated; how to be reunited with God and what the realities and terms of that union are.

As high priest, Christ establishes the new priesthood and the new cult so that, by means of the acts of cult, mankind might be enabled and inspired to hate the evil of sin and love the goodness of God.

The redeeming activity is mediated by Christ in his death as victor, as redeemer, and as priest-victim. This area of the doctrinal context bears the burden of the traditional theology of the Redemption. At this point should be set out, along general lines, the doctrine that, as variously interpreted by the theologians, is used to support their doctrinal theories.

Christ is considered as victor in his death from two points of view. In the first place, Christ is seen as victorious over the powers of evil itself. For although the death of Christ was plotted by Jews, pronounced by Pilate, and executed by Roman legionnaires, behind these men were the forces of evil itself. Jesus speaks not simply of his human assassins but of the "prince of this world" (Jn 14:30) and the "power of darkness" (Lk 22:53). Under this attack of his enemies, and even in the agony of his sufferings, Christ is victorious in his supreme resolution lovingly and obediently to do as the Father commanded (Jn 14:31). Christ dies but to rise on the third day.

Second, Christ is victor in his death because, by the power of his obedient charity, he is able to vanquish the objections and the revulsions of his human nature in the terrors of the CRUCIFIXION. It is in the real and historical circumstances of his death that Christ finds the opportunity for the full expression of his loving obedience (cf. Jn 15:13). It is in the actual circumstances of his suffering that Christ's human nature becomes fully actuated by the mighty power of his grace. As redeemer, Christ, in accepting his death out of love and obedience, accomplishes on behalf of mankind that work by means of which man is delivered from his complicity in, and his liability to, and his oppression by sin and death. As priest-victim, Christ offers himself through the bloody sacrifice of the cross, thereby reconciling sinful mankind to God.

How Christ as victor, redeemer, and priest-victim mediates the deliverance of man from sin and reunites him with God will be taken up shortly. How the victory affects man, how the work of deliverance is accomplished, and how the sacrifice is a reconciliation—all these questions are answered variously in the theological systems.

The redeeming activity is mediated, finally, by Christ as savior and intercessor. It is the grace of the crucified and risen Savior, the grace formed in him by the death-Resurrection event, which is to be communicated to the faithful. This grace, when shared, will make those "in Christ" die to the flesh and be transformed to live to Christ in the grace of his Resurrection and in the grace of the Spirit. Moreover, this redemption is mediated by the risen Christ insofar as it is the risen Christ, in the grace of his Resurrection, who is the efficient cause of man's justification (cf. Rom 4:25; 6:1–11; 8:23; Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae 3a, q. 56 a. 1–2).

Summary. The redemptive act is performed by God in and through Christ. The act of redeeming has its origin in God, who loves man and wills to be merciful to him. This act of God is mediated by means of the activity of the Incarnation. The redeeming activity of the Word made flesh is manifold and mediated by his very assumption of human nature, by the redemptive roles he exercised in his life, death, Resurrection, and Ascension to the Father. It is this totality that accomplishes, once and for all, the work that is able to deliver man from the evil of sin and to reunite him in grace with God.

The Evil of Sin. The second dimension of the doctrinal context is the subject of the evil of sin. A theology of redemption must explain how the salvific activity of God, mediated through Christ, is directed to the deliverance of man from sin in all the actual or possible aspects of evil in sin.

As introduction, it is to be remarked that sin is taken here in a biblical conception that names as sin anything defecting from what God wills to be realized in man. This conception of sin is altogether objective. It prescinds from the subject's attitude toward, or even knowledge of, the fact of this defect. It is assumed, however, that such an objective defect from God's will enters the world of man by a deliberate abuse of intellect and will. Sin is introduced by man's knowing and willing refusal to acknowledge God, and by his failure to choose the good that God wills for him. It is this conscious and deliberate refusal and failure that introduces the evil of sin into man's history, into his society, into his person, and consequently into his activity toward his destiny. The evil of sin, therefore, has four main aspects: (1) evil in relation to man's destiny, (2) evil in relation to his person, (3) evil in relation to his society, and (4) evil in relation to his history.

Sin in Relation to Man's Destiny. The evil of sin is related to man's destiny as a condition of fallen nature. This condition is caused by man's alienating himself from God in the act of his free choice. This act of free choice is an act of alienation when man, in his freedom, refuses to love and obey God. This act of alienation causes a state of alienation that implies a loss of the supernatural gifts of GRACE, a withdrawal of his life from God as his final destiny, and a choice of what he determines for himself to be his destiny.

From a moral point of view, man's act of alienating himself from God can be understood as an act dishonoring God, or as an act violating God's just will, or as an act injuring God's supreme majesty, or as an act offending God's infinite goodness. The state of man's alienation may be considered as a debt, since man is in default of payment to God of what is his due, or as a fault, inasmuch as man's refusal of love and obedience is a rupture of the right order between God and man.

It should be noticed that when the evil of sin is described either as the human act and state of alienation or as dishonor, offense, debt, and fault, the identical reality is being described. These are two viewpoints on the same thing. God's honor is verified in man's free love and obedience. Man pays his debt to God in retaining his gifts of grace. Man will never default if he seeks God above all things. The act of alienation and its consequent state describe a physical condition of man theologically considered. Dishonor, offense, debt, and fault describe those same realities in a transposition of understanding into the moral order.

Sin in Relation to Man's Person. The evil of sin in relation to man's person is, in the first place, damaging. The immediate result of man's alienation from God is his loss of the gifts of grace. Implied in his act of refusal to love God is a withdrawal of his life from God as his final destiny. In this act of withdrawal there is contained a choice of self. This act of choice, in which a man determines for himself what will be good for him introduces within his person a condition of disintegration and disability, so that his very nature as man is in a damaged condition.

There is a disintegration, an "infirmity," in what man is, because, having rejected what God wills for him, man is without that principle that must integrate both the various powers of activity within himself and his activity in relation to his fellow men. God's will determines man's nature to be what it is (cf. Summa theologiae 1a, q. 19 a. 4). It is man's correspondence with that divine will that alone is the principle of social and personal integration. Without this principle, men are left to the devices of their own wills and to the autonomous desires of their own persons.

Man is led in life by what St. PAUL would call the spirit of the flesh (cf. Rom 7:13–25; 8:5–13). Governed solely by his own will, man is in bondage to sin. He comes to fear himself and his fellow men (cf. Rom 8:15; 7:13–25). The refusal to obey God's will is a refusal of freedom: "Everyone who commits sin is a slave of sin" (Jn 8:34; cf. Rom 6:15–23). The damaged condition of man becomes a disability, a "weakness," besides. Once a man has lost the gifts of grace, he is unable to accomplish what God wills him to achieve. As alienated from God's will, man has cut himself off from the sources of "life" that God grants to those united with him. Man is left only with the resources of his nature now disintegrated. In Pauline terms, he is reduced to the existence of the "flesh," and his life becomes "death" (cf. Rom 7:13–25; 8:2).

Living without grace and in alienation from God, man has a disabled life. It is unproductive from God's point of view; it is a succession of nothing, to be terminated by physical death without the hope of eternal life. Physical death ratifies and makes final what has been taking place continually: a dying in man's person from the disintegration and the disability. The result of this damage is the fact that a man is without the powers to produce what the very nature of man requires for its own well-being: ordered, purposeful activity that is good for the whole man and for the common good of society. Sin disintegrates and disables man and through him sin disorders society.

Sin in Relation to Society. A society established by men inspired by the "lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" (1 Jn 2:16) becomes a fallen society. Like the sinful men who compose it, society incorporates within itself the alienation from God and damaged condition of men. Society is alienated from God as it seeks its own self-assigned destiny. Society becomes disintegrated as groups within society are at counter purposes. The social body becomes disabled in its efforts, by reason of its lack of unity in the quest for the common good. In Johannine terms, this society is the "world" that is "not from the Father" (1 Jn 2:16), that hates Christ (cf. Jn 15:18), that does not know the Word of God (cf. Jn 1:10).

It is such a society, perverted by its sinful members, that in its turn becomes a force of evil to pervert its members. In the dynamism of social influence, man is induced into sinful ways of living as his social milieu endorses his sin and provides him opportunity for the expression of his sinful person. Furthermore, fallen society enforces its mores on its members as it rewards those who adopt its standards and goals. The world loves what is its own (cf. Jn 15.19): "They are of the world; therefore of the world they speak and the world listens to them" (1 Jn 4:5).

Besides inducing its sinful members further into their personal sin, society also seduces its members into sin by engendering its ways of sin, conforming them to this world (Rom 12.2) so that they walk "according to the fashion of this world" (Eph 2:2). This seduction is imperceptible. It happens unconsciously, and without a man's being aware of it, he defects from the good God wills for him and becomes like a sheep gone astray (1 Pt 2:25). This seduction also happens prior to the time when a man is competent to exercise personal freedom. Personal sin mediates sin to society. Social sin and personal sin, as it has a social aspect, mediate sin into history.

Sin in Relation to History. The evil of sin in relation to history is a kind of deviation. This deviation takes place in two historical frames of reference: first, in the history of the race as a whole and, second, in the history of the individual. By history is meant this plain fact: The condition of man and his activity at one point of time in his existence affects his condition and his activity at succeeding points along the line of time.

There is an interlocking of the before and the after in man's historic existence. This interlocking is a process in which the before affects the after in terms of continuity, causality, immanence, and transcendence. There is in the process the effect of continuity, for the after is always, at least in something, contained in the same order of things as the before. What is before is the matrix of what comes after. There is the effect of causality because there is a correlation between the existence of the before and the existence of the after. What is before is the condition of possibility for what comes after. There is the effect of immanence insofar as there is some presence of the before in the after. What is before is a determinant of what comes after. Finally, there is the effect of transcendence inasmuch as the after is able, in something, to go beyond the before by means of the unique contribution of the present, the now.

First, in the actual history of the race, the sin of Adam at the beginning of history causes Adam's condition to be that of fallen man, alienated, damaged in his disintegration and disability. This condition is the beginning of a process in which the before affects the after and in which the after is able to transcend the before.

The first man passes on to those after him a condition like his own. Men are born alienated from God, damaged in view of God's will that man be elevated to grace. Man becomes disintegrated as soon as the choice of self, proceeding from his person deprived of grace and of nature's integrity, becomes actual. This process is repeated as generation follows generation. The process is also transposed to the social order as the social lines of a sinful society at any given point of time are affected by the social dimensions of a previous society in terms of continuity, causality, immanence. The process compounds itself through the effect of transcendence as both men and society make their unique contributions to the alienation and damage of sin. The result is a perpetuation of evil, a process of continual, ever-widening deviation from the will of God.

Second, when the evil of sin is considered in relation to the history of the individual, certain considerations must be introduced. In the context of concrete existence, the human individual may be considered a "person" insofar as he freely disposes of himself by personal decision and possesses his own reality in the act of making a free decision about himself. In this same method of considering man, the individual is also a "nature," that is, all in him that is given and is prior to this personal and free disposal of himself.

Nature is the object-given, the passivity, the reception, the spontaneous in man.

Nature is the condition of his possibility. Person is the subject-positing, the activity determining, the man in his freedom to determine himself as a whole in relation to what is good.

The terms "person" and "nature" with this meaning must be distinguished from these same terms as they have been traditionally used in scholastic theology. The use of the terms here is in the context of the modern metaphysics of existence. Some such terms are necessary because there is a need to distinguish between that in man which is given, which is structured and dynamic within him but without his freely disposing himself as such, and that in man which is such as it is by reason of his free disposition of himself. This is the distinction that common sense sees partially in the division between "what I am" and "what I want to be and try to be."

In the personal history of man and in the context of this dualism, nature is prior to person. Nature is acted upon and has its specific activity before a person acts to posit that which the subject freely wishes to be. This dynamism of nature is the necessary presupposition of the conscious, free decision of the person. And although the free decision of person should comprehend and transform the prior and spontaneous act of nature, the act of nature and the determinations already set up in nature come to affect the act of person.

It happens that before person in man is sufficiently awakened and before he is able to dispose of himself as a whole toward what is good simply, and before the inner core of the subject-person is able to posit what he will be and modify what he actually is, nature has already been determined in a deviation toward sin. Nature has already been determined as born alienated from God, damaged in view of God's will concerning the ELEVATION OF MAN to grace. Nature is potentially disintegrated and disabled because, lacking a positive conversion to God, the man is potentially converted to self.

The potential conversion to self becomes actual from three agencies. (1) The spontaneous dynamisms of "nature" tend to the particular good, not to good simply but to what is good in the here and now for the subject. Such tendencies induce the subject into acts of choice toward particular goods. And such a choice becomes equivalent to a choice of self, given the lack of a "personal" conversion to good simply. These acts lay down habituations and sets of determinations that are dynamic elements within the subject when the person is first called upon to make the free decision of person. Consequently, antecedent to the subject's determination of himself by personal decision, dynamic orientations are already there within the subject's nature toward specific self-related values. In the dynamism of these determinations, freedom of personal choice is jeopardized because the determinations of nature tend to specify the act of person in terms of a continuity with nature, a causality from nature and in an immanence of nature. Person penetrates nature with difficulty. Nature must be reformed and person fortified in its own dynamism before free decision succeeds completely in making its way without being deviated by nature. (2) Personal choice is further deviated by the influence on the subject by other sinful persons. (3) Personal determination is deviated by the influence exerted by sinful society. Until a person is able to take up a stand, command and comprehend its freedom, the human subject is related to others and to his society in a relationship of profound dependency. In this dependency nature is open and a person is susceptible to whatever modifications the external personal and social environment introduces. In the concrete circumstances of his human history, a man's personal freedom is jeopardized so that he is not able to overcome what he is by nature through the free decision of person.

Summary and Conclusions. It is in man and in man's world where sin is situated as something real and concrete. Sin in its reality is fundamentally something (or, to put it more accurately, something missing) in man. But given the facticity of sin in man, one can go on and consider the evil of sin in other categories of intelligibility.

From a moral point of view, the evil of sin is transposed in understanding and is seen as a rupture of the interpersonal relations between God and man. One goes on to speak of how God regards sinful man and how man dares to regard God. One speaks of the rights of the person offended, of the obligation and the manner of making a suitable satisfaction for the offense. The categories of explanation of sin and deliverance from it are contained within the field of amicable, interpersonal relationship.

From a juridical point of view, the evil of sin is transposed into the order of law. Sin is seen as a violation of law incurring the penalties that justice decrees as corrective or vindictive punishments. One speaks of the expiation of crimes, of penalties undergone to avoid the retributive punishments determined by law. The categories of explanation of sin and of man's deliverance from sin are retained within the context of jurisprudence.

These transpositions in the understanding of sin are an enrichment of the conceptions of the fact of sin. The mystery of sin is related to familiar analogies in human affairs. But these conceptions tend to become an impoverishment and, possibly, a distortion of the fact. Sin is a rupture of the relations between God and man. Sin is a violation of law. Nevertheless, the reach and applications of these conceptions fall short of comprehending the totality of aspects in the reality of man's sin. It is never theologically safe to discuss the WILL OF GOD and his law without looking at the reality and seeing it steadily. God's law is God's will. God's actual will is the cause of the reality of things such as they are.

It is necessary to understand sin not only in the moral and juridical orders but primarily in the physical order of man's actual condition. In this physical order, sin is something done to man. Sin is also something happening to man. If the Redemption is to be the deliverance from this evil, then redemption must be both something done (completed) and something happening (continued) to deliver him from all the aspects of reality in sin.

The Reunion in Grace. Like the subject of sin, the reunion in grace has several aspects insofar as the realities of this reunion are transposed into various frames of understanding. The reunion in grace may be considered in relation to the physical order, the moral order, the juridical order.

Reunion in the Physical Order. The reunion in grace has the aspect of identity with the deliverance from sin when this reunion is considered in the physical order. As God has determined things, there is no deliverance from sin without a reunion in grace (cf. Summa theologiae 1a2ae, q. 113 a. 2). If sin be an alienation, then mankind is delivered from this evil by the gift that will convert him to God and sustain that conversion. If sin be a damage, man is delivered by the gift that restores the integrity and the ability of his nature. If sin be a social perversion, society is delivered by the gift that reforms the lines of perverted society. If sin be a historical deviation, history is delivered by the gift that reorients the processes of human history.

In this frame of reference, theology must explain how the redeeming activity of Christ is related to the grace of conversion for mankind, the grace of personal restoration, the grace of social reform, and the grace of historical reorientation.

Reunion in the Moral Order. Sin is conceived, in the moral order, as an offense against God. Offense is given when several wills regard the same object and there is contrariety of choice and conflict of act between those wills. One person wills and acts contrary to the will and act of another person. This other person is offended if he has equal or superior rights over the subject. God wills that man love and obey him. In sinning, man refuses this love and obedience. God is offended by this will and act of man, for God has absolute rights over man. Man has the obligation to reverence his Creator.

To be reunited to God, man must willingly and with love do that which God loves more than he hates the offense. In this moral frame of reference, theology explains how the work of Christ is something God can love more than he hates the sin of mankind, so that by reason of this compensating work of Christ, satisfaction is made for the offense and grace is given to man by God.

Another consideration in the moral order understands sin as a fault or a debt. As a fault, sin is a defection destroying the right order that must obtain between God and man. From this aspect, theology shows how the work of Christ accomplishes a mutual reconciliation through the act of propitiation. As a debt, sin is the refusal of man to offer what he owes to his Creator. From a basis in this understanding, theology proposes how the work of Christ offers a payment or ransom, so that man, redeemed from his debt and solvent through Christ's work, may avail himself freely of God's grace for a life of love and obedience.

Reunion in the Juridical Order. Sin is understood in the juridical order as a violation of the just law of God that demands that the sinner be punished according to his crimes. From this conception, theology will describe how the work of Christ is an EXPIATION for the penalty due to sins so that, God's justice being satisfied, he may freely and lovingly give the grace of pardon to man.

It will be noticed that when the understanding of sin is transposed into the moral and juridical orders, the redeeming activity appears as a work that Christ as man offers to God on behalf of man. The effectivity of Christ's work has a term in (or at least a direction toward) God. Man comes to God in the Redemption achieved by Christ. However, when sin is seen in the physical order, the redeeming activity is a work done by God in Christ and offered to man. Both the term and the direction of the effectivity are immediately related to man. God comes to man in the Redemption performed by Christ.

These two conceptions of the Redemption point up a significant fact. In the moral order, it is man who must reunite himself to God, for God never ceases to love man. In the physical order, it is God who must reunite himself to man, because once man loses this supernatural union with God, there is nothing man can do to regain this union.

THEOLOGICAL REFLECTION ON INCARNATION ITSELF

In this section, and in the corresponding one that follows, the more important theories will be situated within the doctrinal context. The first dimension of the context, namely the divine redeeming activity in and through Christ, will provide the points of departure in this discussion.

Considered first will be the theories based on the Incarnation itself as redemptive. According to such theories, the Incarnation is like a new act of creation; or better, a new moment in the creational act of God when God purposes to create all things anew in Christ. This doctrine is a theme in the writings of St. John and St. Paul. In it the very coming of Christ and his life as a totality are understood as redemptive.

The Mystical Explanation. St. IRENAEUS (c. 125–202) founds his redemptive theory of RECAPITULATION in Christ on this scriptural basis. His insight was to conceive an identity of pattern and a parallelism of action between the course of man's history, beginning with creation and Adam's sin, and Christ's salvific life. Irenaeus traces a pattern of identity and a parallelism of contrasts in these two courses of history with a remarkable ingenuity. For Irenaeus, Christ recapitulates humanity. Christ is a compendium of human history by summarizing in his life the course of human history as willed by God and by reiterating in his life the human processes, being victorious where man fell in defeat.

The conception most notable in Irenaeus is the understanding that Christ comes and shares all the experiences of humanity, with only sin excepted. While people live their lives in the circumstances of human history, Christ conquers the forces of evil at work in the world, thereby reversing the processes of human history. Instead of man's history leading him to sin and death, by the work of Christ, those men who are united with him are brought to divinization and immortality.

The Realistic Explanation. Modern theology returns to this idea initiated by St. Irenaeus and echoed by TERTULLIAN and St. METHODIUS. In becoming man, Christ entered the world formed by the history of apartness from God. This alienation causes "sin and death" (in the Pauline eschatological sense of definitive separation from God). Although Christ could not be touched by the moral guilt of sin, he took upon himself the historic conditions of mankind's sinful existence. He came "in the likeness of sinful flesh" (Rom 8:3) and "did not consider being equal to God a thing to be clung to, but emptied himself, taking the nature of a slave and being made like unto men" (Phil 2:7). He became "one tried as we are in all things except sin" (Heb 4:15), and he even "learned obedience from the things that he suffered" (Heb 5:8).

In his Incarnation, Christ as man chose a self-emptying, a condition in which the fullness of his grace was not able to have its full effects. It was the very life history of the Incarnation in the actual unfolding of his life that provided, under God's providence, those opportunities permitting the full expression of his grace and those conditions allowing the Spirit of God to penetrate fully and to possess entirely his created nature. In this abasement, Christ accepted a historic solidarity with the sinful human race.

In his book The Resurrection (1960), the French Redemptorist F. X. Durrwell writes that "the redemption of human nature is a drama unfolding first of all in Christ. It takes place in him as a sanctifying transformation from the state of sinful flesh to the holiness of divine life which is its direct opposite" (p. 58). This act of God transforming the humanity of Christ—in the circumstances of his lifetime from the state of sinful flesh to full participation in the divine life—is the redemptive act mediated by Christ to sinful man for the reorientation of human history. The redeeming act of God is not a single, static act. It is a continual irruption into history: first into Christ's history, and then, through him—into the history of mankind. This redemption begins with the first moment of the Incarnation and spans the lifetime of Christ, so that the life of Christ as a unit has the aspect of efficiency in relation to the deliverance from the evil of sin and to the return in grace in their historical dimensions.

The Moralistic Explanation. Another theological viewpoint that conceives the Incarnation in its totality as the cause of man's redemption is the so-called moralistic, or exemplarist, theory. This theory considers the life of Christ as the supreme example of how man is to encounter the circumstances of life, and how God is prepared to act to deliver man from sin and to unite man to himself. In this conception, redemption is accomplished primarily by God's grace, and only secondarily through the revelation, example, and inspiration in the life of Christ. The life of Christ is a work performed by God in humanity to be seen and considered by man and thereby to become the occasion for faith in God's redemptive act. Christ's life is a living lesson of faith and a lesson for living the free gift of faith offered men by God.

The theory, stated in such general terms, has a scriptural basis and is represented in the writings of the Fathers, particularly IGNATIUS, CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA, the APOLOGISTS in general, ORIGEN, and AUGUSTINE. The theory is valid because the example and teaching of Christ are redemptive insofar as there is presented objectively for all mankind the revelation of God's redemptive will and that source of inspiration to motivate men to respond to God's saving grace.

No Catholic theologian will question the fidelity of this theory to scripture and tradition until it is pressed to the conclusion that the life of Christ has the value only of an example, that the efficacy of his life is exclusively that of revelation and inspiration. The theologian Peter ABELARD (1079–1142) seems to have held this view, and later the Socinians also put it forth. In the twentieth century it became the preferred theory of many liberal Protestant theologians, who were following either the current of nineteenth-century rationalism or the existentialist interpretations of Christianity fostered by the German theologian Rudolf BULTMANN (see Rivière 1909, 1:18–33; Malevez 1958, pp. 67–117).

Christ as Messiah-King and High Priest. Although no redemptive theory has been elaborated on the specific doctrine of Christ as messiah-king and high priest, modern theology would insist upon integrating into the theology of the Redemption Christ's life activity of making disciples and establishing the foundations of that community of life and cult wherein the deliverance from the evil of sin might take place and the reunion, once begun, might be fostered and sustained. It is Christianity—seen as the community formed by Christ—that becomes redemptive of society's perversion. The Christian community, by means of the dynamism of social influence, counters and corrects the seducing influence of the "world." This is an area of present doctrinal development.

THEOLOGICAL REFLECTION ON CHRIST AS VICTOR, REDEEMER, AND VICTIM

The redeeming activity of God is mediated by Christ in his death as victor, as redeemer, and as victim. This doctrinal statement embraces five of the seven scriptural themes on redemption. It is, besides, a doctrinal summary of the greater part of the official teaching of the Church. As well, it is a compendium of the central body of doctrine presented by the Fathers and the theologians and is a foundation for several theories of the Redemption. Only the barest outline of these systems is offered here.

Christ as Victor. Christ's victory over the devil, "sin and death," is a theme from scripture, and from the earliest times there was a tradition of developing a theory of the Redemption around this favorite theme or idea. The theme began to be developed as early as St. Ignatius, and it was carried in the current of tradition both in the East and in the West until the time of St. THOMAS AQUINAS.

The Devil's Rights. The theory of the devil's rights, as it has been called, has almost as many variations as there are writers handling it. But fundamental to the doctrine is the representation (this is a product of image-thinking) of a contest between Christ and the DEVIL, who holds man in the bondage of "sin and death." In the theory, sin and death are personifications of the dynamic forces of evil within man's life and the allies of the devil. Christ conquers sin because the devil cannot tempt Christ from his resolution to obey even in the terrors of the Crucifixion. Christ conquers death in his rising from the dead in divine power. As a result of Christ's victory, the devil is a vanquished foe of man. God delivers all those united to Christ the Victor from the power of the evil one.

When the theory of the devil's rights is understood in sympathy with image-thinking, the theory appears to be an effort to explain how the work of Christ delivers man from that evil of sin that is nonpersonal and beyond the evil present only in the disordered and deliberate will of the individual. Such a nonpersonal and transcendent evil is the evil of sin in its social and historical aspects.

Person versus Nature. A new development in theology would see the victory of Christ in another way. In the actual assumption of the human nature by the Word, Christ's human nature is in the condition of "sinful flesh." This condition allows that—although Christ is personally sinless, and although his humanity is endowed with a fullness of grace—he will suffer unto death in his humanity in performing the will of God. This suffering is significant. The very fact that Christ is able to suffer is evidence of the fact that nature in Christ is able to have its own determinations—its own "will" as St. Thomas calls it (cf. Summa theologiae 3a, q. 18 a. 3–4). St. Thomas also quotes St. JOHN DAMASCENE to the effect that "the divinity of Christ permitted his humanity to do and to be done to in whatever manner is proper to human nature" (ibid. 3a, q. 46 a. 8).

Therefore, in the terrors of the Crucifixion (and even in the less difficult situations of Christ's life), nature in Christ is able to protest. Pain and sorrow are the signs of nature's objections, of the protest that nature does not want that which both external causes and personal decision force upon it. The Crucifixion was the external condition that nature in Christ violently refused, as is apparent in the agony in the garden (Lk 22:39–45). But the mighty act of free decision of Person in Christ, fortified by divine love and obedience, conquers the act of nature in Christ's obedient choice of his death. This act of free decision in Christ has, as its first effect, a disposition of nature itself. Nature is penetrated by person, and person succeeds in having its way. "By sending his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh [that is, with a nature able to object and protest to what is concretely to be performed to fulfill God's will] he has condemned [conquered] sin in the flesh" (Rom 8:3).

Christ as Redeemer. In the present context, redeeming means specifically the act of delivering from sin. There are three general theories explaining the deliverance of mankind from sin by the death of Christ the Redeemer.

Substitutional Penal Expiation. The evil of sin may be conceived primarily in the juridical order, as a violation of the divine law that decrees rewards for virtue and punishment for vice. Analogies from jurisprudence are employed to illustrate this theory. Redemption is accomplished, according to this system, by the objective fulfillment of divine laws eternally enacted. Divine law decrees that for sins committed there must be punishment equal to the crime. If the sinner does not repent, the punishment is inflicted upon him. Should he repent, he must voluntarily accept punishment to make up for his evil act. As voluntarily accepted, the punishment becomes satisfaction rather than vindictive punishment.

In the case of man's sin, adequate satisfaction is impossible. Deprived of grace, man is forever unable to love God as he ought. Besides, as the crime of a creature against his Creator, man's sin takes on an infinite magnitude. Since God cannot forgive sins according to his justice until an equitable satisfaction is made, man is hopelessly in his sin and under the threat of punishment. Yet because God loves man, even when they are sinners (see Rom 5:9), God decrees in mercy to send his son, who in his sufferings and death offers the satisfaction that divine justice demands. Christ, as divine and sinless, offers an infinite satisfaction. Christ, as man, takes our place and suffers the punishment divine justice imposes for the sins of mankind.

Such an explanation can find some justification in scripture. It has been proposed by many Fathers, theologians, and orators. It was employed especially by the Protestant reformers, who adapted it to their principle of imputed justice. For Martin LUTHER and John CALVIN, all the sins of mankind were gathered and laid on Christ. He became their sin in order that they might become his righteousness. As the bearer of sin in the sinners' stead, he had to suffer the punishment for sin, viz., God's wrath. Indeed, he suffered the very pains of hell. Thus he paid the price of sin. His punishment makes satisfaction to God's justice so that mankind might be freed of guilt's condemnation and punishment. Jesus doubly took the place of humanity: He fulfilled the Law by living it perfectly in love, thus bestowing his righteousness on mankind by imputation, and he suffered the curse of sin, Godforsakenness, in humanity's place. Luther admitted that in Christ the greatest joy accompanied the greatest sorrow, and later Lutheran theologians interpreted Jesus's descent into hell as a victorious liberation of the Old Testament just, thus rejoining the traditional Catholic view, but subsequent Calvinist theologians retained Calvin's view (see IMPUTATION OF JUSTICE AND MERIT).

At its best, this system of penal substitution proposes to the faithful the doctrine of the inexorability of punishment for sin and the necessity of satisfaction. It presents the cross of Christ as the great manifestation of the evil of sin. But when it affirms that Christ assumed the punishment so that man would not have to suffer it, or that Christ offered satisfaction so that men need not make it, the theory is theologically unsound. When it affirms that God delivered Christ to his cross to manifest to the world not only the evil of sin but also how severely sin is punished, this is nothing less than terrorism.

If sin is inexorably punished (and it is), this is because the sinner himself passes a sentence of suffering upon himself and his world in his very sin, which damages himself and contributes to the perversion of his society and to the deviation of history. God need do nothing but let the laws of man work themselves out. If satisfaction is necessary, it is because even after repentance a man must positively do something to compensate for the evil done in his nature by the act of sin, to his society and to human history. If the cross of Christ is a manifestation of the evil of sin, this is because it was evil men who hated the person who would save them from themselves.

But the theory has an insight. It can be said that Christ takes away the punishment due to sin and makes satisfaction in man's place because, by reason of Christ's work, man will not have to suffer the kind of punishment from sin that would have been man's fate if Christ had not come to bring grace and truth to the world. It can be said that Christ makes satisfaction for sin in man's place because, by reason of the grace of Christ for man's person, his society, and his history, man is not required to compensate for the evil he perpetrated by his sin in the manner that would have been necessary (indeed, impossible) had not Christ come "to serve and give his life as a ransom for many" (Mk 10:45).

Vicarious Moral Satisfaction. In this system, the evil of sin is considered in the moral order as an offense of God, destroying the interpersonal relationship between God and man. The theory intends to explain why God loves sinful man and forgives his sins while he is yet a sinner and offers the grace of restoration.

God sends his son into human nature and inspires in him an indomitable charity for and obedience to God and a boundless love for mankind. United to mankind by the bonds of flesh and blood and charity, Christ is willed by God to become the head of humanity, so that what Christ does is done for himself and also on behalf of his members, who are as one mystical person with him (Summa theologiae 3a, q. 48 a.2 ad 1). Christ, in the name of mankind and on his behalf, offers God his love and obedience in his sufferings and death. It is this offering that God can love more than he hates the offense of mankind.

Christ, as head of humanity, is given grace not only for himself but also for his members, and his works are referred to himself and to others as the works of another man are referred simply to himself (ibid. 3a, q. 48 a. 2). Consequently, since God gives as a reward for a man's actions that for which he gave him the power to act (ibid. 1a2ae, q. 114 a. 1), and since God gives grace to Christ for the attainment of salvation, Christ merits glorification for himself and salvation for all men (ibid. 3a, q. 48 a. 1; q. 49 a. 6).

Such is St. Thomas's doctrine, simply stated and without the many doctrinal implications to be drawn out by the application of other principles in his thought. This theory avoids all the improprieties of the theory of substitutional juridical satisfaction. The doctrine centers on the love and obedience of Christ as the cause of man's deliverance from sin and his reunion in grace. The efficiency of Christ's loving obedience in the delivering of man from sin is by way of moral compensation or satisfaction. The efficiency of Christ's obedient love in reconciling man with God is by way of merit. Satisfaction and merit are considered as operative in the moral order. Christ performs the redemptive work not in place of mankind but rather on its behalf, for he is united to mankind in a moral solidarity.

Representative Physical Satisfaction. This theory transposes the understanding of redemption from the moral order to the physical order. This transposition is encouraged by St. Thomas's doctrine of "capital grace," which affirms that it is the very grace resident in Christ, in its physical entity, that becomes the source and cause of grace for all men (ibid. 3a, q. 8; De veritate, q. 29 a. 4–5; Comp. theol., 214). Put another way, it is the Sacred Humanity in its physical entity as "graced" that is the conjoined instrument of God in the production of grace in all mankind (Summa theologiae 3a, q. 13 a. 2; q. 19 a. 1; q. 62 a. 5).

With this doctrine as the premise, this theory affirms that it is the actual event of the Crucifixion that forms the grace in Christ so as to be the source of grace delivering men from the evil of sin. In other words, it is the historic event of Christ's sufferings and death in which the Sacred Humanity becomes in a fullness the instrument of God for the production of that grace which will deliver man from sin.

The act of person in free decision has as its first effect a disposition of the subject himself. Christ's personal act of loving obedience sustained in his sufferings overcomes the act of nature that, as nature, refuses the cross. The effect of this act within Christ himself is a victory of transformation of the nature of Christ himself, so that nature joins with Person in the cry of victory: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit" (Lk 23:46). "It is consummated!" (Jn 19:30). This transformation in Christ is real and pertains to what Christ actually is as man. It is in this transformation that the grace of Christ becomes disposed so as to be the grace for all mankind delivering them from sin. What happened to Christ was physical.

What happened in Christ is also satisfactory in the sense that the redemptive power of Christ and his grace more than offset the power of evil in mankind. "Where the offense has abounded, grace has abounded yet more" (Rom 5:20). God can love what Christ does in loving obedience more than he hates the evil of man's sins because Christ's loving obedience, when communicated to mankind, actually effects more good in the world than sin causes evil.

What happened in Christ is, furthermore, meritorious, for the transformation in the Sacred Humanity is that very effect which God gave Christ the power to accomplish. Merit is not only a right to a reward for an act performed; merit is also the accomplishment and the possession of the actual effects of one's acts.

Finally, Christ in this transformation is representative rather than vicarious or substitutional. The transformation itself is representative in the order of signs, for what happened in Christ manifests what must happen in man in order that he be delivered from sin, namely, a death to the flesh when person, fortified by grace, resists to death the sinful ways of nature. Christ himself is representative in the order of physical reality, for Christ, in solidarity with human history, is the event that reorients history's deviation; in solidarity with human society, he is that social person who is able to reshape the form of social living; in solidarity with men, he is that person who is able to convert man's person and restore his nature.

Christ as Priest-Victim. Sacred revelation presents the death of Christ in the context of sacrifice. Christ mediates the redemptive activity of God as priest-victim. Scripture reveals simply the fact that the death of Christ is a sacrifice of reconciliation of man to God. The text does not reveal precisely how the death of Christ is to be understood as sacrificial. Neither has the Church designated any precise sacrificial theory in which the faithful are to understand this sacrifice.

When theologians attempt to explain the death of Christ in the context of sacrifice, there are two doctrinal controls that guide their explanations. First, the sacrifice of Christ must be explained in some continuity with the ritual of sacrifice in the Old Law, the figure of things to come. Second, the sacrifice of the cross must be explained in a coherence with the doctrine of Christ's death as redemptive in delivering mankind from sin.

Sacrifice of Expiation. If the theory of the redemptive death is cast in the juridical order, the death of Christ will be understood as a sacrifice of expiation. Theologians who hold this theory see Christ's death in an analogy with the expiatory sacrifices of the Old Law, in which (in these writers' view) an animal was symbolically loaded with the sins of the people and then ritually slain. The animal is substituted for sinful man, and man, seeing the death of the animal, may understand what his sins deserve and how severe are God's punishments. By means of this sacrifice, God's anger is appeased and his wrath averted.

This theory has had many adherents among both Catholics and Protestants, especially among the reformers themselves. But biblical research has questioned, indeed attacked, this understanding of the death of Christ in terms of such an expiatory sacrifice. It is affirmed in this theory that the sins of mankind are imputed to Christ. God permits, even wills, that Christ be slain both to appease his anger and to manifest to the world the evil of sin and the fact that God will not forgive without satisfaction being made either by the innocent or by the guilty. It does not matter. This is nothing short of amorality, even immorality. In such an understanding of the Redemption, God does not keep his own command to man to forgive without demanding satisfaction (Mt 5:38–48).

Sacrifice of Propitiation. If the redeeming death is understood in the moral order, then the sacrifice of the cross is conceived of as a sacrifice of propitiation or reconciliation. In the Old Testament sacrifices, according to this doctrine, there was a victim (something suitably representing man), an offering (to represent man's gift of himself to God), the act of immolation (some sacred action done to the victim to express man's irrevocable dedication of himself to God), an official priest to offer the sacrifice in the name of the community that participates in the victim offered.

St. Thomas fits these essential sacrificial lines over the offering of Christ on the cross. Christ is a suitable victim representing man, as having his humanity to offer and being the head of humanity. There is an offering in Christ's willingly going to his death, and there is an act of immolation in his fatal Crucifixion. Christ himself is the priest offering what is most acceptable to God. The faithful are able to participate in the victim through Christ's gift of the Eucharist (Summa theologiae 3a, q. 48 a. 3).

Modern Thought. A more recent trend in Catholic thought finds something more involved in Christ's sacrifice. After investigating the idea of sacrifice in the Old Testament, many theologians are recasting the conception of the immolative act, and in this recasting the significance of sacrifice is somewhat modified. Sacrifice is a ritualistic expression of man's dedication to God. It is, besides, an effort to attain an actual union with the divinity. Man offers himself in sacrifice, and God is understood as actually accepting man by giving him a participation in the divinity in and through the sacrifice itself.

In the moral order, the purpose of sacrifice is conceived of as man's effort to please God. In the physical order, the purpose of sacrifice is to effect in man what is pleasing to God, to produce in man what is in itself the reconciliation with God.

Transposing the understanding of sacrifice into the physical order, the act of immolation has as its purpose the ending of the form of existence the victim had had hitherto in order that the oblata might become sacred to God. The act of immolation signified a transfer of the profane and human thing to divine ownership. The rite was a sort of consecration, an invitation for God to make it his own and transform it into something divine. The offerers expected God to accept the gift, sanctify it, and impregnate it with his divinity, so that all those who partook of it might share in the divine holiness and be in communion with God.

The rite of immolation has two moments. First, there is the act of transfer, when the gift is taken out of the realm of the profane and placed in the realm of the divine. Second, there is the act of transformation, when the gift is sanctified in God's very acceptance of it.

Applying this doctrine to the sacrifice of the cross, the act of transfer is verified in the following manner. Christ's consent to undergo his suffering is the offering of the victim of sacrifice. The historical event of his Crucifixion presented Christ with that final and full opportunity for the free act of Person to transform nature by bringing nature into full submission to and perfect acceptance of the will of Person. This transformation of nature is the transfer of the Sacred Humanity from the condition of "likeness of sinful flesh." In the death of Christ, the first moment of the immolative act is accomplished.

It is the Resurrection in which the second moment is fulfilled, when God raises Christ from the dead and his humanity is transformed by the fullness of participation in the divine life and the complete possession of the Spirit. As Durrwell writes:

> In the light of [this] sacrificial theory, the glorification of Christ appears as a necessary phase of his oblation. It is the completion without which his sacrifice is essentially mutilated and is therefore no sacrifice—just as there can be no movement that does not arrive anywhere, and no gift where there is no one to accept it. His glorification not only completes his sacrifice in itself, but also makes it beneficial; in the divinized victim, God communicates himself to the offerer and to all who eat at the altar. (Durrwell 1960, p. 76)

Redemption Mediated by the Risen Christ. One last point of the doctrinal context needs be discussed: the mediation of the Redemption through the Resurrection of Christ. St. Thomas considered the Resurrection, as well as the sufferings and death of Christ, as being an integral part of Christ's redemptive work (Summa theologiae 3a, q. 56). But St. Thomas's contemporaries and his successors made little of this doctrine as long as the theology of Redemption was dominated by the concepts of merit and satisfaction, as understood in the juridical and moral orders.

The contribution of modern biblical research to the theology of the Redemption is the growing understanding of the data demonstrating that, in the mind of St. Paul, the Resurrection is inseparable from the Passion in the work of salvation. Christ "was delivered up for our sins, and rose again for our justification" (Rom 4:25). Following out the line of thought, in which the Redemption is conceived of as something happening in the physical order, the Resurrection is the event in human history that reorients its course of deviation. The risen Christ becomes the redemptive source of social reform and the cause of personal conversion and restoration.

The event of the Resurrection reorients the course of human history, for it is an intervention by God through an event that interrupts the course of continuity, causality, and immanence set up in history by sin. In resurrecting Christ, God establishes him as a new principle of continuity. By the power of the risen Christ, God sends his Spirit into men to enable them to do the same work in history that Christ himself performed in his lifetime. A new order of things begins. In the Resurrection, Christ has the power to communicate his nature to men, the nature transformed by grace in his Resurrection. A new form of man's existence begins. Through the Resurrection, Christ is enabled to communicate his Person to men in the mystery of Christ (cf. Col 1:24; Eph 3:17; Rom 16:25–27). A new immanence of God in Christ begins in man's history.

The risen Christ is the source of social reform as being the head of the Church. Christ engenders in it his Spirit, his life, and his Person, enabling it to deliver men from the evil of sin and reunite them to God through its preaching of him, through its administration of his sacrifice and Sacraments, and through its life for and service of mankind.

The risen Christ is the source of personal restoration and conversion to God, because the grace formed in the Crucifixion and communicated to Christ's members is a grace enabling them to die to the flesh. As a grace filled with the Spirit in the Resurrection, it is a grace enabling men to live unto God in the fullness of the Spirit. "Jesus Christ our Lord was established Son of God in power according to the spirit of holiness by resurrection from the dead, through whom we have received grace and apostleship to bring about the obedience to faith among all the nations" (Rom 1:4–6).

VATICAN II AND THEREAFTER

The Second Vatican Council often employed the language of redemption to indicate Christ's work and its effects. Whoever is saved is saved "in view of Christ the Redeemer," who by his obedience accomplished redemption by the sacrifice of the cross, which is applied to men in the Mass and sacraments. By Christ's death all men are somehow put into salvific relation with the Paschal Mystery so that the Church, Christ's body, becomes "as it were the sacrament or sign and instrument of intimate union with God and of the unity of the whole human race" (Lumen gentium, 1–3; Gaudium et spes, 22).

Despite the council's teaching, some theologians have denied that Jesus saw his death as sacrificial. René Girard did so after interpreting sacrifice as a primitive psychological mechanism whereby a community transfers its violence upon a surrogate victim, or scapegoat, in order to attain unanimity in its murder. Heavily influenced by the agnostic presuppositions of Bultmannian exegesis, Jon Sobrino likewise maintained that Jesus did not consider his death a sacrifice. In this view, the Last Supper was only a thanksgiving celebration. Seeking to explain how salvation might encompass all men, Jacques DUPUIS postulated a Logos asarkos in whom men might participate without knowing of the Paschal Mystery and allowed for complementary ways of salvation.

While these theories eviscerate the cross, Hans Urs von BALTHASAR exaggerated in another direction. Claiming that the Apostles' Creed's "descent into hell" designates Christ's experience of hell, viz., total abandonment by the Father, he postulated that such a descent enables Christ to empty hell; consequently a Christian can and should hope that all men will be saved.

To avoid many errors about Jesus as the sole mediator of salvation redeeming mankind by the cross, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith issued the declaration Dominus Iesus (2000) and published subsequent notifications cautioning against ambiguities in the views of Dupuis (2001) and Sobrino (2006). A Christian understanding of sacrifice starts from the fullness of Jesus's self-giving and interprets less perfect examples as pointing to him. This blunts Girard's critique. Scripture refers too often to sacrifice and redemption to be ignored. Balthasar's interpretation of the descent into hell runs contrary to Catholic tradition, whereby Jesus preaches the liberating gospel in the limbo of the Fathers (Catechism of the Catholic Church, pars. 632–634).

Scripture also implies that Judas doomed himself to hell (Mk 14:21; Jn 17:12), and that others are and will be sent there (Mt 7:13f, 12:41f, 13:41f.49f, 25:41–46; Jn 1:5, 5:29; 2 Thes 2:9–12; 2 Cor 2:15–16; 1 Pt 4:17–18; 2 Pt 2, 3:7; Jd 6–23; Rv 20:10). No one is obliged to hope for the impossible, though one should hope and pray for the conversion of individuals. But von Balthasar's opinion seriously relativizes the human analogate of justice, and the emptying of hell threatens to trivialize human decisions. In 1995 the INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL COMMISSION issued a balanced appraisal of redemption in Some Questions on the Theology of Redemption.

SEE ALSO ADAM; ARTICLE OF FAITH; BODY, THEOLOGY OF; CHRISTOCENTRISM; CHRISTOLOGY; FORGIVENESS OF SINS; FREE WILL; GRACE (IN THE BIBLE); GRACE (THEOLOGY OF); GRACE, THE STATE OF; GRACE AND NATURE; IMPUTATION OF JUSTICE AND MERIT; KENOSIS; MAN; NATURE (IN THEOLOGY); PASSION OF CHRIST, I (IN THE BIBLE); PASSION OF CHRIST, II (DEVOTION TO); PELAGIUS AND PELAGIANISM; PERSON (IN THEOLOGY); REDEMPTION (IN THE BIBLE); RESURRECTION OF CHRIST; SACRIFICE OF THE CROSS; SATISFACTION OF CHRIST; SIN (IN THE BIBLE); SIN (THEOLOGY OF); SOCINIANISM; SOTERIOLOGY; TRINITY, HOLY; WILL; WORD.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Carl Andresen, "Erlösung," in Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum, edited by Theodor Klauser and Ernst Dassmann (Stuttgart, Germany 1941–1950), 6: 54–219.

Gustaf Aulén, Christus victor, translated by A. G. Hebert (New York 1931).

Hans Urs von Balthasar, Dare We Hope "That All Men Be Saved"? , translated by D. Kipp and L. Krauth (San Francisco 1988).

Hans Urs von Balthasar, Theo-drama: Theological Dramatic Theory, translated by G. Harrison, 5 vols. (San Francisco 1988–1998).

Hans Urs von Balthasar, Mysterium Paschale: The Mystery of Easter, translated by A. Nichols (Edinburgh 1990).

Ernst Bammel, et al., Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart (Tübingen, Germany 1957–1965), 2: 576–600.

Joseph Bonsirven, The Theology of the New Testament, translated by S. F. L. Tye (Westminster, Md. 1963).

Alberto Cozzi, Gesù Cristo tra le religioni: Mediatore dell'originario (Assisi, Italy 2005).

Adhémar D'Alès, Dictionnaire apologétique de la foi catholique, edited by A. L'Alès (Paris 1911–1922), 4: 542–582.

P. De Letter, "Theology of Satisfaction," Thomist 21 (1958): 1–28.

Heinrich Denzinger, and Peter Hünermann, Enchiridion symbolorum definitionum et declarationum de rebus fidei et morum 40th ed. (Freiburg 2005).

Avery Dulles, "The Death of Jesus as Sacrifice," Josephinum Journal of Theology 3, no. 2 (1996): 4–17.

Jacques Dupuis, Jesus Christ at the Encounter of World Religions, translated by R. Barr (Maryknoll, N.Y. 1991).

Jacques Dupuis, Toward a Christian Theology of Religious Pluralism (Maryknoll, N.Y. 1997).

F. X. Durrwell, The Resurrection: A Biblical Study, translated by Rosemary Sheed (New York 1960).

F. X. Durrwell, In the Redeeming Christ, translated by Rosemary Sheed (New York 1963).

Robert S. Franks, The Work of Christ (New York 1962).

Josef Gewiess, et al., Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche, edited by Josef Hofer and Karl Rahner (Freiburg, Germany 1957–1965), 3: 1016–1030.

René Girard, Things Hidden Since the Foundation of the World, translated by S. Bann and M. Metteer (Stanford, Calif. 1987).

Joachim Gnilka and Werner Dettloff, Handbuch theologischer Grundbegriffe, edited by H. Fries (Munich, Germany 1962–1963), 1: 303–319.

Prosper Grech, "Protestant Theories Explaining the Redemption," Theology Digest 5 (1957): 183–188.

Thomas Hywel Hughes, The Atonement: Modern Theories of the Doctrine (London 1949).

International Theological Commission, "Alcune Questioni sulla Teologia della Redenzione," in Documenti 1969–2004 (Bologna, Italy 2006), 474–542.

Bernard J. F. Lonergan, De Verbo Incarnato, 3rd ed. (Rome 1964).

Stanislao Lyonnet, De peccato et redemptione, 2 vols. (Rome 1957–1961).

Stanislao Lyonnet, "Conception paulinienne de la rédemption," Lumière et vie 36 (1958): 35–66.

Stanislao Lyonnet, "De notione redemptionis," Verbum Domini 36 (1958): 129–146.

Stanislao Lyonnet, "La Valeur sotériologique de la résurrection du Christ selon saint Paul," Gregorianum 39 (1958): 295–318.

Leopold Malevez, The Christian Message and Myth: The Theology of Rudolf Bultmann, translated by Olive Wyon (Westminster, Md. 1958).

A. Mèdebielle, "Expiation," in Dictionnaire de la Bible, suppl. 3, edited by L. Pirot (Paris 1928), 3: 1–262.

Luigi Moraldi, Espiazione sacrificale e riti espiatori nell'ambiente biblico e nell'Antico Testamento, Analecta Biblica 5 (Rome 1956).

Alyssa Lyra Pitstick, Light in Darkness: Hans Urs von Balthasar and the Catholic Doctrine of Christ's Descent into Hell (Grand Rapids, Mich. 2007).

Louis Richard, Le Mystère de la rédemption (Tournai, Belgium 1959).

Alan Richardson, The Interpreters' Dictionary of the Bible, edited by G. A. Buttrick (Nashville, Tenn.), 168–181.

Jean Rivière, "Redemption," in Dictionnaire de théologie catholique, edited by Alfred Vacant, et al. (Paris 1903–1950), Vol. 13, pp. 1912–2004.

Jean Rivière, The Doctrine of the Atonement, translated by Luigi Cappadelta (London 1909).

Jean Rivière, Le Dogme de la rédemption dans la théologie contemporaine (Albi, France 1948).

Leopold Sabourin, Rédemption sacrificielle (Bruges, Belgium 1961).

Jon Sobrino, Christology at the Crossroads, translated by J. Drury (Maryknoll, N.Y. 1978).

Jon Sobrino, Jesus the Liberator: A Historical-Theological Reading of Jesus of Nazareth, translated by P. Burns and F. McDonagh (Maryknoll, N.Y. 1993).

Vincent Taylor, Jesus and His Sacrifice: A Study of the Passion-Sayings in the Gospels (London 1937).

Vincent Taylor, The Atonement in New Testament Teaching, 3rd ed. (London 1958).

Phillippe de la Trinitè, What Is Redemption?, translated by Anthony Armstrong (New York 1961).

H. E. W. Turner, The Patristic Doctrine of Redemption (London 1952).

Vatican Council II, Lumen gentium, On the Church (Dogmatic Constitution, November 21, 1964), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_const_19641121_lumen-gentium_en.html (accessed March 17, 2008).

Vatican Council II, Gaudium et spes, On the Church in the Modern World (Pastoral Constitution, December 7, 1965), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_const_19651207_gaudium-et-spes_en.html (accessed March 17, 2008).

Anscar Vonier, The Incarnation and Redemption, Vol. 1 of Collected Works, 3 vols. (Westminster, Md. 1952–1953).

Rev. Eugene Leo Peterman CP
Professor of Systematic and Spiritual Theology
St. Meinrad Seminary, St. Meinrad, Indiana

EDS (2010)

REGGIO, TOMMASO, BL.

Archbishop, founder of the Sisters of St. Martha, journalist; b. January 9, 1818, at Genoa, Italy; d. November 22, 1901, at Triora, Italy; beatified September 3, 2000, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Tommaso Reggio, the son of the Marquis of Reggio and Angela Pareto, discerned a vocation when he was twenty and was ordained in 1841. Fr. Reggio said he wanted to become a saint and would live by the Christian cornerstones of PRAYER and ascesis (self-discipline).

At age twenty-five, he became vice rector of the Genoa seminary. By the mid-1800s, he was rector of the Chiavri seminary. During that time, he was among the founders of Italy's first Catholic newspaper, The Catholic Standard. In 1865 the Standard joined other newspapers advocating for a Catholic political party in the newly unified Italy. Nine years later, Pope PIUS XI forbade Catholics from voting, and Fr. Reggio closed the newspaper.

In 1877 Fr. Reggio was consecrated bishop of the poor diocese of Ventimiglia. The following year, he founded the Sisters of St. Martha, a community that welcomed "the poorest of the poor," just as Martha served Jesus. Bishop Reggio organized three synods in fifteen years. His renovation projects included opening new parishes, reviving hymns and LITURGY for Mass, and establishing teaching programs for all age groups.

After an earthquake in 1887, Bishop Reggio traveled through the rubble to bless and console people. He wore a patched cassock and his watch hung from a string, visual signs of his commitment to the poor. Concerned about the growing number of orphans after the earthquake, Bishop Reggio founded orphanages in Ventimiglia and San Remo.

In 1892 Reggio asked Pope LEO XIII to relieve him of his duties. Instead, the pope appointed him the archbishop of Genoa. Archbishop Reggio's ministry included working with other bishops to establish a network to help immigrants. The archbishop planned to make a pilgrimage to the Redeemer statue on Monte Saccarello. Illness prevented the trip, and Archbishop Reggio died on November 22, 1901, in Triora, Italy.

Pope John Paul II beatified the archbishop on September 3, 2000, in Rome. The pontiff remarked that Tommaso Reggio "was a man of faith and culture ... as a pastor he knew how to be an attentive guide to the faithful in every circumstance. Sensitive to the many sufferings and the poverty of his people, he took responsibility for providing prompt help in all situations of need."

Feast: November 22.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Congregazione Suore di Santa Marta, "Beato Tommaso Reggio (Genova 1818–1901)," available from http://www.stmarta.org/roggiano/tommasoreggio_body.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Pius IX, John XXIII, Tommaso Reggio, William Chaminade and Columba Marmion" (Homily, September 3, 2000), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20000903_beatification_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

RENDU, ROSALIE, BL.

Baptized Jeanne Marie, professed sister of the Daughters of Charity of St. VINCENT DE PAUL; b. September 9, 1786, at Confort, France; d. February 7, 1856, at Paris; beatified November 9, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Jeanne Marie Rendu was the eldest of four daughters born to small-property owners. She was three years old when the FRENCH REVOLUTION started, and priests who refused to take an oath supporting the civil constitution faced execution. Some went into hiding, and the Rendus sheltered them. Jeanne made her FIRST COMMUNION in the family's basement.

Life in France settled down by 1796, and Jeanne attended an Ursuline boarding school. While there, she became concerned about the sick and served in a hospital. At the age of seventeen, she entered the Company of the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul in Paris. She took the name Sr. Rosalie and visited the sick and the poor in the impoverished Mouffetard District. She also taught catechism and reading to poor girls.

Sr. Rosalie made her first vows in 1807 and became her community's superior in 1815. She was known as the "Mother of the Poor" because of efforts that included opening a free clinic, a pharmacy, a school, an orphanage, a child-care center, a youth club, and a home for the elderly poor. The wealthy aided her ministry with donations and service, such as home visits by the Ladies of Charity.

When cholera broke out in 1832 and 1846, Sr. Rosalie carried bodies from the streets. During political uprisings in 1830 and 1848, she treated wounded fighters. In 1852 Emperor NAPOLEON III awarded her the Cross of the Legion of Honor. Two years later, she began suffering from progressive vision loss. She nevertheless continued to minister, until dying in 1856 after a brief illness.

Pope John Paul II declared Sr. Rosalie VENERABLE on April 24, 2001. The miracle leading to her BEATIFICATION was the 1952 cure of a spinal-cord lesion that caused progressive paralysis in Sr. Thérèse Béquet, a Daughter of Charity, who was ninety-three years old in 2003 when Pope John Paul II beatified Sr. Rosalie at St. Peter's Square. The Holy Father observed that Bl. Rosalie's "charity was inventive. Where did she draw the strength to carry out so many things? From her intense prayer life and the continuous praying of the Rosary.... Her secret was simple: to see the face of Christ in every man and woman."

Feast: February 7.

SEE ALSO FRANCE, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Francine Brown, "Eyes of the Dove," Wings of a Dove 5, no. 4 (Winter 2004): 2, available from http://www.stvincent.org/NR/rdonlyres/95A153C8-EA32-4D97-9F72-AB652F48CDBA/0/Wings_Dove_Winter04.pdf (accessed November 5, 2009).

Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, "Rosalie Rendu," available from http://www.filles-de-la-charite.org/en/st_rosalie_rendu.aspx (accessed November 5, 2009).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Five Servants of God" (Homily, November 9, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20031109_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Suzanne Pullen, "The Jefferson Award: Sister Trinitas Hernandez, Teacher," San Francisco Chronicle, February 26, 2005.

Louise Sullivan, Sister Rosalie Rendu: A Daughter of Charity on Fire with Love for the Poor (Chicago 2007).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

RESSOURCEMENT THEOLOGY

Nine years after the invasion of the Papal States shut down the First Vatican Council, Pope LEO XIII on the Feast of St. Dominic promulgated Aeterni Patris, "On the Restoration of Christian Philosophy." F. Russell Hittinger explained the 1879 Leonine reform as less directed toward outright errors (as PIUS IX had understood it) but responding to destructively one-sided positions incapable of representing the Church's tradition and of satisfying MAN's thirst for the TRUTH (Neuhaus, Hittinger, Jones, et al. 1994, p. 17). However, the solution to the problem of the day created the problem of tomorrow.

The crises endured by continental Protestantism in biblical scholarship and in the creation of Liberal Protestantism strengthened the need for philosophical REALISM and certitude on the Catholic side. However, the protection derived from THOMISM, according to some scholars, led to an impoverishment when it was widely perceived that only St. THOMAS AQUINAS should be studied. The unintended result of this official sponsorship of theological and philosophical Thomism after Aeterni Patris produced a narrowing of Catholic INTELLECTUAL LIFE. Even St. AUGUSTINE, who had been the center of Western THEOLOGY for many centuries, was eclipsed.

While officially sponsored Thomism served an original purpose, some circles felt the need for a RENAISSANCE and a return to a genuine pluralism in theology. The impact of institutional Thomism, according to some scholars, was a freezing of systematic theology into a Thomist ORTHODOXY. Thomistic PHILOSOPHY created the illusion that theology could be perfectly systematized. This RATIONALISM seemed to curtail theological speculation. It became a closed debate in theology, which Henri de LUBAC and other French intellectuals wanted to see reopened.

That renaissance took the form of a retour aux sources or ressourcement. Even within Thomism there was a revival. Thomists recognized the need for historical context and use of the original text of Thomas rather than merely learning about him from commentaries. Thomas himself needed to be reappropriated and rescued from decadent SCHOLASTICISM.

A chief opponent of the "return to the sources" in ROME was Réginald GARRIGOU-LAGRANGE, O.P., the influential Dominican professor of the Pontifical University of St. Thomas (the Angelicum). He taught there from 1909 to 1959, also serving as qualificator and consultor for the Holy Office (Peddicord 2004, p. 21). Father Garrigou-Lagrange began his teaching career when the Modernist crisis was in full bloom—he is noteworthy for his later thoughts on Ressourcement Theology—and he ended his long tenure on the eve of the Second Vatican Council. For health reasons he did not serve on any of the preparatory committees.

Garrigou-Lagrange was an enforcer of Aeterni Patris according to a precise interpretation. For him, Catholic orthodoxy and philosophical Thomism coincided. His interpretation left little room for historical consciousness, devaluing historical studies as well as exegesis and biblical theology. This narrowness was the target of French Catholic unrest. Garrigou-Lagrange accepted Dominican commentaries on Thomas as if they were the real Thomas (Peddicord 2004, p. 160)—perhaps as JESUITS with their in-house magisterium formerly knew Thomas through the prism of Francisco SUÁREZ (1548–1617), according to author Gerald A. McCool (McCool 2005, pp. 205–207).

The French Ressourcement Theology movement or the retour aux sources lasted from the early twentieth century through the Second Vatican Council. It saw the key to the revitalization of both theology and pastoral life in the Church as a reappropriation of the sources—the LITURGY, the Scriptures, the Early Church Fathers, and the writings of other saints and doctors in whom the Catholic tradition is expressed especially powerfully, including St. THOMAS AQUINAS. Rudolf Voderholzer, the biographer of Henri de Lubac, wrote about him that "he would make an influential impression on a whole generation of young Jesuit students who studied at Fourvière in the thirties and forties but were only bored [and] repulsed, by the Scholastic theology that was offered there, while they were fascinated by Henri de Lubac, who lived in the same house" (Voderholzer 2008, p. 48).

In 1942 Henri de Lubac and Jean DANIÉLOU cofounded the collection Sources chrétiennes to make available critical editions of the Church Fathers. By 1999 more than 440 volumes had been published (Voderholzer 2008, pp. 49–50). When Sources was launched, the Dominican Marie-Michel Labourdette, O.P. (1908–1990), editor of the Revue thomiste, criticized the "underlying rationale of the project" (Peddicord 2004, p. 149). "The publishers of Sources chrétiennes realized that it is not enough simply to make the texts available and to repeat the slogan 'back to the sources.' Also needed is an explication of the enduring content of patristic theology and its application to a different set of contemporary issues" (Voderholzer 2008, p. 51).

Derisively called the new theology or la nouvelle théologie by Garrigou-Lagrange (Garrigou-Lagrange 1946, pp. 126–145), this movement was led by French theologians including Henri de Lubac, Jean Daniélou, Henri Bouillard (1908–1981), Yves CONGAR, Louis Bouyer (1913–2004), Marie-Dominique CHENU, and the Swiss theologian Hans Urs von BALTHASAR. Ressourcement employed the ideas of philosophers and poets, especially Maurice BLONDEL, Pierre ROUSSELOT, Étienne GILSON, and Charles PÉGUY. Of them all, Henri de Lubac (1896–1991) perhaps had the most influence, partly because he lived to the age of ninety-five. De Lubac, Daniélou, Congar, and Balthasar later were named cardinals.

The history of the De auxiliis controversy between Jesuits and DOMINICANS in the sixteenth century replayed itself in the perceived dispute between the French Jesuits (especially those at Fourvière in Lyon) and The Dominican School (especially in Fribourg and in Toulouse) represented by Garrigou-Lagrange. The dispute is described as "perceived" because neither party ever publicly acknowledged the other as the adversary. In 1985 de Lubac wrote that he did not think the ENCYCLICAL letter Humani generis (1950) was directed at him (Wood 2005, p. 331). It is also no secret that, in addition to the Dominicans, many inside the Society of Jesus opposed de Lubac and the new theology (Voderholzer 2008, p. 67).

Garrigou-Lagrange's biographer says that the new theology was headed toward MODERNISM, which, for Garrigou-Lagrange, "was a perennial tendency in Catholic circles" (Peddicord 2004, p. 147). Garrigou-Lagrange was for decades opposed to the thought of Henri BERGSON and Maurice Blondel. The same trends he saw in the new theology were identical to those taken up by Pope PIUS XII in Humani generis (Peddicord 2004, p. 160). De Lubac wrote that he feared Garrigou-Lagrange was "doing everything he can to disturb the conscience of the Pope in private conversations" (Peddicord 2004, p. 51).

For de Lubac, using alternative sources solved a problem that Neo-Thomism could not resolve. De Lubac "transmitted to the field of theology the impulse that started with Blondel" (Voderholzer 2008, p. 35). In other words, the classic DUALISM between GRACE AND NATURE is overcome by speaking of the one final end of man which is God (Voderholzer 2008, p. 150). For de Lubac the "two-story thinking" that had bedeviled Catholic theology for centuries, with the implication that "the supernatural order of grace is abruptly added on to the natural order, without the possibility of demonstrating any intrinsic coordination of the two levels," was resolved at last by a unitary theological solution (Voderholzer 2008, p. 31).

With the election of Cardinal Karol Wojtyła as Pope JOHN PAUL II in 1978, French Ressourcement Theology, which by then was not so new, was re-evaluated. Wojtyła and most of the French thinkers of the 1950s were present at the Second Vatican Council. Their expertise was called upon in drafting the conciliar texts. Even a cursory reading of those official documents shows a style congenial to Ressourcement and a departure from the Thomistic vocabulary that Garrigou-Lagrange and his school would have preferred. One historian of the council, John F. Kobler, C.P., has written about the influence of PHENOMENOLOGY, not scholasticism, at Vatican II. It was a twist of history that just as Thomas Aquinas was not able to attend the Second Council of Lyons in 1274, so Garrigou-Lagrange did not attend the Second Vatican Council. He died on February 15, 1964.

When Henri de Lubac became a cardinal in 1983, this elevation alone rehabilitated his intellectual career, including his spirited, though qualified, defense of Pierre TEILHARD DE CHARDIN. Always an advocate of pluralism, at the end of his life de Lubac also defended Thomism against its adversaries.

In 1993 Pope John Paul II issued an encyclical that, to some observers, "corrected" Aeterni Patris and Humani generis. Though the thought of St. Thomas took precedence, he wrote, other avenues in theology and philosophy may be explored for the GOOD of the Church. Healthy competition replaced the pontifical strategy of Aeterni Patris and Humani generis. In Veritatis splendor (29), John Paul II stated: "Certainly the Church's Magisterium does not intend to impose upon the faithful any particular theological system, still less a philosophical one."

SEE ALSO AETERNI PATRIS; CERTITUDE OF FAITH; DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH; DOMINIC, ST.; EXEGESIS, BIBLICAL; FATHERS OF THE CHURCH; HUMANI GENERIS; LYONS, COUNCILS OF; NATURAL ORDER; NEW TESTAMENT SCHOLARSHIP; PATRISTIC THEOLOGY; PLURALISM, PHILOSOPHICAL; SUPERNATURAL ORDER; TEACHING AUTHORITY OF THE CHURCH (MAGISTERIUM); TRADITION (IN THE BIBLE); TRADITION (IN THEOLOGY); TRUTH, DIVINE; VATICAN COUNCIL I; VATICAN COUNCIL II; VERITATIS SPLENDOR.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BOOKS

Benedict M. Ashley, The Dominicans (Collegeville, Minn. 1990).

Hans Urs von Balthasar, The Theology of Henri de Lubac: An Overview (San Francisco 1991).

Henri Bouillard, Blondel et le christianisme (Paris 1961).

Rocco Buttiglione, Il pensiero di Karol Wojtyła (Milan 1982).

Romanus Cessario, A Short History of Thomism (Washington, D.C. 2005).

Yves Congar, Fifty Years of Catholic Theology: Conversations with Yves Congar, edited by Bernard Lauret (Minneapolis 1988).

James M. Connolly, The Voices of France (New York 1961).

Paolo Dezza, Alle Origini del Neotomismo (Milan 1940).

Étienne Gilson, Letters of Étienne Gilson to Henri de Lubac, annotated by Henri de Lubac, translated by Mary Emily Hamilton (San Francisco 1988).

Robert J. Henle, "The American Thomistic Revival in the Philosophical Papers of R. J. Henle, S.J.: From the Writing of R. J. Henle, S.J., Professor Emeritus of Saint Louis University" (St. Louis 1999).

John F. Kobler, Vatican II and Phenomenology: Reflections on the Life-World of the Church (Dordrecht, Netherlands 1985; 2004).

John F. Kobler, Vatican II, Theophany and the Phenomenon of Man: The Council's Pastoral Servant Leader Theology for the Third Millennium (New York 1991).

Henri de Lubac, Catholicisme: Les aspects sociaux du dogme (Paris 1938; reprinted 1983).

Henri de Lubac, Le Drame de l'humanisme athée, 6th ed. (Paris 1944; revised 1998). [This is the first in a series of the collected works of Henri de Lubac edited by Georges Chantraine and Michel Sales.]

Henri de Lubac, Le Surnaturel (Paris 1946).

Henri de Lubac, La pensée religieuse du Père Teilhard de Chardin (Paris 1962).

Henri de Lubac, The Religion of Teilhard de Chardin, translated by René Hague (Garden City, N.Y. 1968).

Henri de Lubac, ed., Trois jésuites nous parlent (Paris 1980); Three Jesuits Speak: Yves de Montcheuil, 1899–1944; Charles Nicolet, 1897–1961; Jean Zupan, 1899–1968: Characteristic Texts, translated by K. D. Whitehead (San Francisco 1987).

Henri de Lubac, Augustinianism and Modern Theology, rev. ed., edited by Lancelot Sheppard (New York 2000).

Gerald A. McCool, Catholic Theology in the Nineteenth Century: The Quest for a Unitary Method (New York 1977).

Gerald A. McCool, The Neo-Thomists (Milwaukee, Wisc. 1994).

Richard Peddicord, The Sacred Monster of Thomism: An Introduction to the Life and Legacy of Réginald Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P. (South Bend, Ind. 2004).

Rudolf Voderholzer, Meet Henri de Lubac: His Life and Work (San Francisco 2008).

Jean-Pierre Wagner, Henri de Lubac, collection Initiations aux théologiens (Paris 2001).

Chapters or Articles in Books

Robert J. Henle, "Transcendental Thomism: A Critical Assessment," in One Hundred Years of Thomism: Aeterni Patris and Afterwards, a Symposium, edited by Victor B. Brezik (Houston 1981), 90–116.

Gerald A. McCool, "Réginald Garrigou-Lagrange," in Biographical Dictionary of Christian Theologians, reprint, edited by Patrick W. Carey and Joseph T. Lienhard (Peabody, Mass. 2005), 205–207.

Henri Rondet, "Nouvelle Théologie," in Sacramentum Mundi: An Encyclopedia of Theology, edited by Karl Rahner et al. (New York 1964), 1: 234–236.

Susan Wood, "Henri de Lubac," in Biographical Dictionary of Christian Theologians, reprint, edited by Patrick W. Carey and Joseph T. Lienhard (Peabody, Mass. 2005), 330–333.

Journal Articles

Jean Daniélou, "Les orientations présentes de la pensée religieuse," Études 249 (1946): 5–21.

Réginald Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., "La nouvelle théologie, où va-t-elle?" Angelicum 23 (1946): 126–145.

Robert Guelluy, "Les antécédants de l'encyclique Humani generis dans les sanctions romaines de 1942: Chenu, Charlier, Draguet," Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique 81 (1986): 421–497.

Marie-Michel Labourdette, O.P., "La théologie et ses sources," Revue thomiste 46 (1946): 353–371. Reprinted in Dialogue théologique, edited by Marie-Michel Labourdette, Marie-J. Nicholas, and Raymond-Léopold Bruckberger (Saint-Maximin, Les Arcades, France 1947).

Richard John Neuhaus, Russell Hittinger, L. Gregory Jones, et al., "The Splendor of Truth: A Symposium," First Things 40 (January 1994): 14–29. Available from http://www.leaderu.com/ftissues/ft9401/articles/symposium.html (accessed March 23, 2008).

Edward T. Oakes, "The Paradox of Nature and Grace: On John Milbank's The Suspended Middle: Henri de Lubac and the Debate Concerning the Supernatural," Nova et Vetera, English Edition 4, no. 3 (2006): 667–696. Abstract available from http://209.85.165.104/search?q=cache:kEiJ6SJQyxwJ:www.aquinas.avemaria.edu/Nova/PDF/Vol_4_3/Abstracts.pdf+nova+vetera+edward+oakes+humani+generis&hl=en&ct=clnk&cd=1&gl=us (accessed March 23, 2008).

Discourse

James A. Weisheipl, O.P., "The Revival of Thomism: An Historical Survey." [Lectio occasionalis a Reverendo Patre Lectore F. Athanasio Weisheipl, O.P., D.Phil. (Oxon), facta A.D. 1962, coram professoribus et alumnis Facultatis Theologiae Studii Generalis Ordinis Praedicatorum atque Seminarii Montis Sancti Bernardi Dubuquensis.] Available from http://www.op.org/domcentral/study/revival.htm (accessed March 23, 2008).

Dissertation

Marcellino G. D'Ambrosio, "Henri de Lubac and the Recovery of the Traditional Hermeneutic," (Ph.D. diss., The Catholic University of America, 1991). Abstract available from http://www.crossroadsinitiative.com/library_article/730/Dissertation_Abstract_on_Henri_de_Lubac.html (accessed March 23, 2008).

Essays

Michel Fedou, "Le cardinal Henri de Lubac," available from http://www.jesuites.com/histoire/lubac.htm (accessed March 23, 2008).

John A. Hardon, "God the Author of Nature and the Supernatural. Part Two: Creation as a Divine Fact. Section Two: Supernatural Anthropology. Thesis VII: Adam was an Individual Man, From Whom the Whole Human Race Derives Its Origin," available from http://www.therealpresence.org/archives/God/God_012.htm (accessed March 23, 2008).

Joseph M. de Torre, "Transcendental Thomism and the Encyclical Veritatis Splendor" in Fellowship of Catholic Scholars Newsletter vol. 18, no. 2 (April 1995): 21–24, available from http://www.catholicscholars.org/publications/quarterly/v18n2apr1995.pdf.http://www.catholicscholars.org/resources/quarterly/v18n2apr1995.pdf (accessed March 23, 2008).

Papal Documents

John Paul II, Veritatis splendor (Encyclical, August 6,1993), see Acta Apostolicae Sedis 85 (1993): 1134–1228 (Latin); and Origins (14 October 1993): 297–336 (English); also available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/encyclicals/documents/hf_jp-ii_enc_06081993_veritatis-splendor_en.html (English) (accessed March 23, 2008).

Leo XIII, Aeterni Patris, On the Restoration of Christian Philosophy (Encyclical, August 4, 1879), available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/leo_xiii/encyclicals/documents/hf_l-xiii_enc_04081879_aeterni-patris_en.html (accessed March 23, 2008).

Pius XII, Allocutio ad Patres Societatis Jesu in XXIX Congregatio Generali electors, see Acta Apostolicae Sedis 338 (1946): 381–385 (Latin).

Pius XII, Allocutio ad Patres delegatos ad Capitulum Generale Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum, see Acta Apostolicae Sedis 338 (1946): 385–389 (Latin).

Pius XII, Humani generis (Encyclical, August 12, 1950), see Acta Apostolicae Sedis 42 (1950): 561–578 (Latin); The Papal Encyclicals, vol. 4 (1939–1958), compiled by Claudia Carlen (Wilmington, NC 1981; reprint n.p. 1990), 175–184 (English); also available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/pius_xii/encyclicals/documents/hf_p-xii_enc_12081950_humani-generis_en.html (English) (accessed March 23, 2008).

Rev. Brian Van Hove SJ
White House Retreat
Saint Louis, Missouri (2010)

RITA AMADA DE JESUS, BL.

Foundress of the Institute of the Sisters of Jesus, Mary, and Joseph; b. March 5, 1848, at Ribafeita, Portugal; d. January 6, 1913, at Ribafeita; beatified by Pope BENEDICT XVI on May 28, 2006.

Rita, the daughter of Manuel Lopes and Josefa de Jesus Almeida, grew up in a family that prayed the ROSARY nightly. She discerned a vocation and wanted to become a missionary, but was prevented from entering religious life because the government had banned congregations from accepting new members. Rita, however, found another way to share her faith: She traveled through Portugal teaching the rosary and the importance of the Church. While some people appreciated her efforts, she also received death threats.

Rita was twenty-nine when she entered the Sisters of Charity, the only congregation still functioning in Portugal, but she soon left because she wanted to minister to single mothers and their children. She decided to establish a new congregation, and received financing from a wealthy family. Rita bought a home and started the Institute of the Sisters of Jesus, Mary, and Joseph on September 24, 1880.

Mother Rita opened a school for children in her parish and established other schools in Portugal. Local governments closed some of the schools, and matters worsened in 1910 when rebels replaced Portugal's monarchy with a republic even more hostile to the Church. The government seized Church property and closed more schools. Mother Rita, the sisters, and their students disguised themselves as gypsies and fled to Rita's parents' house, which served as home for the institute and a school.

Mother Rita wanted the congregation to survive, so she sent most of the sisters to Brazil. Her health kept her from joining them, but she lived long enough to learn that they had succeeded in their CHARISM. By the time she died of natural causes on January 6, 1913, at Ribafeita, the community had established its first school in the Brazilian city of Igarapava. In the twenty-first century, the congregation ministers in Portugal and various other countries, including Brazil, Bolivia, Paraguay, Angola, and Mozambique.

Mother Rita was beatified on May 28, 2006, by Pope Benedict XVI, with the recognition celebrated in Viseu, Portugal. Cardinal José Saraiva Martins observed that Mother Rita "knew how to read the signs of the times which demanded new and courageous responses to the needs of that age: the different forms of social poverty—material, moral, and spiritual."

Feast: January 6.

SEE ALSO PORTUGAL, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Rite of Beatification of Rita Amada de Jesus, Homily of Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, May 28, 2006, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20060528_rita-amada-jesus_en.html (accessed November 5, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Rita Amada de Jesus (1848–1913)," Vatican Web site, March 24, 2005, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20050424_amada_en.html (accessed November 5, 1999).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

RODRÍGUEZ CASTRO, BONIFACIA, BL.

Cofoundress of the Servants of St. JOSEPH and foundress of the Josephine Association; b. June 6, 1837, at Salamanca, Spain; d. August 8, 1905, at Zamora, Spain; beatified November 9, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Bonifacia Rodríguez Castro was the eldest of six children born to Maria Natalia and Juan, a tailor who worked at home and taught his craft to his daughter. When he died, fifteen-year-old Bonifacia supported the family with those skills. Her devotion to the Virgin Mary and St. Joseph drew young women to her home, prompting Bonifacia to form the Association of the Immaculate and St. Joseph, later known as the Josephine Association.

Bonifacia discerned a religious vocation when she met Jesuit father Francisco Javier Butiña y Hospital (1834–1899). Fr. Butiña and Bonifacia cofounded the Siervas de San José (Servants of St. Joseph), receiving permission from the Salamanca bishop for the community on January 7, 1874. Bonifacia's home housed the community, consisting of her mother and six Josephine Association members.

Inspired by the Holy Family, the community employed poor women in the home shop, an unusual practice that shocked some people and drew opposition. Fr. Butiña was exiled from Spain three months later. After the Salamanca bishop was transferred, some sisters who opposed the shop wanted the community constitution changed, but Mother Bonifacia refused.

After his return to Spain, Fr. Butiña established Siervas de San José houses in other cities. When Mother Bonifacia left town in 1882 to establish a union with those houses, the congregation director worked to remove her as superior. Mother Bonifacia endured that rebuke, offering to form a house in Zamora. The director and the Zamora bishop accepted her offer, and Bonifacia and her mother traveled there in 1883. The Salamanca motherhouse changed the constitution, and in 1901 Pope LEO XIII granted pontifical approbation of the congregation, excluding the Zamora house.

Mother Bonifacia tried to mend the rift by returning to Salamanca, but the sisters were ordered not to receive her. She went back to Zamora, believing the Zamora house would unite with the community after her death. Mother Bonifacia died on August 8, 1905, and the congregation incorporated the Zamora house in 1907.

Pope John Paul II beatified Bonifacia on November 9, 2003, at St. Peter's Square. The pontiff observed that Mother Bonifacia had discovered in the Holy Family "a model of the spirituality of work that gives the human person dignity and makes every activity, however little it may seem, an offering to God and a means of sanctification."

Feast: August 8.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SPAIN, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Five Servants of God" (Homily, November 9, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20031109_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

St. Theresita's Academy, "Mother Bonifacia Rodriguez Castro," 2006, available from http://www.sta-silaycity.edu.ph/motherbonifacia.htm (accessed November 6, 2009).

Siervas de San José, "Bonifacia Rodríguez: El compromiso con la mujer trabajadora pobre (Bonifacia Rodríguez: A Commitment to Poor Working Women)," 2006, available from http://www.siervasdesanjose.org/posplamostrar.asp?id=130&comunidad=1 (accessed November 6, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

RODRÍGUEZ SOPEÑA, MARÍA DOLORES, BL.

Foundress of the Sopeña Lay Movement and Sopeña Catechetical Institute; b. December 30, 1848, Velez Rubio, Almería, Spain; d. January 10, 1918, Madrid; beatified March 23, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Dolores Rodríguez Sopeña was the fourth of seven children born to Tomas Rodríguez Sopeña and Nicolasa Ortega Salomon. Her father's work as a magistrate took the family to different countries, where Dolores ministered to others. In Almería, seventeen-year-old Dolores helped a leper and two sisters diagnosed with typhoid fever. She and her mother also visited the poor of St. VINCENT DE PAUL.

In 1868 her father moved to Puerto Rico with several family members, while remaining family members moved to Madrid. There, Dolores taught Catholic doctrine to Sunday school students and to imprisoned and hospitalized women.

Dolores and the rest of the family joined their father in Puerto Rico 1872. There, she started schools for the disadvantaged and taught reading, writing, and catechism. The family moved to Cuba in 1873 after Dolores's father was named state attorney of Santiago de Cuba. In Cuba, Dolores established centers of instruction in three poor neighborhoods. She taught catechism and general courses there.

In 1877, after Dolores's mother died, the family returned to Madrid, where Dolores cared for her father. She opened a center in 1885 to help the poor. After visiting poor neighborhoods with friends, Dolores formed Works of the Doctrines, the organization later known as the Center for the Workers.

In 1892 D. Ciríaco Sancha, the bishop of Madrid, suggested that Dolores form the Association of the Apostolic Laymen, now the Sopeña Lay Movement. In 1900 Dolores made a pilgrimage to Rome for the HOLY YEAR, and received approval to establish a religious institute to continue her Works of the Doctrines and spiritually sustain the Sopeña Lay Movement. She founded a community in Rome 1914, and the first house opened in the Americas in 1917.

Dolores died in Madrid on January 10, 1918. Her ministry continues through the Sopeña Catechetical Institute, Sopeña Lay Movement, and Sopeña Social and Cultural Work. These institutions minister in Spain, Italy, Argentina, Colombia, Cuba, Chile, Ecuador, Mexico, and the Dominican Republic.

Pope John Paul II beatified Dolores on March 23, 2003, at St. Peter's Square. The pope remarked that Dolores "wanted to respond to the challenge of making Christ's redemption present in the world of work. For this reason, she gave herself the goal of making all men one single family in Jesus Christ."

Feast: January 10.

SEE ALSO CUBA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; PUERTO RICO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Cappella Papale for the Beatification of Five Servants of God" (Homily, March 23, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii//homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030323_beatif_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

John Paul II, "Address of John Paul II to the Pilgrims Who Had Come for the Beatification of Five Servants of God" (March 24, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/speeches/2003/march/documents/hf_jp-ii_spe_20030324_beatific_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

ROMA (GYPSIES)

Roma, popularly known as Gypsies, are a nomadic people whose origins, history, and culture are often shrouded in myth and controversy.

Origins and History. Linguistic evidence indicates that the Roma probably originated in northwest India and migrated through Persian-speaking areas. They are known to have appeared in Byzantine lands by the eleventh century AD. The expansion of the Seljuk and OTTOMAN TURKS and the destruction of the BYZANTINE EMPIRE seem to have hastened the Roma dispersion into Europe, though Roma were known to be in the Balkans and Russia in earlier times. One theory links the Roma to a caste of traveling entertainers brought to Persia from India in the 400s. The origin of their itinerant culture and lifestyle is also the subject of much speculation. Roma oral tradition is vague on this subject, though a popular legend is that a Roma blacksmith made the nails for Christ's Crucifixion but delivered only three of the four needed. The fourth nail refused to cool for the smith, who fled in fear. The glowing hot nail periodically appeared in the tents of the smith's descendants, prompting them to move. The term "gypsy" itself reflects this confusion since it stems from a popular belief that was once promoted by some Roma that they originated in Egypt.

Roma were found in most areas of Europe by the early modern period, though the largest groups were known to be in the Balkans, Poland, and the Austrian Empire. Following the migratory patterns of other Europeans, they emigrated to the Americas and Australia in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. They pursued a variety of occupations, generally as tinkers, craftsmen, and peddlers. In some areas, basket weaving was an important Roma craft, and in others they made and sold copper implements. Roma also worked as entertainers, primarily as musicians, but they were also known to be animal trainers. In many areas of the Balkans, Roma musicians were and continue to be an essential feature of weddings and other ceremonies.

Roma have long been viewed with suspicion by settled peoples. While the popular association of Roma with thievery and beggary has some basis in fact, they were severely marginalized from the 1700s onward, especially under absolutist monarchies and by modern states. In the eighteenth century they were occasionally sold as indentured servants to estate owners in Austria and Hungary. During the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, laws restricting itinerant merchants—often enacted in places such the American Midwest—were drawn up with Roma in mind.

The application of modern racial theories to the Roma in early twentieth-century Germany had disastrous and tragic consequences. Nazi racial theorists categorized Roma as subhuman and subjected many to sterilization, medical experiments, and other restrictions. Roma were slated for extermination under the so-called Final Solution, though the application of this policy was not as uniform as that against the Jews. The Roma Holocaust—known as porraimos (literally, "the Devouring")—took the lives of an estimated 220,000 people, about a quarter of Europe's Roma population. Some 23,000 were murdered in Auschwitz, most during May 1944. Nazi-allied fascists exterminated 26,000 people, almost the entire Roma population of Croatia.

Following WORLD WAR II, under Soviet-installed regimes in eastern and central Europe, Roma were treated as second-class citizens. Local authorities attempted to stop their traditional wandering lifestyle and force them to settle in fixed locations. These actions resulted in severe social and family strains on Roma communities, and were resisted when possible. After the fall of COMMUNISM, efforts to stop the traditional lifestyle ceased, but new prejudices emerged. There were a number of anti-Roma riots and attacks in Romania, Slovakia, Austria, and the Czech Republic. Roma from more impoverished countries such as Romania migrated to more prosperous Poland or to western European countries. While some worked at odd jobs, others could be found begging in train stations or outside churches, or engaging in petty theft. At the same time, a new generation of Roma activists emerged, claiming to represent European Roma, to press claims for greater recognition and protection of human rights. This has resulted in a better understanding of the Roma Holocaust and in resolutions by the European Parliament to protect Roma rights.

Culture and Beliefs. Roma are divided into many subgroups based on region and clan. Even the terminology used to distinguish them is a source of confusion. In eastern and southern Europe they are known as Roma; in Germany and Austria, Sinti; in Scandinavia, Wales, and Spain, Kale/Calé; in France, Manush. Roma subgroups take their names based on their trades or crafts, including Kalderash (coppersmiths) and Lovari (horse traders).

Roma society is based on extended families and clans, which provide the basis for Roma life and beliefs. Clans are patriarchal and often dominated by one man, though generalizations about Roma life, culture, and communities are perilous given the great variation among Roma worldwide. Among the most controversial aspects of Roma social life is the matter of child brides. Female purity and VIRGINITY are extremely important, and marriages of girls as young as thirteen are not unheard of. In some areas young girls are kidnapped for marriage, though kidnapping is sometimes done simply to avoid having to pay a bride price to the girl's family.

Roma have extremely strong customs and practices related to purity and relationships to the dead that clearly distinguish Roma from non-Roma. Those who follow traditional purity laws are called Romanipen, while outsiders and those Roma who associate too closely with outsiders are called Gajdee. These terms have clear implications of ritual purity and impurity. The lower parts of the body are considered impure, as are menstruating women. Clothing associated with either must be laundered separately. Death is surrounded by a range of taboos in which the dead are not spoken of and their possessions are burned.

Most Roma have adopted the faith of the regions in which they travel and live. Roma in Bosnia and Albania often became Muslim. Orthodox Roma are found throughout the Balkans and former Soviet Union, while Catholicism is the predominant faith among Roma in central and southern Europe, as well as France and Belgium. Evangelical groups have made some inroads into Roma communities, but it is impossible to gather reliable statistical data on Roma because they frequently evade government censuses and often do not belong to established parishes or congregations.

The faith practices of Catholic Roma are a syncretic blend of orthodoxy, tradition, and superstition. The veneration of St. Sarah, known as Sara e Kali or "Black Sarah," is a well-known example. Associated with the shrine of Saintes-Maries-del-Mer in Camargue in southern France, St. Sarah was said to be an Egyptian servant of Mary, the wife of Cleopas. Though never recognized by the Church, she was popularly believed to be a gypsy and subsequently adopted by the Roma as one of their own. Roma in western Europe make annual pilgrimages to the shrine on May 24.

The official patron of the Roma is Blessed Zefferino GIMÉNEZ MALLA (1861–1936), a Spanish MARTYR known for his piety and for his ability to resolve disputes peacefully among his people and between Roma and non-Roma. During the persecution of the Church in Spain in the 1930s, he was arrested by leftists after he defended a local priest who was also being arrested. He was executed along with several priests in 1936. In 1997 the Holy Father Pope JOHN PAUL II proclaimed him Blessed.

The Church is increasingly interested in the pastoral problems involved in ministering to the Roma, and in protecting the human and cultural rights of Roma communities throughout the world, especially in Europe. The Pontifical Council for Pastoral Care of Migrants and Itinerant People is the primary body designated by the HOLY SEE to oversee pastoral care for Roma. Its existence dates from 1988, when Pope John Paul II replaced the previous pontifical commission dealing with migrant people with a Pontifical Council. In 2005 the council oversaw the publication of Guidelines for the Pastoral Care of Gypsies, a document intended to provide guidance for the care of Roma. In 1989 the Holy Father stated that:

> all discrimination against the Gypsies is unjust and harsh, because it is clearly against the teachings of the Gospel.... Therefore, Paul VI was right when in 1965, at Pomezia, on meeting them on the occasion of their first international pilgrimage, which brought them to the Tomb of the Apostles, he said: "You are in the Heart of the Church, because you are poor, because you are alone."

SEE ALSO FASCISM; HOLOCAUST (SHOAH); SPAIN (THE CHURCH DURING THE SPANISH REPUBLIC AND THE CIVIL WAR: 1931–1939).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Isabel Fonseca, Bury Me Standing: The Gypsies and Their Journey (New York 1995).

Pontifical Council for Pastoral Care of Migrants and Itinerant People, Guidelines for the Pastoral Care of Gypsies, Vatican Web site, December 8, 2005, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/pontifical_councils/migrants/pom2006_100-suppl/rc_pc_migrants_pom100-suppl_orientamenti-en.html (accessed October 29, 2009).

Chuck Todaro, "The Church Itself Must Be Gypsy," The Catholic Herald (June 13, 2008), available from www.catholicherald.co.uk/features/f0000271.shtml (accessed October 29, 2009).

Patrick Williams, Gypsy World: The Silence of the Living and the Voices of the Dead (Chicago 2003).

Manfri Frederick Wood, In the Life of a Romany Gypsy (London 1973).

John Radzilowski
Assistant Professor of History
University of Alaska Southeast (2010)

ROMERO MENESES, MARÍA, BL.

Salesian sister; b. January 13, 1902, Granada, Nicaragua; d. July 7, 1977, León, Nicaragua; beatified April 14, 2002, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

María Romero Meneses was one of eight children born to upper-class Nicaraguan parents. As a young girl, she attended a SALESIAN SISTERS' school and received instruction in drawing, painting, and piano. When she was twelve, her education was interrupted by rheumatic fever, which paralyzed her for six months and caused what her doctor said was a seriously damaged heart. María told a classmate that she knew that the Virgin Mary would cure her; several days later, María recovered and returned to school. María credited her recovery to Mary. This experience led to her vision of a vocation in the Salesian congregation, also known as the Daughters of Mary, Help of Christians.

María joined the Daughters of Mary, Help of Christians, in 1920. She made her final profession in 1929 and was sent to San José, Costa Rica, in 1931. There, Sr. María taught wealthy girls at a school, but she also ministered in the barrios. Students called misioneritas joined her in the work of catechizing and aiding the oppressed and abused.

Sr. María established recreation centers in 1945, food distribution centers in 1953, a school for poor girls in 1961, and a medical clinic staffed by volunteers in 1966. She then started to develop a village to provide housing for the poor; by 1973, seven homes were built in the Centro San José. The village grew to include a church dedicated to Our Lady, Help of Christians, along with a farm, a market, and a school facility that provided religious formation, catechesis, and job training.

As Sr. María advanced in years, she stopped teaching full time but continued catechesis. In 1977 she returned to the Salesian house in León, Nicaragua, for a rest, and died there from a heart attack on July 7.

Pope John Paul II beatified Sr. María at St. Peter's Square on April 14, 2002. At her BEATIFICATION, the Holy Father observed: "With a passionate love for God and an unlimited confidence in the assistance of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Sr. María Romero was an exemplary religious, apostle and mother of the poor people." The Holy Father also commented that Central Americans could find in the "new Blessed who loved them so much, an abundance of example and teaching to renew and confirm their Christian life."

Feast: July 7.

SEE ALSO COSTA RICA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; NICARAGUA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SALESIANS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six Servants of God" (Homily April 14, 2002), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2002/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20020414_beatification_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

Sor María Romero: Official Web site, "Oficina del Proceso de Canonización de la Beata Sor María Romero," available from http://www.sormariaromero.org (accessed November 6, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

ROSAL VÁSQUEZ, MARÍA VICENTA, BL.

Baptized Vicenta, known in religion as María Encarnación del Corazón Jesús (Mary Encarnación of the Heart of Jesus); reformer of the Institute of Bethlehemite Sisters; b. Quetzaltenango, Guatemala, October 26, 1820; d. near Tulcán, Ecuador, August 24, 1886; beatified by Pope JOHN PAUL II on May 4, 1997.

Vicenta recognized her religious vocation at age fifteen, as she reflected on the mystery of the Incarnation. On Jan. 1, 1837, she entered the BETHLEHEMITES, founded by St. Pedro de San José BETANCUR (canonized by John Paul II on July 30, 2002). Distressed by the laxity of the Beatario de Belem—which drifted from its original charism—Vicenta (now Sister María Encarnación) migrated to the convent of the Catalinas. Finding that convent also unsatisfactory she returned to Belem resolved to reform it. She had her opportunity when she was elected prioress in 1855. She revised the constitutions; the older sisters, however, refused to accept them. After her continued attempts at disciplinary reform were resisted, she founded a new beatario in Quetzaltenango (1861). Her devotion to the Sacred Heart led to the tradition within the order of dedicating the twenty-fifth of each month to prayers of reparation. The Bethlehemites are now active in Africa, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, India, Italy, Nicaragua, Panama, Spain, the United States, and Venezuela.

While endeavoring to reform her congregation, Mother María Encarnación founded two schools in Quetzaltenango (1855). When Justo Rufino Barrios expelled various religious orders from the country (1873–85), she continued her work of reformation of the order and evangelization abroad. Arriving in Costa Rica in 1877, María Encarnación established the first women's college in Cartago, about fourteen miles from San José. She was a refugee again in 1884 when the Costa Rican government unleashed a persecution against religious groups, but returned to found an orphanage in San José (1886). She continued to Pasto, Colombia, to start a home for abandoned children. Untiring in her travels, she established the Bethlehemites in Tulcán and Otavalo, Ecuador.

On a trip from Tulcán to Otavalo, Mother María Encarnación fell from her horse and died. Her incorrupt body was translated to Pasto, where it is enshrined. After her cause for beatification was introduced, April 23, 1976, María Encarnación was declared venerable on April 6, 1995. On Dec. 17, 1996, the decree was signed approving a miracle attributed to her intercession. When she was raised to the altars by John Paul II on May 4, 1997, Mother María Encarnación became the Guatemalan beata.

Feast: April 18.

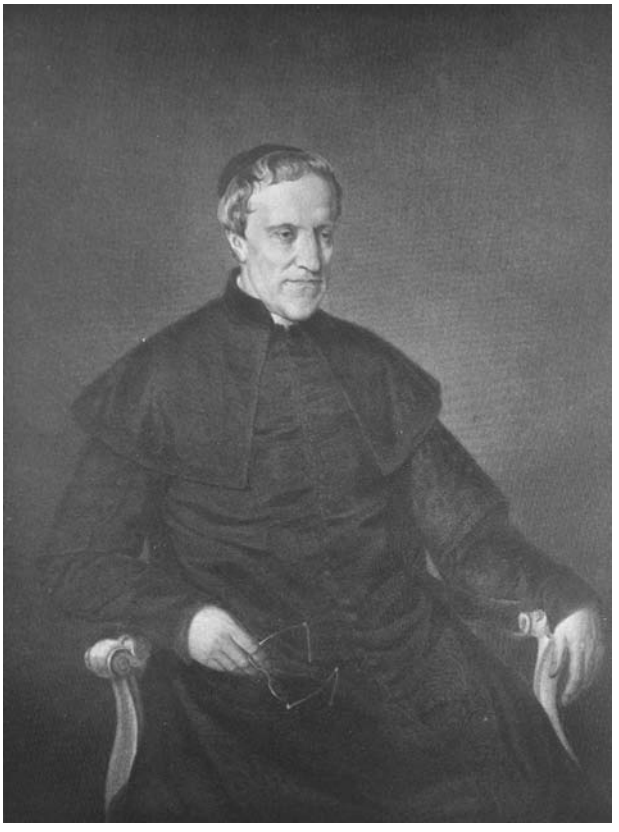
SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SACRED HEART, DEVOTION TO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 12 (1997): 599.

John Paul II, "Eucharistic Celebration for the Beatification of Five New Blesseds" (Homily, May 4, 1997), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/1997/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_19970504_en.html (accessed November 20, 2009).

L'Osservatore Romano 18 (1997): 2–3, 21; (1997): 4.



Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

EDS (2010)

ROSMINI-SERBATI, ANTONIO, BL.

Founder of the Institute of Charity, philosopher, theologian, and patriot; b. Rovereto, Trentino (then under Austrian domination, now part of Italy), March 25, 1797; d. Stresa (Lago Maggiore), July 1, 1855.

Against the initial objections of his parents, Rosmini was ordained in 1821. His entire life until 1826 can be considered as a preparation for his creative work. During this period, his studies embraced mathematics, political theory, education, medicine, natural sciences, Oriental languages, and all branches of philosophy and theology. The History of Love, an early work of Rosmini on Holy Scripture, bears witness to his intense application to the word of God and his great talent for synthesis.

Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio (1797–1855). This Catholic religious intellectual was one of the most prolific writers of his day. THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Rosmini's deliberate aim, in an age characterized by liberal ideas and revolt against established order, was to achieve a balance between old and new by showing how true development in every science depends upon growth from basic and unchangeable principles. On the advice of PIUS VII he devoted himself to this task, principally in philosophy.

Rosmini's personal traits were defined and established in these early years. Prayer and devotion to the will of God became habitual; he grew familiar with practical affairs by managing a large fortune inherited from his father; and his extraordinary capacity for lasting friendship with different types of men manifested itself (Manzoni, Tommasco, Capellari [later GREGORY XVI], and Gustavo CAVOUR were among his many intimates). The plan of his congregation, for which he had the active encouragement and advice of St. Maddalena di CANOSSA, was completed in 1828. His chief ecclesiastical work during this time, which he called "nearly my only recreation," was the formation of a clerical circle at Rovereto to study the then overly neglected St. THOMAS AQUINAS.

His Philosophical Writings. In 1826 Rosmini went to Milan to continue his research and to begin publishing the results of his philosophical studies. He was a writer of astounding fertility and originality. His complete works, many published posthumously, are currently being edited in a planned eighty-volume critical edition (Opere edite e inedite di Antonio Rosmini, 1966–). About forty volumes have been produced to date. To these must be added thirteen volumes of letters, with some 700 pages per volume (Epistolario completo di Antonio Rosmini-Serbati, 1887–1894). He treated thoroughly the problem of the origin of ideas and CERTITUDE, the nature of the human SOUL, ETHICS, civil society, the relationship between CHURCH AND STATE, human rights, METAPHYSICS, GRACE, ORIGINAL SIN, and the sacraments in general. There is no single school of thought to which he can be said to belong. Basing his thought upon an encyclopedic reading of philosophers and ecclesiastical tradition, he endeavored to present principles that would serve as a coherent basis of unity for all knowledge.

At the foundation of his system he placed the intuition of universal and undetermined being, which he was careful to distinguish from the concept of God. Many of his adversaries (Matteo LIBERATORE, S.J., for example) later maintained that there could be no distinction between the two concepts and consequently accused Rosmini of ONTOLOGISM and PANTHEISM. This accusation is now discredited by scholars, however, as evidenced by a July 2001 document of the Congregation for the DOCTRINE OF THE FAITH. The idea of being is for Rosmini the objective and infallible light of reason, the source of man's dignity as a person, the font of moral obligation, the unshakable foundation of human rights, and the spring of the immortality of the soul. A man's moral standing depends upon the use or misuse of this innate light, according to which he can either evaluate things in their objective order or attempt to place them in an order of his own making.

His Theological Writings. Theological works published during Rosmini's lifetime concern the nature of original sin, which he maintained was more than a mere lack of sanctifying grace, the PROVIDENCE OF GOD, and what he called "supernatural anthropology," a study of fallen human nature restored through the sacraments.

His Ascetical Writings. His ascetical works are not numerous, but in them he treats the fundamental issues of Christian life. This is especially the case with Maxims of Christian Perfection, in which he shows how all duties culminate in devotion to Christ's Church—a devotion that he himself manifested in submitting fully to the ecclesiastical prohibition of two of his works. These Maxims form the basis of his Constitutions of the Society of Charity, synopsized in GREGORY XVI's 1839 Apostolic Letter In Sublimi, which approved the rule of Rosmini's Institute of Charity (Istituto della Carità).

From 1826 until his death, Rosmini's growing influence as a leader in the forces opposing the domination of sensism in European thought was subject to continual attack. He was looked upon with suspicion by Austria on account of a panegyric on Pius VII, in which he condemns JOSEPHINISM. His Treatise on Moral Conscience, which contains an attack on the use of PROBABILISM as applied to the NATURAL LAW, was repudiated especially by Antonio BALLERINI, S.J., who wrote anonymously as il prete bolognese. Rosmini's teaching on original sin and the distinction he made between sin (peccatum) and fault (culpa) were also the source of bitter criticism. The Five Wounds of the Church, in which he discusses the dangers to the Church from within, and A Constitution Based on Social Justice were placed on the Index in 1848 for unspecified reasons, during the troubled days following the assassination of Pellegrino ROSSI in Rome. At the same time, following PIUS IX in his flight from Rome, Rosmini fell from favor at Gaeta after expressing his views in favor of a constitution and against Austrian domination.

Examination by the Holy Office. In 1854, the year before his death, a papal commission conducted a full examination of his published writings. At its final meeting, with Pius IX presiding, the commission declared that the works under consideration were to be dismissed without censure. In 1881, however, the Sacred Congregation of the Index, under pressure from some of Rosmini's opponents, ruled that the 1854 decision did not necessarily mean that Rosmini's writings were without error, but only that they were not forbidden (cf. Denzinger-Hünermann 2005, 3154–3155). Subsequently, in 1887 under LEO XIII, forty propositions taken from Rosmini's works were condemned by the Holy Office without any specific theological censure. Their contents fairly well span the breadth of Catholic theology, but supporters of Rosmini have always denied that they express his genuine thought. Their position has been officially accepted now by the Magisterium in its examination of the nineteenth-century doctrinal decrees concerning Rosmini's works.

His Legacy. Rosmini exercises a growing influence through his philosophy of Christian spiritualism and his ascetical writings, and there has been renewed interest in his social thought. In his encyclical letter Fides et Ratio, JOHN PAUL II numbered Rosmini among the modern thinkers in whom a fruitful meeting between philosophical knowledge and the Word of God had been realized. Rosmini's influence continues through the Institute of Charity, which has a strong presence in Italy and Great Britain as well as communities in India, New Zealand, Tanzania, Kenya, Venezuela, and the United States. The Centro Internationale di Studi Rosminiani, located on the shores of Lago Maggiore in Stresa, Italy, has a resident community, a library, and facilities for visiting scholars. It hosts an annual seminar on the thought of Rosmini and publishes an academic journal, Rivista Rosminiana di filosofia e di cultura, as well as the monthly bulletin Charitas. Over twenty volumes of Rosmini's works have been translated into English as part of an ongoing project of the Rosmini House in Durham, England, overseen currently by Fr. Terence Watson.

His Beatification. The 2001 Note of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith helped pave the way for Rosmini's beatification. On June 26, 2006, the Congregation for the Causes of Saints published a decree recognizing his heroic virtue, making him worthy of the title "Venerable." On June 1, 2007, Pope BENEDICT XVI authorized the same Congregation to publish a decree recognizing as a miracle the healing of Sister Ludovica Noè, through the intercession of the Servant of God, Venerable Antonio Rosmini. On Sunday, November 18, 2007, at a sports arena in Novara, Italy, he was formally declared "Blessed" at a Mass for his beatification which was presided over by Cardinal José Saraiva Martins, the Prefect of the Congregation for the Causes of Saints. In his homily the cardinal spoke of Blessed Antonio as "a philosopher, a teacher, a political theorist, an apostle of the faith, a prophet and a cultural giant" who gave witness to "a theological life, where faith implied hope and charity ... trusting in Providence." On the same day, after praying the ANGELUS with the crowd gathered in St. Peter's Square, Benedict XVI referred to Rosmini as "a great priestly figure and illustrious man of culture, inspired by a fervent love for God and the Church," who "witnessed that virtue of charity in all its dimensions and at a high level," especially by means of "intellectual charity," namely, "the reconciliation of reason with faith."

Feast: July 1.

SEE ALSO ASCETICISM; BEATIFICATION; CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY; INDEX OF PROHIBITED BOOKS; ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; PHILOSOPHY; ROSMINIANS; SOCIAL THOUGHT, CATHOLIC; SPIRITUALISM; TEACHING AUTHORITY OF THE CHURCH (MAGISTERIUM); THEOLOGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, Angelus, St. Peter's Square (November 18, 2007) Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/angelus/2007/documents/hf_ben-xvi_ang_20071118_en.html (accessed July 7, 2009).

Michael Buchberger, Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche, edited by Joseph Höfer and Karl Rahner (Freiburg 1957–1968); suppl., Das Zweite Vatikanishe Konsil: Dokumente und Kommentare, edited by H.S. Brechter et al. (1966) 9:53–55; Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart, 3rd ed. (Tübingen 1957–1965) 5:1188–1189.

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Mass for the Beatification of the Servant of God, Antonio Rosmini: Homily of Cardinal José Saraiva Martins" (November 18, 2007) Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20071118_beatif-rosmini_en.html (accessed July 7, 2009).

Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, "Note on the Force of the Doctrinal Decrees Concerning the Thought and Work of Fr. Antonio Rosmini Serbati," in L'Osservatore Romano, English edition, no. 30 (July 25, 2001): 9; also available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_cfaith_doc_20010701_rosmini_en.html (accessed July 7, 2009).

Epistolario completo di Antonio Rosmini-Serbati (Casale, Turin, 1887–1894).

Robert L. Fastiggi, "The Contribution of Antonio Rosmini (1797–1855) to Catholic Social Thought," in The Catholic Social Science Review 12 (2007): 141–153.

Richard Malone, "Historical Review of the Rosmini Case," in L'Osservatore Romano, English edition, no. 30 (July 25, 2001): 9–10.

Albert Michel, Dictionnaire de théologie catholique, edited by Alfred Vacant et al. (Paris 1903–1950; Tables générales 1951–1972), 13.2:2917–2952.

Giambattista Pagani, Vita di Antonio Rosmini, rev. ed., 2 vols., edited by Guido Rossi (Rovereto 1959).

Antonio Rosmini-Serbati, Opere edite e inedite di Antonio Rosmini (Rome-Stresa 1966–).

ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS OF ROSMINI'S WORKS

Maxims of Christian Perfection, 4th ed., translated by W.A. Johnson (1889; London 1963).

Theodicy, 3 vols., translated by Fortunatus Signini (London 1912).

Counsels to Religious Superiors, edited and translated by Claude Leetham (Westminster, Md. 1961).

The Five Wounds of the Church, translated by Denis A. Cleary (Leominster, U.K. 1987).

Principles of Ethics, translated by Denis A. Cleary and Terence P. Watson (Leominster, U.K. 1988).

Conscience, translated by Denis A. Cleary and Terence P. Watson (Durham, U.K. 1989).

Anthropology in Aid of Moral Science, translated by Denis A. Cleary and Terence P. Watson (Durham, U.K. 1991).

Constitutions of the Society of Charity, translated by Denis A. Cleary (Durham, U.K. 1992).

The Philosophy of Right, 6 vols., translated by Denis A. Cleary and Terence P. Watson (Durham, U.K. 1993).

Ascetical Letters, 6 vols., translated by John Morris (Loughborough, U.K. 1993–2000).

The Philosophy of Politics, 2 vols., translated by Denis A. Cleary and Terence P. Watson (Durham, U.K. 1994).

Psychology, 4 vols., translated by Denis A. Cleary and Terence P. Watson (Durham, U.K. 1999).

A Society of Love, translated by Denis A. Cleary (Durham, U.K. 2000).

A New Essay Concerning the Origin of Ideas, 3 vols., translated by Robert A. Murphy, Denis A. Cleary, and Terence P. Watson (Durham, U.K. 2001).

Theosophy, vol. 1: The Problem of Ontology, Being-as-One, translated by Denis A. Cleary and Terence P. Watson (Durham, U.K. 2007).

Theosophy, vol. 2: Trine Being, translated by Terence P. Watson (Durham, U.K. 2007).

Studies

Denis A. Cleary, The Principles of Rosmini's Moral Philosophy (London 1961).

Denis A. Cleary, Antonio Rosmini: Introduction to His Life and Teaching (Durham 1992).

Juan F. Franck, From the Nature of the Mind to Personal Dignity: The Significance of Rosmini's Philosophy (Washington, D.C. 2006).

Claude Leetham, Rosmini, Priest and Philosopher (New York 1982).

Rev. Denis A. Cleary IC
Director
Rosmini House, Durham, United Kingdom

Robert L. Fastiggi
Professor of Systematic Theology
Sacred Heart Major Seminary, Detroit, Mich. (2010)

ROSMINIANS

(IC, Official Catholic Directory #0300) The Institute of Charity, as the Rosminians are officially titled, was founded in 1828 at Calvario in Piedmont, Italy, by Bl. Antonio ROSMINI-SERBATI (beatified on November 18, 2007, by Pope Benedict XVI), at the instigation of St. Maddalena CANOSSA. The ascetic principles expressed in Rosmini's Maxims of Christian Perfection (1830) determined the nature of his religious institute, which was approved as a congregation of exempt religious by GREGORY XVI in 1839.

In 1832 the congregation, which had spread in northern Italy, became associated with the SISTERS OF PROVIDENCE, founded by one of Rosmini's disciples and given papal approval in 1946. In 1835 Rosmini sent three priests to England, where they were later joined by other recruits. Notable among them was Luigi Gentili, a zealous and ascetic Roman, who exercised an important influence on the Catholic community in England from 1842 to 1848. He spent three years evangelizing the newly developed industrial towns of England, preaching missions of two to three weeks duration. In 1848 he went to preach in Dublin, Ireland, where he died of cholera. Among the innovations brought to England and Ireland by the Rosminians were the introduction of the clerical (or Roman) collar, the wearing of the cassock and religious habit in public, the preaching of missions, the practice of the Forty Hours, May devotions, the use of the scapular, the celebration of novenas, public processions, and the blessing of throats on the feast of St. Blaise (February 3).

Members of the Institute of Charity profess the three religious vows. They carry out such ministries by the need of their neighbor or the invitation of the pope or bishops. No work is preferred and none refused; work once undertaken may not be abandoned for a more attractive apostolate. The institute has no distinctive habit, only the cassock. As of 2009, there were 307 religious men in 202 houses (Catholic Almanac 2010, p. 467).

The Rosminians first arrived in the U.S. in 1877. In the U.S., the congregation is principally involved in parish ministries. The U.S. headquarters is in Peoria, Illinois. The generalate is in Rome.

SEE ALSO BLAISE OF SEBASTE, ST.; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.J. Emery The Rosimians, (London 1960).

Claude Leetham, Rosmini (Baltimore 1958).

Institute of Charity Official Web site, available from http://www.rosmini.org/

Gabriel Macwalter, Life of Antonio Rosmini Serbati, Founder of the Institute of Charity, 2 vols. (New York 2004).

Very Rev. Claude R. Leetham IC
Peritus (Theological Advisor)
Vatican Council II

EDS (2010)

RUBIO Y PERALTA, JOSÉ MARÍA, ST.

Priest, Jesuit, CONFESSOR, preacher; known as the Apostle of Madrid; b. July 22, 1864, Dalías, Almería, Spain; d. May 2, 1929, Aranjuez, Spain; beatified

October 6, 1985; canonized May 4, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

José María Rubio y Peralta, the eldest of twelve children of farmers, began his studies for the priesthood in the minor seminary of Almería in 1876. He moved to the major seminary at Granada in 1878, completed his training in Madrid, and was ordained on September 24, 1887. Although desiring to join the Society of Jesus, he could not because he was caring for an elderly priest. He served as assistant pastor in Chinchón (1887–1889) and pastoral administrator in Estremera (1889). In 1890 he was called to Madrid, where he taught METAPHYSICS, Latin, and pastoral THEOLOGY at the seminary there. He was also an examiner and notary to the diocesan tribunal. In 1893 he became chaplain to CISTERCIAN NUNS of the convent of St. Bernard in Madrid.

More than a decade later, after a 1905 pilgrimage to the Holy Land, on October 11, 1906, Fr. Rubio entered the Jesuit novitiate in Granada. On October 12, 1908, he pronounced his vows and in 1910 completed the Jesuits' third probation. In 1911 he returned to Madrid, where, from the Jesuit house, he carried out his priestly ministry with distinction until his death.

Fr. Rubio was known for his exceptional ability as a confessor, spiritual director, and preacher—especially on the Blessed Sacrament and the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Late in his life, he became known as a miracle worker. He organized a group of more than six thousand women, called the Marys of the Tabernacles, who provided and cared for sacred vessels and linens and, more importantly, adored the Blessed Sacrament to keep the Lord company and to make reparation for sins committed against it. Rubio directed the Honor Guard of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. Its five thousand members, like their chaplain, were devoted to corporal and spiritual works of mercy. Rubio showed great attention to the poor, visiting the most impoverished parts of Madrid. He lived his life in conformity with the divine will, with the principal focus being PRAYER, adhering to the motto "to do what God wills and to will what God does." Following his death from a heart attack while visiting the novitiate at Aranjuez, he was buried in its cemetery. In 1953 his remains were transferred to the Jesuit residence on the Calle Maldonado, Madrid.

The miracle necessary for his canonization was approved by the Congregation for the Causes of Saints on April 23, 2002. In the fall of 1987, the left upper lung of Fr. José Gómez Muntán, S.J., was found to have carcinoma. It was determined that the cancer had affected the priest's lung and heart, and Gómez had a circle of dead tissue, approximately 8 centimeters in diameter, in his lung. Surgical removal of the tumor was deemed impossible. Radiation therapy was administered at the beginning of 1988. Meanwhile, his sister and other friends of the Society of Jesus sought the INTERCESSION of Rubio. During this time, Gómez began to heal and then recovered fully. His complete and rapid recovery was determined to be miraculous.

Rubio was canonized by John Paul II in Madrid during a Mass celebrated at the Plaza de Cólon, which the Spanish royal family attended. In his HOMILY following the canonization, the pope stressed Rubio's complete giving-over of himself to the Word and the sacraments, leading many Christians to such sanctity that they would die as martyrs during the Spanish Civil War (1936–1939). The pope also cited Rubio's motto concerning God's will.

Feast: May 2.

SEE ALSO JESUITS; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SPAIN, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 96 (2004): 5–7.

"Biography of the New Saints Canonized in Spain on 4 May," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (May 7–19, 2003): 4.

"Crónica de viaje apostólico," L'Osservatore Romano, Spanish edition (May 9–19, 2003): 10–11.

Ferdinand Holböck, New Saints and Blesseds of the Catholic Church: Blesseds and Saints Canonized by Pope John Paul II during the Years 1979–1983, translated by Michael J. Miller (San Francisco 2000).

John Paul II, "Apostolic Journey of His Holiness John Paul II to Spain" (Homily, May 4, 2003), Vatican Web site, available at http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030504_canonization-spain_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

John Paul II, "Homilía durante la solemne misa de canonización de cinco beatos, domingo 4 de mayo: Testigos de la Resurreción," L'Osservatore Romano, Spanish edition (May 9–19, 2003): 9.

Pedro Miguel Lamet, De Madrid al cielo: Biografía del Beato José Ma. Rubio, S.J. (1864–1929) (Santander, Spain 1985).

Carlos María Staehlin, El Padre Rubío: Vida del Apostol de Madrid, 2nd ed. (Madrid 1953).

Carlos María Staehlin, Un predicatore senza stile: P. Giuseppe Maria Rubio SJ (Rome 1957).

Joseph N. Tylenda, Jesuit Saints & Martyrs: Short Biographies of the Saints, Blessed, Venerables, and Servants of God of the Society of Jesus (Chicago 1998).

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Albert Edward Doskey
Doctoral Student in Historical Theology
The Catholic University of America (2010)

S

SACRAMENTINE SISTERS OF BERGAMO

Also known as Suore Sacramentine di Bergamo, a congregation with papal approbation (1908), founded at Bergamo, Italy, in 1882 by St. Gertrude Caterina COMENSOLI (canonized by Pope Benedict XVI on April 26, 2009). The sisters have as their special purposes daily Eucharistic adoration and the education of youth. Caterina, who became known in religion as Mother Gertrude of the Blessed Sacrament, gathered her first companions in 1882, and received the religious habit in 1884. From Bergamo, where they had started their activity, the sisters had to move to Lodi, Italy, where they received episcopal approval in 1891. The foundress died in 1903. The congregation has expanded to Europe, Africa, and South America.

SEE ALSO EUCHARISTIC DEVOTION; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Caterina Comensoli, Un'anima eucaristica, madre Gertrude Comensoli (Monza 1936).

La Suora Sacramentina alla scuola della Serva di Dio Madre Gertrude Comensoli (Bergamo 1960).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Gertrude Comensoli (1847–1903)," Vatican Web site, October 15, 2009, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2009/ns_lit_doc_20090426_comensoli_en.html (accessed October 29, 2009).

Rev. Franco G. Sottocornola SX
Vice Rector and Professor of Philosophy
Xaverian Missionary Fathers Major Seminary, Parma, Italy

EDS (2010)

SACRED HEARTS OF JESUS AND MARY, CONGREGATION OF THE

(SSCC, Official Catholic Directory #1140) This religious congregation of priests, brothers, and sisters, was founded to continue the work of the communities suppressed by the FRENCH REVOLUTION but with a new motivation: reparative love for the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary. Its founders were Rev. Pierre Marie Joseph COUDRIN, newly ordained priest of the Diocese of Poitiers, France, and Countess Henriette de la Chevalerie, a young aristocrat who had been imprisoned and condemned to death. After her release, she joined a small group of women known as the Association of the Sacred Heart, who were secretly keeping perpetual adoration of the Blessed Sacrament. Coudrin was named director of the association in 1792, and two years later the priest and the countess established the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary and of Perpetual Adoration of the Most Blessed Sacrament of the Altar. In its early days, the congregation was popularly known as the Picpus Fathers, from the Rue de Picpus, Paris, where its first house was founded and where the Picpus cemetery, containing 1,700 victims of the guillotine and the body of the Marquis de Lafayette, is located.

PIUS VII approved the new congregation in 1817. In 1825 LEO XII requested missionaries for Oceania, and priests and brothers went to Hawaii in 1827, the Marquesas Islands and Tahiti in 1833, Easter Island in 1837, and the Gambier and Tuamotu Islands in 1838. The twentieth century witnessed the congregation establishing missions in Japan, China, Southeast Asia, Africa, Norway, South America, and the South Seas.

Because of Protestant opposition, two of the priests sent to Hawaii in 1827 were exiled to California in 1832. During the next ten years, French-born Alexis Bachelot became the first resident pastor in Los Angeles while Irish-born Patrick Short founded the first school near Monterey. In 1845, a group of these fathers arrived from Valparaiso, Chile, to found a college but were assigned instead to staff the vacant California missions from San Francisco to San Diego. Later they withdrew after having opened a school in San Francisco. In 1835, Bp. Benedict J. Fenwick of Boston, MA, asked for missionaries to evangelize the Passamaquody natives in Maine. Fathers Edmund Demillier and Amabilis Petithomme labored there and in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Vermont, and even as far north as Nova Scotia. Demillier wrote the first grammar and catechism in the native language. In 1905, Bishop. William Stang of Fall River, MA, invited the society to establish a residence in his diocese at Fairhaven.

The congregation has three provinces in the U.S.: Eastern Province (estab. 1946 and headquartered in Fair Haven, MA); Western Province (estab. 1970 and headquartered in La Verne, CA); and Hawaii Province (headquartered in Kaneohe, Oahu, HI). The generalate is in Rome. In 2009, there were 898 religious in the community world-wide (Catholic Almanac 2010, p. 467). Renowned members of the congregation include St. Damien (Joseph de VEUSTER), well-loved missionary to Hawaii who is remembered for his care of those afflicted with Hansen's disease. He was canonized by Benedict XVI on October 11, 2009.

SEE ALSO EUCHARISTIC DEVOTION; HAWAII, CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary Official Web site, available from http://www.sscc.org/ (accessed November 10, 2009).

Cornelius Rademaker, Called to Serve; History of the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary (1988).

Vital Jourdan, La Congrégation des Pères des Sacrés Coeurs (Paris 1928).

Rev. Francis Larkin SSCC
National Director of the Enthronement of the Sacred Heart and Night Adoration in the Home
Washington, D.C.

EDS (2010)

SAINTS AND BLESSEDS

From the beginnings of Christianity the Church has venerated those who have followed Christ more closely by their faithfulness to His command: "Be perfect, therefore, as your heavenly Father is perfect!" (Mt 5:48), and thus have attained heaven, the goal of their earthly pilgrimage. As early as the first century the Church has venerated with particular devotion the Blessed Virgin Mary and the ANGELS as well as the apostles and martyrs because they were considered closely joined to us in Christ. The Christian faithful sought the aid of their INTERCESSION for help in the difficulties of this life.

The cult or veneration of the martyrs was among the first expressions of the veneration of the saints and has its origin in the concrete experience of the early Church. Many Christians suffered persecution for this new faith in Jesus Christ. They were given the choice of either denying the faith or enduring a violent death. In choosing to die for the faith they gave witness (in Greek, marturein, from which the English word martyr is derived) to the faith and willingly accepted death. As the Christians saw their relatives and friends suffer a violent death for the faith, they knew that their turn would most probably also come. Thus, the martyrs served as models to be imitated by their fellow Christians because they had died for the faith courageously and thereby won the crown of victory.

Those left behind considered themselves as intimately united to those who had preceded them to heaven. United in a communion of faith, hope and love, the early Christians sought the help and intercession of those who had already given witness to the faith by their violent deaths. They called upon them to intercede with almighty God so that they would remain faithful and in turn give their own witness to the faith in the act of martyrdom. The Christian faithful venerated or honored the memory of these martyrs by gathering around their tombs in the catacombs. This veneration was usually expressed in the liturgical ritual which identified the Christian community as Christian, namely the celebration of the Eucharist.

In summary, the veneration of the saints by the primitive Church was greatly shaped by the concrete experience of persecution. This veneration is marked by three characteristics that have perdured to this very day: The saint is a model for imitation by the faithful; the faithful may pray that, through the intercession of the saint, God will grant help in the difficulties of this life; and finally, the saint is venerated by the Church in its liturgy.

In the fourth century, the situation of the early Church changed radically. In AD 313 the Emperor Constantine signed the Edict of Milan that proclaimed religious toleration in the ROMAN EMPIRE. Even though fewer Christians were martyred for the faith, the primordial mission of the Church was to foster HOLINESS among the faithful who are called to follow Christ closely. All Christians may not be given the grace to die as martyrs for the faith (martyres fidei) by the shedding of blood (red martyrdom). All Christians, however, are called to holiness through a daily dying to sinfulness (white martyrdom) by living the Christian virtues (the Theological virtues of FAITH, HOPE, and LOVE; the CARDINAL VIRTUES of PRUDENCE, JUSTICE, FORTITUDE, and TEMPERANCE; and all other virtues connected to them, such as POVERTY, CHASTITY, and OBEDIENCE) in such a heroic manner as to be a model of imitation by the faithful. Such Christians are called confessors of the faith (confessores fidei).

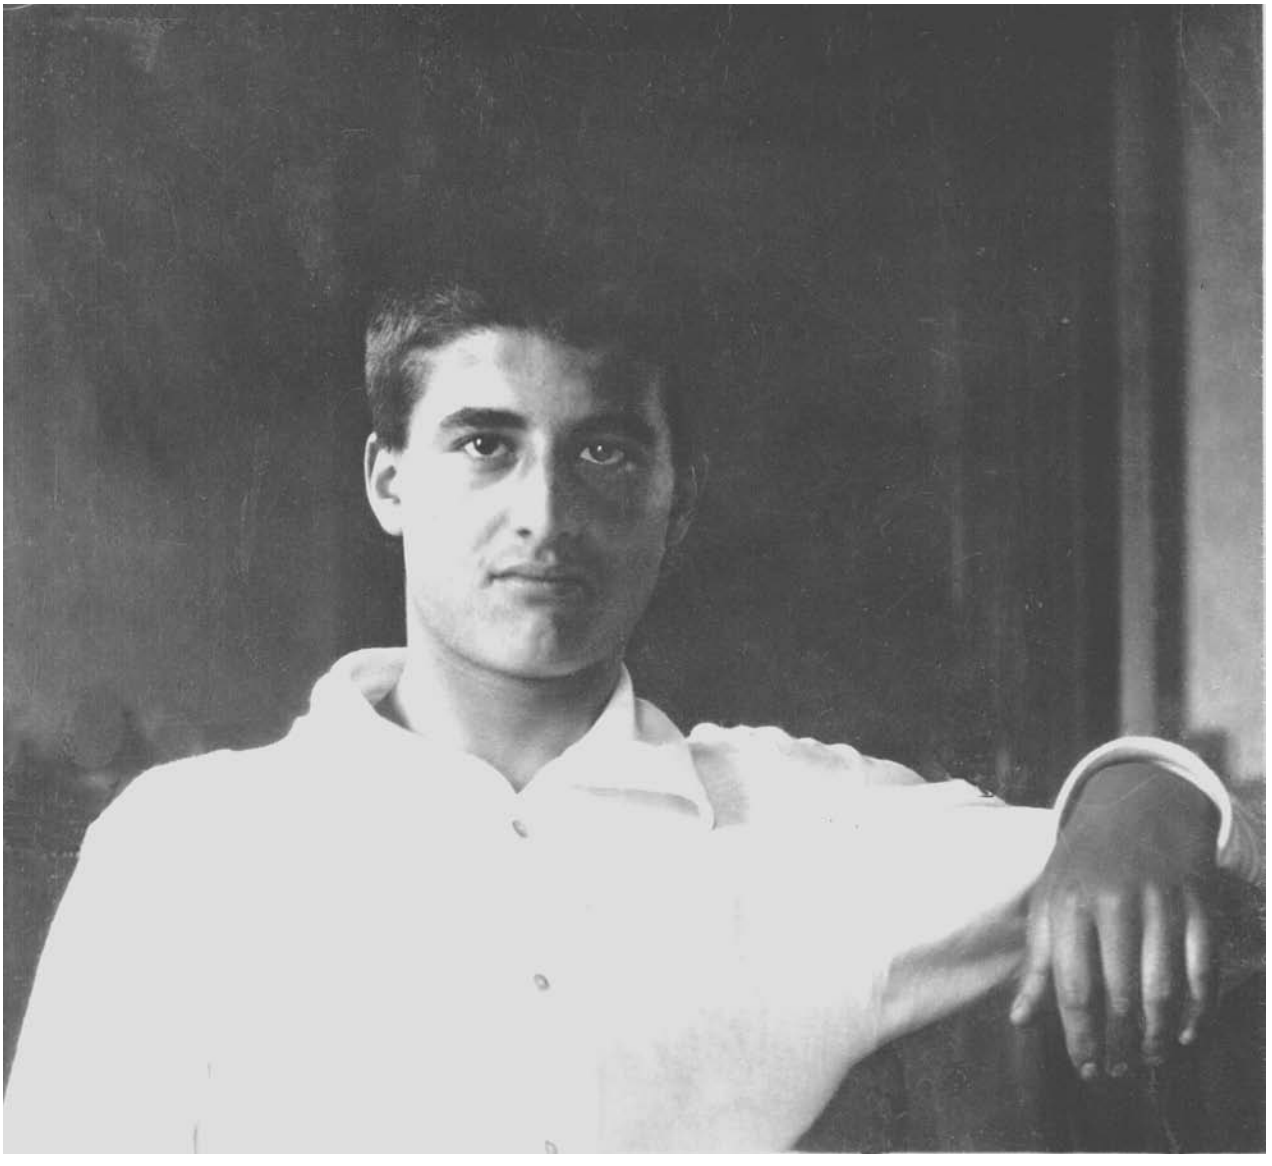
The centuries after the early persecutions saw the rise of desert spirituality and the monastic life. The Christian would live now a sort of heaven-on-earth. Sts. BENEDICT and BASIL established rules of life for their followers that would facilitate the attainment of holiness of life on earth and, therefore, eternal life in heaven. As is true for the holy men and women of the Old and New Testaments, these saints of the early centuries were not canonized after a juridical, investigative process. The act of canonization consisted in the translatio corporis or the transfer of the body of the saint from the catacomb to a place where a BASILICA or church was constructed to honor the saint and preserve the RELICS.

In this period of Church history the voice of the faithful (vox populi) was a valid and an adequate proof of the holiness of the saint. This popular criterion did not, however, preclude some form of intervention on the part of Church authority. The local bishop was the head of the community and thus permission to allow the liturgical veneration of the saint depended upon his approval. It is noteworthy that the authentic voice of the faithful, which is indicative of the finger of God (digitus Dei), is to this present day required before the local bishop may initiate a cause of BEATIFICATION and canonization.



From the fifth through the twelfth centuries canonization was decided by the local bishop. In the year 1234 Pope GREGORY IX published the Decretals that, among other things, reserved canonization to the Roman PONTIFF alone. Canonization by the local bishop, however, continued to occur until approximately 1642, when URBAN VIII published his collection of Decrees. It is difficult to trace the exact origin of beatification. It seems that historically the institution preexisted the terminology, and the reasons for its appearance on the ecclesial scene seem to be more pastoral than theological. The institution of beatification developed historically as a result of the distinction between a canonization done by the Roman Pontiff in contrast to one performed by the local bishop. In the former, only the Roman Pontiff has the power to grant universal liturgical honors to the saint, while in the latter the local bishop was able to grant liturgical honors only locally.

A clearer answer may be found from the diverse elements of their respective definitions. Canonization is the act by which the Roman Pontiff infallibly declares and defines that someone is a saint, and orders liturgical veneration to that saint throughout the universal Church. Beatification is the act by which the Roman Pontiff simply states that someone is to be called "Blessed," and permits liturgical veneration to that blessed that is restricted to the local Church. Canonization alone is the definitive judgment of the Roman Pontiff regarding the sanctity of the individual. Beatification, therefore, is an intermediate step prior to canonization.

These definitions leave one question unanswered: Is the blessed in heaven? From both logical and theological perspectives it seems clear that if the blessed is in heaven then he or she is a saint. Certainly the liturgical honor given to both saints and blesseds has the same three characteristics: the commemoration of their dies natalis (birthday) into heaven which is in actuality the day of their death; the celebration of the Eucharist; and the recitation of the LITURGY OF THE HOURS.

Liturgical veneration of the blessed is distinguished from that of the saint by the restriction of the former to the local church. For example, Blessed MOTHER TERESA OF CALCUTTA, Blessed JOHN XXIII, and the soon to be beatified John Henry NEWMAN may be liturgically honored, respectively, in the Archdiocese of Calcutta (Kolkata, India) and the houses of the MISSIONARIES OF CHARITY, in the dioceses Italy, and in the Archdiocese of Birmingham (Great Britain) as well as the houses of the Oratories of Saint Philip NERI. Increasing liturgical honors to the blessed, such as celebration of the Eucharist or the Liturgy of the Hours, naming of a parish or of a church, and holding prayer services, is beyond the authority of the local bishop and, therefore, requires the express permission of the HOLY SEE through the aegis of the Congregation for DIVINE WORSHIP AND THE DISCIPLINE OF THE SACRAMENTS.

The twentieth century has seen a gradual increase in the number of saints and blesseds proposed by the Roman Pontiffs for the imitation, intercession, and veneration of the faithful. These candidates were from various parts of the world and different states of life in the Church. It was during the pontificate of Pope JOHN PAUL II (1978–2005) that the most dramatic increase took place. An effort was made to counteract the increasing SECULARIZATION of the modern world by offering examples of holiness of individuals from so many walks of life. Priority was given to causes of the laity, for example, Kateri TEKAKWITHA, the Lily of the Mohawks, Francisco and Jacinta Marto, the Seers of Fatima, Pier Giorgio FRASSATI, revered by participants in the World Youth Days; to causes of married couples, for example, Louis and Zélie Martin, the parents of the St. THÉRÈSE DE LISIEUX (the Little Flower), and Luigi and Maria Beltrame QUATTROCCHI; and to causes from countries that have few or no saints, for example, Blessed PETER TO ROT (Papua New Guinea) and St. Alphonsa of the Immaculate Conception MUTTATHUPANDATHU (India).

Bl. Giorgio Frassati (1901–1925). Pope John Paul II beatified Frassati on May 20, 1990. FRASSATI FAMILY ARCHIVES

The Roman Pontiff makes the final judgment to canonize the blessed and beatify the Servant of God, and he performs the ceremony of canonization himself. As regards the ceremony of beatification, however, Pope John Paul II departed from traditional practice and performed the ceremony of beatification as well, oftentimes during his apostolic visit to the local church. This accentuated the importance of the local church in fostering and nourishing the holiness in which the blessed excelled as a particular expression of the faith of that local church.

Immediately upon his election in 2005 Pope BENEDICT XVI restored the traditional practice that was in existence prior to 1978. The Prefect of the Congregation for the Causes of Saints or someone duly delegated by the Supreme Pontiff for the occasion celebrates the ceremony during which the Apostolic Letter authorizing the beatification is read. This ceremony is usually celebrated in the local church. As regards the number of canonizations and beatifications that have taken place during the first years of the pontificate of Benedict XVI, there has been no change of direction, as has been suggested by some, but rather a continuation of this activity.

SEE ALSO APOSTLES OF JESUS; BENEDICT OF NURSIA, ST.; CANONIZATION OF SAINTS (HISTORY AND PROCEDURE); CHURCH, HISTORY OF, I (EARLY); CONSTANTINE I, THE GREAT, ROMAN EMPEROR; DESERT FATHERS; HEAVEN (THEOLOGY OF); INFALLIBILITY; MARTYRDOM, THEOLOGY OF; MONASTICISM; SAINTS, INTERCESSION OF; VIRTUE, HEROIC; WITNESS, CHRISTIAN; WORLD YOUTH DAY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Agostino Amore, O.F.M., "Culto e Canonizzazione dei Santi nell'antichità cristiana," Antonianum 52 (1977): 38–80.

Hippolyte Delehaye, S.J., Les origines du culte des martyrs, 2nd ed. (Brussels 1933).

George Evans, 101 Questions & Answers on Saints (New York 2007).

José Luis Gutiérrez, "La proclamazione della Santità nella Chiesa," Ius Ecclesiae 12, no. 2 (May–August 2000): 493–529.

Paolo Molinari, S.J., Saints: Their Place in the Church, translated by Dominic Manica, S.J. (New York 1965).

Robert J. Sarno, "The Saints as Intercessors. Praying with the Church," World Apostleship of Prayer (July–September 1992).

Fabijan Veraja, La Beatificazione. Storia-Problemi-Prospettive, Sussidi per lo studio delle Cause dei Santi 2 (Rome 1983).

Rev. Msgr. Robert J. Sarno
Study Adjutant, Congregation for the Causes of Saints; Visiting Professor of Canon Law, Pontifical Urbanian University, Rome
Professor of Theology, Emmanuel School of Mission (Rome); External Judge of the Tribunal of Appeals for the Diocese of Rome (2010)

SALAZAR, ANTÓNIO DE OLIVEIRA

Portuguese statesman and dictator; b. Vimieiro, province of Beira Alta, Portugal, April 28, 1889; d. Lisbon, July 27, 1970.

The most significant figure in twentieth-century Portugal, António de Oliveira Salazar, a modest but determined authoritarian, rescued his nation from political and economic ruin but failed to understand that the circumstances that had once made it great no longer existed.

Salazar was born into a family of landowners living in reduced circumstances in north-central Portugal. His intensely Catholic mother encouraged him to study for the priesthood. After spending some years in a seminary, he decided to pursue a law degree. He subsequently specialized in economics at the University of COIMBRA and became a professor there in the early 1920s.

Salazar, Antonio de Oliveira (1889–1970). Portuguese statesman and dictator. THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Early Political Career. An intense, devout, and conservative young man, Salazar found little to like in the Portugal of the early twentieth century. The MONARCHY had been overthrown in 1910, traditional society seemed to be collapsing, and the new republic was torn by factionalism and militarism.

His first venture into politics, as a founding member of the Catholic CENTER PARTY, brought him into Parliament in 1921, but he left after only a year, frustrated by the disorder and disputes that left public problems unresolved. During the next few years he concentrated on teaching and lecturing and gained recognition for analytical writings that suggested a disciplined, orderly approach to national issues.

After the military coup that brought António Carmona (1869–1951) to power in 1926, Salazar tentatively accepted the portfolio of finance but declined after he could not get the guarantee of sweeping reform that he demanded. By 1928, President Carmona was ready to meet the professor's terms and made him minister of finance with a free hand to reorganize the tax system and all other aspects of fiscal affairs. Salazar was named prime minister in 1932, retaining the finance ministry as well until 1940. Salazar was essentially dictator from this point on. His creation of the Estado Novo (New State) in 1933 gave him full constitutional authority to rule the country under the title of prime minister and left successive presidents of the republic as mere figureheads.

Dictatorship and World War. Considering the onset of the worldwide economic depression, the civil war in neighboring Spain in 1936, and the outbreak of World War II in 1939, Salazar might well have resigned in despair or proclaimed excuses for not being able to rescue Portugal from its economic woes. His reputation as a virtual miracle worker, although greatly exaggerated, came mainly from his ability to transcend all these problems by a combination of austerity and bullying. The common people of Portugal were told that they must be prepared to bear hardships and stand together in a time of adversity. The traditional elite, including the landowning gentry, the officer core, and the Catholic hierarchy, were promised that their institutional interests would be safeguarded, albeit on a modest scale. The dictator set the example by his modest, frugal, lifestyle. His critics complained that he was employing smoke and mirrors to confuse and mislead the public. Yet by leaving them no parliamentary or journalistic outlets for protest, he was able to secure acquiescence. His guiding doctrines were a mixture of German autarky, Italian FASCISM, and pious trust in the LORD. Above all, dreams of bygone glory were put aside for belt-tightening demands for REALISM and minimalism.

Neutrality proved to be Portugal's salvation amidst a complex of conflicts. Although sympathetic to Francisco FRANCO's right-wing doctrines, Salazar gave minimal support to the nationalist revolt in Spain and did not formally recognize the new regime there until it had been firmly established. As for the new European war precipitated by Adolf HITLER and Benito MUSSOLINI, Salazar once again felt a degree of ideological sympathy but remembered all too well the folly of Portugal's entry into the previous Great War. During World War I the newborn republic had sought the benefits of a British alliance and had suffered ghastly losses on the field of battle.

Neutrality during World War II proved to be a master stroke of policy. Salazar sold tungsten to the German military industrialists while making bases in the Azores available to the Western allies. He turned Lisbon into a center of international intrigue and espionage from which financial benefits trickled down to many sectors of Portuguese society. He secured his colonial boundaries from British invasion while hinting that Portugal herself might make strategic advantages available to Hitler and Franco.

By 1945, the Salazar regime had acquired a reputation for cunning but was flourishing, while that of Franco remained long discredited and those of Hitler and Mussolini were destroyed. Critics who wished to attach the label of fascism to Portugal were unable to do so, for Salazar's programs were eclectic and his philosophy pragmatic and patriotic rather than malign.

Cold War Years. By 1949 Salazar had transformed his somewhat ritualistic denunciation of Communism into a membership card in the Cold War alliance led by the United States. He was the only dictator whose country was admitted into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). Those who considered the Soviet Union a police state rarely bothered to mention that Salazar's secret police, modeled on the Gestapo, still kept a tight lid on America's new partner.

During the two decades following the end of World War II, Portugal exhibited a long-delayed economic upturn. Overseas investment poured in, its gross national product grew steadily, and Salazar was able to launch his deferred dream. A country with a European area of 35,000 square miles that held a colonial empire of over 800,000 square miles had long been regarded as an anomaly that could not possibly be transformed into a renewed sense of historical pride and contemporary profit. Salazar now decided to launch his grand design by drawing upon Portugal's new domestic prosperity to extract the natural resources of her colonies. Despite the seizure of Goa by India and some African outposts by newly independent British colonies, Salazar refused to appreciate the dangerous course upon which he was embarking. When the United Nations warned Portugal that colonialism was no longer an acceptable basis for international policy, Salazar insisted that such territories as Angola and Mozambique had recently been elevated to the status of "overseas provinces." This response was met with derision and rage, and it inspired the emerging nations of Africa to aid nationalist rebels in the struggles for independence that broke out in Portugal's African empire.

Final Years. The aging dictator refused to yield the territory that constituted the foundation of all his plans and expectations. Tens of thousands of conscripts were called up to wage Europe's last great imperial war. Gunboats and warplanes patrolled coasts and rivers while aircraft bombarded rebel strongholds. Civilians and even professional soldiers began to question the long-respected wisdom of their leader. Then in 1968, Salazar suffered a disabling stroke. It was not clear whether he ever understood what had happened to him. His veteran henchman, Marcelo Caetano (1906–1980), took charge of the government and carried on the war. Two years later, Salazar died. It was not until 1974 that his infamous legacy was swept away by a bloodless revolt of troops based in Lisbon who ousted Caetano and forced the abandonment of the colonial empire.

Catholicism and Salazar. António de Oliveira Salazar, who might have become a priest, chose to follow another career. Many thought of him as being a kind of secular MONK. He never married, lived in almost monkish austerity and simplicity, and clung throughout his life to the basic principles of Catholicism. Yet he was, in many respects, moved more by patriotism than piety. The Catholic Church in Portugal, for all its influence over the centuries, never wielded the power that Catholicism could mobilize in Spain. The world learned to think of Spain and Catholicism for extended periods as virtually synonymous during the COUNTER REFORMATION and during the great age of missionary activity, for example. Portugal had no such reputation, for all of its conversions in Brazil and (to a lesser extent) in Asia and Africa. In turn, the world never denounced the Portuguese INQUISITION, nor even knew that one existed. It is, therefore, not surprising that Salazar remained devout but restrained, treating the Church and its interests as part of the whole structure of traditional Portuguese society. That society he wished to preserve. He opposed the radicalism of the left, including Communism, less for its challenge to the Church than for the damage it could do to the nation.

In 2007, nearly four decades after Salazar ceased to rule Portugal, the television network RTP invited its viewers to make their own nominations in the series Great Portuguese. In what became a contest to name the greatest of all, such worthy nominees as Vasco da Gama (c. 1460–1524), the navigator who had led the way in the fifteenth century to the founding of a colonial empire, and Aristides de Sousa Mendes (1885–1954), a diplomat who used the cover of wartime neutrality to save thousands of Jews from the HOLOCAUST (SHOAH), a plurality was awarded to Salazar. The result of this vote was a national tumult with citizens of all political and religious persuasions denouncing or praising the long-dead dictator. Nostalgic admirers insisted that the country had been better off in his time; realists insisted that the word great was indefinable and that Salazar had done the best he could with what circumstances had given him. Perhaps the ghost of Salazar might have been most intrigued by those participants in the national furor who saw in all of this an opportunity to promote tourism and even sell such souvenirs as Salazar-emblazoned T-shirts. The Late Great Man was, after all, an economist.

SEE ALSO PORTUGAL, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

James M. Anderson, The History of Portugal (Westport, Conn. 2000).

David Birmingham, A Concise History of Portugal (New York 1993).

Christine Garnier, Salazar in Portugal (New York 1954).

Hugh Kay, Salazar and Modern Portugal (London 1970).

Julia L. Ortiz-Griffin and William D. Griffin, Spain and Portugal Today (New York 2003).

Julia L. Ortiz-Griffin
Professor of Spanish Language and Literature
City University of New York (2010)

SALKAHÁZI, SÁRA, BL.

MARTYR, member of the Sisters of Social Service; b. May 11, 1899, Kassa-Kosice, Upper Hungary (now Košice, Slovakia); d. December 27, 1944, Budapest, Hungary; beatified September 17, 2006, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Sára Salkaházi, the daughter of well-to-do parents, worked in several professions before entering religious life. In each career, she wrote about social issues. As a teacher, she examined the problems of poor students. She then worked as a bookbinder's apprentice and in a millinery shop. Sára joined the Christian Socialist Party and was editor of the party newspaper.

Sára discerned a religious vocation and wanted to join the Sisters of Social Service, a Hungarian congregation founded in 1923, but she was rejected because she smoked cigarettes. Sára managed to quit smoking and was accepted in 1929. She was thirty when she took her first vows.

Sr. Sára's ministry included organizing Catholic Charities' work, teaching, and supervising a shelter for the poor. She also wrote and published a Catholic women's journal. Sr. Sára's demanding schedule—she received fifteen different assignments in one year—left her exhausted, and her superiors questioned her vocation. They refused to allow her to renew her vows and barred her from wearing her habit for one year. She was later allowed to renew her vows and hoped to serve as a missionary in Brazil. However, the start of WORLD WAR II (1939–1945) prevented her from leaving Hungary. Sr. Sára's subsequent ministry included building the first Hungarian college for working women and opening homes for working girls in Budapest.

When the Hungarian Nazi Party began persecuting Jewish people, Sister Sára and her community sheltered Jews. In 1943 she offered herself to the sisters as a sacrifice in the event of religious persecution. On December 27, 1944, Sr. Sára encountered Nazi soldiers outside a girls home where she served as director. Instead of fleeing, she went inside. The soldiers followed her and arrested people, including Sr. Sára. She was shot to death after she knelt and made the sign of the cross. After Sr. Sára's sacrifice, no other sisters were harmed. She saved one hundred Jewish people, while her congregation saved some one thousand lives.

Pope Benedict XVI beatified Sr. Sára on September 17, 2006. At the recognition, celebrated at St. Stephen Basilica in Budapest, Cardinal Péter Erdő observed that Sr. Sára "lived through the storms of the 20th century Hungarian history and she gave us an example of the feminine way to holiness."

Feast: December 27.

SEE ALSO HUNGARY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SOCIAL SERVICE, SISTERS OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Blessed Sára Salkaházi: Sister of Social Service," available from http://www.salkahazisara.com/index_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

Catholic Online, "Sára Salkaházi, Hungary's Martyr of Charity: Interview with Péter Erdő," September 23, 2006, available from http://www.catholic.org/featured/headline.php?ID=3665 (accessed November 6, 2009).

Péter Erdő, "Homily for the Beatification of Sr. Sára Salkaházi," Magyar Kurír Web site, September 18, 2006, available from http://www.magyarkurir.hu/?m_op=view&id=12212&rovat=62&sessid=KjU1OTExOTk5_MTE1OTI3OTk1MzY1NTk1MDk2 (accessed November 6, 2009).

Society of the Sisters of Social Service–Buffalo, "Blessed Sára Salkaházi," available from http://www.sistersofsocialservicebuffalo.org/blessedsara.htm (accessed November 6, 2009).

Liz Swain
Independent Researcher
San Diego, California (2010)

SALVATION, NECESSITY OF THE CHURCH FOR

For most of the Church's history, its necessity for SALVATION has been expressed by the statement: "There is no salvation outside the Church." Rather than by a positive statement about the necessary role that GOD has given to the Church in His plan of salvation, the Church has expressed its belief by a negative statement about those outside it. This negative statement has also implied a judgment that those outside were guilty and were therefore justly excluded from salvation. However, a notable exception to this can be seen in the way that the early Fathers replied to the question about the salvation of those who had lived before the coming of CHRIST.

Teaching of the Church Fathers. One of the questions put to early Christians was: "If Christ is the savior of all humanity, why has he come only now into the world? What about the salvation of our ancestors?" To this question no early CHRISTIAN writer is known to have replied that those ancestors would be excluded from salvation because they had not believed in Christ. On the contrary, they taught that God had given the Mosaic Law to the Jews and the LAW of reason to the GENTILES and that people who had lived according to those laws would be saved. CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA interpreted 1 Pet 3:19; 4:6 to mean that all those who had lived justly would hear Christ announce their salvation when he descended among the dead (Stromata 6:6, The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 2, 490–92). There was a remarkable consensus among early Christian writers that all those who had lived virtuously before the coming of Christ would be saved.

There was a very different consensus about the fate of Christians who remained in a state of separation from the Church by adhering to heretical or schismatic sects. CYPRIAN, bishop of CARTHAGE and MARTYR, coined the axiom: "There is no salvation outside the Church," and used it as a warning to Christians who persisted in a state of separation from the Church. He and his fellow bishops believed all such people guilty of grave sin, for which, if they did not repent and return to the Church, they would be excluded from salvation. They did not warn people who were not Christian that there was no salvation for them outside the Church, while Christians were still a small and persecuted minority. A striking change took place during the course of the fourth century, which began with a severe persecution of the Church and ended with Christianity as the official religion of the ROMAN EMPIRE. It is not surprising that the fourth and fifth centuries saw a great influx of people into the Church, which resulted in a new attitude toward those who had not accepted the Christian FAITH. Saint AMBROSE (In Ps 118, Sermo 8:57. Patrologia Latina 15:1318), Saint GREGORY OF NYSSA (Oratio Catechetica 30, Patrologia Graeca 45:76-77), and Saint JOHN CHRYSOSTOM (In Epist. Ad Rom., Hom. 26:3–4; Patrologia Graeca 60:641-42) all taught that since the GOSPEL had now been proclaimed everywhere, and everyone had been given the opportunity to accept it, those who had not become Christians were guilty of refusing God's offer of salvation and would be justly condemned.

Prior to his controversy with Pelagius, Saint AUGUSTINE also taught that there was no salvation for those who had heard the Gospel and refused to accept it (Epist. 102:8–15, CSEL 34, 2:551–58). However, the new understanding of ORIGINAL SIN he arrived at as a result of that controversy led Augustine to believe that God could justly condemn people to eternal PUNISHMENT for the inherited GUILT of original sin alone. This led him to conclude that those who died without faith in Christ, even if they had never heard the Gospel preached, would be condemned to Hell. This also led Augustine to explain 1 Tim 2:4, "God our savior wills everyone to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth," in such a way that it does not mean that God's saving WILL is truly universal. However, not all the conclusions that Augustine drew from the DOCTRINE of original sin became part of the mainline Christian tradition. The consensus among medieval theologians was that God provided everyone with the means by which they could be saved and that no one would be condemned except for grave personal sin.

The Doctrine of St. Thomas. St. THOMAS AQUINAS took this PRINCIPLE into account in his interpretation of the traditional axiom: "There is no salvation outside the Church." St. Thomas explained that this is true because only in the Church does one have the faith and sacraments that are the necessary means of salvation (In I Decret., ed. Parma 16:305). Hence, his understanding of the necessity of the Church for salvation depended on his understanding of the necessity of faith in Christ. He shared the belief of his contemporaries that the Gospel had been preached everywhere, so that those who lacked Christian faith, such as Jews and Moslems, were guilty of the sin of infidelity and would be justly condemned. When the question was raised about a person who had heard nothing about Christ, the thought did not occur to him that somewhere there might be vast numbers of people to whom the Gospel had not been preached. Rather, along with other medieval theologians, he imagined a person who had been brought up among brute beasts. He was confident that if that person followed his natural reason in seeking the GOOD and avoiding EVIL, God would make explicit faith in Christ possible for him, either by private revelation or by sending him a preacher. Once he had faith in Christ, he could have baptism as well, at least by implicit DESIRE.

Doctrinal Development after Discovery of New World. The discoveries of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries shattered the medieval belief that the Gospel had been preached everywhere, so that everyone, with perhaps a rare exception, had the opportunity to arrive at explicit Christian faith. The Dominican missionaries in Latin America sent word to their brethren at the University of Salamanca that none of the people to whom they were preaching had ever heard of Christ. If explicit faith in Christ is necessary, how could the previous generations of those people have been saved? In response, the Dominican theologians went back to the solution Saint Thomas had given to the question about the salvation of Gentiles who had lived before the Christian era and had not heard of the MESSIAH to come.

His answer had been that if they had been following their CONSCIENCE, God would have made available to them that faith "without which it is impossible to please God, for anyone who approaches God must believe that he exists and that he rewards those who seek him" (Heb 11:6). He interpreted this to include faith in God's providence, which would implicitly include the whole economy of salvation and, therefore, faith in Christ as its Mediator. This solution was followed by the JESUITS and some other Catholic theologians, but it was rejected by the Reformers, especially by John CALVIN, who taught that God would see to it that all those who were predestined to salvation would come to explicit faith in Christ (Institutes of the Christian Religion, III, 21:5–7; 24:12). A similar position was held by the Jansenists, who continued to insist on the absolute necessity of Christian faith and, hence, on the exclusion of all non-Christians from salvation.

The Doctrine of Pope Pius IX. By the beginning of the nineteenth century, knowing the immense number of people in the world who had not yet heard the Gospel preached and could not be judged guilty of rejecting Christian faith, many Catholics, reacting against the rigid Jansenist position, accepted the idea that it did not matter what religion people professed as long as they lived good lives. This was known as "religious indifferentism," which Pope PIUS IX condemned as that "impious and deadly opinion that the way of eternal salvation can be found in any religion" (Singulari quadam, Acta Pii IX I/1, 626). Nevertheless, Pius IX insisted that "those who labor in invincible ignorance concerning our most holy religion," and who "live an honest and upright life can, through the working of the divine light and grace, attain eternal life, since God, by reason of his supreme goodness and kindness, will never allow anyone who has not the guilt of willful sin to be punished by eternal sufferings." He went on to explain "the well known Catholic dogma that no one can be saved outside the Catholic Church" to mean that it is those who are "contumacious against its authority" and are "pertinaciously divided from the unity of that Church," who cannot obtain eternal salvation (Quanto conficiamur moerore, Acta Pii IX I,3, 613). In thus interpreting the "well known Catholic dogma" to apply only to those who are guilty of grave sin by not belonging to the Catholic Church, Pius IX anticipated the doctrine of Vatican II.

The Doctrine of the Second Vatican Council. The Second Vatican Council, in its Dogmatic Constitution on the Church, explained the necessity of the Church for salvation in the following way:

> This sacred Synod, basing itself upon Sacred Scripture and tradition, teaches that the Church, now sojourning on earth as an exile, is necessary for salvation. For Christ, made present to us in his Body, which is the Church, is the one Mediator and the unique way of salvation. In explicit terms He himself affirmed the necessity of faith and baptism (cf. Mk 16:16; Jn 3:5) and thereby affirmed also the necessity of the Church, for through baptism as through a door men enter the Church. Whosoever, therefore, knowing that the Catholic Church was made necessary by God through Jesus Christ, would refuse to enter her or to remain in her could not be saved. (Lumen gentium 14)

The Council based the necessity of the Church for salvation on the fundamental Christian beliefs that all mankind has been alienated from God by sin, that eternal salvation depends on being reconciled with God, that Jesus Christ is the one Mediator of this reconciliation, and that salvation depends on a relationship with Him. This saving relationship with Christ is obtained through faith and baptism and, therefore, through the Church which provides these means of salvation. Since these are available through almost all Christian churches, the question arises why the Council said that God has made the Catholic Church so necessary for salvation that those who refuse to belong to it could not be saved. The reason would seem to be that, as the Council said in its Decree on Ecumenism: "It is through Christ's Catholic Church alone, which is the all-embracing means of salvation, that the fullness of the means of salvation can be obtained" (Unitatis redintegratio 3). In other words, it is God's will that all who can do so should have the fullness of the means of salvation. It is only those who recognize that this is God's will for them and would sin grievously in refusing to belong to the Catholic Church, who would be excluded from salvation. On the other hand, the Council recognized that the churches and ecclesial communities that are separated from the Catholic Church "have by no means been deprived of significance and importance in the mystery of salvation. For the Spirit of Christ has not refrained from using them as means of salvation which derive their efficacy from the very fullness of grace and truth entrusted to the Catholic Church" (Unitatis redintegratio 3).

Universal Role of Church in Salvation. Vatican II affirmed that God offers to everyone the grace by which they can be saved and said that those who are not Christian are "related in various ways" to the Church (Lumen gentium 16), but it did not explain of what this relatedness consists. In three of its documents it described the Church as the "universal sacrament of salvation" (Lumen gentium 48, Gaudium et spes 45, Ad gentes 1). The first time the council described the Church as "sacrament" it explained this to mean "sign and instrument" (Lumen gentium 1). Hence the term "universal sacrament of salvation" can be understood to describe the Church as sign and instrument of salvation for all people. Such a universal role of the Church in salvation has been affirmed in some authoritative documents since Vatican II.

In his ENCYCLICAL Redemptoris missio, referring to people "who do not have an opportunity to come to know or accept the Gospel revelation or to enter the Church," John Paul II said: "For such people salvation in Christ is accessible by virtue of a grace which, while having a mysterious relationship to the Church, does not make them formally part of the Church" (Redemptoris missio 10). He described the Church as "the sacrament of salvation for all mankind" (Redemptoris missio 20), and since, as sacrament, the Church is both sign and instrument, he criticized those who "consider the Church herself only a sign" (Redemptoris missio 17).

In its Declaration Dominus Iesus (2000), the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith listed a number of truths, which it said some people think have been superseded, but which the Congregation intended to reiterate as part of the Church's faith. Among these truths it included "the universal salvific mediation of the Church" (4). It explained the term universal sacrament of salvation to mean that the Church "has, in God's plan, an indispensable role in the salvation of every human being" (20). "With the coming of the Savior Jesus Christ, God has willed that the Church founded by him be the instrument for the salvation of all humanity" (22).

While the INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL COMMISSION does not share the authority of the Magisterium, its document The Hope of Salvation for Infants Who Die Without Being Baptized (Origins 36/45, April 26, 2007, 725–746) affirms not only the recent development of the Church's doctrine on Limbo, but also its teaching on the universality of the Church's role in salvation. For instance, after quoting several passages from the documents of Vatican II, it said: "What is striking in these quotations is the universal extent of the Church's mediating role in ministering God's salvation." (57) Its statement: "All salvation comes from Christ and therefore, in some way, through the Church" (82) reflects Catholic teaching about the Church's universal mediation of salvation, but also the lack of an official answer to the question as to how the Church exercises such universal mediation. Some have suggested that it is through the Church's celebration of the EUCHARIST, in which it prays that this sacrifice "may advance the peace and salvation of all the world," and describes its offering of the body and blood of Christ as "the acceptable sacrifice which brings salvation to the whole world."

SEE ALSO DOCTRINE OF THE FAITH, CONGREGATION FOR THE; DOMINUS IESUS; ENCYCLICAL; FAITHFUL; FEENEY, LEONARD; INFIDEL; JANSENISM; LAW, MOSAIC; NECESSITY OF MEANS; NECESSITY OF PRECEPT; PELAGIUS AND PELAGIANISM; PROVIDENCE OF GOD (THEOLOGY OF); REDEMPTORIS MISSIO; REVELATIONS, PRIVATE; SALAMANCA, UNIVERSITY OF; SALVATION HISTORY (HEILSGESCHICHTE); SOCIETY (THEOLOGY OF); SUMMORUM PONTIFICUM; VATICAN COUNCIL II; VOTUM; WILL OF GOD.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hans Urs von Balthasar, Dare We Hope: "That All Men Be Saved"?, translated by David Kipp and Lothar Krauth (San Francisco 1988).

Louis Capéran, Le Problème du Salut des Infidèles (Toulouse, France 1934).

Yves Congar, "Hors de l'Église, pas de salut," in Sainte Église; études et Approches Ecclésiologiques (Paris 1963), 417–432.

Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Dominus Iesus, On the Unicity and Salvific Universality of Jesus Christ and the Church (Declaration, August 6, 2000), available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_cfaith_doc_20000806_dominus-iesus_en.html (accessed March 3, 2008).

Jean Daniélou, The Salvation of the Nations, translated by Angeline Bouchard (Notre Dame, Ind. 1962).

Maurice Eminyan, The Theology of Salvation (Boston 1960).

International Theological Commission, For the text of The Hope of Salvation for Infants Who Die Without Being Baptized, see: Origins, 36 no. 45 (April 26, 2007): 725–746 (English).

Pope John Paul II, Redemptoris missio, On the Permanent Validity of the Church's Missionary Mandate (Encyclical, December 7, 1990), available from http://www.vatican.va/edocs/ENG0219/_INDEX.HTM (accessed March 3, 2008).

John J. King, The Necessity of the Church for Salvation in Selected Theological Writings of the Past Century (Washington, D.C. 1960).

Ricardo Lombardi, The Salvation of the Unbeliever, translated by Dorothy M. White (Westminster, Md. 1956).

Henri de Lubac, "Salvation through the Church," in Catholicism: The Study of Dogma in Relation to the Corporate Destiny of Mankind (New York 1964), 116–133.

Pope Pius IX, For the text of Quanto conficiamur moerore, see: Acta Pii IX I, 3 (August 10, 1863): 613 (Latin).

Pope Pius IX, For the text of Singulari quadam, see: Acta Pii IX I, 1 (September 24, 1912): 626 (Latin).

Joseph Ratzinger/Pope Benedict XVI, "Kein Heil ausserhalb der Kirche?" in Das Neue Volk Gottes; Entwürfe zur Ekklesiologie (Düsseldorf 1969), 339–361.

Bernard Sesboüé, "Hors de l'Église, Pas de Salut" Histoire d'une Formule et Problèmes d'Interprétation (Paris 2004).

Francis A. Sullivan, Salvation Outside the Church?: Tracing the History of the Catholic Response (New York 1992).

Jerome P. Theisen, The Ultimate Church and the Promise of Salvation (Collegeville, Minn. 1976).

Vatican Council II, Lumen gentium, On the Church (Dogmatic Constitution, November 21, 1964), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_const_19641121_lumen-gentium_en.html (accessed March 3, 2008).

Vatican Council II, Unitatis redintegratio, On Ecumenism (Decree, November 21, 1964), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_decree_19641121_unitatis-redintegratio_en.html (accessed March 3, 2008).

Vatican Council II, Ad gentes, On the Mission Activity of the Church (Decree, December 7, 1965), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_decree_19651207_ad-gentes_en.html (accessed March 3, 2008).

Vatican Council II, Gaudium et spes, On the Church in the Modern World (Pastoral Constitution, December 7, 1965), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_cons_19651207_gaudium-et-spes_en.html (accessed March 3, 2008).

Rev. Francis A. Sullivan SJ
Professor Emeritus, Pontifical Gregorian University
Adjunct Professor, Boston College (2010)

SALZANO, GIULIA, ST.

Foundress of the Congregation of the Catechetical Sisters of the Sacred Heart; b. Santa Maria Capua Vetere, Caserta Province, Italy, October 13, 1846; d. May 17, 1929; beatified April 27, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II. On December 19, 2009, following the approval of a miracle, the Holy See announced that Salzano would be elevated to sainthood in 2010. At the time of publication of this entry, a date had not yet been set.

Born to Diego Salzano, a captain in the lancers of King Ferdinand II (1810–1859) of Naples, and Adelaide Valentino, Giulia Salzano was entrusted to an orphanage at age four after her father's death. She remained there, raised by the Sisters of Charity in the Royal Orphanage of Saint Nicola La Strada, until age fifteen. In 1865 Salzano earned a diploma as a primary school teacher. The same year, she moved with her family to Naples Province and began teaching at a local school in Casoria.

Salzano is recognized for the CHARISM of imparting the Church's teachings to people of all ages. This, and her devotion to the Sacred Heart, led her in 1905 to found the Congregation of the Catechetical Sisters of the Sacred Heart. Its motto was Ad majorem Cordis Jesu gloriam (For the greater glory of the Heart of Jesus). Today, the Catechetical Sisters of the Sacred Heart are devoted to catechesis, education, and mission in Italy, Canada, Colombia, Peru, Brazil, India, the Philippines, and Indonesia. Encouraging her daughters, Salzano once told them, "The Sister catechist must be ready, at every moment, to instruct the little ones and the uneducated. She must not count the sacrifices such a ministry demands, indeed she should desire to die while doing it, if this be God's will."

Salzano was affectionately and respectfully called Donna Giulietta (Lady Juliet) by the people of Casoria. In addition to educating her pupils in the school, she reached out to their families and the townspeople, helping them to grow in the faith. "All Casorians must know, love, and serve God," she once wrote in a letter to Vincenzo Maria Sarnelli (1835–1898), archbishop of Naples.

On the day before she died, she examined more than a hundred children preparing for FIRST COMMUNION. In his HOMILY beatifying Salzano and five others in April 2003, Pope John Paul II praised her for being ahead of her time, calling her "an apostle of the new evangelization in which she combined apostolic activity with prayer, offered ceaselessly, especially for the conversion of the 'indifferent.'" She is considered a prophetess of the new evangelization because of her charism of sharing the teachings of Jesus.

Feast: May 17.

SEE ALSO EVANGELIZATION, NEW; ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six New Servants of God," (Homily, April 27, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030427_beatification_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Giulia Salzano (1846–1929)," Vatican Web site, April 27, 2003, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20030427_salzano_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Suore Catechiste del Sacro Cuore, "Founder: The Life of the Blessed Guilia Salzono," available from http://www.catechistesacrocuore.org/eng/fondatrice.html (accessed September 6, 2009).

Rebecca Bowman Woods
Independent Researcher
Cincinnati, Ohio (2010)

SARTRE, JEAN-PAUL

Existentialist philosopher; b. Paris, June 21, 1905; d. April 15, 1980.

Jean-Paul Sartre received his degree in PHILOSOPHY from the École Normale Supérieur in 1929 and taught at various Lycées from 1931 to 1944. In 1933 he went to Germany for a year to study the philosophy of Edmund HUSSERL and became aware of Martin HEIDEGGER. Returning to France he wrote both philosophy and fiction (his novel Nausea appeared in 1938) and taught philosophy until 1939. He was drafted into the French army and, when France fell to the Germans, he became a prisoner of war. Released in 1941 he taught philosophy at the Lycée Condorcet. In 1943 he gave up teaching and published Being and Nothingness (a lengthy and sometimes brilliant, philosophic ramble) and a popular play, "The Flies," a version of the Greek legend of Orestes. These brought him considerable fame. Sartre wrote additional fiction calling for humans to free themselves from the past and to define their own values.

Development of Philosophy. Through his experience of the Second World War, the Occupation, the Resistance, and the new France that emerged, he became politically engaged. This decision marked a turn from the individualist teaching of Nausea and Being and Nothingness. He and several friends founded a left-wing journal, Les Temps modernes. Together with his longtime companion Simone de Beauvoir (also an accomplished writer; 1908–1986) he traveled much, visiting Russia, China, and Fidel Castro's Cuba. They became Marxists and admirers of Castro and the Soviet Union, yet never joined the Communist Party. This admiration ceased when the Soviets crushed the Hungarian Revolution in 1956, but Sartre's interest in Marxism continued. Through it all, he still considered himself an existentialist, claiming this was a necessary phase in human history. He believed that, as time passed, EXISTENTIALISM would be absorbed into Marxism and that Marxism would eventually be absorbed into a FREEDOM that presently cannot be understood.

In 1964 Sartre published The Words, a bittersweet account of his childhood, and won the Nobel Prize for Literature, which he respectfully refused together with the money that went with it, because he did not accept "official distinctions" and the prize was too associated with the "Western Bloc of Nations" (Cohen-Solal 1987, p. 448). He became an outspoken critic of the French in Algeria and of all forms of colonialism. In 1967 he joined Bertrand RUSSELL in Stockholm to conduct their own war crime trials of the U.S. leaders in the Vietnam War. During the French political troubles of 1968 he led revolutionaries on the streets of Paris. He supported Mao Zedong in China and spent much time writing The Family Idiot, a 2,802-page biographical analysis of Gustave Flaubert (1821–1880) that he published in 1971 and 1972. Much of this work contains further reflections on his own philosophy. He became slower with age and in his final months gave some highly controversial interviews (Hope Now) that showed a sympathetic interest in RELIGION. In his final years, he was often considered passé, yet 50,000 people blocked the streets of Paris to form his funeral cortege.

Sartre, Jean-Paul (1905–1980). French existentialist philosopher and writer. © JAMES ANDANSON/APIS/SYGMA/CORBIS

Thought. Sartre's thought underwent considerable change during his lifetime ("My outlook changed … fundamentally after the Second World War"). His early writings were in Phenomenology, and he soon became known as an existentialist. Both of these affiliations involved analyzing consciousness and, in doing so, he saw everything in terms of the Cartesian cogito, that is, based only on the immediate data of consciousness. He saw the ego, not as dwelling in consciousness, but as an object largely created by the gaze and expectations of others. He held that consciousness has no identity; it is endlessly other. However, to avoid knowing this and to conceal freedom, people cooperate with what others tell them, and in bad faith develop an objective identity. But it does not work, for we are condemned to freedom.

Being and Nothingness proposes an "existential psychoanalysis," by which to free oneself from the burden of a false identity. The "Being" (the "in-itself") mentioned in the title is the objective world that exists without cause, while "Nothingness" (the "for-itself") refers to consciousness. The two are radically opposed; a similar set of opposing terms can be found in the Catholic mystics that Sartre read as a young man (JOHN OF THE CROSS, for instance, tells of todo y nada ["all and nothing"] and also presents a way of PURIFICATION—many Catholic mystics have spoken of themselves as nothing). Sartre claimed that "existence precedes essence," and this formulation would see "ESSENCE" as an identity that has been given or assumed. GOD would be the union of BEING and Nothingness. As Sartre develops the ONTOLOGY of the terms, they are seen to be contradictory, so he argues that God is impossible. Yet each individual tries to achieve the impossible union and thus be God; but it does not work: "Man is a useless passion" and "Every enterprise is absurd." Sartre quotes Dostoevski: "If God didn't exist, everything would be permitted" and calls this the starting point of Existentialism. "That is, everything is permitted since God does not exist" (Sartre 1966, p. 36). It follows that each individual must create, without any objective reason for doing so, whatever values one might have. So in the early texts of Sartre, there is no basis for a common human ethic.

Under the influence of the war and the "ENLIGHTENMENT" of Maurice Merleau-Ponty (1908–1961) and others, Sartre decided that humans freely do things that change history and then developed a very different philosophy that is presented at length in The Critique of Dialectical Reason. His starting point was no longer the Cartesian cogito, but the "enlightenment" that we are the free makers of history. He became a moral crusader—a role not possible in his earlier philosophy. And the radical opposition between Being and Nothingness became softened as he called for their reconciliation in a Hegelian "SYNTHESIS," whereby freedom would be one with necessity (see especially his Saint Genet, p. 186, and T. King's, Sartre and the Sacred, pp. 174–77).

But in calling for this "Synthesis" (what he once meant by God), he did not become a believer. He maintained his ATHEISM by speaking of God as Being to the exclusion of Nothingness or Nothingness to the exclusion of Being—the very opposition that characterized God in his earlier philosophy. Many of Sartre's works of fiction tell of the move from the helpless freedom of Being and Nothingness to the active freedom that joins others in building a new society. This new society would be the reconciliation of opposites that once was his understanding of God.

Catholicism. Sartre was fifteen months old when his father died and his mother returned to live with her parents in Alsace. Charles Schweitzer, his Protestant and anti-Catholic grandfather (an uncle of Albert Schweitzer, the humanitarian), doted on the young Jean-Paul. His mother and grandmother were nominal Catholics and sent Jean-Paul for several months of Catholic education until he protested. "Raised in the Catholic faith I learned that the Almighty had made me for his glory.... But later I did not recognize in the fashionable God of whom I was taught the one whom my soul awaited" (Sartre 1964, p. 61). Catholic themes abound in his writings, and he explained, "Removed from Catholicism the sacred was deposited in belles-lettres and the penman appeared, an ersatz of the Christian I was unable to be.... I grew like a weed on the compost of Catholicity; my roots sucked up its juices and I changed them into sap" (Sartre 1964, p. 156).

As a prisoner of war in 1940 Sartre wrote a Christmas play ("Bariona") for his fellow prisoners in order to bring Christians and Communists together.In it one of the three wise men undergoes a change of heart and reflects on the meaning of the birth of CHRIST. This same understanding would run through many of his later works of fiction ("The Flies," The Roads to Freedom, and "The Devil and the Good Lord"). Toward the end of his life he said with regret that he had been writing his books for God to read and that he still needed the Holy Spirit to validate his identity as a writer. He would tell of wanting to develop a purely human ethic, but his Catholic past remained with him: "It is certain that the notions of absolute GOOD and EVIL were born from the catechism I was taught" (De Beauvior 1981, p. 552) He called his atheism a cruel and long-ranging affair and added, "I believe I have carried it through" (Sartre 1964, p. 158). Shortly before his death he had conversations with a young Marxist who had returned to his Jewish roots. Their conversations were recorded and published. In them Sartre spoke positively of all people returning to life after death and seemed to look forward to a unified humanity that would be "social as well as religious"; human laws would be transcended "from above, not from below" (Sartre and Levy 1996, pp. 106–107). Such texts are surprising, and their meaning is not clear.

SEE ALSO DESCARTES, RENÉ; EXISTENCE; EXISTENTIAL ETHICS; EXISTENTIAL METAPHYSICS; EXISTENTIAL PSYCHOLOGY; EXISTENTIAL THEOLOGY; GOD, PROOFS FOR THE EXISTENCE OF; GOD IN PHILOSOPHY; HEGEL, GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH; MYSTICISM; PHILOSOPHY AND SCIENCE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Simone De Beauvior, La Cérémonie des adieux, suivi de entretiens avec Jean-Paul Sartre (Paris 1981).

Annie Cohen-Solal, Sartre: A Life, translated by Anna Cancogni, edited by Norman MacAfee (New York 1987).

Wilfrid Desan, The Marxism of Jean-Paul Sartre (New York 1960).

Wilfrid Desan, The Tragic Finale (New York 1960).

Christina Howells, ed., The Cambridge Companion to Sartre (New York 1992).

Thomas M. King, Sartre and the Sacred (Chicago 1974).

Works by Jean-Paul Sartre

Being and Nothingness, translated by Hazel E. Barnes (New York [1956] 1964).

Saint Genet: Actor and Martyr, translated by Bernard Frechtman (New York [1963]1971).

L'Existentialisme est un humanisme, (Paris 1966).

The Words, translated by Bernard Frechtman, (New York 1966).
With Benny Levy, Hope Now, translated by Adrian van den Hoven (Chicago 1996).
A Critique of Dialectical Reason, translated by Alan Sheridan-Smith (New York 2004).

Rev. Thomas M. King SJ
Professor, Department of Theology
Georgetown University, Washington, D.C. (2010)

SCHELINGOVÁ, ZDENKA CECILIA, BL.

Religious of the Congregation of the Sisters of Charity of the Holy Cross; baptized Cecilia, known in religion as Zdenka; b. Krivá, Orava, Slovakia, December 24, 1916; d. Trnava, Czechoslovakia, July 31, 1955; beatified September 14, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Cecilia Schelingová was the tenth of eleven children born to a family in Krivá, a small farming village, and she attended the local elementary school. When she was thirteen, the Sisters of Charity of the Holy Cross arrived in her parish. In 1931, when she was fifteen, she sought permission to join the order. The sisters sent her to nursing and radiology school for four years, prior to her entering the novitiate in 1936. In 1937 she made her first vows, taking the name Zdenka. Shortly thereafter, she was assigned as a nurse to a hospital in Humenne. She was assigned in 1942 to a government hospital in Bratislava as an X-ray technician.

In 1948 Communists took over the government of Czechoslovakia, resulting in the persecution of Catholics, particularly priests and religious. Among Zdenka's patients at the government hospital were prisoners, including priests. On February 20, 1952, realizing that one of the priests was going to be sent to Siberia, she drugged the guard and helped the priest escape. Nine days later, while trying to help a group of priests and seminarians escape, she was arrested. In prison, Zdenka was interrogated and brutally beaten. In June 1952, she was tried, convicted of high treason, and sentenced to twelve years in prison. While admitting to certain actions, she denied the charge of treason.

For the next three years, Zdenka was repeatedly tortured, but she refused to become an informant. In 1954 she was diagnosed with breast cancer and underwent a mastectomy in prison with scant follow-up treatment. She was later sent to a prison hospital for radiation therapy. On April 16, 1955, ill and dying, she was released from prison. Due to fear and constant surveillance, neither her community of sisters at the motherhouse in Bratislava nor the community in Trnava would accept her. She was finally taken in by a friend in Trnava, but died in the hospital on July 31, 1955. In 1970 the state reversed the verdict of treason against her. In his HOMILY beatifying Zdenka as a MARTYR of the Church in 2003, Pope John Paul II noted that "Sister Zdenka did not hesitate to risk her life so as to assist God's ministers."

Feast: July 31.

SEE ALSO COMMUNISM; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SLOVAKIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Apostolic Journey of His Holiness John Paul II to the Slovak Republic: Mass and Beatifications" (Homily, September 14, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030914_bratislava_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).
Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Zdenka Cecilia Schelingová (1916–1955)," Vatican Web site, September 14, 2003, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20030914_schelingova_en.html (accessed November 17, 2009).

Laurie Malashanko
Independent Scholar
Ann Arbor, Michigan (2010)

SECULARISM

Secularism is a theory that religious institutions and religious beliefs must not be allowed to influence political or social affairs. In the abstract the theory does not demand ATHEISM; it requires only a practical AGNOSTICISM that permits people to believe as they wish in private, so long as the PUBLIC ORDER is not disturbed. Secularism has varied greatly in application, however, depending on the extent to which secularists see RELIGION as a damaging delusion or positive EVIL from which the public, particularly children and the poor, must be protected.

The Communist governments of the twentieth century, for instance, combined a brutal secularism, banning any political or social acknowledgment of the existence of religion, with an official atheism that aimed at eliminating all religious belief. The results varied from relative TOLERANCE in POLAND (where the Catholic Church was seen as too strong to eliminate entirely), to harsh restriction in Albania (perhaps the strictest atheistical regime in Communist Europe), to deliberate and widespread murder in Cambodia (home of what came to be called the Killing Fields).

Outside the totalitarian regimes of the Communists, secularism has only occasionally reached violent proportions, usually during socialist and nationalist upheavals. (The Mexican Revolution from 1910 to 1921 and the Spanish Civil War from 1936 to 1939, for example, saw the martyrdom of many religious believers.) Still, even among democracies in the early 2000s, the variation can be considerable. In France, for instance, a strong secularism known as laïcité has been enforced, off and on since the FRENCH REVOLUTION in 1789, and consistently since the country enacted its full secularism LAW in 1905. The French form of secularism bans all official interaction with religion and includes a prohibition against wearing religious garb in schools.

In the United States a weaker form of secularism has evolved since the American Revolution of 1776. For much of its history the American form of secularism combined a national preference for religious belief with a constitutional ban on the declaration of any one religion or religious SECT as the nation's official church. A series of U.S. Supreme Court cases from the 1940s through the 1990s moved the nation's laws toward a stricter, more French form of secularism, but the greater social and political order remained generally religious.

Intellectual Foundations. Secularism need not be atheistic, and even the strongest secularists among the founders of America were generally Deists, with at least some theistical belief and little of the active HATRED of Christianity manifest among VOLTAIRE (1694–1778) and the other French philosophers of the ENLIGHTENMENT. Nearly all more recent prominent intellectual proponents of secularism, however, were strongly opposed to religious belief, and the softer secularism of opposition to church teaching and anticlericalism generally turned to a militant atheism in the twentieth century.

Modern manifestations of secularism have been buttressed by leading political and legal theories. Though not all were intended to establish a secularist ideology, many of these theories have had the de facto effect of ruling religious ideas out of bounds in public discussions about policy and law.

Perhaps the most important American thinker in this vein was John Rawls (1921–2002). An eminent political philosopher at Harvard, Rawls proposed a theory of political LIBERALISM that sought to take the realities of diversity, pluralism, and reasonable disagreement seriously. His solution to these challenges was his theory of "public reason"—reasons that any citizen could accept—which argued that appeals to any particular "comprehensive doctrine" are inappropriate in public discourse. Because not all citizens share the same beliefs, reasoning about basic issues of political justice has to occur within an "overlapping consensus" amongst the various doctrines.

Rawls argued that this solution to political pluralism was not biased against religious reason, because it excluded appeals to all "comprehensive doctrines," including both religious systems (such as JUDAISM and Christianity) and nonreligious schools of thought (such as Benthamite Utilitarianism and KANTIANISM).

In practice, however, the bias against religion became apparent. Political theorists never insisted that a particular policy or set of arguments violated Rawlsian public reason because they depended too heavily on the thought of BENTHAM and KANT or that the arguments would be acceptable only to those who held the comprehensive doctrine of utilitarianism or deontology. Arguments were frequently made, however, that social conservatives—arguing for the right to life of unborn human beings or the definition of marriage as a union of one MAN and one WOMAN—were violating the demands of public reason by appealing to religious reasoning. In theory Rawlsian public reason would exclude only appeals to religious authority (biblical revelation or ecclesial teaching), but in practice it was used to counter criticize any arguments made by religious believers, even when (as in NATURAL-LAW claims) such arguments never appealed to religious authority.

The work of Ronald Dworkin (b. 1931) played a parallel role within the legal profession, although American jurisprudence had been generally moving toward a strict secularism for some time. Arguing for a strict "separation of church and state," the U.S. Supreme Court eventually demanded that GOVERNMENT must be neutral not only among religions but even between religion and non-religion.

Kai Nielsen argued in his Ethics Without God (1972) that MORALITY could not be based on religion and that secular reason provided the only sure foundation for morality. Richard Rorty (1931–2007) claimed in his 1994 essay, "Religion as a Conversation Stopper," that religion is a purely private, personal matter. According to Rorty, appeals to religion end all public conversations because they allow no answer: They have the same intellectual content as subjective preferences for ice-cream flavors.

As Rorty put it, when someone appeals to religious belief in a conversation about public matters, "the ensuing silence masks the group's inclination to say, 'So what? We weren't discussing your private life; we were discussing public policy. Don't bother us with matters that are not our concern'" (Rorty 1994, p. 2). In 2005 Peter Singer, internationally recognized as one of the most important living atheistical philosophers, argued that "by 2040, it may be that only a rump of hard-core, know-nothing religious fundamentalists will defend the view that every human life, from conception to death, is sacrosanct" (Singer, p. 40).

One of the most surprising developments in the first decade of the twenty-first century was the rise of neo-atheism. Referring to themselves as "The Brights," these modern atheists included a small group of English-speaking militant secularists: Richard Dawkins (The God Delusion in 2006), Daniel Dennett (Breaking the Spell: Religion as a Natural Phenomenon in 2006), Sam Harris (The End of Faith: Religion, Terror, and the Future of Reason in 2004), and Christopher Hitchens (God Is Not Great: How Religion Poisons Everything in 2007). What is remarkable about these books is how heated their RHETORIC is: They insist that all religion harms humanity, and religious people are the cause of all the world's ills. While the books sold remarkably well and garnered significant media attention, they received surprisingly negative reviews (even in liberal, secular publications), and they seem to have generated no appreciable rise in atheism among the general population.

Perhaps the appearance of this neo-atheism was in response to the triumphs of JOHN PAUL II's PAPACY (1978–2005) and the political rise of the so-called religious right in the United States from the 1970s into the 2000s. In the American context the strongest challenge to the political manifestations of secularism came from Richard John Neuhaus (b. 1936) in his book, The Naked Public Square: Religion and Democracy in America (1984). A Lutheran pastor who converted and became a Catholic priest in 1991, Neuhaus argued that the weak form of secularism—the institutional separation of church and state—should be embraced by all citizens, both religious and non-religious. But he further argued that this institutional separation was not meant to exclude religious believers from participating in the discussion of public life. It was, rather, intended to allow all citizens a place at the table.

Critical Evaluation. The initial reaction of the Catholic Church to secularism was extremely critical. The Church saw in the theory's claims of neutrality excuses for states—such as France, which seized the nation's religious schools and monasteries during the French Revolution—to confiscate CHURCH PROPERTY, abolish ancient Church privileges, and enshrine a militant anti-clericalism. As the Church's view of the potential good of DEMOCRACY grew, however, so did its understanding of the potential of a mild form of secularism. The Second VATICAN Council called on the laity to work within secular affairs, to which they could bring a CHRISTIAN DIMENSION, without the imposition of Catholicism.

Nonetheless, the council noted "that ominous doctrine must rightly be rejected which attempts to build a society with no regard whatever for religion" (Lumen gentium 36). This rejection of hard secularism is mandatory in Christian thought. Such extreme secularism rejects end and purpose to human life. It excludes any knowledge of God and the spiritual world and thus degenerates into something inhuman and incomplete in the eyes of the Church. The role of mild secularism in democracy, however, remains something that a Catholic can in good CONSCIENCE affirm.

SEE ALSO ALBANIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; CAMBODIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; CHURCH AND STATE IN THE UNITED STATES (LEGAL HISTORY); DEISM; DEONTOLOGISM; ENLIGHTENMENT; ENLIGHTENMENT, PHILOSOPHY OF; FRANCE, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; FREETHINKERS; POLAND, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; POLITICS, CHURCH AND; RATIONALISM; TEMPORAL VALUES, THEOLOGY OF; THEISM; VATICAN COUNCIL II.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

George Jacob Holyoake, The Principles of Secularism Briefly Explained (London 1859).

Emmet John Hughes, The Church and the Liberal Society (Princeton, N.J. 1944).

Ferdinand Klostermann, "The Laity," in Commentary on the Documents of Vatican II, 5 vols., edited by Herbert Vorgrimler (New York 1967), 1:231–259.

Richard John Neuhaus, The Naked Public Square: Religion and Democracy in America (Grand Rapids, Mich. 1984).

"The Role of the Church in the Modern World," in Commentary on the Documents of Vatican II, 5 vols., edited by Herbert Vorgrimler (New York 1967), 5:202–223.

Richard Rorty, "Religion as a Conversation Stopper," in Common Knowledge, 3.1 (1994): 1–6.

Peter Singer, "The Sanctity of Life," in Foreign Policy, September/October 2005, pp. 39–41.

Vatican Council II, Lumen gentium, On the Church (Dogmatic Constitution, November 21, 1964), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_const_19641121_lumen-gentium_en.html (accessed January 21, 2008).

Joseph Bottum
Editor, First Things
New York, New York (2010)

SEMINARY EDUCATION

In ecclesiastical writings seminary designates a special type of school dedicated to the human, spiritual, pastoral, and intellectual formation of the clergy. It is derived from the Latin word seminarium, which was commonly used to describe a place where young seedlings were prepared for eventual transplantation. The first official use of this word to describe institutions for clerical training dates back to the Council of TRENT (Sess. 23, c.18), which did not invent the term as such, but accepted it from some of the writings of the period, by men such as Cardinal Reginald POLE, St. John FISHER, and St. IGNATIUS OF LOYOLA.

Tridentine Discipline. The Council made it obligatory for every DIOCESE to erect a seminary for the purpose of educating the local clergy. Whenever possible, this institution was to be built near the CATHEDRAL church so young aspirants to the priesthood might serve an apprenticeship there by participating, each according to his rank, in the divine offices presided over by the local BISHOP. If an individual diocese was too small or lacked the necessary funds, it could join with other dioceses for the construction of a provincial or interdiocesan seminary. Those to be admitted had to be born of lawful wedlock and had to be at least 12 years of age. They were obliged to possess certain minimal educational requirements and to have a sincere desire to dedicate themselves wholeheartedly to the service of the Church. Special preference was given to the children of the poor; the children of the rich, however, were not excluded if they paid for their training. The young men studied letters, humanities, chant, LITURGY, Sacred Scripture, and dogmatic, moral, and PASTORAL THEOLOGY. Their spiritual formation required daily assistance at the Eucharistic Sacrifice even though, according to the practice of the time, they were permitted to communicate only on the days indicated by their spiritual directors. Their moral development was supervised, and the disorderly and incorrigible were punished and, if necessary, expelled. The local bishop chose special priests as instructors and spiritual guides for the young candidates. The bishop also determined the courses; he was the primary judge as to what was necessary for the particular circumstances of his diocese. The seminary received its support from an intricate system of benefices in addition to taxes imposed on the revenues of bishops and other ecclesiastical dignitaries and institutions. The chief administrator of the school was the local bishop himself, aided by two administrative boards; one assisted him in disciplinary and spiritual matters, and the other helped him with temporalities.

Origins of the Tridentine Decree. The Council's legislation de seminariis was not a new creation, but a restoration and renovation of the traditional manner in which young clerics received their formation. Fundamentally, it presented a return to the cathedral school, where from the earliest times in the Church, young men prepared for the priesthood. With the breakdown of FEUDALISM and the rise of the universities, this ancient system of clerical formation became either impoverished or generally abandoned. As a result a large segment of the late medieval and pre-Reformation clergy received inadequate training and were often ordained for offices they were not sufficiently equipped to exercise. Although the question of clerical formation had been mentioned by the preparatory commission in discussions on the teaching of Sacred Scripture and in the work of the fathers at Bologna, it was not until the twenty-third session of the Council of Trent that a sound and practical solution was found.

The source of the Tridentine seminary legislation was canon 11 of the synodal legislation promulgated for England in 1556 by Cardinal Pole. The first draft of Trent's decree closely parallels the corresponding section in Pole's Reformatio Angliae. As early as 1562 the entire text of the English CARDINAL's legatine synod was available at Trent and so, when the members of the commission studying abuses in the administration of the Sacrament of Orders sought a means to assure the intellectual and moral training of the clergy, they focused on the late cardinal's solution: erecting seminaries at every cathedral church. The fathers of the Council adopted Pole's solution to the problem, and the first draft of their own legislation de seminariis erigendis presents a striking similarity to it. Even though the final ratification of the decree promulgated in the twenty-third session differs considerably from the eleventh canon of Pole's synodal legislation, the essence of his program was largely preserved.

Several proximate sources of the Tridentine seminary decree also may be enumerated. First, some documents presented to the Council in 1563 highlighted certain abuses and remedies in the administration of the Sacrament of Orders. The Memoriale de quibusdam abusibus in ecclesia corrigendis submitted by Louis Beccadelli, archbishop of Ragusa, suggested that a seminarium clericorum be established. The Articuli super reformatione sacramenti ordinis presented by the archbishop of REIMS advised the establishment of special schools attached to cathedral churches, and the petitions of Emperor FERDINAND urged the erection of special collegia for the clergy near the universities. Second, the Jesuit influence was illustrated by the work of Claude LE JAY in Germany and by the establishment of the Germanicum in Rome. During his mission to Germany (1542–1545) le Jay constantly insisted upon the necessity of providing adequate means for clerical formation. He spoke of this urgent need to bishops, to civil rulers, and to the Council fathers themselves. He insisted that special schools be established to prepare young men for the ministry. Through the instigation of Cardinal John Morone, le Jay's ideas found fruition, at least in Rome, in the Germanicum, established there in 1552. This institution was not a seminary in the Tridentine sense, but rather a collegium, in which the students lived under a determined rule while they attended classes at the Roman College. Finally, other proximate sources were contemporary attempts to restore cathedral schools as places of clerical formation. It suffices here to cite the work of three men: Gian Matteo GIBERTI, bishop of Verona, who restored and improved the already well-known Acolyte School of Verona; Johannes GEILER VON KAYSERSBERG, the renowned German preacher, who in vain urged his bishop, Albert of Bavaria, to open a theological school in connection with the cathedral church; and, of particular ecumenical interest, Thomas CRANMER (1489–1556), Archbishop of Canterbury, who supervised the revision of the cathedral school of Canterbury and legislated for improved clerical formation by means of the section de scholis habendis in ecclesiis cathedralibus, a considerable portion of his famous Reformatio legum, completed in 1553.

Remote sources of Trent's seminary legislation included not only particular and general councils of the Church but also the pastoral concern of certain popes. As early as 826 Pope EUGENE II, in a council held at Rome, legislated that next to every cathedral church a dwelling should be erected in which young clerics would be formed in ecclesiastical discipline. In 1179 the Third Lateran Council laid down the general injunction that every cathedral in the universal Church was to establish a BENEFICE for the support of a schoolmaster who would be charged with teaching the clerics attached to the Church. Almost 40 years later, in 1215, the Fourth Lateran Council once again formulated legislation regarding this matter and added that every metropolitan church was to employ a theologian to instruct priests in Sacred Scripture and pastoral THEOLOGY. Good examples of papal concern for the betterment of clerical education are the Super specula of HONORIUS III (d. 1183) and the Cum ex eo of BONIFACE VIII (d. 1298). Although these constitutions did not envision establishing institutions of learning, nevertheless they adapted the residence laws so that many clerics were released from their obligations of living in their benefices while pursuing higher studies. They also gave added impetus to setting up a permanent, workable solution to the problem of inadequate clerical formation.

Implementation of the Tridentine Decree. Almost immediately after its promulgation, plans were made for the LAW's implementation. In 1565 Pope PIUS IV erected a seminary for the Diocese of Rome, and sections de seminariis erigendis were incorporated into the canons of many provincial councils. One of the most outstanding proponents of the seminary decree was St. Charles BORROMEO, Archbishop of Milan. He opened a major seminary under the patronage of St. JOHN THE BAPTIST with facilities for 150 students. Also, recognizing that all candidates for the priesthood did not have the intellectual capacity to be admitted to this institution, he established La Canonica for about 60 students who would prepare for the care of souls with classes in Sacred Scripture, case studies, and the fundamentals of the Faith as laid down in the Tridentine Catechism. In various parts of his ARCHDIOCESE, he also founded three preparatory seminaries: one for older students, another for adolescents, and a third for younger boys. From these institutions the candidates passed either to the major seminary or to La Canonica. In the beginning Borromeo staffed his seminaries with JESUITS, but later he placed them under the direction of the Oblates of St. AMBROSE, an order that he founded. His Institutiones ad universum seminarii regimen pertinentes are valuable amplifications of the Tridentine decree.

In France the cardinal of Lorraine, who was archbishop of Reims, took the first steps to implement the seminary legislation. The Wars of Religion occasioned such a turmoil, however, that very little of a constructive nature was done before the beginning of the seventeenth century. St. VINCENT DE PAUL, John J. OLIER, and St. JOHN EUDES were the most outstanding contributors to the establishment of seminaries in France, institutions that later influenced the erection of similar houses of study in the British Isles, Canada, and the United States. Vincent de Paul's work in this field originated in a series of spiritual conferences and instructions he gave young men about to be ordained to the priesthood. At first these lasted only for ten days, but later they developed into a two- or three-year course given between the completion of philosophical studies and ordination to the priesthood. In 1635 he established a seminary at the Collège des Bons-Enfants for students of theology; later he founded Saint-Lazare for young candidates who were studying the humanities; and in 1642 he erected a junior seminary, which he dedicated to St. Charles Borromeo. Prior to the FRENCH REVOLUTION, his congregation directed one-third of all French seminaries; 53 were major, and nine were minor.

Olier, the founder of the SULPICIANS, began his contribution to the seminary system by establishing an institution in 1642 within the boundaries of the parish of St. Sulpice. He intended this to serve as a national seminary, and within two years representatives from 20 dioceses in France were attending. In 1651 many other institutions that were being constructed throughout France adopted the rules for this seminary, although Olier's original intention had not been to found a congregation for the direction of seminaries. He had merely lent his priests to help establish them. A great number of requests from bishops finally led to his permanently accepting the task of staffing seminaries.

St. John Eudes, a member of the Oratory and later the founder of the Society of the Sacred Hearts, played a significant role in the establishment of seminaries. In 1663 he erected his first seminary at Caen, and by the eighteenth century his priests staffed 40 seminaries.

The upheavals of the eighteenth century—the French Revolution, JOSEPHINISM, and the ENLIGHTENMENT—had disastrous effects upon the seminary system of Western Europe. Many were closed, and others were entirely suppressed. The nineteenth century, however, saw the reestablishment of many seminaries and the construction of countless others. In Ireland, Maynooth was erected in 1795 and All Hallows, in 1842; England witnessed the opening of St. Edmund's, Ushaw, and Oscott; and in the United States, St. Mary's Seminary opened in Baltimore in 1791.

IN THE UNITED STATES

Historical Development. The origin of seminaries in the United States can be traced to Baltimore in the 1780s, where Bishop John CARROLL, seeing the isolation after the American Revolution of Catholics from Europe and the need for priests, made plans to develop an American clergy. His efforts resulted in the establishment of Georgetown Academy in 1789 and in an offer by the Society of St. Sulpice to begin a seminary in the new diocese of Baltimore. Carroll intended Georgetown Academy (later GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY) as a preparatory school to educate Catholic laymen and provide candidates for seminary study.

The arrival of four Sulpician priests with five seminarians in 1791 to open St. Mary's Seminary in Baltimore marked the formal beginning of Catholic seminary education in the United States. From 1799 to 1852 the Sulpicians conducted a lay college affiliated with the seminary that provided institutional support to maintain the small seminary program. In 1808 the Sulpicians opened Mount Saint Mary's College at Emmitsburg, Maryland. The small enrollment of young aspirants to the priesthood, however, soon led them to open the school to boys who did not intend to become priests to bring in more revenue and sustain the college. In 1826 the Sulpicians ceded control of Mount St. Mary's to a corporation of diocesan priests under the direction of the Reverend John DUBOIS. Mount Saint Mary's was an example of a mixed seminary, that is, one in which a theologate for seminarians stands side by side with a college for laymen.

In 1848 the Society of St. Sulpice opened St. Charles College in Catonsville, Maryland, and four years later closed the lay college they had run in connection with the seminary in Baltimore. Thus St. Mary's Seminary became the American prototype of a freestanding seminary, that is, one in which the seminarians and clerical faculty devote themselves exclusively to the task of clerical formation in an environment separated from other activities. Similarly St. Charles Seminary was the country's first freestanding minor seminary.

Diocesan Seminaries. Twenty-two dioceses existed in the United States in 1845. Some bishops sent seminarians to Baltimore and Emmitsburg for training, but most were eager to start their own diocesan seminaries. By 1843 there were 22 seminaries in the country with a combined enrollment of 277, or an average of 13 students per seminary. Most of these local seminaries collapsed during the 1840s and 1850s for one or more reasons: a lack of local youth attracted to the priesthood, the uneven supply of immigrant seminarians, the lack of clerical personnel to conduct them, and the lack of regular funding to sustain their operation.

As dioceses were promoted to the rank of archdiocese with neighboring dioceses grouped around them to form ecclesiastical provinces, efforts were made to form a regional seminary in each province. Thus the Cincinnati archdiocese opened Mount Saint Mary's Seminary of the West at Cincinnati in 1851; the New York archdiocese opened St. Joseph Seminary at Troy, New York, in 1864. St. Francis Seminary, established by the Archdiocese of Milwaukee in 1856, became a regional center for clerical formation especially for German-speaking Catholics. Philadelphia had its local St. Charles Seminary since the 1830s, and in 1871 relocated to a spacious and costly building in the suburb of Overbrook. These seminaries were what social historians of nineteenth-century life labeled total institutions with one specific purpose: training priests.

Religious orders of priests also sponsored and staffed diocesan seminaries. The VINCENTIANS established a seminary for the St. Louis archdiocese in 1818 and conducted diocesan programs at their colleges for laymen—St. Vincent's College, Cape Girardeau, Missouri (1858), and Niagara College, Niagara Falls, New York (1857). Likewise, Benedictine monks from German-speaking Europe came to the United States to serve German communities. In connection with their monasteries, they operated schools for laymen and educated diocesan and monastic seminarians for the priestly MINISTRY. This was the case in St. Vincent's Archabbey and Seminary established in 1846 near Latrobe, Pennsylvania, ST. JOHN'S ABBEY AND SEMINARY, Collegeville, Minnesota, established in 1857, and ST. MEINRAD ARCHABBEY and Seminary established in Indiana in 1854. Italian Franciscans were invited to western New York in 1863, where they started a lay college and seminary that became ST. BONAVENTURE UNIVERSITY.

The dependence of the American Catholic Church on Europe led to various proposals for establishing seminaries in Europe near sources of funding and students. In 1857 an American College was established in the shadow of the Catholic University of Louvain, Belgium. During the first half century of the college's history, it trained many Europeans, especially Germans, for the American missions. In 1859 Pope PIUS IX ordered the opening of the Pontifical NORTH AMERICAN COLLEGE in ROME exclusively for American seminarians.

Religious Orders. Religious orders experienced a parallel development. As early as 1834, the DOMINICANS founded their first studium generale in the United States at Somerset, Ohio. About 1860 they established a similar institution on the West Coast at Monterey, California, later transferred to Benicia, where it remained until 1932. By 1820 the Vincentians had begun a log rectory-seminary at Perryville, Missouri, that continued until about 1868 when St. Vincent's Seminary was opened at Germantown, Pennsylvania.

The REDEMPTORISTS opened their first house of studies in 1849 in New York City. They moved two years later to Cumberland, Maryland, and in 1907 to a farm at Esopus, New York. The origins of the Franciscan School of Theology now at Berkeley, California, can be traced back to rudimentary beginnings in 1854.

In 1823 the Jesuits established a novitiate at Florissant, Missouri, outside St. Louis, where they taught philosophy and theology. By 1837 Jesuit scholastics were studying at ST. LOUIS UNIVERSITY. In the East, Jesuit scholastics studied at Georgetown, which had received in 1833, from the Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith, the power to grant ecclesiastical degrees in PHILOSOPHY and theology. In 1869, however, the Jesuits unified their seminary program into a single national freestanding seminary, the College of the Sacred Heart, at Woodstock, Maryland, near Baltimore. Woodstock College, as it was known, remained the Jesuits' national seminary until the early twentieth century.

The above patterns were somewhat typical for religious orders through much of the nineteenth century. The growing number of religious seminarians kept pace with the increase of diocesan seminarians. By 1900 there were some 76 seminaries, minor and major, diocesan and religious, enrolling 3,395 seminarians. Religious orders and congregations continued to establish freestanding seminaries into the era of VATICAN COUNCIL II. These houses of study remained total institutions, fully staffed with their own professors and with a student body made up entirely of members of the order or congregation. Many such foundations lasted only a few years before they were moved or closed.

Program Content and Duration. The vision of ministry in the developing Catholic Church in America influenced the kind and length of all seminary programs. The urgent need for priests to minister the Sacraments to the rapidly growing Catholic immigrant population required quick training. Dogmatic and MORAL THEOLOGY tracts, or short articles on theological topics, bound together in manuals were the basis of instruction; other subjects were secondary or not offered. No Church legislation governed the length of the program. Moreover, the volume of seminary activities, substantial though it appeared by the 1870s, did not produce the priests needed for the growing Catholic population. To resolve this and other pressing issues in the American Catholic community, the American bishops convened for their Third Plenary Council of Baltimore in 1884.

The Council's seminary decrees aimed to improve the content and length of seminary training by requiring a six-year course for minor and major seminaries. The major seminary decree curriculum gave unprecedented attention to formerly neglected subjects such as Biblical studies, HOMILETICS, and Church history. The minor seminary decree prepared students for the major seminary by firmly grounding them in the humanities, classical languages, and the rudiments of clerical spirituality and culture. Diocesan seminary educators now had the guidance of a curricular program for a prescribed number of years, though it would be years before all seminaries complied fully with the six-year requirement for the major seminary.

The Third Plenary Council initiated action to establish a national university in Washington, D.C. The CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA opened in 1889. Although The Catholic University was originally intended for priests doing graduate study, it acted as a magnet, attracting seminarians to the city. The PAULISTS and other religious orders established residences and houses of study near the university so that their members could take advantage of the university's philosophy and theology programs. In 1905 the Dominicans opened their own house of studies as a freestanding seminary across the street from the university where their seminarians could pursue the order's distinctive theological program and pontifical decrees without recourse to the university.

The training offered in seminaries in the twentieth century continued the methods of spiritual formation pursued since the seventeenth. Moreover, the separation of seminary communities from lay culture was more complete within the self-contained world of the freestanding seminary and under more rigorous standards decreed by Church authority. The methods of formal learning in most diocesan seminaries and in many seminaries of religious orders were similar. Dogmatic and moral theology dominated the subjects of study.

Preconciliar Period. By the 1950s seminary educators developed a sense of common concerns. Various religious orders engaged in educational activities took the initiative, either through their own seminaries or through seminary education for dioceses, to discuss the need for reform and for common educational policies. It was, however, the seminary department of the NATIONAL CATHOLIC EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION (NCEA) that provided a national forum for seminary educators. The annual convention offered an occasion for discussing seminary concerns and exchanging ideas.

In 1958 the NCEA appointed a full-time executive for the seminary department, Reverend J. Cyril Dukehart. Father Dukehart advocated bringing the seminary out of its isolation from the rest of the educational world, which often regarded the Catholic seminary as inferior. He targeted three major areas for seminary reform:

1. obtaining accreditation so that unordained former seminary students and clerical alumni would have academic records and degrees that would be recognized in the educational world;
2. forming an American Association of Catholic Theological Seminaries as a means to improve the standards of seminaries and to establish professional degrees for seminaries; and
3. overcoming the weakness of having over 100 minor and major seminaries with fewer than 50 students.

In 1959 the seminary department of the NCEA reported that there were 381 seminaries, major and minor, diocesan and religious, in the United States, representing a 28 percent increase during the decade. By 1961 the total number of all seminarians, diocesan and religious, was 42,349 in 402 seminaries and houses of religious formation. These institutions ranged in size from great freestanding seminaries of large dioceses and large religious orders, many of them having been established after 1900, to programs of small religious orders training a handful of seminarians. The high enrollments were tributes to the attractiveness of the priesthood to youth born and raised in American Catholic culture after the Second World War. Many seminary educators believed that the growth would continue indefinitely and the need to improve seminaries was therefore urgent.

By 1962 the year the Second Vatican Council opened, the main agenda of seminary reform in the United States had been determined. The following decade saw the implementation of reforms designed to end the isolation of the seminary and to enlarge its educational purposes. These changes were accompanied by both the theological renewal brought by the Second Vatican Council, which altered the content of seminary learning, and the rapid cultural changes taking place within society that changed the attitude of young men toward entering the seminary.

Normative Documents. The immediate impetus for change in seminary curriculum and lifestyle came from the documents of Vatican II that related to priesthood and priestly formation, especially Presbyterorum ordinis and Optatam totius. Optatam totius, the decree that dealt specifically with priestly formation, posited three fundamental principles: First, along with the decree on the priesthood, Presbyterorum ordinis, it stated clearly a DOCTRINE of "the unity of the Catholic priesthood." Second, it affirmed, seemingly as a corollary to the foregoing, that the same "priestly formation is required for all priests—secular, religious, and of every rite." Third, it assumed that the diocesan priesthood with its parochial ministries is the analogue for measuring the appropriateness of all priestly training.

Ratio fundamentalis. Optatam totius and Presbyterorum ordinis were the bases of the Ratio fundamentalis for priestly formation issued January 1970 by the Congregation for Catholic Education. The Ratio uses the term seminary in the general sense of "institutions organized for the formation of priests" (n. 1). This usage is symptomatic of the erosion of the older distinction between seminarium, the diocesan institution, and the studiorum domus (house of studies) of religious orders, a distinction that also disappeared from the new Code of Canon Law.

The Program of Priestly Formation. When the first edition of The Program of Priestly Formation (PPF) was published by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in 1971 in accordance with the provisions of the Ratio fundamentalis of the previous year, it contained a special section on "The Religious Priest's Formation." The preface to the document noted:

> The Conference of Major Religious Superiors of Men ... agreed to accept the Program as the recommended program for religious priests' formation, if there were added to the Program a short section prepared by them on religious life (Part Four). The National Conference approved the Program as the one program for all seminarians, diocesan and religious, and the addition of Part Four. (pp. xii–xiii)

Thus, within the short period between the publication of the Ratio and the publication of the first edition of the PPF, seminaries of the orders and congregations found that their training, for the first time in history, required episcopal approval.

The second edition (1976) of the Program contained the same Part Four unchanged. The third edition (1981), however, dropped this section on religious priests because, according to the "Statement from the Conference of Major Superiors of Men," "Religious and diocesan priests share an increasingly pluriform priesthood; their needs for priestly formation as such do not differ.... Thus the Conference of Major Superiors of Men adopts the program of priestly formation as the one program for all United States religious seminarians" (p. 3).

All five editions of The Program of Priestly Formation (1971, 1976, 1981, 1993, and 2006) were the result of collaboration among the bishops of the United States, personnel involved in priestly formation programs, and other knowledgeable individuals. This document, approved in the name of the HOLY SEE by the Sacred Congregation for Catholic Education, concerns itself with all aspects of formation at the theologate, college, and high school levels.

The documents that shaped the content of the last two editions of the PPF (1993 and 2006) were the promulgation of the 1983 Code of Canon Law and the 1992 Post-Synodal Apostolic Exhortation: Pastores dabo vobis of Pope John Paul II. The 1983 Code of Canon Law embodies legislation for seminaries in 33 canons (nn. 232–264), substantially longer than the 19 canons governing the establishment and direction of seminaries in the 1917 Code (cc. 1352–1371). The revised code emphasizes the entire process of preparing a person to be a cleric rather than dwelling on the seminary as an institution. Unlike the 1917 code, which treated seminaries in the section dealing with the ecclesiastical magisterium, the 1983 code places the section, "The Formation of Clerics," in Book II of the code, which treats "The People of God." This new placement reflects the fact that seminary training is broader than doctrinal education.

Significant points in the 1983 Code include the recognition of candidates of a more mature age and the need for programs to assist them, an extensive summary of Vatican II teachings on the spiritual formation of a priest, and the need for pastoral training that includes ministerial field experience. It reiterates the need of four full years of theological studies with distinct professors for all the major disciplines. Bishops are only to appoint faculty who have a doctorate or licentiate from a university or faculty recognized by the Holy See to teach in the major disciplines. The latter is stricter than previous legislation. Canon 242 calls for the episcopal conference of each nation to prepare a program of priestly formation adapted to the pastoral needs of their region. While restating the norm of the earlier code that each diocese should have a major seminary, the 1983 code recognizes that this is not always possible and collaborative efforts on the part of several dioceses may be necessary. It supports minor seminaries, but it no longer requires them of dioceses. The Ratio fundamentalis for priestly formation was revised in 1985 to bring it into closer conformity with the 1983 Code of Canon Law. The new version contains very few emendations to the original edition: It highlights the study of Thomistic philosophy and notes the need of background in the "economic questions" of parochial administration.

In 1992 Pope JOHN PAUL II wrote the Post-Synodal Apostolic Exhortation: Pastores dabo vobis, which was revolutionary; it included four dimensions of priestly formation. Formerly three areas of formation had been the foci of priestly formation: spiritual, intellectual, and pastoral. Pope John Paul II included the fourth area of "human formation," which he considered to be the "necessary foundation" (n. 43). Following the Thomistic axiom, "grace builds on nature," Pope John Paul II set the course affecting all seminary formation for the future. A man can be truly open to formation only if he knows who he is. He must be free interiorly, and seminary formation in both the internal and external forum (i.e., spiritual direction and formation advising) is meant to lead each seminarian on this path: "Freedom, therefore, is essential to vocation, a freedom which when it gives a positive response appears as a deep personal adherence, as a loving gift, or rather as a gift given back to the Giver who is God who calls" (Pastores dabo vobis 36). John Paul II also called for a renewal of priestly identity: "A correct and in-depth awareness of the nature and mission of the ministerial priesthood is the path which must be taken ... in order to emerge from the crisis of priestly identity" (Pastores dabo vobis 11).

The 2006 Changes. The fifth edition of the PPF (2006) integrated the thought of Pope John Paul II in Pastores dabo vobis and expounded upon the four dimensions of priestly formation: human, spiritual, intellectual, and pastoral. This is the first time that human formation was given a specific section in a PPF (nos. 74–105). This integration of the vision of Pope John Paul II was acknowledged in the recognitio of the PPF by the Holy See. Each major division of the PPF has a section on "norms" that offers tangible and attainable standards which either "must, should or ought" be attained. This not only includes the four dimensions of formation but also the admissions process, which is treated in a thorough manner. The PPF encourages greater cooperation between the diocese and the seminary throughout the admissions process. Recognizing a candidate is not ready for ordination at the moment of acceptance, the PPF emphasizes he must pass certain "thresholds or foundations" upon which the formation process can build (no. 36).

To ensure sound candidates for the seminary program, a psychological assessment is an integral part of the admissions process (no. 52). On the level of intellectual formation, the foundational requirements for philosophy increased to a minimum of thirty credits, which lengthens the pre-theology program to a minimum of two calendar years (no. 186). The PPF likewise reiterates "at least four full years should be dedicated to graduate theological studies" (no. 191). "The aim of pastoral formation" is the formation of a "true shepherd" who knows how to teach, govern, sanctify, and lead (no. 239). Pastoral CHARITY should be the animating force for the actions of every priest; thus, sound pastoral formation is crucial if the seminarian is to one day shepherd with the heart of CHRIST.

Perhaps the most innovative notion in the 2006 edition of the PPF occurs under spiritual formation, which presents this dimension as the integrating and unifying factor for the other three areas of formation.

> Since spiritual formation is the core that unifies the life of a priest, it stands at the heart of seminary life and is the center around which all other aspects are integrated. Human, intellectual, and pastoral formation are indispensable in developing the seminarian's relationship and communion with God and his ability to communicate God's truth and love to others in the likeness of Jesus Christ, the Good Shepherd and eternal High Priest. (PPF 115)

If the whole of the Christian life is about growing in relationship with the Triune God and His Church, spiritual formation must be the integrating force of all seminary formation.

Post Vatican II. It is against this general background, and especially against the impact of Vatican Council II, that the dramatic series of relocations and reorganizations of seminaries and houses of study in the post-conciliar years must be viewed. Between 1966 and 1970 a large number of theologates related themselves in a variety of formal and informal ways to other religious bodies and institutions of learning. Some of the major changes included the formation in 1967 of the CATHOLIC THEOLOGICAL UNION AT CHICAGO, jointly sponsored by provinces of several religious orders. A somewhat similar arrangement created WASHINGTON THEOLOGICAL UNION, incorporated in 1969 as the Washington Theological Coalition. In Berkeley, California, Franciscan, Dominican, and Jesuit theologates associated themselves with the Graduate Theological Union and the University of California in the late 1960s. Several diocesan seminaries closed during this period, but most retained their freestanding status. All the formal clusters or unions and most individual schools soon became affiliated with and accredited by the ASSOCIATION OF THEOLOGICAL SCHOOLS; the first of these affiliations took place in 1968.

Two series of Apostolic Seminary Visitations have occurred in the United States since Vatican II. The first series of seminary visitations began in 1981 to "take the pulse," according to Pope John Paul II, of the seminary communities throughout the country. Bishop John A. Marshall of Burlington, Vermont, headed this series of visits. The process took almost seven years from the official announcement of the visitation to its formal conclusion—the final report to the POPE on July 2, 1988. The first Apostolic Seminary Visitation resulted in three letters from the Congregation for Education in Rome to the bishops of the United States: (1) in 1986 a letter on freestanding theologates; (2) in 1988 on college level formation of diocesan candidates; and (3) in 1990 written in conjunction with the Congregation for Institutes of Consecrated Life and Societies of Apostolic Life on the formation of religious candidates for the priesthood.

Following the SEX ABUSE CRISIS of 2002, Pope John Paul II asked the leadership of the UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF CATHOLIC BISHOPS (USSCB) to once again initiate an Apostolic Seminary Visitation, this time under the leadership of Archbishop Edwin F. O'Brien of the Archdiocese of the Military Services. Archbishop O'Brien had been the rector of two major seminaries and was able to form a team of Visitors to thoroughly review 158 seminaries and houses of formation in 2005 and 2006. The "Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People" (the "Dallas Charter" of 2002), Article 17, notes that "unlike the previous visitation, these new visits would focus on the question of human formation for celibate CHASTITY based on the criteria found in Pastores dabo vobis (1992)." The Church and the seminary system in particular have made great strides in admission requirements, psychological assessments, and psychosexual formation of candidates for HOLY ORDERS. According to Pope John Paul II, candidates to the priesthood need growth in "affective maturity which is prudent, able to renounce anything that is a threat to it, vigilant over both body and spirit, and capable of esteem and respect in interpersonal relationships between men and women" (Pastores dabo vobis 44). Thus the priest, having been formed according to the four dimensions of Pastores dabo vobis, is able to be "a bridge and not an obstacle for others in their meeting with Jesus Christ the Redeemer of man" (Pastores dabo vobis 43).

Speaking to seminarians from across the country in New York on April 19, 2008, Pope BENEDICT XVI stated:

> I urge you to deepen your friendship with Jesus the Good Shepherd. Talk heart to heart with Him. Reject any temptation to ostentation, ca> reerism, or conceit. Strive for a pattern of life truly marked by charity, chastity, and humility, in imitation of Christ, the Eternal High Priest, of Whom you are to become living icons. ...Remember that what counts before the Lord is to dwell in His love and to make His love shine forth for others. (cf. Pastores dabo vobis 33)

SEE ALSO BALTIMORE, ARCHDIOCESE OF; BALTIMORE, COUNCILS OF; BENEDICTINES; CANON LAW, 1983 CODE; CANON LAW, HISTORY OF; CELIBACY, CLERICAL, HISTORY OF; CINCINNATI, ARCHDIOCESE OF; DIRECTION, SPIRITUAL; DOGMATIC THEOLOGY; EDUCATION (PHILOSOPHY OF); EDUCATION, CATHOLIC (HIGHER) IN THE UNITED STATES; EX CORDE ECCLESIAE; HOMOSEXUALS, ADMITTANCE TO SEMINARIES OF; LAITY, FORMATION AND EDUCATION OF; LATERAN COUNCILS; LOUVAIN, AMERICAN COLLEGE AT; LOUVAIN, CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF; MAYNOOTH, ST. PATRICK'S COLLEGE; MILITARY SERVICES, USA, ARCHDIOCESE FOR; MILWAUKEE, ARCHDIOCESE OF; MOUNT ST. MARY'S COLLEGE AND SEMINARY; NEW YORK, ARCHDIOCESE OF; OBLATE; PASTORES DABO VOBIS; PHILADELPHIA, ARCHDIOCESE OF; PRIESTHOOD IN CHRISTIAN TRADITION; PROPAGATION OF THE FAITH, CONGREGATION FOR THE; SACRED HEART, SOCIETY OF THE; ST. LOUIS, ARCHDIOCESE OF; ST. MARY'S SCHOOL (PHILADELPHIA, PA.); THOMISM; WOODSTOCK THEOLOGICAL CENTER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Mario Barbera, "L'origine dei seminari a norma del Concilio di Trento," La Civiltà Cattolica 91, no. 3 (1940): 215–221.

Charles Borromeo, Institutiones ad universum seminarii regimen pertinentes a sancto carolo confectae iussu frederici card (Rome 1841).

Congregation for the Clergy, Directory on the Ministry and Life of Priests (Vatican City-State 1994).

G. Culkin, "The English Seminaries," Clergy Review 35, no. 2 (1951): 73–88.

Antoine Degert, Histoire des Séminaires Français jusqu'à la Révolution, 2 vols. (Paris 1912).

M.F. Dinneen, "St. Mary's Seminary of St. Sulpice, Baltimore," American Ecclesiastical Review 16 (1897): 225–241.

Hubert Jedin, "Domschule und Kolleg," Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift 67 (1958): 210–223.

John Paul II, Post-Synodal Apostolic Exhortation: Pastores Dabo Vobis [I will give you shepherds] (Vatican City-State 1992).

Lloyd Paul McDonald, The Seminary Movement in the United States: Projects, Foundations, and Early Development (1784–1833) (Washington, D.C. 1927).

William Stephen Morris, The Seminary Movement in the United States: Projects, Foundations, and Early Development (1833–1866) (Washington, D.C. 1932).

A. Mulders, "Het Trentsche Seminariedecreet," Nederlandse Katholieke Stemmen 28 (1928): 226–239.

National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Norms for Priestly Formation, 2 vols. (Washington, D.C. 1993).

James A. O'Donohoe, Tridentine Seminary Legislation: Its Sources and Its Formation (Louvain, Belgium 1957).

Paul VI, Optatam totius, Decree on Priestly Training (Papal Decree, October 28, 1965), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_decree_19651028_optatam-totius_en.html (accessed June 11, 2008).

Bonaventura Poüan, De seminario clericorum (Tournai, Belgium 1874).

Sacra Congregatio pro Institutione Catholica. Seminaria ecclesiae catholicae (Vatican City 1963). A detailed and carefully documented history of seminary development, with extensive bibliography.

Sacra Congregatio de Seminariis et Studiorum Universitatibus, Enchiridion clericorum (Rome 1938).

Sacred Congregation for Catholic Education, Ratio fundamentalis (January 6, 1980), available from http://www.ewtn.com/library/CURIA/CCESEMSF.HTM (accessed June 9, 2008).

David L. Toups, Reclaiming Our Priestly Character (Omaha, Neb. 2008).

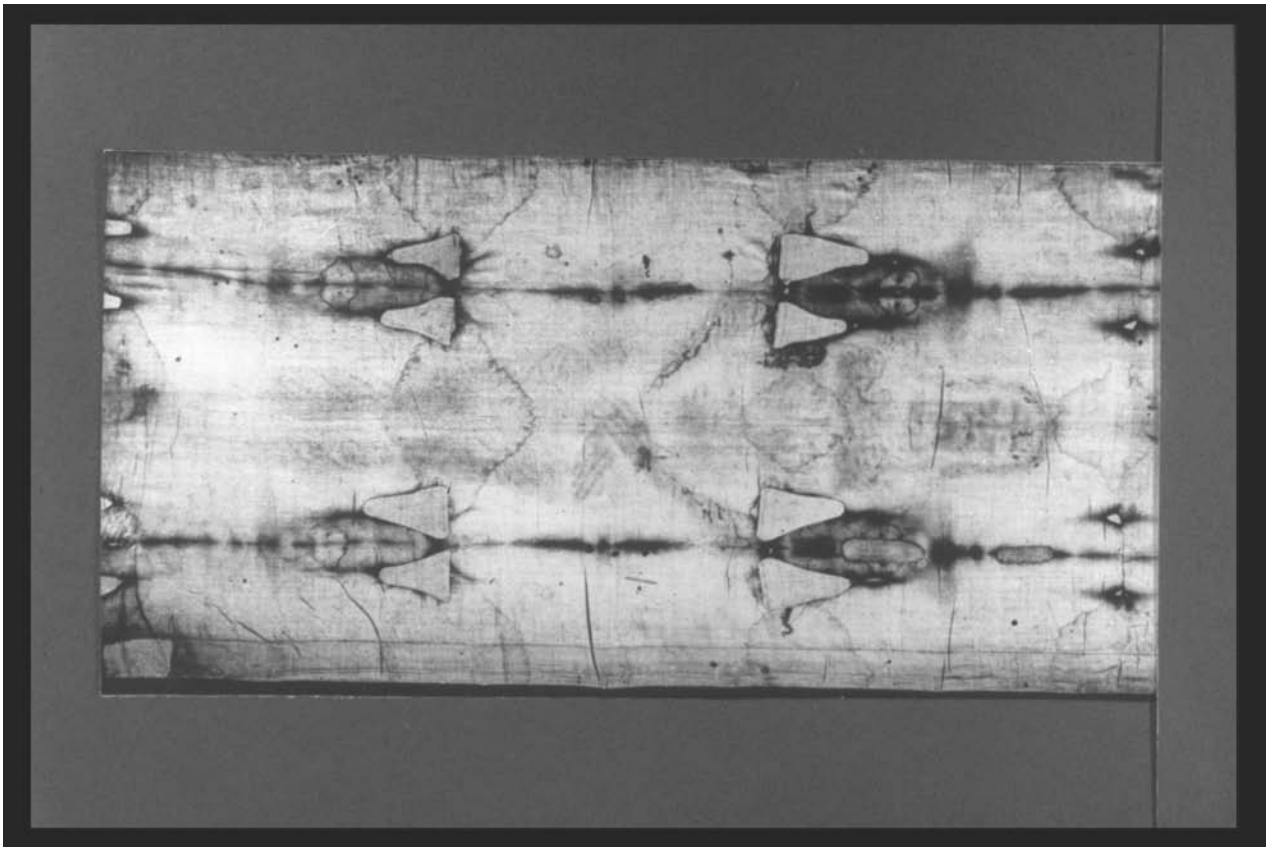
United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, Program of Priestly Formation, 5th ed. (Washington, D.C. 2006).

Rev. James A. O'Donohoe OMI
Professor of Canon Law and Moral Theology, St. John's Seminary, Brighton, Mass.
Professor of Contemporary Moral Problems, Boston College, Chestnut Hill, Mass.

Msgr. William B. Baumgaertner
Associate Director
Association of Theological Schools, Vandalia, Oh.



Sr. Katarina Schuth OSF
Director of Planning and Registrar
Weston School of Theology, Cambridge, Mass.

Rev. David L. Toups
Associate Director
United States Conference of Catholic Bishops Secretariat of Clergy, Consecrated Life, and Vocations (2010)

SHROUD OF TURIN

The Shroud of Turin is an ancient linen cloth of ivory color measuring 14 feet, 3 inches long by 3 feet, 7 inches wide, woven in a herringbone twill, which bears the frontal and dorsal image of a crucified, bearded man, approximately 5 feet, 11 inches tall, between the ages of 30–35, weighing about 175 pounds. In 1578 the cloth was brought to Turin, Italy, and has been preserved in the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist since 1694. Many believe this shroud is the actual burial cloth of JESUS CHRIST.

History of the Shroud. The history of the shroud can be traced with assurance to the mid-fourteenth century. Prior to that period, its whereabouts are uncertain. A third-century Syrian text mentions a cloth bearing the image of the face of JESUS associated with the miraculous cure of King Abgar V (AD 13–59), ruler of Edessa, modern day Urfa in southeastern Turkey. Although no mention is made of a beaten and bloody image of Jesus, a theory advanced by British historian Ian Wilson claims that the cloth was the shroud folded in such a way as to expose only the face.

Shroud of Turin. Saint Suaire Exhibition at the Dome in Turin, Italy, April 16, 1998. © CORBIS SYGMA

The cloth was transferred to CONSTANTINOPLE in 944. In 1986 historian and archaeologist Gino Zaninotto discovered a Greek manuscript of a sermon given on that occasion by Gregory Referendarius, archdeacon of Hagia Sophia. In it Gregory states that this Edessa cloth bears not only the image of the face, but the full-length body of Jesus (cf. Codex Vossianus Latinus Q69; Vatican Library Codex 5696, p. 35). Wilson proposes that the shroud eventually came into the possession of the Knights Templar. Founded around 1118, their purpose was to defend pilgrims and the sacred sites in the Holy Land after the Crusaders captured JERUSALEM in 1099.

In 1204, following the conquest of Constantinople during the Fourth Crusade, Robert de Clari, a knight from Picardy, wrote in his diary that he saw various holy relics among which was the burial cloth of CHRIST. In 2009 Dr. Barbara Frale, a researcher in the Vatican Secret Archives, gave additional support to the theory that the Knights Templar possessed the shroud. Her study of the trial of the Knights Templar brought to light a document in which a young Frenchman, Arnault Sabbatier, testified that during his initiation into the order in 1287, he was taken to a "secret place to which only the brothers of the Temple had access." He said that he was shown "a long linen cloth on which was impressed the figure of a man." The TEMPLARS were often looked upon with suspicion as being a mysterious group. It was alleged that they worshipped a "head" in their secret ceremonies which led to their suppression by order of King Philip IV of France and Pope CLEMENT V at the Council of Vienne in 1312.

According to a letter dated May 28, 1352, by Henri of Poitiers, Bishop of Troyes, Geoffrey de Charny (c. 1300–1356) Lord of Savoy and of Lirey, consigned the shroud to the canons of Lirey. Although there is no specific mention of the cloth in the letter, the bishop acknowledges the piety of the knight and his "devotion ... for the divine cult." Recorded evidence indicates that the shroud was exhibited in 1357 in Lirey by Jeanne de Vergy, widow of Geoffrey de Charny. Being in financial straits after the death of her husband, Jeanne de Vergy exhibited the shroud to raise money for the upkeep of the collegial church. A pilgrim's medallion bearing the coats of arms of de Charny and de Vergy with an image of the shroud commemorating the exhibition is conserved in the Museum of Cluny in Paris. By 1389 Jeanne had remarried to Aymon of Geneva, the uncle of the Antipope CLEMENT VII. Jeanne planned a new exhibition of the shroud and bypassed obtaining permission from the new bishop of Troyes, Pierre d'Arcis, by appealing directly to the antipope's legate, Cardinal Pierre de Thury.

The opening of the exhibition in April 1389 infuriated the bishop and he appealed to Clement VII. The antipope responded by confirming his permission and imposing silence on the bishop. Not satisfied, Bishop d'Arcis wrote his famous Memorandum to Clement VII in which he charged that the dean of the collegiate church of Lirey, "procured for his church a certain cloth cunningly painted, upon which by a clever sleight of hand was depicted the twofold image of one man ... the back and front ... falsely declaring and pretending that this was the actual shroud in which our Saviour Jesus Christ was enfolded in the tomb." He further states that the artist who painted the image divulged this to his predecessor, Bishop Henry of Poitiers.

This letter is often invoked by those who seek to discredit the authenticity of the shroud. Yet, closer examination of the document reveals that it is merely a draft. In 1900 Ulysee CHEVALIER, a French medieval scholar who denied the shroud's authenticity based upon this memorandum, admitted that this was indeed a pro memoria. What is more, Bishop d'Arcis does not substantiate the charges he levels, nor is there any record of the artist's name or confession. In response the antipope Clement VII never ordered an investigation into the accusations made Bishop d'Arcis. Instead, he authorized the continuation of the exposition of the shroud, provided that it was presented as an image or likeness of Christ and not as the true shroud. Any semblance of liturgical ceremony or pomp was to be avoided.

The shroud came into the possession of the House of Savoy at Chambery in 1453, when Margaret de Charny, the granddaughter of Jeanne de Vergy, gave it to her cousin Anna of Lusignano (1418–1462), the wife of Duke Louis I of Savoy (c. 1412–1465). The Savoy dynasty, founded in 1003, extended from southeastern France across the Alps to the Piedmont region of northwestern Italy. The Duke built an ornate chapel for the shroud in Chambery, the Savoy capital in France. It is said that on February 6, 1464, Duke Louis gave fifty francs to the clergy of Lirey as recompense for their loss of the possession of the shroud. The chapel was later enlarged and embellished by the duke's son, Amadeus IX (1435–1472), and was dedicated on June 11, 1502. At that time the shroud was placed in a silver reliquary above the high altar, closed by an iron grate and locked with four keys.

Tragedy struck on December 4, 1532, when fire broke out in the chapel, and the intensity of the heat caused molten silver to drop onto the folded cloth. The parallel set of burn marks that runs down the entire length of the cloth as well as the water stains are a result of that fire. In 1537 the Poor Clare nuns of Chambery repaired the burnt parts of the shroud by applying a number of triangular patches.

Emmanuel Philibert, the Duke of Savoy, brought the Shroud to Turin, Italy, on September 14, 1578. His reason was two-fold. Charles Borromeo, archbishop of Milan, had vowed to make a pilgrimage to venerate the shroud in return for Milan's deliverance from the plague. To facilitate the saintly and sickly Borromeo's access to the shroud, it was brought closer to him. The second reason was that the Duke planned to move his capital to Turin. The shroud was never to return to Chambery. The last Duke of Savoy, Umberto II, died in 1983 and bequeathed the shroud to the HOLY SEE. Given the shroud's long history in Turin, the popes have left the relic in the custodial care of the archbishop of Turin.

Scripture and the Shroud. The Gospels relate that, after Jesus was removed from the cross following his crucifixion, his body was wrapped in a burial cloth (cf. Mt 27:59; Mk 15:46; Lk 23:53). Indeed, many striking similarities are found between the evidence on the cloth and Gospel accounts of Jesus' crucifixion. The most notable are the scourge marks (Mt 27:26; Mk 15:15; Jn 19:1). The shroud indicates about one-hundred twenty scourge marks found nearly always in clusters of twos or threes. These correspond to a flagrum, or whip consisting of two or three leather strips with lead balls tied at each end that tore off pieces of flesh. According to Mosaic Law, no more than forty lashes were permitted (cf. Dt 25:3). To ensure that they did not exceed the legal limit, tormentors administered thirty-nine lashes (cf. 2 Cor 11:24).

The Gospels also mention that Jesus was struck at the head (Mt 26:68; 27:30; Mk 14:65, 15:19; Lk 22:63–64; Jn 18:22, 19:3). The image on the shroud depicts a bruised face, a broken nose, and a swollen right eye. The head of the man on the shroud is covered with numerous puncture holes with rivulets of blood trickling downward, which suggest a cap of thorns, and correspond with the Gospel account of Jesus being crowned with thorns (Mt 27:29; Mk 15:17; Jn 19:2). Scripture relates that Jesus was made to carry his cross (Jn 19:17). The shroud image shows that the man must have carried a heavy object on his shoulders, for there are bruises and cuts on his shoulders and knees.

Another significant detail of the man on the shroud is that his wrists and feet had been pierced, corresponding to Jesus being nailed to the cross by his hands and feet (Lk 24:39–40; Jn 20:20–27; Col 2:14). The right wrist is hidden under the left hand, and a blood flow can be seen coming from the base of the left hand. A final telling feature between the man on the shroud and the crucifixion of Jesus is the wound with a large bloodstain located on the right side of the rib cage (cf. Jn 19:34). The correlation between the scriptural account of the sufferings of Jesus and the details depicted on the Shroud of Turin are too compelling to be considered merely coincidental.

Scientific Studies. Serious scientific inquiries on the shroud began in the early twentieth century. Since then, experts from various disciplines have studied the cloth and offered their opinions on how the body images came to exist on the shroud.

In 1978 a public exposition of the shroud was held to celebrate the 400th anniversary of its transfer from Chambery to Turin. Following the exposition, a group of more than forty scientists from Italy and America, known as the Shroud of Turin Research Project, or STURP, was authorized to carry out nondestructive tests on the cloth. Among their findings were: (1) the body image on the shroud is only on the uppermost fibers of the cloth; (2) no significant evidence of paint exists, even though minute particles of iron oxide were discovered; and (3) the coloration goes only one to two fibers deep into the thread structure. Perhaps the most interesting find is the three-dimensional quality of the image of the man on the shroud. A typical painting is two-dimensional, which means the cloth covered a human body. Also, no signs of decomposition existed. The cloth has real bloodstains of the type AB. Of particular note was the presence of bile residue known as bilirubin, which occurs when blood begins to break down, especially after a severe trauma. The left knee shows lacerations and contusions, likely caused by falling, and researchers found evidence of dirt on the sole of the foot and minute abrasions on the nose. The dirt particles from the foot contained travertine aragonite, a rare calcite found in Jerusalem. Dr. Max Frei, a Swiss criminologist, took pollen samples from the shroud and found evidence of fifty-eight different plants, of which all but three grow in the vicinity of Jerusalem.

Authenticity. The small quantity of iron oxide found only on the blood areas of the shroud led some to conclude that an artist used red pigment to paint the image. Paint, however, would have penetrated the fibers. As it is, the shroud shows no evidence of brush marks, and the fibers are not stuck together as would be expected were pigment used. Furthermore, it is not surprising to find iron oxide in the blood areas because iron is a component of blood. Iron oxide is basically rust and can be found in many forms of dust. Subsequent studies showed an insufficient amount of iron oxide on the cloth to account for the least enhancement of the image.

Another theory posited is that the image was somehow heat-induced as with a hot statue. Since the image is only on the upper fibers of the cloth, the heat-emitting object would have had to be on the cloth for less than one second. Also, cellulose begins to yellow during the initial stages of burning. Of particular note is the difference between the burn marks and the body image on the cloth. The fire scorches are redder than the body image. Under ultraviolet light the fire scorches fluoresce whereas the body image does not, and in transmitted light the body image "disappears," whereas the scorch marks do not. Attempts to produce a heat-induced image only result in a distorted image rather than a crisp image such as that on the shroud.

Dr. John Jackson, who was part of STURP, proposes the cloth-collapse theory for the shroud image formation. According to this theory a stimulus, such as radiation passing through the body, caused the image to imprint onto the cloth. The points of the cloth closest to the body would have received the greatest dose of radiation compared to those farther away. Given that radiation is absorbed in air, no body images would be imprinted on those areas.

Perhaps the most damaging findings used against the authenticity of the shroud were the carbon-14 tests conducted in 1988 by three separate laboratories in Tucson, Oxford, and Zurich on small samples taken from the cloth. The report issued by the British Museum concluded with 95 percent confidence that the date for the linen of the shroud was between AD 260 and 1390. Those who were convinced that the shroud was a medieval forgery now seemed to have incontrovertible evidence.

Proponents of the shroud's authenticity remain undaunted. They point to breaches of protocol and the unreliability of carbon-14 testing. Willard F. Libby, who is credited with the discovery of the C-14 test, suggested that 10 to 15 percent of the shroud's weight is made up of foreign matter. Over the centuries the cloth has been subjected to fire, water, handling, incense, candle smoke, humidity, pollution, and other contaminants. Any of these could have skewed the results of the C-14 test.

Another noteworthy observation is that the sample site chosen from the cloth for the test may have contained more modern materials. A photo of this site shows that the sample was collected from one location near a water-stained and scorched site. Closer examination of the sample area reveals the presence of additional threads indicating repair.

In sum, no responsible scientist relies on a single date or test to settle a major historical issue. Rather, the preponderance of evidence must be considered conclusive. With regard to the Shroud of Turin, the C-14 test was the only incongruent test not supporting the shroud's authenticity.

Post–1988 Carbon-14 Test. In 1997 another fire in the Cathedral threatened the shroud, but the cloth was spared damage by a daring rescue. Public expositions of the shroud took place in 1998 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the first photographs taken by Secondo Pia (1855–1941), which revealed the images on the shroud appeared positive on his negative plates; and again in the year 2000 for the Jubilee Year marking the redemption accomplished by Christ in his death and resurrection. In 2002 the shroud was detached from its cloth backing, along with the patches sewn by the Poor Clares, and a new support was added to the cloth. At that time a digital scan was made of both sides of the cloth, and new photographs were taken. Pope BENEDICT XVI permitted another exposition in 2010.

Catholic Devotion. The Church has refrained from making a definitive pronouncement on the Shroud of Turin as the actual burial linen of Christ, leaving judgments about its age and origin to scientific investigation. Belief in the cloth is not an article of faith; Christianity is belief in a person, and that person is Christ. At the same time the Church has allowed veneration of the shroud by the faithful as a pious devotion to meditate on the sufferings of Christ. In his address announcing the solemn exposition of the shroud for 2010, Pope Benedict XVI said that it offered the occasion "to contemplate that mysterious face, which speaks silently to the hearts of men, inviting them to recognize the face of God."

SEE ALSO CRUSADES; PHILIP IV, KING OF FRANCE; POOR CLARES; VATICAN ARCHIVES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ulysse Chevalier, Étude critique sur l'origine du Saint Suaire de Lirey-Chambéry-Turin (Paris 1900).

Barbara Frale, "I templari e la sindone," L'Osservatore Romano (April 5, 2009), available (in Italian) from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/or/or_quo/cultura/079q04a1.html (accessed September 30, 2009).

Fr. Vittorio Guerrera, The Shroud of Turin: A Case for Authenticity (Rockford, Ill. 2001).

John Heller and Alan Adler, "A Chemical Investigation of the Shroud of Turin," Canadian Society for Forensic Sciences Journal, 14, no. 3 (1981): 92.

John C. Iannone, The Mystery of the Shroud of Turin: New Scientific Evidence (New York 1998).

Joseph A. Kohlbeck and Eugenia L. Nitowski, "New Evidence May Explain Image on Shroud of Turin," Biblical Archaeology Review, XII, no. 4 (July–August 1986): 23.

Walter McCrone, Judgement Day for the Turin Shroud (Chicago 1997).

C. Bernard Ruffin, The Shroud of Turin: The Most Up-to-date Analysis of All the Facts Regarding the Church's Controversial Relic (Huntington, Ind. 1999).

Kenneth E. Stevenson and Gary R. Habermas, Verdict on the Shroud (Ann Arbor, Mich. 1981).

Ian Wilson, The Shroud of Turin: The Burial Cloth of Jesus Christ? (New York 1979).

Gino Zaninotto, Orazione di gregorio il referendario in occasione della traslazione a Costantinopoli dell'immagine Edessena nell'anno 944, in "La Sindone. Indagini Scientifiche" (Atii del IV Congresso, Siracusa 1987), edited by S. Rodoante, Cinisello Balsamo (Milan 1988).

Rev. Msgr. Vittorio Guerrera RC
Priest of the Archdiocese of Hartford, Conn. (2010)

SIMON (SZYMON) OF LIPNICA, ST.

Priest, Franciscan Friars Minor; b. Lipnica Murowana, Poland, 1435/1440; d. Kraków, Poland, July 14, 1482; beatified February 24, 1685 (cultus confirmed), by Pope INNOCENT XI; beatification confirmed December 20, 2005, by Pope BENEDICT XVI; canonized June 3, 2007, by Pope Benedict XVI.

Born to parents who were pious in their faith and dedicated to providing a well-rounded education to their children, Simon was a bright and obedient child who showed an early devotion to the Blessed Virgin. He attended the prestigious Jagiellonian University, which was then called the Jagiellonian Academy, in Kraków. While there, Simon was among those riveted by the charismatic preaching of St. John of Capistrano, who had founded a Franciscan convent in honor of St. BERNARDINE OF SIENA in Kraków in 1453.

Strongly drawn to the Franciscan rule and recognizing a true vocation to religious life, Simon entered the convent at Stradom, Poland, in 1457. He studied with Br. Christopher of Varese, who was recognized as an inspired teacher and devoted and pious religious, and who was also a biographer of St. John of Capistrano. In 1460 Simon was ordained into the order of the Franciscan Friars Minor and served as guardian of the fraternity in Tarnów before returning to the convent at Stradom. Fr. Simon soon demonstrated that, like St. John of Capistrano, he was a gifted and zealous speaker, who had an encyclopedic knowledge of Scripture and an ability to bring people into the faith through conversion. He became the first member of his order to hold the position of preacher at the Cathedral of Wawel, a post he assumed in 1463.

In 1472, in Aquila, Italy, Fr. Simon took part in the ceremony to transfer the body of St. Bernardine of Siena, who was, for the devoted priest, a figure of inspiration and spiritual guidance. In 1478 he attended the General Chapter in Pavia, Italy, and thereafter made a pilgrimage to Rome and then the Holy Land. The final leg of the journey presented a threat of physical danger for a member of the Catholic clergy. Fr. Simon memorized the rule of the order and embarked on the trip with a spirit of humble submission to the will of God. He completed his travels and returned to Kraków unharmed.

In July 1482, a terrible plague struck Kraków. Fr. Simon joined the friars of the Convent of the Observance to assist the effort to help the afflicted. Thinking only of easing the suffering of the sick and dying, he sacrificed his own safety for the welfare of his brothers and sisters in the community and soon contracted the disease; Fr. Simon died six days later. Always humble of spirit, during his illness the priest asked to be buried beneath the threshold of the church so those entering would walk over him.

On February 24, 1685, Pope Innocent XI authorized limited veneration of Bl. Simon of Lipnica (cult ab immemorabili). On December 20, 2005, Pope Benedict XVI authorized by decree the heroic virtues of Bl. Simon; on December 16, 2006, the pope approved a miraculous cure, which occurred in 1943, attributed to the BLESSED. In canonizing him in 2007, Pope Benedict XVI called St. Simon of Lipnica "a timely model of a Christian who—enlivened by the spirit of the Gospel—was ready to dedicate his life to his brethren." The pope entrusted to the protection of the new Saint "those who are suffering from poverty, illness, loneliness and social injustice."

Feast: July 18 (other celebrations: July 15, July 30).

SEE ALSO FRIARS; JOHN CAPISTRAN, ST.; MONASTICISM; POLAND, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "Eucharistic Concelebration for the Canonization of Four Blesseds: George Preca, Simon of Lipnica, Charles of St. Andrew Houben, Marie Eugenie of Jesus Milleret" (Homily, June 3, 2007), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2007/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20070603_canonizations_en.html (accessed September 27, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Blessed Simon of Lipnica (1435/1440 c.–1482)" Vatican Web site, June 3, 2007, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20070603_simone-lipnica_en.html (accessed September 27, 2009).

"Pope Signs Sainthood Decrees in Private," Catholic News Service, December 20, 2005, available from http://www.catholicnews.com/data/stories/cns/0507241.htm (accessed September 27, 2009).

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York, N.Y. (2010)

SIN (THEOLOGY OF)

Sin is an EVIL HUMAN ACT. But an act is evil, bad, or wanting in the goodness or perfection it should have, because it is out of conformity with its proper norm, or standard. With regard to the human act, the norm, or standard, from a philosophical point of view, is man's rational nature; and from the theological point of view, GOD's nature and the eternal law. In the theology of sin, sin is considered mainly an offense against God. St. AUGUSTINE's classical definition of sin is a word, deed, or DESIRE in opposition to the eternal law of God (Contra faustum Manichaeum 22.27).

This definition applies primarily and univocally to personal, mortal sins. A MORTAL SIN is a fully deliberate act involving a sinner's choice of some created good as a final END in preference to the Supreme Good, with a consequent loss of sanctifying grace if, prior to the sinful act, the sinner possessed that grace. Thus, grave matter, full knowledge, and deliberate consent of the WILL are necessary for mortal sin (cf. John Paul II, Reconciliatio et paenitentia, no. 17; Catechism of the Catholic Church, no. 1857). In other uses the term is analogical, and as such is applied to (1) venial sin, in which the idea is not fully realized, either because the act is imperfectly deliberate or because the matter with which it is concerned involves no disruption of man's orientation toward his final end and is therefore compatible with sanctifying grace; (2) ORIGINAL SIN, which is not an act, but an inherited defect of sanctifying grace and is antecedent to and independent of personal voluntary action; (3) habitual sin, which is not an act, but a state in which the sinner is without grace because of his personal sin; and (4) concupiscence, which is not an act, but a tendency or imbalance in the psychological integrity of the human composite, and which is not, in the words of the Council of Trent, "sin in the true and proper sense, but [is called sin] only because it is from sin and inclines to sin" (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 1515).

Adam and Eve. The book of Genesis recounts their disobedience; the first sin of humanity. THE ART ARCHIVE/PALAZZO BARBERINI ROME/ALFREDO DAGLI ORTI/THE PICTURE DESK, INC.

MATERIAL AND FORMAL SIN

There are two ways of looking at an action that is in disaccord with God's law. It can be considered objectively and in its kind or subjectively, as it is in the consciousness of the individual who performs it. From the objective point of view, the act of feeding poison to another is out of accord with the eternal law, but a person doing so could be innocent of subjective fault if he is inculpably ignorant of the fact that the food he offers is poisoned and hence is unaware of the true nature and consequences of his act. The performance of an objectively evil act is called by theologians a material sin; when all the conditions necessary to subjective imputability are present, the act is said to be a formal sin. The determination of the objective sinfulness of an action is made on the basis of divine revelation as interpreted by the magisterium of the Church and also on the basis of the rational analysis of the nature of the act. This is properly a theological or a philosophical question.

The determination of subjective responsibility is more immediately a psychological question. Contemporary interest, with its personalist orientation, tends to center more on the latter question than on the former, and an anti-intellectualism that fails to distinguish between the two problems leads to moral RELATIVISM and consequentialist ethics. It also brings confusion to any discussion of the role of CONSCIENCE in moral activity. Although all are acutely conscious of the problem of the erroneous conscience and the obligation (not the right) to follow its dictates, the contemporary relativist tends to be blind to the prior obligation to form an upright conscience, the only kind, according to reason and revelation, that confers the right to follow its dictates.

Sin as an Act. Sin is to be distinguished not only from the morally good act and HABIT to which it is opposed, but also from the morally bad habit, or VICE, which is not uncommonly its habitual source. Properly speaking, vices are not sins but habits, whereas a sin is a voluntary act and does not necessarily demand a vicious habit as its source any more than a good moral act demands a VIRTUE. Otherwise the vicious man could never perform a good act, nor could the virtuous man ever sin, an error condemned by the Council of Trent (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 1540). Moreover, a sin is a human act and precisely as such requires the exercise of both INTELLECT and will. When this is lacking, a man's act is amoral and cannot be described as human, or as virtuous, vicious, or sinful. Therefore, sin is a deliberate and voluntary act. Even in the so-called sin of OMISSION, the omission to be sinful must be traceable to a positive act of will, the object of which is either not-to-act or to do something incompatible with the omitted obligation. And in either case there is an act marked by a want of conformity with the law of God.

Reference to God. The elaboration, therefore, of the theological notion of sin must begin not with the sinner, but with God. Pope PIUS XII, as well as recent popes, have decried as one of the errors of modern times the misrepresentation of "the whole nature of original sin, and indeed of sin in general, considered as an offense against God ..." (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 3891). Since the theologian is concerned with creatures only inasmuch as God is their principle and goal, human activity becomes theologically significant in accordance with its orientation to God. Man is made to pursue his HAPPINESS, and ultimately this can be achieved only in the attainment of the Supreme Good, which is God. His human activity must be directed to this goal, and even such part of it as has other more immediate and proximate objectives must be ultimately subordinated to the ultimate, supreme goal, which is desirable above all things and answers objectively to the full amplitude of human desire.

But man's end in reaching toward happiness and God's purpose in creating man are really identical. For God, who is perfect, complete, self-contained in Himself, was not urged or drawn to the CREATION of man by the hope of acquiring new perfection for Himself, for there is nothing good or desirable that was not already contained in His own infinite goodness. It was not, then, for the sake of increasing but of diffusing His goodness that He created. On His part, the object of creation could be nothing but the giving of Himself, the communicating of His goodness. The gain had necessarily to be on the part of the creature. In the ultimate communication of a participation in His own happiness, the extrinsic glory of God that is said to be the purpose of creation is realized. It follows that man, by nature a rational being and a free agent with the power of selective activity, must deliberately and consciously direct himself to the attainment of God, or to the glory of God, as his ultimate end. To deliberately choose some other goal than God as an ultimate is to take something from God that is due Him, to twist the whole order of creation, and to usurp God's place by substituting a human will and a human order for the divine. In this way every sinner imitates in his own fashion the sin of Lucifer.

A further precision, providing a more profound insight into the nature of mortal sin, is possible to theologians who take, as most Catholic theologians have taken, the intellectualist position of St. THOMAS AQUINAS with respect to divine law. This, however, is beyond the grasp of those such as John CALVIN and voluntarists generally, who in their concern to preserve the transcendent and even autocratic supremacy of God, have held that the ultimate norm of what is right and wrong is simply the good pleasure of God. The eternal law, as seen from the intellectualist position, is not arbitrary or whimsical, nor can it be divorced from the nature of things. The eternal law is reducible ultimately not to the divine will but to the divine intellect. It is the plan and pattern of created nature as God's intellect sees this in His vision of Himself. Consequently, the sinner who deviates from the eternal law does violence to his individual nature and to the created order of things, of which he is a part (Thomas Aquinas, Summa contra gentiles 3, q. 122). For the voluntarist, the eternal law is a barricade or a leash confining the liberty of individual men who are constrained through FEAR to observe it. It is much easier from the intellectualist position to LOVE God's law, because the intellectualist sees in it a sorely needed gift that God in His MERCY has dispensed to men. It is easier to see sin not only as a violation of God's law, but as an act of self-mutilation and self-destruction (Gaudium et spes, no. 27). Man reaches his perfection and fulfillment in an orderly way by taking his place within God's plan of love, which is manifest to him by the natural and the positive divine law. The voluntary act by which he withdraws from God's plan and substitutes one of his own is sinful because it is the rejection in fact and in deed of God's love (Lk 15 [NAB]). Thus the proportionate remedy for sin—whether it is described as REPENTANCE, reconciliation, remission, conversion, or JUSTIFICATION—is the appreciative love of God, the act of perfect love, which also effects the restoration of the sinner to his proper place in creation, or to the state of grace.

It is possible to express the malice involved in mortal sin in various ways as we see in both the Old Testament (e.g., Gn 3:1–14, Ps 51 [NAB]) and the New Testament (Lk 15:11–32; Rom 5–8 [NAB]): It breaks the ties of love binding man to God and is the rejection of the divine goodness. As an aversion from God and a conversion to some created good in His place (St. Augustine, De libero arbitrio 2.53), it is a kind of IDOLATRY. It involves contempt of God and of His precepts (Is 1:4 [NAB]). It is an injustice to Him in denying Him His rights, and it breaks the new covenant of mercy and love made by God through Jesus Christ (Heb 10:28–29 [NAB]). It is an act of base ingratitude to God, who has been so good and generous to man.

THE QUESTION OF THE PHILOSOPHICAL SIN

The distinction between sin as an offense against God and sin as a violation of nature makes it possible for one to ask whether a sinner can be guilty of sin in the theological sense of the term if in sinning he is conscious only that his act is out of harmony with his rational nature. Such a person, according to an opinion advanced by the Jesuit François Musnier in 1686, would be guilty only of a philosophical sin, but not of an offense against God. This opinion was proscribed by Pope ALEXANDER VIII in 1690 as scandalous, temerarious, offensive to pious ears, and erroneous (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, no. 2291). All theologians agree that, objectively speaking, all sin is sin in the theological sense. Whether this is also true of all sin, considered from the point of view of subjective responsibility, has been disputed by some authors. In the opinion of most theologians, who see the authority of God as the proximate basis of moral obligation, every sin, even when considered subjectively, must be a sin in the theological sense because in their opinion no true moral obligation can exist for one who does not know himself to be bound to the observance of moral law by the authority of God. Thus, if one can suppose that a man is invincibly ignorant of God's existence, he would not, in this view, be capable of moral action in the proper sense of the word. However advanced he might be in years, he would be morally in the condition of a child who has not yet reached the age of reason. This was, for example, the opinion of Louis BILLOT, who was willing to admit that there are many of adult age in that situation (De Deo uno [Rome 1931] 50). However, the recognition of the authority of a divine lawmaker who is offended by sin need not be clear and explicit. It seems to be implicit in all true moral judgment.

Constitutive Elements. In every sin it is possible to distinguish two elements, one positive and the other negative, or, more exactly, privative. The positive element consists in the sinner's conversion to some created "good" that so attracts him that he prefers the satisfaction to be found in it to the divine good. Converting thus to a created good, the sinner by the same act turns away from God and is deprived of his orientation to God along with sanctifying grace and its attendant gifts. This "aversion" from God constitutes the privative element in sin. Which of the two elements is more formal in sin has been debated by theologians, THOMISM generally making the conversion the constitutive element and SCOTISM holding that the privation is more formal. However, the more common Thomist opinion does not deny that the privative element belongs essentially to the sinful act, which would not indeed be a sinful conversion to a created good if it did not entail aversion from God and the privations associated with such aversion.

The distinction of these two elements helps to clarify the psychology of the sinful act, which would be difficult to explain if sin were simply the choice of evil and nothing else. Moreover, it provides an answer to the protest of the sinner who declares that he did not think about offending God when he gave himself up to his sinful deed. But he did seek an illicit good, one to which a privation is inseparably attached, and in doing this he indirectly intended the privation.

Distinction of Sins. The practice of sacramental confession, as required by Canon Law (Code of Canon Law, c. 988) and the Council of Trent (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 1679–1681), requires the confession of all mortal sins committed after baptism according to their kind and number. This practice makes the specific and numerical discrimination of sins a matter of practical importance to the Catholic theologian. The SPECIES of a sin is the kind, or class, into which sin falls, whereas the numerical distinction of sins is simply the number of distinct occurrences. Theologians distinguish between the moral and the theological species of sin. Moral species depend on the type of malice manifest in a sin and distinguishing it from other kinds of sin; for example, THEFT is distinguished from BLASPHEMY. Theological species are compared based on the gravity of the sins.

There is one essential difference between sins in this respect, and thus there are two theological species: mortal and venial (Thomas Aquinas, Summa contra gentiles 3, q. 139; Summa theologiae 1a–2ae, q. 88, a. 1).

The distinguishing factor in determining the moral species for those who hold that the formal constitutive of sin is not the privative element but the positive conversion of the sinner to something illicit, is the object considered from a moral point of view. This includes not merely what is done (the finis operis), but also the sinner's purpose in doing it, as well as the moral CIRCUMSTANCES that give a new kind of moral quality to what is done. That is not to say, however, that the MOTIVE or the circumstances change the moral character of what is done; blasphemy is blasphemy, and murder is murder, whatever the motive. But the motive, or finis operantis, is itself an object of the will, and circumstances can so modify an object that it acquires a new kind of morality in addition to that which it has of itself. An act that is single in its physical entity can be multiple from a moral point of view. Thus, the theft of a sacred object is at once an act of theft and an act of SACRILEGE. A lie told for the purpose of seduction is an offense against both veracity and CHASTITY. For those who see the essence of sin to consist more formally in a privation, other norms had to be found to differentiate one sin from another. Some have based the distinction on opposition to different virtues, others on the difference of the laws or precepts violated.

The numerical distinction of sins, although relatively simple in principle, is sometimes complicated in the application of the principle, especially with regard to internal sins of thought and desire. The basic principle is that there are as many sins as there are morally distinct acts of the will.

Connection of Sins. Vices and a fortiori sinful acts are not interconnected in the same way as are the virtues. The acquired moral virtues, in their perfect state, are all connected in PRUDENCE, and the infused virtues are connected in CHARITY, so that the possession of any one perfect virtue guarantees the possession of the others as well. Such is not the case where sins are concerned. Virtue tends to unify and focus all activity upon moral goodness; vice and sin, on the contrary, scatter and dissipate man's moral act. The morally good act is in conformity with the moral law. The possibility of variety in nonconformity or deformity is endless.

Some sins are opposed to others by a relationship of contrariety—for example, prodigality and miserliness—and one therefore is exclusive of the other. Moreover, the intention of the sinner is not directly to depart from the rule of reason or the law of God, but to realize something that he sees as good to himself. Sins would be interconnected if their objects were connected, but manifestly they are not.

Nevertheless, it must be admitted that there is some connection between sins. In some cases, what are virtually different sins are joined in the same act, as offenses against JUSTICE and chastity in the sin of ADULTERY. Sometimes one sin can dispose a man to the commission of another of a different kind, as when DRUNKENNESS leads to quarreling. Some sins are the effects of other sins, as when PRIDE begets ENVY, and in this way all the capital sins have a numerous progeny. Again, by grievous sin the infused virtue of prudence is lost and acquired prudence is weakened, and because of this, one becomes less capable of virtuous action and less able to stand firmly and constantly against the TEMPTATION to other sin. Furthermore, one who cuts himself off from the love of God and has overcome the fear of being separated from Him is deprived of a most effective motive against any sin and may more readily fall victim to temptation. Still, one sin cannot be said to contain all others, except in the sense that it disposes more or less remotely to their commission (Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae 1a–2ae, q. 73, a. 1).

Comparative Gravity of Sins. Not all sins are equal in their gravity. This is the teaching of the scriptures (Jn 19:11; Ez 16:44–58; Jer 7:26; Lam 4:6 [NAB]) and of all Catholic theologians and the Magisterium. Although sin consists in a privation, it is not a pure or total privation, but one that admits of more or less. The gravity of sin is measured objectively and specifically by the extent of the disorder and aversion caused by the sinful object and its consequences, and subjectively by the intensity of the will's act and the dispositions of the sinner.

First and foremost, the gravity of sin is measured against a scale of values, in which God is highest, the substantial good of man is intermediate, and external goods are lowest. These values are secured and protected by the Ten Commandments and the virtues, the comparative excellence of which is judged by reference to the same scale. It is possible and convenient, therefore, to measure the gravity of a sin by considering the comparative excellence of the virtue to which it is opposed and the manner of its opposition (e.g., by excess or by defect). Generally speaking, spiritual sins are considered more serious than carnal sins because the element of aversion from God is more pronounced in them. They also involve the good of the SOUL, which is greater than the good of the body, and, being less influenced by passion, they are less excusable. Whatever weakens the judgment of reason or lessens a sinner's liberty of action diminishes the gravity of a sin because it makes the act less voluntary.

Harmful consequences, to the extent that they are foreseen, also aggravate the gravity of a sin. The dignity, character, and reputation of the person sinning, as well as the person sinned against, may also have a bearing on the seriousness of a sin. For example, other things being equal, venial sins, when indeliberate, are less serious in a person of greater, as compared with a person of lesser, virtue because they have a greater element of the involuntary in them. Deliberate sins, however, are worse in a person of greater virtue, partly because they are less excusable—because virtue should make resistance to sin easier—and partly because there is more ingratitude to God and scandal to neighbor in them. By contrast, the sin of DEFAMATION committed by one known to be a liar does less harm than it would if it were committed by a person with a reputation for veracity.

SUBJECT OF SIN

Theologians discuss the faculty or power of the soul to which sin is attributed as to a source or principle. It is, of course, the person who sins, not the part, member, or faculty of the human composite. Nevertheless, an act proceeds from a person through the operation of some power or faculty, and theologians seek to identify the powers in which the sinful act can originate. Sin is found primarily in the will, which is the principle of all human action; when it is attributed to other powers, it is only as they are subject to voluntary control and yet retain a capacity for disordered activity. Sin is not attributed to the external members of the body that move in complete subjection to the will, for they are simply the instruments through which the commands of the will are put into effect. Besides the will itself, the sense appetite and reason qualify as subjects of sin inasmuch as in their activity they are subject to disorder that could and should be controlled.

Internal Causes of Sin. Sin can be considered in two ways: materially, in its physical entity, or formally, in its defectiveness, its disorder, its disaccord with moral law. Sin viewed in its physical being must have a direct efficient cause, but the identification of the cause of what is formally evil in it is more difficult. Since the disorder of sin is not mere negation, but a privation of something that should be present, it requires a cause. Because evil as evil is not per se appetible, the activity of its cause will not be directed immediately to the evil, the disorder, of the sin, but rather to some positive goal that entails the privation and disorder. As a human act, sin must proceed from the will as from a cause.

According to St. Thomas Aquinas, the will, "lacking the direction of the rule of reason and of the divine law, and intent upon some mutable good, causes the act of sin directly and the inordinateness indirectly and without intending it. The lack of order in the act results from the lack of direction in the will" (Summa theologiae 1a–2ae, q. 75, a. 1). This defect in the direction of the will can be caused by the defect in the will itself that is called malice, or by a defect of knowledge in the intellect called ignorance, or by a defect in the sense appetite called weakness.

Psychologically, choice by the will follows a judgment of reason on the goodness of the proposed object. This judgment may be vitiated by ignorance either of general principles or of the right application of principles. Often, however, it is not in its speculative but its practical role that the mind fails. The judgment that precedes sin is a practical judgment, and it is influenced by factors operating in the here and now, existential in the truest sense of the word. In any case, the practical judgment influences the will and is in that sense a cause of sin. The emotional state of a man at any particular moment unconsciously and even consciously affects his estimate of the value of a proposed action. An angry or terrified man does not think and act as a tranquil one. He judges a thing according to the advantages it appears to offer him here and now, and this judgment so occupies his mind that he is distracted from the use of his moral knowledge.

Sins arising from neither passion nor ignorance are traceable to the malice of a will prepared deliberately to choose the disorder and spiritual loss involved in sin rather than forgo some temporal satisfaction. Malice makes a sin graver, because it is a disposition of the will itself and is a more enduring source of disorder than passion.

External Causes. Factors external to the sinner himself may also contribute to his sin. In their consideration of the mystery of iniquity, theologians have given much attention to the question of God's CAUSALITY with respect to the sinful act of the creature. God, the Supreme Good, wills indirectly physical evil incidental to the total perfection of creation and the penal evil that is incidental to the fulfillment of divine justice, because these evils are not directly opposed to His honor and glory; but He cannot will the moral evil of sin in any way, because it is contradictory to His love. Just as He cannot make anything hating it, neither can He make anything to hate Him. All things come from Him, and are made to return to Him, not to move away from Him. Yet men do sin, and they could not do this without God's help. Theologians distinguish between the physical entity of a sin, which comes from God as does the whole of created being and all its modes; what is human in the sin, which is from God and from the FREE WILL; and what is defective, which is not from God in any way but from the defect of the creature. A radical defectibility is inevitable in the creature because it is not an absolute. But God could preserve the creature from all sin. He has not willed to do this, but this cannot be understood to make Him the cause of what is formal in sin, because He does not owe such preservation to the creature. Moreover, the privation that is formal in sin requires for its explanation not an efficient but a deficient cause; in a sense it is something not caused rather than something caused. But God, as First Cause, lacks nothing. From no point of view can He be conceived as the cause—efficient, exemplary, or final—of the sinful disorder of the act of the will.

The DEVIL cannot be considered the cause of sin in the sense that he directly moves a person's will to sin. At most he is able to tempt humans to sin by operating upon their internal senses, causing them to think of sinful things and to focus their attention on the desirability of illicit pleasures. Not all temptation need be explained in terms of diabolical activity, however; the world and the flesh can account for most of the temptations that people experience. In a general sense, nevertheless, because the devil was instrumental in causing original sin, which has left humans prone to evil, he can be considered an indirect and partial cause of all sin.

One person can cause another to sin by means of persuasion, suggestion, command, example, and so forth, or by cooperating in the sin either materially or formally.

Effects of Sin. The act of sin produces certain psychological, spiritual, and even physical effects, which, although foreseen, are not intended by the sinner. Man's relationship with God, with others, with the Church, and with creation itself is harmed as a result of sin. Theologians speak of the loss of both natural and SUPERNATURAL good.

Man's essential natural good—his existence, the integrity and essential capacity of his natural powers—is not lost in consequence of either original or personal sin. But the human good that consists in an inclination to virtue, a natural characteristic of a rational being, is lessened, but not completely destroyed, by sin. Some diminution of this good is a result in man of original sin. This wound in nature is not healed in man's present state by sanctifying grace. Personal sin aggravates and deepens this wound, making further sin easier to commit and virtue more difficult to practice.

The principal effect of sin, however, is the loss of supernatural good and the incurrence of GUILT. Mortal sin deprives the soul of sanctifying grace, and with the deprivation of grace, the soul's attendant supernatural gifts, capacities, and privileges are lost. It is because of this that mortal sin is referred to as the "death" of the soul, which, in effect, ceases to have being on the supernatural level. Guilt is the state or condition of being at fault (reatus culpae) and so deprived of supernatural life, the absence of the splendor of which is a stain (macula peccati) on the soul, and also the state or condition of being liable to the penalty due in PUNISHMENT for the fault (reatus poenae).

Venial Sin. The words mortal and venial in connection with sin are not found explicitly in the scriptures, but the distinction between the two types of sin is clearly affirmed. There are sins that exclude from the kingdom (Eph 5:5; Gal 5:19–21 [NAB]) and sins that do not exclude from it (Jas 3:2; 1 Jn 1:8; Eccl 7:21 [NAB]). In the fourth century, the monk Jovinian (d. c. 405) claimed that all sins were equal and therefore deserving of the same punishment. St. Augustine took a strong stand against this doctrine (see J. Mausbach, Die Ethik des hl. Augustinus). John WYCLIF, and after him Martin LUTHER, John Calvin, and others among the Reformers, rejected the distinction so far at least as it supposed a difference in the sin rather than the sinner. Pope PIUS V in 1567 condemned a proposition of theologian Michael Baius (1513–1589) repudiating the distinction (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 1920). The Council of Trent spoke of mortal sin, which the just man can avoid, and venial sin, which he cannot avoid without special grace (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 1573); of mortal sin that must be confessed in the Sacrament of PENANCE and venial sin that need not be confessed (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 1707); of mortal sin, by which one falls from justice, and venial sin, by which the sinner does not cease to be just (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 1537).

According to St. Thomas Aquinas, the difference between mortal and venial sin follows upon the diversity of the disorders that constitute the essence of the sin. There are two such disorders: one that destroys the very principle of order and one that leaves the principle but introduces inordinateness among things consequent to it. The principle of the entire moral order is the last end, which is God. Hence when a soul is so disordered that it turns away from God, to whom it has been united by charity, there is mortal sin; when there is disorder in the soul without its turning away from God, there is venial sin. St. Thomas likened the aversion from God in mortal sin to death, in which the principle of life is lost, and the disorder of venial sin to sickness, which is a reparable condition because the principle of life remains (Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae 1a–2ae, q. 72, a. 5).

From this it is evident that the term sin is not applied univocally to mortal and venial sin as to two species contained under a common GENUS. The disorder involved in venial sin is different, and so also the offense to God, and it makes a man liable to quite a different penalty.

St. Thomas thought (puzzlingly, according to some theologians today) that venial sin was not so much against the law of God (contra legem) as outside the law (praeter legem; Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae 1a–2ae, q. 88, a. 1 ad 1). St. Thomas wanted, as did other outstanding theologians of his time, to include under the heading of sin as defined by St. Augustine only those acts in which the idea of sin was fully realized. The restrictive interpretation of these theologians was due to the severity of the early scholastics, who thought that any voluntary and deliberate transgression of the divine will was worthy of eternal punishment. The later scholastics sought to get around the rigor of this doctrine by finding formulas that made venial sin seem something less than an outright violation of the divine law. Thus, John Duns SCOTUS, for example, is alleged by some, although this is disputed by others, to have taught that venial sin is a violation of a counsel rather than a precept. St. BONAVENTURE and St. ALBERT THE GREAT used the same formula as St. Thomas and declared that venial sin is not contra but praeter legem. However, they did not mean this in the sense that it was opposed to no law, but that it was not opposed to the law of charity that obliges one to love God above all things and to seek Him alone as a final end. A venial sin does not make it impossible for one to be intent upon God as an ultimate end. It disorders a man, not with respect to his end, but with respect to the means employed in the pursuit of his end. But if the law of God is understood in its full amplitude regarding not only end but means, venial sin cannot be said to be only praeter legem.

Venial sin differs from mortal sin in the punishment due to it: It merits a temporal, rather than an eternal, penalty. It may be declared in confession but need not be, for it can be expiated by many other remedies (Denzinger-Schönmetzer 1965, 1680). Venial sins dispose a man to mortal sin because, by inordinate preoccupation with means, he can become so attached to them that they begin to assume a major importance in his life, or because, being undisciplined in little things, he can grow bolder and become less ready to subject himself to God's law in graver matters (Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae 1a–2ae, q. 88, a. 3). Nevertheless, venial sin does not directly cause a diminution of charity or of sanctifying grace (Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae 2a–2ae, q. 24, a. 10).

POST-CONCILIAR DEVELOPMENTS IN THE THEOLOGY OF SIN

Since the Second Vatican Council (1962–1965), with its emphasis on the communal dimension of the human person and sin (Gaudium et spes, nos. 13, 25), the magisterium and Catholic theologians have spoken of sin in terms of how it negatively affects one's relationship of friendship with God and others. They have also retrieved a more scriptural way of speaking about sin, as is evidenced in The Rite of Penance (1973), and they have introduced other categories of sin in addition to original sin and personal sin. Social sin, for example, is described by the Catechism of the Catholic Church as a type of sin that gives rise to "social situations and institutions that are contrary to the divine goodness. 'Structures of sin' are the expression and effect of personal sins" (no. 1869; John Paul II, Reconciliatio et paenitentia, no. 16). In sum, as Pope JOHN PAUL II observes in his 1984 APOSTOLIC EXHORTATION Reconciliatio et penitentia: "The mystery of sin is composed of this twofold wound which the sinner opens in himself and in his relationship with his neighbor. Therefore one can speak of personal and social sin: From one point of view, every sin is personal; from another point of view, every sin is social insofar as and because it also has social repercussions" (no. 15).

The Magisterium, however, has also condemned certain postconciliar trends to reinterpret the Church's doctrine on sin. For example, John Paul II's Reconciliatio et paenitentia rejected use of the term grave sin (no. 17) when used to identify a third kind of sin, thus reaffirming the traditional distinction between mortal and venial sin. Grave sin is a kind of sin more serious than a venial sin, but not as serious as a mortal sin, according to its proponents. John Paul II taught, however, that although the threefold distinction "might illustrate the fact that there is a scale of seriousness among grave sins ... it still remains true that the essential and decisive distinction is between sin which destroys charity and sin which does not kill the supernatural life: There is no middle way between life and death" (no. 17).

In connection with one particular theory of the fundamental option—that is, one's basic orientation either of openness toward the love of God or away from that love that would be understood apart from specific free choices (John Paul II, Veritatis splendor, no. 17)—John Paul II warns of reducing mortal sin to an exercise of fundamental option against God, intending thereby "an explicit and formal contempt for God and neighbor." For mortal sin, John Paul II continues, "exists also when a person knowingly and willingly, for whatever reason, chooses something gravely disordered.... Thus the fundamental orientation can be radically changed by individual acts" (nos. 69–70).

This is one reason why John Paul II saw it necessary to note in Reconciliatio et paenitentia that "some sins are intrinsically grave and mortal by reason of their matter. That is, there exist acts which per se and in themselves, independently of circumstances, are always seriously wrong by reason of their object. These acts, if carried out with sufficient awareness and freedom, are always gravely sinful" (no. 17). He reaffirmed this teaching in Veritatis splendor in the context of upholding the existence of intrinsically evil acts and their corresponding moral absolutes in the face of their denial (nos. 67, 80–81, 90, 95, and 115).

SEE ALSO DEADLY SINS; EMOTION (MORAL ASPECT); GLORY OF GOD (END OF CREATION); RECONCILIATIO ET PAENITENTIA; SCANDAL; SIN (IN THE BIBLE); SIN (PHENOMENOLOGY OF); SIN, COOPERATION IN; THOUGHTS, MORALITY OF; VATICAN COUNCIL II; VERITATIS SPLENDOR.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Joseph Boyle, "The Personal Responsibility Required for Mortal Sin," in Moral Truth and Moral Tradition: Essays in Honour of Peter Geach and Elizabeth Anscombe, edited by Luke Gormally (Dublin and Portland, Ore. 1994), 149–162.

Catechism of the Catholic Church, nos. 1846–1876, available from http://vatican.va/archive/.

H. Denzinger and A. Schönmetzer, Enchiridion symbolorum definitionum et declarationum de rebus fidei et morum, 33rd ed. (Freiburg, Germany 1965): nos. 1515, 1537, 1540, 1573, 1679–1681, 1707, 1920, 2291, 3891.

Germain Grisez, The Way of the Lord Jesus, vol. 1, Christian Moral Principles (Chicago 1983), 311–433.

Daniel J. Harrington and James F. Keenan, Jesus and Virtue Ethics: Building Bridges between New Testament Studies and Moral Theology (Lanham, Md. and Chicago 2002), 91–104.

Terence Kennedy, Doers of the Word: Moral Theology for the Third Millennium (Liguori, Mo. 1996), 233–260.

Ronald D. Lawler, "The Love of God and Mortal Sin," in Principles of Catholic Moral Life, edited by William E. May (Chicago 1981), 193–219.

Stanislas Lyonnet, "Sin," in Dictionary of Biblical Theology, rev. ed., edited by Xavier Léon-Dufour (New York 1973), 50–55.

William E. May, An Introduction to Moral Theology, 2nd ed. (Huntington, Ind. 2003), 185–210.

Judith A. Merkle, "Sin," in The New Dictionary of Catholic Social Thought, edited by Judith A. Dwyer (Collegeville, Minn. 1994), 883–888.

Mark O'Keefe, What Are They Saying about Social Sin? (New York 1990).

Paul VI, The Rite of Penance (1973).

Josef Pieper, The Concept of Sin, translated by Edward T. Oakes (South Bend, Ind. 2001).

Henri Rondet, The Theology of Sin, translated by Royce W. Hughes (Notre Dame, Ind. 1960).

Piet Schoonenberg, Man and Sin: A Theological View, translated by Joseph Donceel (Notre Dame, Ind. 1965).

Thomas Aquinas, De malo 2–5, 7–8, edited by Brian Davies and translated by Richard Regan (Oxford, U.K., and New York 2003).

Thomas Aquinas, De ver. 15, 25, 28, translated by R. W. Mulligan, J. V. McGlynn, and R. W. Schmidt (Chicago 1952–1954).

Thomas Aquinas, Summa contra gentiles 3, qq. 122, 139, translated by Anton Pegis et al. (New York 1955–1957).

Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae 1a–2ae, qq. 71–89; 2ae q. 24 (Editio Leonina 7, 153).

Vatican Council II, Gaudium et spes, On the Church in the Modern World (Pastoral Constitution, December 7, 1965) nos. 13, 27–32, in Vatican Council II: The Conciliar and Post Conciliar Documents, new rev. ed., edited by Austin Flannery, O.P. (Northport, N.Y. 1984); also available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_cons_19651207_gaudium-et-spes_en.html (accessed March 3, 2008).

For the text of Reconciliatio et paenitentia, On Reconciliation and Penance in the Mission of the Church Today (Post-Synodal Apostolic Exhortation, December 2, 1984) see: Acta Apostolicae Sedis 77 (1985): 185–275 (Latin); Origins 14, no. 27 (December 20, 1984): 432–493 (English); The Pope Speaks 30 (1985): 21–82 (English), also available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/apost_exhortations/documents/hf_jp-ii_exh_02121984_reconciliatio-et-paenitentia_en.html (accessed March 18, 2008).

For the text of Veritatis splendor, see: Acta Apostolicae Sedis 85 (1993): 1134–1228 (Latin); Origins 23, no. 18 (October 14, 1993): 298–336 (English); The Pope Speaks 39 (1994): 6–63 (English), also available from http://www.vatican.va/edocs/ENG0222/_INDEX.HTM (accessed March 18, 2008).

Rev. Joseph Ignatius McGuiness OP
Chairman, Department of Theology
Marymount Manhattan College, New York

Mark S. Latkovic
Professor, School of Theology
Sacred Heart Major Seminary, Detroit (2010)

SISTER CHURCHES

Sister churches is a term that has found favor in the ecumenical dialogue of recent decades, particularly in the context of Catholic-Orthodox relations. The debate surrounding its proper usage touches on historical and ecclesiological issues that are crucial for Catholic-Orthodox rapprochement.

In 2000, the Congregation for the DOCTRINE OF THE FAITH directed that local or "particular" churches (i.e., dioceses) of the Catholic and other (primarily Eastern) Churches can be called sister churches with regard to one another, and that groupings of such local churches in patriarchates or metropolitan provinces can likewise be called sister churches. Thus the (Catholic) local Church of ROME can be called the sister of the (Orthodox) local Church of Constantinople, for example, and the usage is correct wherever there is a valid episcopate and Eucharist. However, the Note on the Expression "Sister Churches" issued by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith specified that the Catholic Church as a whole should not be called the sister of any of the Orthodox Churches nor of the Orthodox Church as a whole, nor indeed of any other church, because that implies "a plurality . . . on the level of the one, holy, catholic and apostolic Church confessed in the Creed, whose real existence is thus obscured" (B, II, 11). In his introductory "Letter to the Presidents of the Conferences of Bishops," Prefect Joseph Cardinal RATZINGER wrote that such usage also suggests that "the one Church of Christ does not exist," but that it needs to be reestablished through the reconciliation of the sister churches. The Note clearly shows concern that the term sister churches, which has a perfectly legitimate and laudable usage at the local and regional levels of the life of the Church, might compromise belief in the oneness of the Church if used at the universal level.

Pope and Patriarch. Pope Paul VI, on right, and Patriarch Athenagoras, the supreme leader of Eastern Orthodoxy, embracing during a ceremony at the St Peter Basilica, October 26, 1967. KEYSTONE/HULTON ARCHIVE/GETTY IMAGES

The main biblical evidence for a sisterly relationship between Christian communities is provided by the concluding verse of one of the early letters between such communities: "The children of your elect sister greet you" (2 Jn 13). Although local churches were not subsequently called sisters in the early centuries, such an understanding may be inferred from the constant practice of calling the bishops of local churches brothers. During the fourth and fifth centuries, regional groupings of local churches began to take shape, and patriarchates formed around major cities. In the East these patriarchates were understood as equal sisters, with Rome in first place, and in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries two major Byzantine bishops, Metropolitan Nicetas of Nicodemia and Patriarch John X Camaterus, asserted this view against what they interpreted as attempts by Rome to be "mother" rather than "sister" (Congar 1985, pp. 86–87, 90–91).

For a long time after the excommunications of 1054, Catholics and Orthodox actually maintained varying degrees of communion. Not until the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries did the SCHISM really harden into two separate churches (Bouyer 1982), each of which tended to present itself as the only one in which SALVATION could be found (Uniatism, Method of Union of the Past, and the Present Search for Full Communion, 10).

In the early 1960s, ecumenical patriarch ATHENAGORAS of Constantinople spoke of the Catholic and Orthodox Churches themselves as sisters. VATICAN COUNCIL II referred simply to the strong Eastern appreciation of local churches as sisters, but the council also acknowledged that from the very beginning the Church developed in different ways in the East and the West (Unitatis redintegratio, 14). There is thus a primordial complementarity between East and West within the one Church, and some see this as the primary reason for calling the Catholic Church and the Orthodox Church sisters (Lanne 1975a). Proponents of this terminology, therefore, do not necessarily lose sight of the oneness of the Church. It may be said, however, that the terminology implies a full equivalence of the sisters, which is inappropriate because the Orthodox Church does not have the benefit of the universal primacy that Catholics believe pertains to the Bishop of Rome (cf. Unitatis redintegratio, 3, 16).

Both Pope PAUL VI (especially in the 1967 apostolic brief Anno ineunte) and Pope JOHN PAUL II (e.g., Ut unum sint 52, 55–61) spoke of sister churches seemingly with reference to the Catholic and Orthodox Churches themselves. The Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith later gave the terminological precision contained in the Note on the Expression "Sister Churches." This intervention in no way diminishes the value of another well-known image in which the Church in the East and the Church in the West are the one Church's "two lungs" (Ut unum sint 54).

SEE ALSO CONSTANTINOPLE, ECUMENICAL PATRIARCHATE OF; EASTERN SCHISM; ECUMENICAL DIALOGUES; GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH (EASTERN CATHOLIC); JOHN PAUL II AND INTERRELIGIOUS DIALOGUE; ORTHODOX AND ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCHES; PATRIARCHATE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Louis Bouyer, The Church of God, Body of Christ and Temple of the Spirit, translated by Charles Underhill Quinn (Chicago 1982).

Yves Congar, Diversity and Communion, translated by John Bowden (Mystic, Conn. 1985).

Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Note on the Expression "Sister Churches" (Rome 2000), available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_cfaith_doc_20000630_chiese-sorelle_en.html (accessed March 29, 2008).

John Paul II, Ut unum sint, On Commitment to Ecumenism (Encyclical, 1995), available from http://www.vatican.va/edocs/ENG0221/_INDEX.HTM (accessed March 29, 2008).

Joint International Commission for Theological Dialogue between the Roman Catholic Church and the Orthodox Church, Uniatism, Method of Union of the Past, and the Present Search for Full Communion, The Balamand Statement (Balamand, Lebanon 1993), available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/pontifical_councils/chrstuni/ch_orthodox_docs/rc_pc_chrstuni_doc_19930624_lebanon_en.html (accessed March 29, 2008).

Emmanuel Lanne, "Églises unies ou églises soeurs: Un choix inéluctable," Irénikon 48 (1975a): 322–342.

Emmanuel Lanne, "Églises-soeurs: Implications ecclésiologiques du Tomos Agapis," Istina 25 (1975b): 47–74.

Paul VI, Anno Ineunte (Apostolic Brief), Acta Apostolicae Sedis 59 (1967): 852–853.

E. J. Stormon, ed. and trans., Towards the Healing of Schism: The Sees of Rome and Constantinople (New York 1987).

Vatican Council II, Unitatis Redintegratio, Decree on Ecumenism (Rome 1964), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_decree_19641121_unitatis-redintegratio_en.html (accessed March 29, 2008).

Msgr. Paul McPartlan
Professor of Systematic Theology and Ecumenism
The Catholic University of America,
Washington, D.C. (2010)

SISTERS OF PROVIDENCE OF ST. MARY-OF-THE-WOODS

(SP; Official Catholic Directory #3360) The Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary-of-the-Woods came to the United States in 1840 from Ruillé-sur-Loir, France, at the request of Simon Bruté, the first bishop of the Diocese of Vincennes, Indiana. They were asked to establish a novitiate for the formation of new members and open an academy for young women.

The French community of the Sisters of Providence of Ruillé had been founded in 1806 by Jacques-François Dujarié, in response to the dire needs of the people of the countryside as a result of the French Revolution and its aftermath. By the 1830s the little community was flourishing and generously responded to the needs of the American frontier. After a long and arduous journey, St. Mother Theodore GUÉRIN and her five companions arrived in the midst of the Indiana forest on Oct. 22, 1840.

Four prospective candidates awaited them in the farmhouse, home to the Thralls' family. This frame building, which they would purchase from the Thralls family within the next month, was to serve for 13 years as the first Providence convent. In November 1840, Bishop Celestine de la Hailandière formally opened the novitiate with the reception of three of the original American postulants. In July 1841, St. Mary's Female Institute admitted its first students in the fine brick academy that Hailandière had built.

In the beginning, the community operated under the French Rule of 1835. Modifications to the original rule were made in 1843 and again in 1863. Finally in 1894 LEO XIII gave definitive approval to the Constitutions and established the American congregation as a papal institute.

After the death of Mother Theodore in May 1856, the Congregation continued to grow. Because education was the crying need of the frontier, the sisters were unable to pursue their traditional commitment to healthcare. At the time of the CIVIL WAR, however, some sisters were temporarily withdrawn from the schools to assist in the military hospitals in Indianapolis and Vincennes. For a brief time, they administered the St. John's Home for Invalids in Indianapolis, a facility founded to care for wonded veterans.

At the beginning of the 20th century, the increased influx of immigrants drawn to the large industrial cities of the Midwest reemphasized the need for parochial schools. The Congregation expanded to Michigan, Chicago, and beyond. In November 1920, six Sisters of Providence, under the leadership of Sr. Marie Gratia Luking, opened the first American missionary school for girls on mainland China. In 1929, Sr. Marie Gratia founded an auxiliary congregation of young Chinese women, the Providence Catechist Society. For the next 30 years, the Providence Catechist Sisters remained under the guidance of the Sisters of Providence, but in 1962 they achieved canonical status as an autonomous congregation.

In the United States the Sisters of Providence continued to grow, staffing elementary and secondary schools in New Hampshire, Maryland, Massachusetts, North Carolina, Indiana, Illinois, Oklahoma, Texas, California, and Washington, D.C. They also maintained St. Mary-of-the-Woods College and Immaculata Junior College in Washington, D.C., as well as Providence College of Liberal Arts and Sciences in Taiwan. Of these institutions of higher learning, only St. Mary-of-the-Woods continues in existence in the 21st century.

At the beginning of the third Christian millennium, the Sisters of Providence are engaged in various ministries throughout the U.S. and Taiwan, serving as educators, pastoral associates, healthcare givers, hospital chaplains, and home visitors to the aged and infirm. On Oct. 25, 1998, Pope John Paul II beatified Mother Theodore Guérin. She was later canonized on October 15, 2006 by Pope Benedict XVI.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Mary Borromeo Brown, The History of the Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary of the Woods, Vol. 1 1806–1856 (New York 1949).

Eugenia Logan, The History of the Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary of the Woods, Vol II 1856–1890 (Saint Mary-of-the-Woods, Indiana 1978).

Mary Roger Madden, The Path Marked Out: history of the Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary-of-the-Woods, Vol. III 1890–1926 (Saint Mary-of-the-Woods, Indiana 1991).

Sisters of Providence of St. Mary-of-the-Woods Official Web site, available from http://www.spsmw.org/ (accessed November 4, 2009).

Ann Colette Wolf, Against All Odds: Sisters of Providence Mission to the Chinese, 1920–1990 (Saint Mary-of-the-Woods, Indiana 1990).

Sister Mary Rodger Madden SP
Pilgrimage Coordinator
Sisters of Providence, Saint-Mary-of-the-Woods, Ind.

EDS (2010)

SLAVERY

This entry contains the following:

I. IN THE BIBLE
Rev. Hilary C. Franco/Joseph E. Capizzi
II. AND THE CHURCH
Rev. Cornelius W. Williams/Joseph E. Capizzi
III. HISTORY OF
Joseph E. Capizzi

I. IN THE BIBLE

Although slavery existed in ISRAEL on only a small scale, it was an integral part of the ancient Semitic culture; basically, it was an economic institution that remained unchanged in a stable economy.

Enslavement. In Israel the following were reduced to slavery: captives taken in raids (Am 1:6, 9), insolvent debtors (Am 2:6; 2 Kgs 4:1; Neh 5:5, 8), convicted thieves unable to make retribution (Ex 22:2), young girls sold by their fathers into conditional slavery (Ex 21:7–11), and non-Israelite prisoners taken in war (2 Chr 28:8–15). The captives taken in war might become Temple slaves, domestic slaves, or state slaves. It was customary to dedicate some of the captives to Temple service (Nm 31:25–47; Jos 9:21–27); some became slaves in private households; others were made to work as slaves on state projects. The insolvent debtors mentioned above were sold into slavery to satisfy their creditors. To avoid the danger of wholesale population drift of small-scale farmers into slavery as a result of insolvency, the law limited such slavery to a maximum of six years (Ex 21:2; Dt 15:12); at the end of this service, they were to be provided with the means necessary for returning to normal life (Dt 15:13–18). A Hebrew who had sold himself into slavery to escape poverty was to serve till the JUBILEE YEAR. If his master was a foreigner, he could either purchase his freedom or ask to be redeemed by one of his relatives any time before the Jubilee Year (Lv 25:47–55). Yet this humanitarian legislation of seventh-year release and jubilee-year liberty remained largely theoretical, as is seen in the unfulfilled pledge given the Hebrew slaves at the time of the Babylonian siege (Jer 34:8–22).

Legislation. Legally, the slave was property, without name or genealogy, a commodity to be sold, bought, or inherited. However, Old Testament legislation, especially the Deuteronomic code, mindful of Israel's slavery in Egypt (Dt 5:15; 15:15; 24:18) and increasingly considerate of the individual, aimed at keeping the number of Hebrew slaves to a minimum and mitigating the severities in their life. A man who was married when he became a slave could take his wife back with him at the end of his service, but if he was single at the beginning of his service and was given a wife by his master, the wife and any children born of the couple belonged to the master (Ex 21:3–4). A significant difference between Hebrew and foreign slaves was that the latter could be held in servitude permanently and handed on with other family property (Lv 25:44–46). Religious privileges were accorded also to slaves; Hebrew and non-Hebrew slaves were to be circumcised (Gn 17:12) and enjoy the SABBATH rest (Ex 20:11; 23:12; Dt 5:14). A woman captured in war and taken as a wife, if later divorced, could neither be sold nor again reduced to slavery; her husband had to allow her to go free (Dt 21:10–14). The death penalty was prescribed for a man who deceitfully sold a fellow Israelite into slavery (Dt 24:7). The Old Testament codes limit their legislation to domestic slaves; no prescriptions are given for the state or Temple slaves mentioned in nonlegal texts.

Role in Old Testament Economy. Slavery, as such, was not a prominent feature of the Israelite economy. The agricultural projects were too small to lend themselves to the exploitation of slave labor; the hired laborer did this work more economically. There were no private industrial projects of great scope in Israel, nor was there a continued international commerce. Yet the nation had its building programs and, for a time, a metal industry. Israel's most outstanding use of state slaves was in the copper smeltery and foundry built by King SOLOMON at Asiongaber. Some slaves were attached to the Temple throughout Israel's history (Jos 9:23, 27; Ezr 8:20). But the majority of Israel's slaves were found in private homes performing domestic chores.

Place in New Testament Ethics. The attitude of the New Testament toward the institution of slavery was primarily religious, not social. Christ and his apostles did not give new legislation to oppose the system of existing slavery, but preached principles that would logically lead to its abolition. If all are children of the same Father, no essential distinction can remain between slave and free man (1 Cor 12:13; Gal 3:28; Col 3:11).

The apostles did not intend an immediate change in social institutions; theirs was a religious message with the primary intention of making their converts obedient to God's revelation in Christ (Eph 6:5–9; Col 3:22–4.1; 1 Pt 2:18). Paul does not command PHILEMON to free his slave, although he implicitly recommends this in reminding him that Onesimus is his brother in Christ and is to be treated as such (Phlm 15–16). Moreover, he exhorts the slaves of the Corinth Church not to be impatient with their station, but to accept it, recognizing that they have a higher life in Christ (1 Cor 7:21–24). Nevertheless, in the New Testament the foundations were laid for a slow but effective social revolution that eventually caused the abolition of slavery in Christian countries.

SEE ALSO BIBLE (TEXTS); HEBREW SCRIPTURES; PAUL, APOSTLE, ST.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John M.G. Barclay, "Paul, Philemon, and the Dilemma of Christian Slave-Ownership," Journal of New Testament Studies 37 (1991): 161–186.

S. Scott Bartchy, "Slavery in the Greco-Roman World and the New Testament," in The Anchor Bible Dictionary (New York 1992), 6:65b–73b.

Keith R. Bradley, Slaves and Masters in the Roman Empire: A Study in Social Control (Brussels, Belgium 1984).

Peter Brown, The Body and Society (London 1988).

Roland de Vaux, Ancient Israel: Its Life and Institutions (London 1965).

Craig S. de Vos, "Once a Slave, Always a Slave? Slavery, Manumission and Relational Patterns in Paul's Letter to Philemon," Journal for the Study of the New Testament 82 (June 2001): 89–105.

Moses I. Finley, Ancient Slavery and Modern Ideology (New York 1980).

Joseph A. Fitzmyer, The Letter to Philemon: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary (New York 2000).

Paul V.M. Flesher, Oxen, Women, or Citizens? Slaves in the System of the Mishnah (Atlanta, Ga. 1988).

Peter Garnsey, Ideas of Slavery from Aristotle to Augustine (Cambridge, U.K. 1996).

Jennifer Glancy, Slavery in Early Christianity (New York 2002).

Nelson Glueck, "The Third Season of Excavation at Tell el-Kheleifeh," Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research 79 (1940): 2–18.

J. Albert Harrill, "Paul and Slavery: The Problem of 1 Cor. 7:21," Biblical Research 39 (1994).

J. Albert Harrill, The Manumission of Slaves in Early Christianity (Tübingen, Germany 1995).

P. Heinisch, "Das Sklavenrecht in Israel und im alten Orient," Studia catholica 11 (1934–1935): 201–218.

Wayne A. Meeks, The Moral World of the First Christians (Philadelphia 1986).

Isaac Mendelsohn, Slavery in the Ancient Near East (New York 1949).

Isaac Mendelsohn, The Interpreters Dictionary of the Bible, edited by G.A. Buttrick et al. (New York 1951–1957), 4:383–391.

Orlando Patterson, Slavery and Social Death (Cambridge, U.K. 1982).

William J. Richardson, "Principle and Context in the Ethics of the Epistle to Philemon," Interpretation: A Journal of Bible and Theology 22 (1968): 301–316.

Melchiorre Roberti, La lettera di S. Paolo a Filemone e la condizione giuridica dello schiavo fuggitivo (Milan, Italy 1933).

Robert Salomon, L'Esclavage en droit comparé juif et romain (Paris 1931).

Georg Strecker, "Die neutestamentlichen Haustafeln (Kol 3, 18–4 1 und Eph 5, 22–6, 9)," in Neues Testament und Ethik, edited by Helmut Merklein (Freiburg, Germany 1989), 349–375.

Matitiahu Tsevat, "The Hebrew Slave According to Deuteronomy 15:12–18," Journal of Biblical Literature 113, no. 4 (Winter 1994): 587–595.

Joseph Vogt, Ancient Slavery and the Ideal of Man (Oxford 1974).

William L. Westermann, The Slave Systems of Greek and Roman Antiquity (Philadelphia 1955).

Thomas Wiedemann, Greek and Roman Slavery (Baltimore, Md. 1981).

Rev. Hilary C. Franco
National Office of the Propagation of the Faith
New York, N.Y.

Joseph E. Capizzi
Associate Professor, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America,
Washington, D.C. (2010)

II. AND THE CHURCH

Slavery is here understood to signify a social and economic institution in which one human being is the legal property of another. It can also be defined as the condition of such a human being, who becomes a res non persona, a human chattel without rights or privileges.

To understand the Church's attitude to slavery, and for a balanced judgment on the morality of slavery, two things must be kept in mind. One is the Church's attitude toward social questions in general, and the other is the fact that slavery has existed under different forms.

The Church was born into a world in which slavery in various forms was universally accepted as a social and economic institution pertaining to the very structure of society, just as in the modern world, where the system of remunerated employment is taken for granted. As in modern society, few would be likely to contemplate seriously the abolition of the existing system, so neither did it occur to Christians of the early Church to advocate the abolition of slavery. The Church did, however, from the beginning, urgently insist on the mutual rights and duties existing between masters and slaves, just as in modern times it emphasizes the mutual rights and duties of employers and employees. God became man and founded His Church not in order to usher in a new social, economic, or political order, but rather to change the hearts of men according to the prophecy of Ezekiel: "I will give them a new heart and put a new spirit within them; I will remove the stony heart from their bodies, and replace it with a natural heart, so that they will live according to my statutes, and observe and carry out my ordinances" (Ez 11:19–20). The Church took men and society as it found them and did its utmost to transform them. Thus, St. Paul wrote to the Galatians: "For all you who have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek; there is neither slave nor free-man; there is neither male nor female. For you are all one in Christ Jesus" (Gal 3:2728; see also 1 Cor 12:13; Eph 5:9; Col 3:22–24; 1 Pt 2:28). An instructive, concrete case of Paul's conception of things, and of the Church's constant attitude ever since toward the master-slave relationship, and later to the employer-employee relationship, is afforded by Paul's one-page letter to Philemon.

Different Forms. The term "slavery" did not always have quite the odious connotation that it has had in the twentieth and twenty-first centuries, no doubt in part because of the seeming intractability of the institution. Historians used to write of a distinction between "slavery in the abstract," or ideal slavery, and chattel slavery. In the ideal conception of slavery, seen for instance in Aristotle's famous discussion of "natural" slavery, master and slave worked together for their mutual good as human beings. In this form there was, on the part of the slave, fidelity, devotedness, and willing service, all in keeping with the slave's dignity and in accordance with his nature as rationally deficient compared to his master; and, on the part of the master, kindness, respect, and even true charity. The slave was part of the household and was treated as such from the moment he came into the service of his master until he died. Much more common in actual practice, however, was parasitic slavery, or "chattel slavery." In this form the master or owner exploited the labor of the slave for his own private advantage and pleasure. In chattel slavery, the slave was the full property of the master, often without any rights or acknowledged standing before the law, and was maintained in his position by coercion. The distinction between ideal and practiced slavery is no longer tenable, however, as the ideal conception of slavery ignores the fundamentally ironic and ambiguous relationship of slave to master. As Eugene Genovese writes in Roll, Jordan, Roll (1974), the notion of benevolent paternalism associated with ideal slavery "had little to do with Ole Massa's ostensible benevolence, kindness, and good cheer. It grew out of the necessity to discipline and morally justify a system of exploitation. It did encourage kindness and affection, but it simultaneously encouraged cruelty and hatred" (Genovese 1974, p. 4).

The idea of one human being belonging to another as a piece of property is repugnant to the Christian concept of human dignity. By changing the minds of men, masters and slaves, and legislators, the Church contributed indirectly to the decline of slavery in the strict sense in all Christian lands before the thirteenth century.

In the Christian view of things, work, obedience, and service are noble activities fully in keeping with true human and Christian dignity. Christ Himself came on earth to do the will of His Father (Jn 4:34; 6.8; Heb 10:7,9) and to be obedient unto the death of the Cross (Phil 2:8) out of love for His Eternal Father and out of love for mankind (see Thomas Aquinas, Summa theologiae 3a, q. 46, a. 2). St. Thomas maintained that a life of free service in this sense would have been part of human life in the state of original justice before the fall, (1a, q. 96, a. 3); but in no wise would a life of penal servitude, (ad 1 and art. 4), which was regarded by him and by many of the Fathers of the Church as a consequence of sin (see St. Augustine, Civ. 19.15). St. Augustine makes the same point with regard to work: from being a glad and even effortless sharing in God's creative activity, it becomes as a result of sin a painful toil and labor. (Gen. ad litt. 8.8).

St. Thomas's teaching that between master and slave, strict justice could not exist (see 2a-2ae, q.57, a. 4, and passim) has frequently been grossly misinterpreted by being perceived outside of its true historical and doctrinal context. Historically, slavery in the strict sense no longer existed in Christian lands in the time of St. Thomas. Doctrinally, St. Thomas was trying to explain that the virtue governing the master-servant relationship is not mere justice but something greater, for the simple reason that between master and servant there are mutual rights and duties that last as long as the relationship remains. By insisting precisely on these mutual rights and obligations, the Church was instrumental in bringing about the abolition of slavery in the strict sense, transforming it gradually into a state of noble service on the part of the inferior and of conscientious care on the part of the superior or master. The Church insisted over and over again on the inalienable right of man to freedom, to guide his own life, to marry, to enter religion, and to take Orders. It insisted that servants should be given free time to attend to their own lives and families and forbade, for instance, at the Council of AUXERRE in 578 all unnecessary work on Sundays. (c. 16, J. D. Mansi, Sacrorum Conciliorum nova et amplissima collection 9.913). On the other hand, the Church condemned most severely those who, under one pretext or another, incited the servants to revolt against their masters (see c.3 of the Council of Gangres in the middle of the fourth century, Mansi 2.1102). Instances of such legislation could be given without number.

The Slave Trade. The great geographical discoveries by Spain and Portugal in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries brought in their train the recrudescence of slavery, so that the problem of the morality of slavery and enslavement again became acute. After a brief period of hesitation and uncertainty, caused by inaccurate information on conditions in Africa and the two Americas and by a desire to avoid greater evils, the Church unreservedly condemned colonial slavery and every type of slave trade as inhuman and immoral. The slave trade as such was not something new. It had been practiced long before Christian times and the Church, from the beginning, regarded it as immoral. Numerous documents attest to the fact. In 873 Pope JOHN VIII wrote to the rulers of Sardinia, exhorting them and ordering them to restore freedom to slaves bought from the Greeks. In 1537 PAUL III excommunicated those who enslaved Native Americans and confiscated their property. In 1838 GREGORY XVI condemned all forms of colonial slavery and the slave trade, calling it inhumanum illud commercium (Denzinger-Hünermann 2005, 2745–2746). In a letter to the bishops of Brazil on May 5, 1888, LEO XIII recalled the Church's unceasing efforts in the course of centuries to get rid of colonial slavery and the slave trade and expressed his satisfaction that Brazil had at last abolished it. From the fifteenth century, Catholic missionaries, theologians, and statesmen never ceased to strive for the abolition of the ignominious traffic in human beings. During the FRENCH REVOLUTION the National Assembly—at the instigation of a Catholic priest, the Abbé Henri Baptiste Grégoire decreed in 1794 the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in all French colonies. In 1890 Charles Martial Allemand Cardinal LAVIGERIE founded a French antislavery league for combatting slavery and the slave trade on an international basis. In a radio message to the workers of Spain on March 11, 1951, PIUS XII stated succinctly the Church's consistent attitude to slavery in all its forms. "The Church," he said, > never preached social revolution, but everywhere and at all times, from the letter of Paul to Philemon up to the great social teachings of the popes in the 19th and 20th centuries, she did her utmost to see that consideration was taken more of man himself than of economic and technical advantages so that all men might have the possibility of living a life worthy of a Christian and of a human being. (Acta Apostolicae Sedis 1951, 214)

In the twenty-first century the Church spares no effort to save men from the many forms of slavery of the modern industrial world. This includes increasingly the trafficking in human beings characteristic of the global sex trade.

The ambiguities noted in the practice of slavery influenced the Church's relationship with that institution. So, for instance, the Church's long-standing condemnation of the slave trade coexisted with teachings recommending against abolition of slavery itself (what some in the United States called "domestic slavery"). Since at least the middle of the twentieth century, Church teaching has followed contemporary scholarship on slavery closely, refusing to countenance any view that sees in slavery the possibility of a benevolent and morally unambiguous relationship between master and slave. The extremely clear condemnation of the slave trade remains prominent, as in the Catechism of the Catholic Church's (1997) comment that:

> the seventh-commandment forbids acts or enterprises that for any reason—selfish or ideological, commercial, or totalitarian—lead to the enslavement of human beings, to their being bought, sold, and exchanged like merchandise, in disregard for their personal dignity. It is a sin against the dignity of persons and their fundamental rights to reduce them by violence to their productive value or to a source of profit. (no. 2414)

But to this may be added remarks made at VATICAN COUNCIL II, in Gaudium et spes (no. 27), and repeated by Pope JOHN PAUL II in Veritatis splendor (no.

80), which state that slavery is among those acts contrary to human dignity. Church teaching thus sees no moral justification for not only the treatment and conditions associated with slavery, but also for slavery itself. It is always and everywhere contrary to human dignity to own another human being or to be owned by another human being.

SEE ALSO CATECHISM OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH; LAS CASAS, BARTOLOMÉ DE; MAN, ARTICLES ON; SLAVERY, I (IN THE BIBLE); SLAVERY, III (HISTORY OF); SOCIAL JUSTICE; VERITATIS SPLENDOR.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

David Brion Davis, The Problem of Slavery in Western Culture (Ithaca, N.Y. 1966).

H. Denzinger and P. Hünermann, Enchiridion symbolorum definitionum et declarationum de rebus fidei et morum, 40th ed. (Freiburg, Germany 2005).

Eugene D. Genovese, Roll, Jordan, Roll: The World the Slaves Made (New York 1974).

Lewis Hanke, The Spanish Struggle for Justice in the Conquest of America (Philadelphia 1949).

Lewis Hanke, Aristotle and the American Indians: A Study in Race Prejudice in the Modern World (London 1959).

Joseph Höffner, Christentum und Menschenwürde, das Anliegen der spanischen Kolonialethik im Goldenen Zeitalter (Trier, Germany 1947).

John Paul II, Veritatis splendor (The Splendor of Truth) (Encyclical, August 6, 1993), available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/encyclicals/documents/hf_jp-ii_enc_06081993_veritatis-splendor_en.html (accessed March 13, 2008).

Maurice Lengellé, L'Esclavage (Paris 1955).

Joel S. Panzer, The Popes and Slavery (New York 1996).

Orlando Patterson, Slavery and Social Death (Cambridge, Mass. 1982).

Pius XII, Acta Apostolicae Sedis (1951).

Vatican Council II, Gaudium et spes, On the Church in the Modern World (Pastoral Constitution, December 7, 1965), available from http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/documents/vat-ii_cons_19651207_gaudium-et-spes_en.html (accessed March 13, 2008).

H. Wallon, Histoire de l'esclavage dans l'antiquité, 2nd ed., 3 vols. (Paris 1879).

Thomas Wiedemann, Greek and Roman Slavery (London 1981).

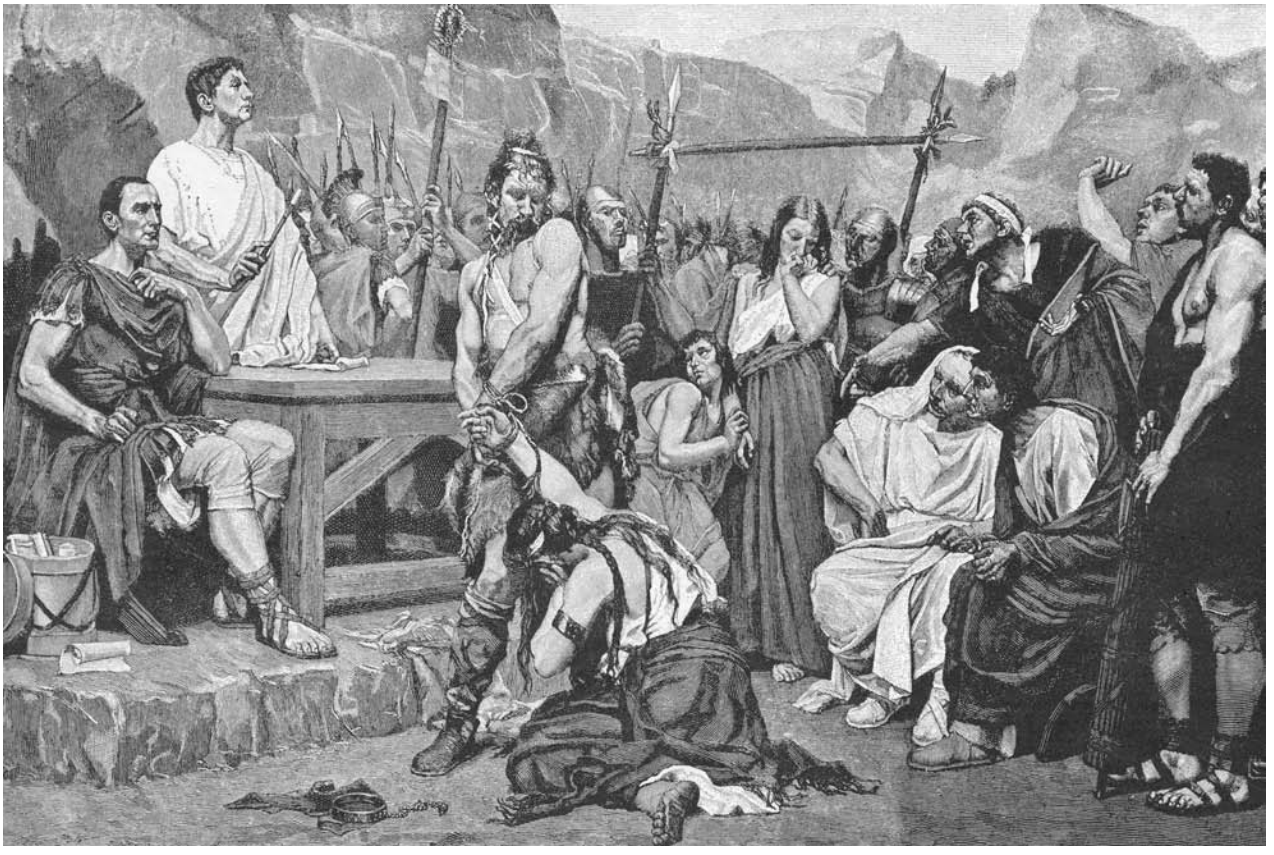
Rev. Cornelius William Williams OP
Professor of Moral Theology
University of Fribourg



Joseph E. Capizzi
Associate Professor,
School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

III. HISTORY OF

Defining slavery is notoriously complex and even controversial because the definition of slavery entails complex and controversial beliefs about the human being and its distinction from the rest of creation and because, as William Westermann wrote, "There has seldom been in history ... any slave-holding community in which the theoretical slave—that is, a thing totally devoid of legal personality and without possessions of his own—has really existed in the actual practice of that community" (Westermann in Finley 1960, p. 18). Slavery is based on the principle of property in man. Slaves were property; the owner owned the labor and the person of the slave. Both Eugene D. Genovese and Keith Bradley point out that because slaves were legal property, slaveowners had complete rights over all aspects of their slaves (Genovese 1974; Bradley 1994). The basis for this complete subordination of one man (slave) to another (slaveowner; master) required the idea of the slave as the instrumentum vocale, in ARISTOTLE's term. The slave was a mere "speaking tool," a possession of his or her owner and the means by which the owner could carry out his will. Slaves, then, were characterized as inhuman, or dehumanized humans (Davis 2006), natally alienated (i.e., stripped of all kinship relations) and socially excommunicated (Patterson 1982). Natal alienation and social EXCOMMUNICATION emphasize the utter vulnerability of slaves: They have no independent social standing except as instruments of their masters. They can make no rights claims; no familial claims or ties are binding on society; and like animals they have virtually no standing before the law. But, again, Westermann points out the tension and even contradiction contained in slavery. Though by law, slaves' lives were utterly circumscribed, no society could create and sustain a situation of total subjection; there is a natural and inextinguishable freedom of man that no slave system can ever overcome.

Different kinds of slavery exist; for example, debt slavery, wage slavery, penal and "voluntary" slavery; but the main focus is chattel (from the Latin, capitalis, from which cattle and capital are also derived) slavery. This timeline concentrates on chattel slavery from the ROMAN EMPIRE to the start of the twenty-first century, though chattel slavery was wide-spread centuries before the Roman Empire.

Slavery in Imperial Rome. Generalizing about the treatment of slaves is notoriously difficult and often counter-productive. There was no uniform treatment, even though the juridical status of the slave was nearly universal. Masters were free to treat slaves as well or as brutally as they wished, and they often took the full extent of the liberties afforded by the law. Masters rarely suffered legal consequences for even the most brutal treatment of their human property. Certainly many masters were benevolent and treated slaves well, but nothing essential to the institution of slavery required this; indeed, good treatment of slaves as property was as likely to be self-interested behavior as it was altruistic. Slaves in ROME and elsewhere were valuable items. Rates of manumission, or emancipation, as well are not particularly helpful as indicators of slaves' well-being. David Brion Davis (1966) is among those authors noting high rates of manumission were often associated with cultures of harsh treatment; and the reverse (low manumission rates and relatively mild treatment) was also true. Thus, this history traces primarily the legal status of the slave and not his treatment.

Under the Roman Yoke. The Romans selling Iberians as prisoners. © BETTMANN/CORBIS

From the third century BC until the beginning of the imperial era (c. 33 BC), Rome was a slave society. Slave societies are characterized primarily by the function of slaves in the labor force and not merely their sheer proportion in relation to other laborers, though some argue the Roman republic had the greatest proportion of slaves in the antique world. Slaves in Rome performed numerous functions. They served as agricultural workers, miners, and domestic servants; they worked in public construction projects, managed small businesses like brothels, organized and oversaw other slaves, were doctors and lawyers, or were secretaries and assistants to important men. In sum, then, slaves were entrusted with different degrees of responsibility. Their treatment thus varied greatly.

The Republican wars of expansion introduced a massive influx of slaves into Roman society, primarily as agricultural workers, but also as domestic slaves. Roman expansion and consolidation throughout the Mediterranean and Western Europe required many millions of slaves. Enormous agricultural plantations worked by slaves provided Rome with the basis to grow the empire, yet also contributed to its collapse by unsettling an already fragile class system. Not only did the presence of millions of slaves pose a threat to political stability, it also exacerbated tensions between the aristocratic, slaveholding class and the common Roman citizenry. The two-year-long revolt led by Spartacus (c. 120–70 BC) in 73 BC is the most famous of several instances of organized and violent resistance to slavery. Much more common kinds of slave resistance included suicide, escape, sabotage, truancy, deception, and other less risky acts (Bradley 1994).

The legal status of the slave improved toward the end of the Roman Republic and during the Empire; however, there was more institutional continuity than previously thought. Marc Bloch indicates that a pattern of continuity between slavery and other forms of coerced labor accurately describes slavery's development in the West (Bloch in Finley 1960). Even while legislation was changing—at least theoretically—to restrict the cruelty to which slaves were subject, nonetheless, slaves remained categorized like livestock through the imperial period and into at least the early middle ages. For instance, by law, theft of slaves was the equivalent of stealing other domesticated animals like pigs, horses, and cows, the only difference being the price of compensation for loss. Additionally, though there are accounts of rich and varied slave family life, generalizations about slave families remain difficult. Bradley (1994) notes stable family lives contributed to slave contentment and acquiescence; yet, the laws were not progressive enough to prevent severe disruption of slave marriages and families. Of much greater analytic value than the laws were the different servile states. Slaves in domestic settings generally had more stable families and received better treatment than did their agricultural and mining counterparts.

Early Christianity. St. Paul's proclamation that "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus" (Galatians 3:28) would not have struck the Galatian community as a call to abolition of slavery any more than as a denial of the natural division of humanity into two sexes. Instead, slavery seemed as fixed a feature of ancient society as male and female sexuality was fixed in human nature. For most of human history, liberty and prosperity were offered only to social elites; the masses were provided no such hopes. Indeed, ancient society often associated elite liberty with mass slavery and servitude: The leisure of the elites required the forced labor of the many. Thus the egalitarianism proclaimed in Christian scripture was understood first and primarily as referring to a spiritual rather than material reality. Virtually no one thought that the egalitarianism in the body of Christ meant the imminent demise of an apparently permanent human institution; and yet the proclamation of the spiritual equality of all would serve as another reminder of the inherent contradiction built into slavery.

Slavery was an entrenched social institution of the APOSTOLIC age; it was part of the natural scheme of things. Many historians agree that slavery was not a "problem" for this and other ancient societies; they regard "as sentimental" the view that slavery was only grudgingly accepted as a necessary evil (Davis 1966, pp. 62–63). Slavery required neither apology nor excuse, neither defense nor critique. The regions where Paul preached were filled with slaves performing a dazzling array of tasks; Corinth in particular had an enormous slave population. There is every reason to believe Paul was familiar with the conditions of slaves and the Hebrew, Greek, and Roman slave laws that governed their lives. Paul may have been served by domestic slaves in some of the communities he visited. Thus, predictably, Paul was not concerned about bringing or promising material freedom to the slave. "Every one should remain in the state in which he was called," he tells Corinth. "Were you a slave when called? Never mind" (1 Cor 7:21, [ARV]).

Paul's views thus echo the Stoic stress on the internal equality of all human beings. Stoics viewed internal slavery, or slavery of the SOUL or mind, as true slavery to be avoided. Stoic thought thus diminished external or physical enslavement and argued that all men are equal regardless of social status and, as such, are equally capable of attaining internal freedom. The result of such thinking was a critical distinction between legal or conventional slavery and moral slavery. There is great overlap between the ancient and early Christian views on slavery, and one could conclude that the Cynic, and especially Stoic, views together with Christian THEOLOGY loosened slavery's grasp on society.

Hebrew views of slavery located in the Old Testament also influenced early Christian thinking on slavery. Whereas the Stoics clearly had a negative view of slavery, Christians incorporated the apparently positive conceptions of slavery found in the Old Testament. Paul, following a tradition drawing upon MOSES and other Hebrew patriarchs, considered being a "slave of God" a mark of esteem. Moses used the same term (ebed) to mark ISRAEL's enslavement to EGYPT and their relationship of bondage to YAHWEH, thereby imbuing slavery with a religious significance (Davis 1966). The combination of Stoic internalization and Hebrew JUSTIFICATION produced a striking ambivalence toward slavery in early and later Christian thought, but again an ambivalence explained in part by the paradox of slavery itself. Very few Christians regarded slavery as fundamentally contrary to God's plan for humanity and, for much of Christian history, many statements on slavery were restricted to behavioral admonitions on the mutual duties of slaves and masters as in AUGUSTINE's Enarrationes in Psalmos 124.7, "And what does the apostle [Paul] say when he teaches that slaves are set under their masters? 'Slaves be obedient to those who are your earthly masters.' For the Master is according to the Spirit. He is the true and eternal master; they are temporary and of finite time."

Peter Garnsey (1996) makes a compelling case for ideological continuity from the ancient to the Christian period. Christian theologians inherited Greek and Hebrew views on slavery and continued to work within philosophical positions tracing back to PLATO and Aristotle. In particular, they struggled with the theory of natural slavery found in Aristotle. So, for instance, Basil writes in On the Holy Spirit, "Did they not realize that even among men, no one is a slave by nature?" (Garnsey 1996, p. 45). Augustine echoes this in The City of God 19.15, "But by nature, as God first created us, no one is the slave either of man or of sin." Yet, while they struggled against the notion of man as naturally a slave, Hebrew and Pauline theology combined with Stoic moralizing suggested instead the aptness of slavery as a punishment for human sinfulness. The sole social institution permitted by law (as in Justinian's Institutes) and recognized as contrary to human nature Augustine accounted for by ORIGINAL SIN. Enslavement to God and enslavement to SIN became powerful metaphors that resonated throughout the West's entanglement with slavery.

Slavery in the Middle Ages. From the end of the Patristic Era until the beginning of the Early Modern period, slavery in Europe waned. The decline of the Roman Empire resulted in a mutation and eventual decline of imperial slavery. The legions of slaves toiling on Sicilian plantations and employed or required by the empire were replaced by a fragmented system featuring the emergence of the colonus, or "freed man," attached to an estate. As Marc Bloch writes, coloni were by law attached (or enslaved) to the land and not a person, a distinction that "became meaningless in an age too realistic not to reduce all social relationships to an exchange of obedience and protection between beings of flesh and blood" (Bloch 1964, vol. 1, p. 257). Between the ninth and twelfth centuries, however, slaves did remain and continue to perform vital functions. As FEUDALISM grew, the number of slaves declined, and the laws regulating slavery were adjusted accordingly. Though their freedom was restricted in important ways, in particular by being attached to the land, serfs enjoyed more freedoms than did slaves and certainly had more recognition before the law as, throughout the Middle Ages, the gulf between the free man and slave lessened (Bloch 1964, vol. 2).

By the eleventh century, whole parts of Europe, particularly in the north, were completely or nearly completely free of slaves. Slaves were baptized, there was some intermarriage (between free men and slave women or girls), and slaves were allowed even to enter churches. In Spain, in France, in central and north Italy, and in England, slavery was in significant retreat. Such was not the case in Southern Europe surrounding the Mediterranean, however. There slavery remained, in no small part due to the convergence of a vast international trading network and constant contact with ISLAM, where slavery remained vital. War with Islam and the enslavement of prisoners of war was the rule of the day. For instance, the Moors enslaved many Christians in Spain after their conquest.

At some point in the early Middle Ages, slavery shifted from a non-ethnic and non-racial institution to one bearing ethnic or racial connotations. The English word slave derives not from the Roman term servus, which gives to English the words servant and serf, but instead from the Latin sclavus, a term connoting a person of Slavic descent. The terminological shift from a word indicating a relationship to one indicating ethnicity coincides roughly with the emergence of a thriving Mediterranean slave trade beginning in the early thirteenth century. The trade of thousands of "Slavs" imported from the East and brought to Mediterranean markets bore all the characteristics of chattel slavery in Rome and foreshadowed the later transportation and sale of African slaves in the Americas. This trade overlapped with the semi-freedom of the landed European serf, who unlike his Slavic counterpart, enjoyed real recognition before the law.

The Rise of the Slave Trade in the Americas. As slavery declined on the European continent, during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, a Mediterranean-based slave trade blossomed, which eventually expanded into Africa and the newly discovered Americas. In Spain and Portugal, the continued engagement with Islam influenced developments in slavery; in particular, with the Reconquest (Reconquista) important questions surfaced about the permissibility of enslaving fellow believers and nonbelievers. By the celebrated Siete Partidas ("Seven Part" laws compiled during the reign of the Castilian king, Alphonso X) of the thirteenth century, slavery was called the "most vile and most wretched thing," ("la es la más vil y la más despreciada cosa," Las Siete Partidas, part IV, title V; Burns 2001, vol. 4, p. 901) and yet still was permitted as a consequence of human sin and the need for social order. The Partidas thus lamented slavery and yet allowed even Christians to be slaves. They permitted slavery under conditions specified by just titles, including enslavement of INFIDEL prisoners of war, children of slaves, and those who voluntarily sold themselves into slavery.

The slave trade found a source of renewed vigor in increased trade along the north and west African coasts, beginning at the Canaries and Madeiras in the early fifteenth century and moving farther into Africa proper. According to Hugh Thomas and Robin Blackburn in 1997, this trade increased the flow of slaves throughout the Mediterranean as Christian traders exploited trade routes established by their Muslim predecessors (Thomas 1997; Blackburn 1997). Muslim and Portuguese and Spanish Christian traders had been moving slaves back and forth for years, but as Portuguese and Spanish explorers moved farther and farther into the African continent, the numbers of enslaved Africans grew and became financially beneficial to the growth of exploration. African slaves worked burgeoning sugar plantations on the Madeiras, setting a model for future slave use in the Americas. The slave trade continued and expanded in spite of early papal condemnations, including Sicut didum issued by Pope Eugenius IV in 1435. By the end of the fifteenth century, the slave markets in Portugal and Spain were among the largest in Europe, although both David Davis and Anthony Pagden indicate that most slaves were not shipped to the Americas until the middle of the sixteenth century (Davis 2006, p. 96; Pagden 1982).

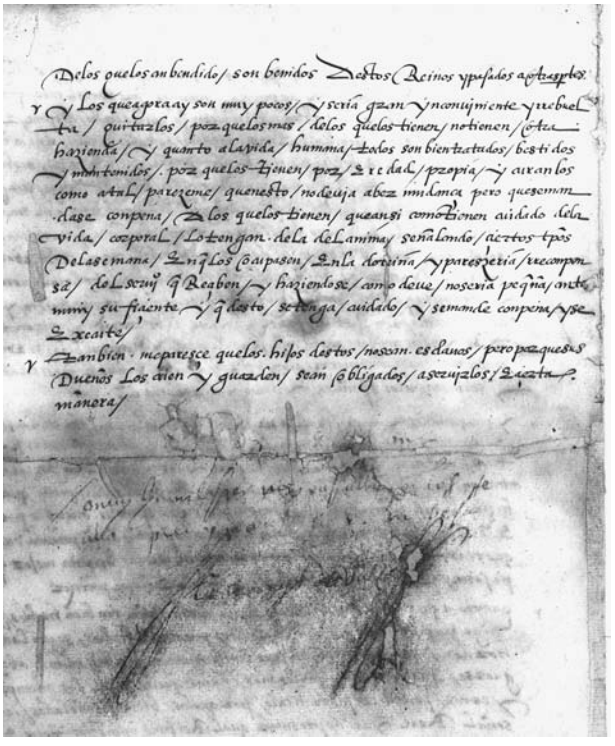
In 1493 a bull promulgated by Pope Alexander VI granted to Spain the bulk of the New World for the expressed purpose of spreading the Christian faith. The trade of African slaves spread along with Christian expansion throughout the newly discovered Americas. First the Spanish enslaved the indigenous population, but later imported African slaves to help colonize and settle the New World. Shortly after the arrival and settling in the Americas of Spanish and Portuguese explorers, the number of natives declined to the point where enslaved African labor was required. African slaves were more desirable workers, as the native populations proved unreliable, prone to flight, and vulnerable to disease. In addition, the connection of the expansion into the Americas to a specific missionary goal raised the question of enslaving the indigenous population: Could natives be enslaved and saved, or would their possible entry into the Church undermine their possible enslavement?



Great Spanish theologians took up these important questions in a way that did not apply to Africans. Francisco de VITORIA and Bartolomé de LAS CASAS were among the theologians who addressed questions concerning the right of the Spanish to despoil and enslave the local population, though Vitoria engaged the question in the context of university lectures and Las Casas engaged it in argument with the Aristotelian humanist Juan Ginés de Sepúlveda. In his most extended commentary on the "problem" of the Indians, De indis (published in 1557, eleven years after his death), Vitoria argued that the question of the Indians' claims to their land and property turned on a more fundamental and theological question about their status as men (Pagden 1982). Despite reports to the contrary, Vitoria, utilizing a subtle Aristotelian analysis, concluded the existence of cities, of social institutions, of arts, of tools, and so on established beyond doubt that the Indians are men (sunt illi homines) and as such had legitimate dominium, the right to use and dispose of property at will (Pagden 1982, p. 68).

The debate about the Indians' claims to dominium reached its height in 1550, when King Charles V of Spain called a junta at Valladolid to discuss the justice of Spanish force against the Indians. The humanist Sepúlveda drew on Aristotle's theory of natural slavery to buttress Spain's claims. He argued the Indians were barbarians and used examples of Indian atrocities as evidence. As barbarians, he claimed, they were not ruled by reason, but nature, and as such were "natural slaves." As he had earlier, the Dominican Bartolome Las Casas vigorously rejected this argument. He drew on his earlier work, The Devastation of the Indies (1539) to show the brutality and cruelty of Spanish colonizing behavior. He developed his argument that the Indians, though culturally behind the Spanish in certain respects, were nonetheless fully rational beings and not natural slaves. Further, he boldly rejected the jurisdictional claims of the Pope and the Crown: Neither, Las Casas argued, could claim jurisdiction over the Indians. The Indians were pagans, not heretics. The Spanish Crown and the PAPACY eventually condemned the Indians' enslavement, providing a critical justification for advancing and expanding the African slave trade (Pagden 1982, pp. 119–145).

By 1820 nearly 8.7 million African slaves had been brought to the New World, comprising close to 80 percent of the people who sailed to the Americas (Davis 2006, p. 80). Another 2 million African slaves were imported between 1820 and 1880, despite the nearly universal condemnation of the slave trade.

Slavery thus sank deep roots into the economy and culture of the Americas at the same time as moral outrage at the slave trade rose. Sugar production was one of the initial incentives drawing great numbers of African slaves west. The Portuguese set up sugar plantations in the Caribbean and Brazil similar to those in the Madeiras and elsewhere off the African coast. Eventually, tobacco, coffee, and chocolate production blossomed as Europe consumed these luxuries as quickly as they could be produced and sold.

Though the introduction of African slaves into North America occurred later than in the Caribbean and South America, African slaves could be found from New England all the way south through the U.S. colonies. The New England colonies never required slaves in the same numbers as the Southern colonies, and they got a late start compared to their Portuguese and Spanish counterparts. Small numbers of slaves were reported throughout New England in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries. As late as 1649, Virginia reported only 300 slaves with an annual import of about twenty slaves (Thomas 1997, p. 207). Indentured white laborers did most of the work on tobacco plantations in Virginia and elsewhere in the United States. Despite reservations against slavery similar to those expressed by the Spanish Crown and the papacy, slavery blossomed in the South, and by 1775 "two out of every five Virginians was a black slave" (Davis 2006, p. 125). In 1688 Dutch Quakers issued a statement condemning Quaker participation in slavery, and Davis observes that "no British founders of North American colonies, except for South Carolina, intended to create slave societies" (Davis 2006, p. 126).

Decline of Slavery in Europe. This letter to King Charles V of Spain, 1542, from Hernando Cortez, advises putting natives of the colonies under the protection of the Crown to prevent their enslavement. THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

The initial ambivalence toward slavery in North America that was rooted in the contradiction built into the heart of slavery and stretched through the reluctant, if tight, embrace of slavery throughout Western history eventually succumbed to the unique Southern justification of slavery as a "positive good." The growth of "pro-slavery" arguments in the nineteenth century signaled an enormous change in the understanding of slavery occurring at the time. Previously, seemingly written into the social order and explicitly permitted by traditional readings of Christian Scripture, slavery required little justification. By the mid-nineteenth century, however, economic, political, and religious forces were converging to raise deep questions about slavery. Southern thinkers such as James Henry Hammond (1807–1864) and John C. Calhoun (1782–1850) argued that slavery was good for the slave and for society. Liberty required the stabilization provided by slavery; in addition, many compared the benevolent treatment of slaves favorably with the mistreatment of the free poor laborers in the North. To these rationales were added the evangelical mission of Southern masters and mistresses: God instructed them through Scripture to bear the burdens and obligations of caring for and saving the inferior Negro race.

Slavery and Abolition. Despite apparent economic disadvantages, in the early nineteenth century, Britain began emancipating its slaves and—with its naval power—pressuring France, Spain, and Portugal to cease their profitable slave trade (Davis 2006). Abolitionists including Granville Sharp (1735–1813), Thomas Clarkson (1760–1846), William WILBERFORCE, and James Ramsay (1733–1789) brought the question of British involvement in slavery before Parliament. In 1833 Parliament approved a bill emancipating some 800,000 British colonial slaves and compensating their former owners with twenty million pounds sterling. The enormity of the slave trade provoked papal condemnation. In 1839 Pope GREGORY XVI issued the apostolic letter, In supremo apostolatus fastiggio, in which he condemned the "inhuman" slave trade. In 1888 Pope LEO XIII issued the ENCYCLICAL In plurimis, in which he drew upon earlier papal condemnations of slavery and extended the argument to condemn explicitly as counter to God's original intention the dominium of some men over fellow men.

The abolitionist movement in the United States struggled in ways its British counterpart did not, and for obvious reasons. The deep cultural presence of slavery ripped apart families, Protestant churches, and eventually the nation. Politics, economics, and religion entangled themselves over slavery. Northerners and Southerners alike had difficulty divorcing the three as they sought clarity on the question of human bondage as Eliazbeth Fox-Genovese and Eugene Genovese explained (2005, pp. 69–87). The American abolition movement was characterized by a volatility personified by abolitionist William Lloyd Garrison (1838–1909) and not seen in its British analogue. The radicalism and divisiveness of Northern abolition provoked Southern entrenchment and hostility. Southern defenders of slavery and Northern abolitionists careened toward a fateful collision as each found in their position increasing evidence of national and even universal human SALVATION. In the United States, war became necessary to end slavery, and some 600,000 lives were sacrificed to the emancipation of slaves.

The rapid collapse of slavery in the nineteenth century astounds. All of recorded history attests to the existence of slavery and the slave trade. Not until the late eighteenth century did significant opposition to slavery appear. By 1888 a deeply entrenched and economically profitable social institution from which history seemed to know no respite collapsed beneath the weight of moral outrage and war. Slavery, that awful social contradiction, became the occasion for one of the genuine instances of an awe-inspiring social transformation. While the disappearance of slavery is a real triumph of moral progress, vestiges of the long human relationship with bondage remain, particularly in the United States were slavery aligned with racial theories about black inferiority. In addition, the disappearance of slavery did not take with it the human tendency to seek to dominate those deemed inferior. That tendency channels itself into new forms of social domination including the emergent phenomenon of sexual enslavement of young men and women.

The Emancipation Proclamation. Abraham Lincoln (left, center) at the first reading of the Emancipation Proclamation. MPI/HULTON ARCHIVE/GETTY IMAGES

SEE ALSO Charles V, Holy Roman Emperor; Cynics; Dominicans; Hebrews; Humanism; Middle Ages, The; Mission and Missions; Pagan; Patriarchs, Biblical; Paul, Apostle, St.; Reason, Use of; Stoicism; Tradition (in the Bible).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Saint Augustine, The City of God translated by Marcus Dodds (New York 1994).

Saint Augustine, Enarrationes in Psalmos 124.7, Corpus Christianorum, Series Latina 40.1840–1842.

Robin Blackburn, The Making of New World Slavery: From the Baroque to the Modern 1492–1800 (London and New York 1997).

Marc Bloch, Feudal Society, vol. 1: The Growth of Ties of Dependence, translated by L.A. Manyon (Chicago 1964).

Marc Bloch, Feudal Society, vol. 2: Social Classes and Political Organization, translated by L.A. Manyon (Chicago 1964).

Keith Bradley, Slavery and Society at Rome (Cambridge, U.K. 1994).

Robert I. Burns, ed., Las sieta partidas, translated by Samuel Parsons Scott, 5 vols. (Philadelphia 2001).

David Brion Davis, The Problem of Slavery in Western Culture (Ithaca, N.Y. 1966).

David Brion Davis, Inhuman Bondage: The Rise and Fall of Slavery in the New World (New York 2006).

Moses I. Finley, ed., Slavery in Classical Antiquity; Views and Controversies (Cambridge, U.K. 1960).

Elizabeth Fox-Genovese and Eugene D. Genovese, The Mind of the Master Class: History and Faith in the Southern Slaveholders' World View (New York 2005).

Peter Garnsey, Ideas of Slavery from Aristotle to Augustine (Cambridge, U.K.1996).

Eugene D. Genovese, Roll, Jordan, Roll: The World the Slaves Made (New York 1974).

Pope Gregory XVI, In supremo apostolatus fastiggio (Apostolic

Letter, December 3, 1839, available from http://www.papalencyclicals.net/Greg16/g16sup.htm (accessed April 18, 2008).

Pope Leo XIII, In plurimis, On the Abolition of Slavery (Encyclical, May 5, 1888), available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/leo_xiii/encyclicals/documents/hf_l-xiii_enc_05051888_in-plurimis_en.html (accessed March 9, 2008).

Anthony Pagden, The Fall of Natural Man: The American Indian and the Origins of Comparative Ethnology (Cambridge, U.K. 1982).

Orlando Patterson, Slavery and Social Death: A Comparative Study (Cambridge, Mass. 1982).

Hugh Thomas, The Slave Trade: The Story of the Atlantic Slave Trade, 1440–1870 (New York 1997).

William Linn Westermann, The Slave Systems of Greek and Roman Antiquity (Philadelphia, Penn. 1955).

Joseph E. Capizzi
Associate Professor, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C. (2010)

SMALDONE, FILIPPO MARIANO, ST.

Priest, cofounder of the Congregation of the Salesian Sisters of the Sacred Hearts (Congregazione delle Suore Salesiane dei Sacri Cuori), "Apostle of Our Lady of Pompeii"; b. Naples, Sicily, Italy, July 27, 1848; d. Lecce, Apulia, Italy, June 4, 1923; beatified May 12, 1996, by Pope JOHN PAUL II; canonized October 15, 2006, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

The eldest of the seven children of Antonio Smaldone and Maria Concetta de Luca, Filippo Smaldone had decided by age twelve to become a priest, despite the persecution the Church was experiencing. He entered the minor seminary in Rossano Calabria in 1862. His specific apostolate was determined while he was still a philosophy and theology student following an encounter with the mother of a deaf-mute child in St. Catherine's Church in Naples. From that time, he evangelized and taught deaf-mutes. Overcoming some academic difficulties that required his transfer to the Archdiocese of Naples, Smaldone was ordained on September 23, 1871.

While ministering to plague victims, Smaldone contracted the disease but was miraculously healed through the INTERCESSION of Our Lady of Pompeii, to whom he would maintain a special lifelong devotion. Frustrated by his inability to help deaf-mutes sufficiently, Smaldone considered undertaking a foreign mission; however, his spiritual director convinced him to recommit himself to his apostolate in Naples. On March 25, 1885, Smaldone cofounded an institute in Lecce with Fr. Lorenzo Apicella and some specially trained Grey Sisters, who became Salesian Sisters of the Sacred Hearts dedicated to the education of deaf-mutes. Other institutes followed for deaf-mutes in Bari (1897), Rome, and throughout Italy, as well as centers for the blind, abandoned, and orphaned. One of Smaldone's favorite sayings in his ministry was that "the Lord sends us trials and tribulations to settle our debt to him."

Smaldone's love for the Blessed Sacrament was demonstrated by his founding the Eucharistic League of Priest Adorers and Women Adorers. In addition to his charitable activities and spiritual direction of many priests, seminarians, and religious communities, Smaldone served as superior for the Congregation of the Missionaries of St. FRANCIS DE SALES and canon of the Lecce cathedral.

Smaldone lived during a time of political and social unrest in Italy, and had difficulties in his ministry with the local municipal court. In spite of this tension, which called for an apostolic visit from the HOLY SEE, Smaldone received a commendation for his work from civil authorities. He died at age seventy-five of cardiac complications from diabetes, and was declared VENERABLE on July 11, 1995. He passed away in Lecce in the presence of the Salesian Sisters and many of the needy with whom he worked throughout his life.

Pope John Paul II remarked at his BEATIFICATION on May 12, 1996, that Smaldone's "intense, unwavering priestly spirituality, nourished by prayer, meditation, and even bodily penance, spurred him to provide a social service open to those advanced insights which true pastoral charity can inspire." Smaldone was canonized by Pope Benedict XVI on October 15, 2006. During the canonization HOMILY, the Holy Father noted that the saint "saw the image of God reflected in deaf-mutes, and he used to repeat that, just as we prostrate before the Blessed Sacrament, so we should kneel before a deaf-mute." According to the pontiff, "from his example we welcome the invitation to consider the ever indivisible love for the Eucharist and love for one's neighbor."

Feast: June 4.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SAINTS AND BLESSEDS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "Eucharistic Concelebration for the Canonization of Four New Saints: Rafael Guízar Valencia (1878–1938), Filippo Smaldone (1848–1923), Rosa Venerini (1656–1728), Théodore Guérin (1798–1856)" (Homily, October 15, 2006), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2006/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20061015_canonizzazioni_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

John Paul II, "Cappella Papale per la Beatificazione di Sei Servi di Dio" (Homily, May 12, 1996), in John Paul II's Book of Saints, by Matthew Bunson, Margaret Bunson, and Stephen Bunson (Huntington, Ind. 1999), 152.

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Filippo Smaldone (1848–1923)," Vatican Web site, October 15, 2006, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20061015_smaldone_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Neil P. Sloan
Research Assistant, Secretariat of Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs
United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (2010)

SOCIETY FOR CATHOLIC LITURGY

The Society for Catholic Liturgy is a nonprofit organization founded in 1995 by Monsignor M. Francis Mannion (founder of the Liturgical Institute at the University of St. Mary of the Lake, currently a priest in Salt Lake City, Utah), for the purpose of promoting scholarly study and practical renewal of the liturgy of the Catholic Church in the English-speaking world. Members include scholars and professionals involved in all aspects of the liturgical life of the Church.

Six general principles guide the work of the society:

1. Belief that the primary purpose of the sacred liturgy is to worship God, who continues the work of redemption and sanctification through the sacred mysteries of Christ handed down to us in and through the Catholic Church;
2. Respect for Catholic liturgy in all approved rites and usages from the apostolic period (first and second centuries) to the present day;
3. Desire to support the faithful celebration of the sacred liturgy according to the Roman Rite and to promote a better understanding of its origin, development, and current state;
4. Conviction that the sacred liturgy's incarnational nature and central role in shaping Catholic culture requires fostering the beauty and fittingness of music, art, architecture, language, and other elements integral to the spiritual profundity and ceremonial dignity of the rites;
5. Determination to foster interdisciplinary liturgical study and practice according to rigorous scholarly and professional standards; and
6. Commitment to the virtues of prudence, patience, and charity.

The society hosts an annual three-day conference at the end of January that serves as a center of liturgical reflection and discussion to the benefit of the whole Church. The conference consists of two tracks of presentations, one consisting of academic papers from scholars and professionals in the various fields from which the society membership is drawn, the other of pastoral presentations for clergy, diocesan employees, and parish staff engaged in the liturgical life of the Church. Keynote and plenary sessions are held in common. The conference is open to both members and nonmembers of the society.

Academic papers presented at the annual conference are considered for publication in the society's internationally recognized, peer-reviewed academic journal, Antiphon: A Journal for Liturgical Renewal, which deals with significant theoretical and practical questions in the fields of liturgy theology and sacramental theology. Antiphon is published three times annually by the SOCIETY FOR CATHOLIC LITURGY and serves both the members of the society and the Catholic Church in anglophone countries.

The Society for Catholic Liturgy works with other groups and institutions in activities and programs consistent with the aims of the society, and members make themselves available for consultation with ecclesiastical leadership on liturgical matters, if requested. The society also maintains a Web site, which serves as a resource for the liturgical renewal.

The society draws its membership from an array of constituencies, including those involved in areas of theology and related fields (such as liturgy, biblical studies, patristics, pastoral theology, and Church history), the social sciences, sacred architecture, sacred art, and sacred music. Full members come from the academic ranks, while associate members are active in some form of liturgical work. All members must meet the membership criteria, which include: being a member of the Catholic Church (Roman or Eastern Rite); sharing a fundamental sympathy with the general principles that guide the work of the society; possessing the ability to participate in the activities of the society in a prudent, charitable, and constructive manner; and bringing a substantive contribution to the work of the society. In addition, full members must possess a strong academic expertise, usually in the form of a terminal academic degree, in an area relevant to the Church's liturgical life, coupled with an ability to make practical applications, or a strong practical, pastoral, or professional expertise in an area relevant to the Church's liturgical life, coupled with an ability to articulate that expertise theoretically. Bishops who seek membership are admitted as honorary members of the society.

The society is governed by a board of directors elected by full members. The board consists of twelve members with rotating three-year terms. A president, vice president, and general secretary are elected annually by the board.

SEE ALSO LITURGICAL ART, HISTORY OF; LITURGICAL BOOKS OF THE ROMAN RITE; LITURGICAL CALENDAR, I: CATHOLIC; LITURGICAL CALENDAR, II: ECUMENICAL; LITURGICAL HISTORY; LITURGICAL MOVEMENT, I: CATHOLIC; LITURGICAL MOVEMENT, II: ANGLICAN AND PROTESTANT; LITURGICAL MOVEMENT, III: ECUMENICAL CONVERGENCES; LITURGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Francis Mannion, Masterworks of God: Essays on Liturgical Theology and Practice (Chicago, Ill. 2004).

Neil J. Roy, "Changes at Antiphon," Antiphon 9:1 (2005): 2–5.

Society for Catholic Liturgy Official Web site, available from http://www.liturgysociety.org (accessed March 13, 2008).

Timothy Vaverek, "The Future of the Society for Catholic Liturgy: Observations on Associate Membership and the Revised Statement of Principles," Antiphon 9:3 (2005): 311–323.

Carmina Magnusen Chapp
Academic Dean, Religious Studies Division
Saint Charles Borromeo Seminary (2010)

SOCIETY OF CATHOLIC SOCIAL SCIENTISTS

The Society of Catholic Social Scientists (SCSS) is an organization of Catholic scholars, professors, teachers, and practitioners committed to building up the social science disciplines on the foundation of the Church's social and other teachings. It also seeks to make Catholic social teaching better known in the academic world, the social science professions, and in society at large, and to provide the opportunity for scholarly camaraderie and the exchange of ideas among its members. The SCSS was founded in 1992 by the sociologist Joseph A. Varacalli and the political scientist and lawyer Stephen M. Krason, and it is perhaps the only interdisciplinary organization of Catholic social scientists in the United States and Canada that is firmly committed to the orthodox teaching of the Church. Its members view themselves as resuming the previous scholarly efforts of Catholic social science organizations in the United States, which either disbanded or became overtly secular after VATICAN COUNCIL II. In particular, they want to help to build up the Catholic social science that Pope PIUS XI called for in the encyclical Quadragesimo anno (1931).

The organization was part of the Catholic Central Union of America in its earliest years, before it was independently incorporated in 1995. Since its inception, its headquarters has been at Franciscan University of Steubenville in Steubenville, Ohio. The Society's formation and development have coincided with the Church's enhanced recognition of the importance of the social sciences, as seen in Pope JOHN PAUL II's establishment of the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences. Most of its membership of over 400 (including many prominent Catholic scholars) is in the United States, but there are also members in Canada, Europe, the Philippines, and other countries. There are several local and regional chapters, as well as some disciplinary-specific subgroupings. Membership is mostly made up of laymen, but it also includes priests and religious. The disciplines most frequently represented in the society are economics and business, history, law, philosophy, political science, psychology and counseling, psychiatry, sociology, social work, and theology. There is an advisory board of eminent Catholic scholars and a Bishops Board that provides ecclesiastical support and advice.

Following the social encyclicals, the SCSS is careful to stress that it welcomes all socio-politico-economic perspectives and schools of thought in the different disciplines that are within the ambit of the orthodox teaching of the Church. To some degree, it has sought to give particular attention to the work of outstanding past Catholic social scientists, such as the sociologist Monsignor Paul Hanley Furfey, the sociologist and historian Christopher Dawson, the economist Heinrich Pesch, SJ, the psychologist and psychiatrist Dom Thomas Verner Moore, and others who have sought to develop a way of thinking about society that is truly informed by a Catholic vision.

The society promotes research and has scholarly conferences each year, including the organization's main conference in October of each year that features presentations in many scholarly areas, as well as a smaller one focused on a particular topic in the spring. The SCSS publishes the annual Catholic Social Science Review, which averages about 350 pages and is probably the only interdisciplinary social science journal committed to the orthodox teaching of the Church in the United States or Canada. Other occasional publications include the two-volume Encyclopedia of Catholic Social Thought, Social Science, and Social Policy (2007) and Defending the Family: A Sourcebook, which examines many current family issues and makes a social science defense of the traditional family. The society also maintains a Web page and a Listserv for communication among its members. The "Public and Church Affairs" section of the Web site features short articles by SCSS members about current public and Church questions, and back-issues of the Catholic Social Science Review are also available. In addition, the society issues periodic statements assessing public issues from the perspective of Catholic social teaching and addressing crucial issues in the Church.

The SCSS sponsors the Pope Pius XI Award for contributions to building up Catholic social science, the Blessed Frederic Ozanam Award for Catholic Social Action, and other occasional awards for outstanding contributions to Catholic higher education and the Church in general. A for-credit Summer Catholic Social Thought Institute helps professors and graduate students in the social sciences put their disciplines into a Catholic context.

Part of the Society's mission is to bring the Church's social teaching to bear on international questions through its status as a nongovernmental organization (NGO) within the United Nations (UN). In this capacity, it has assisted in providing practicum opportunities for college students to take part in important UN conferences involving NGOs and to work with the Holy See's UN delegation.

The Society has sought to give particular attention to family questions. Among its noteworthy special projects have been the filing of amicus curiae briefs in Troxel v. Granville (2000), a major parental rights case argued before the U.S. Supreme Court, and Morrison v. Sadler (2003), an Indiana Court of Appeals case regarding homosexual "marriage." In addition, the SCSS issued a statement in 1995 criticizing the "homosexual ministries" that have been established in certain dioceses and seek to promote a "gay spirituality," and it sponsored a 2004 luncheon-seminar for Congressional staffers on family issues. It has also launched a Master of Theology program in Catholic social thought, via tutorial and online studies, through the Graduate Theological Foundation.

Virtually all of the SCSS's accomplishments have come about through the voluntary efforts of its members and with the assistance of supportive institutions such as Franciscan University of Steubenville and Ave Maria School of Law. It employs no regular staff and financially sustains itself primarily on modest member dues.

SEE ALSO CATHOLIC LEAGUE; FELLOWSHIP OF CATHOLIC SCHOLARS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Encyclopedia of Catholic Social Thought, Social Science, and Social Policy 2 vols. (Lanham, MD: Scarecrow Press, 2007).

Society of Catholic Social Scientists Web site, available from http://www.catholicsocialscientists.org (accessed March 3, 2008).

Catholic Social Science Review, vols. I–XI (1996–2006), select portions also available from http://www.catholicsocialscientists.org/Journalinfo.htm (accessed March 3, 2008).

Paul C. Vitz and Stephen M. Krason, eds. Defending the Family: A Sourcebook (Steubenville, OH: Catholic Social Science Press, 1998).

Stephen M. Krason
Professor of Political Science and Legal Studies
Franciscan University of Steubenville (2010)

SOLÁ Y MOLIST, ANDRÉS, BL.

Priest, religious; b. Taradell, Spain, October 7, 1895; d. martyred near Lagos de Oreno, Mexico, April 25, 1927; beatified November 20, 2005, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Andrés Solá y Molist was born on October 7, 1895, in Taradell, Spain, about 40 miles north of Barcelona. On August 15, 1913, he took vows as a member of the Congregation of the Missionary Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary (the CLARETIANS). In September 1922 he was ordained a priest, and he was sent the following year to Mexico as a missionary priest.

At first, Fr. Solá y Molist served as a professor at the minor seminary of the Claretian Missionaries in the city of Toluca, about 40 miles west of Mexico City. However, by 1925 he had to continue his ministry in secret for fear of the anti-Catholic and anticlerical measures taken under the presidency of Plutarco Elías Calles (1877–1945), which included the expulsion of all religious from the country. Rather than leave the country, Fr. Solá y Molist hid in the home of Josefina and Jovita Alba in León.

Two years later, on April 23, 1927, the superior of Fr. Solá y Molist's community notified him that the government had issued a warrant for his arrest. The following day, after celebrating the Eucharist and observing a HOLY HOUR, he was arrested by military forces at the home of the Alba sisters after confirming that he was a religious priest. Thence, he was moved to the military commisary near Lagos de Oreno, where he was shot on April 25, 1927.

The cause for the BEATIFICATION of Fr. Solá y Molist was opened in 1939, along with that of several other Mexican martyrs. The decree on their martyrdom did not appear, however, until June 22, 2004. They were beatified by Pope Benedict XVI on November 20, 2005, the Feast of Christ the King, in Guadalajara, Mexico. At the Mass for their beatification, José Cardinal Saraiva Martins emphasized in his HOMILY their willingness to testify to the universal kingship of Christ, and, in relation to the priests who numbered among the martyrs, he noted:

> This new group of martyrs includes three priests, who died in order to accomplish their priestly and missionary ministry heroically, as was the case with the Spanish Claretian missionary, Andrés Solá y Molist, C.M.F., who died after a long and painful agony, together with Fr. José Trinidad RANGEL and the layman Leonardo PÉREZ Larios.... Having followed the example of Jesus Christ, the Good Shepherd, these priests, together with the 22 Mexican priests canonized by Pope John Paul II in Rome during the Great Jubilee of the Incarnation in the year 2000, are a model and example of charity and heroic pastoral zeal (author's translation).

Feast: April 25.

SEE ALSO MEXICO (MODERN), THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "In ecclesia omnes," (Apostolic Letter), Acta Apostolicae Sedis 98 (2006): 500–502.

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Santa Misa de Beatificación de 13 Mártires Mexicanos: Homilía del Cardinal José Saraiva Martins," November 20, 2005, Vatican Web site, available (in Spanish) from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20051120_beatificazioni_sp.html (accessed November 23, 2009).

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Decrees of Beatification: Martyrs in Mexico," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (November 30, 2005): 9.

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Decretum super martyrio," Acta Apostolicae Sedis 97 (2005): 233–235.

Pius XI, Iniquis afflictisque, On the Persecution of the Church in Mexico (Encyclical, November 18, 1926), Acta Apostolicae Sedis 18 (1926): 465–467; also available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/pius_xi/encyclicals/documents/hf_p-xi_enc_18111926_iniquis-afflictisque_en.html (accessed November 23, 2009).

Jacob W. Wood
Ph.D. Student, Systematic Theology
The Catholic University of America (2010)

SONS OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE

(Filiorum Divinae Providentiae, FDP; Official Catholic Directory #0410) This congregation of priests, with papal approbation (1944 and 1954), was founded by St. Luigi ORIONE (canonized Pope John Paul II on May 16, 2004) in 1903. It is one of five communities that comprise Orione's Little Work of Divine Providence; there are communities of priests, brothers, hermits, and two of sisters (the LITTLE MISSIONARY SISTERS OF CHARITY, and the Perpetual Adorers of the Blessed Sacrament; the members of the latter group are blind persons). Orione began his apostolate as a seminarian at Tortona, Italy, in 1892, and after ordination he established a series of oratories for the care and education of neglected boys. The bishop of Tortona gave initial approval to Orione and his companions on March 21, 1903, under the name Sons of Divine Providence. The first foundation in the United States was established at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1949. In 1959, the congregation began publishing a quarterly magazine called The Bridge aimed at promoting awareness of St. Orione and his work. As of 2009, the congregation had over a thousand priests and brothers working on a variety of health and social care projects in thirty-two countries. The generalate is in Rome.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMAN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Douglas Arnold Hyde, God's Bandit, The Story of Don Orione, "Father of the Poor" (Westminster, Md. 1957).

Giorgio Papàsogli, Vita di don Orione, edited by Piero Gribaudi, 4th ed. (Turin 1994).

A Priceless Treasure Don Orione: Letters and Writings, 2 vols. (London 1995).

The Restless Apostle: From the Writings of Don Orione (London 1981).

Sons of Divine Providence Official Web site, available from http://www.sonsofdivineprovidence.org/.

John Coss
Independent Scholar
Framingham, Mass.

EDS (2010)

SOPOĆKO, MICHAŁ, BL.

Priest, founder of the Congregation of the Sisters of the Merciful Jesus; b. Nowosady, Poland, November 1, 1888; d. Białystok, Poland, February 15, 1975; beatified September 28, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Michał Sopoćko was born in Nowosady, Poland, a town near the present-day border with Lithuania, to a family of noble lineage. When he was eighteen, he sensed a calling to the priesthood. Accordingly, he traveled to Vilnius (also in present-day Lithuania) to enter the major seminary there, and was ordained a priest on June 15, 1914.

Fr. Sopoćko's first pastoral assignment was the parish of St. Michael the Archangel in Taboryszki (present-day Tabariškės, Lithuania). However, WORLD WAR I (1914–1918) saw fighting pass through Taboryszki, and, facing the threat of arrest by German authorities, Fr. Sopoćko moved to Warsaw and became a military chaplain for the Polish army in 1918.

Alongside the military chaplaincy, Fr. Sopoćko provided aid for needy families and founded a school for orphaned children. He also earned a doctorate in theology from the University of Warsaw, graduating in 1923. Following this achievement, he returned to Vilnius as the coordinator of the regional military chaplaincies until 1927, where Archbishop Romuald Jałbrzykowski (1876–1955) appointed him the spiritual director of the major seminary of Vilnius.

In addition to his duties at the major seminary, Fr. Sopoćko served as a CONFESSOR for several religious communities. One of his penitents was St. Faustina KOWALSKA. As her confessor, he evaluated her mystical experiences and advised her to write of them in her diary. He also joined with Faustina in promoting devotion to divine MERCY.

During WORLD WAR II (1939–1945), Fr. Sopoćko remained in Vilnius. Following the instructions of St. Faustina, who had died in 1938, he founded the Congregation of the Sisters of the Merciful Jesus in order to spread devotion to DIVINE MERCY. The life of this new congregation was interrupted, however, by the need for Fr. Sopoćko to go into hiding to evade the Nazi authorities, who were seeking his arrest.

After the war's end, the Russian authorities closed down the major seminary in Vilnius, and Fr. Sopoćko moved to Białystok to take up a position at the archiocesan seminary there. In 1962 he retired from his teaching duties and continued to spread devotion to Divine Mercy. He died on February 15, 1975, in his apartment in Białystok.

Fr. Sopoćko was beatified by Pope Benedict XVI on September 28, 2008. The Mass for his BEATIFICATION was held at the Church of Divine Mercy in Białystok. In his HOMILY at the Mass, Archbishop Angelo Amato, S.D.B., Prefect of the Congregation for the Causes of Saints, emphasized Bl. Sopoćko's devotion to Divine Mercy, as well as the need for mercy according to one's state in life and the importance of the Sacrament of Penance in obtaining Divine Mercy.

Feast: February 15.

SEE ALSO POLAND, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Beatification Mass," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (October 15, 2008): 31.

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Decretum super virtutibus," Acta Apostolicae Sedis 97 (2005): 436–439.

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Decretum super miraculo," Acta Apostolicae Sedis 101 (2009): 243–244.

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Father Michał Sopoćko (1888–1975)," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (October 15, 2008): 31; also available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2008/ns_lit_doc_20080928_sopocko_en.html (accessed November 23, 2009).

Michael Sopocko, God Is Mercy, translated by the Marian Fathers (St. Meinrad, Ind. 1955).

Michael Sopocko, The Mercy of God in His Works, translated by R. Batchelor (Stockbridge, Mass. 1962).

Jacob W. Wood
Ph.D. Student, Systematic Theology
The Catholic University of America (2010)

SPAIN (THE CHURCH DURING THE SPANISH REPUBLIC AND THE CIVIL WAR: 1931–1939)

Economic growth and social change in Spain during the 1920s was among the most rapid in the world. Industry and finance expanded rapidly, but low wages, limited productivity, and the poor living conditions of four million urban workers were serious problems. Literacy increased rapidly, and the number of agrarian workers diminished to less than 50 percent of the total labor force. The Spanish economy was recovering from the Great Depression proportionally faster than that of the United States or France. Although marred by somewhat of a forced electoral birth, the founding of a democratic republic in Spain on April 14, 1931, was part of a broad wave of political liberalization in Europe after WORLD WAR I. Initially the new government enjoyed the optimism of citizens with high-minded ideals, who believed it could resolve the pressing socioeconomic problems of the country; but as it turned out, the 1930s was not a decade that favored the success of new democracies in Europe. Shortly after the proclamation of the Second Republic on May 10, 1931, many churches and convents in Madrid, Málaga, and Valencia were destroyed by mobs. The new Republican government did nothing to stop the anticlerical abuses or to punish the guilty.

The Antireligious Constitution of the Early Republic (1931–1936). In December 1931 a new constitution was bulldozed through a legislature that was neither based on broad national consensus nor genuinely representative. It was, rather, the creation of one significant sector of political society, which imposed its political ideas on others who did not share its values. The sectarian rhetoric and procedures of the leftist Republican-Socialist coalition that approved the constitution was evident vengeance against religious interests that were deemed to be irrevocably linked to the old monarchy and authoritarian regime. The new constitution separated Church and State; moreover, it infringed on the civil rights of Catholics and instituted a policy of religious persecution that imitated the earlier extremist policies of Portugal and Mexico, even though the former had already ended in failure and the latter were evolving into an uneasy truce. Divorce was legalized, civil marriage was required for state recognition, and cemeteries were secularized. The Cardinal Primate of Toledo was expelled for manifesting yearnings for a monarchical government. In 1932 the Jesuit Order was suppressed. In 1933 new laws deprived the religious orders of the rights to teach and to own property. The state confiscated all Church goods. Intransigent anticlerical fanaticism grew in power and outspokenness.

The Spanish Catholic Church, as well as the Roman Pontiff, did not disown or attack the new political regime, which nonetheless attacked them officially by means of the constitution and unofficially through its provocations, rhetoric, and violence. Virtually all the bishops, as well as the apostolic nuncio, tried to accommodate as best they could in the new situation, doing what they could to promote the nation's common good. In his June 3, 1933, encyclical letter Dilecctisima nobis, Pope PIUS XI described the Spanish situation as outright "persecution" of the Catholic Church.

The Catholic Church was still the most important and trusted institution in the country, and the overwhelming majority of Spaniards were baptized Catholics. Most hospitals, schools, orphanages, and elderly homes were still run by the Church. But many among the intellectual and cultural elite and the political leftist parties, not to mention prominent military leaders, had fallen away from the faith. Most had become Freemasons, who had already been actively hostile to the Church since the late eighteenth century. But the most serious pastoral problem for the Church was the increasingly aggressive antireligious conviction of many of the leaders of the proletariat and landless farmers. Social Catholicism had been growing in the country, but not at a pace that could stem the tide of antireligious unions and workers' parties. Stanley G. Payne, a leading authority in the history of European facism and well-known scholar of Spanish history, indicates that they did not represent the majority of Spaniards, who were generally moderate voters, and that they were making demands that could not have been met by any country in the world at the time (p. 342). They were committed to a fractious, leftist, revolutionary, radical, liberal, impatient, and utopian rush toward a profound break with the traditionalist bent of most practicing Catholics. Already in 1932 a radical weekly newspaper called La Traca depicted the clergy facing a guillotine, because they were all "evil rubbish which wants to make the Republic a failure." Many radicalized supporters of the Republic fostered the attitude that viewed clergy and the Church in general as the enemy. The clergy were increasingly demonized by a virulent populist anticlerical mythology.

Even though there had been four Anarchist and Socialist attempts at revolutionary insurrection between 1932 and 1934, it was only in the latter year that truly serious violence threatened to destabilize the regime. The Republican government elected in 1933 was dominated by center-right parties allied to Republican parties. The leftist parties, which had not accepted defeat at the polls, attempted a Soviet-inspired insurrection in the mining region of Asturias. In October 1934, more churches and convents were burned, and forty clerics were killed, among them some nine Christian Brothers. Many of the intellectuals who had welcomed the new Republican experiment, such as Gregorio Marañón and Salvador de Madariaga, upon seeing this "sovietization" of the political revolution, took the view that the Spanish left had lost all moral credibility and authority to govern under a system of true, democratic rule of law. Tensions between the government and the Church eased, even though the anti-Catholic constitutional and legal systems were still in force. But this was only a truce. The papacy tried to execute a modus vivendi with the Republic, on the condition that it reform the antireligious constitution. Catholic politicians and even some priests participated in both Republican and monarchist parties. But an understanding could not be reached.

The Ideological Persecution. On February 16, 1936, the more radical petit-bourgeois utopians under Manuel Azaña came to power, resting on the voting support of no more than 15 to 20 percent of the electorate. They relied on support of the Socialists, who were increasingly revolutionary, in order to impose more land reform policies and other egalitarian policies in their new agenda. The new government was called the Frente Popular (Popular Front). It did not take a serious stand against major violence toward either the right or the Church. Instead, it stood by idly and complacently as many Catholic churches in various cities around the country were the targets of arson and other forms of property destruction. The government refused to arrest and prosecute those responsible, be they Communists, Socialists, or Anarchists—the so-called Reds. It refused to enforce the law equally. Revolutionary police officers subverted security forces, much as the Nazis had done in Germany in 1933. Political violence escalated, mostly in the geographic regions where leftists dominated, especially in the capital, the agrarian south, and the urbanized east, with political harassment and the event execution of opposition politicians. Popular militias opened the gates of prisons, encouraging convicted criminals to take up arms and join in the remaking of Spanish society. The tyranny of the left and its arbitrary government led to civil chaos and psychological terror; the government broke down. The papal nuncio complained time and again about these atrocities, profanations, and murders—to no avail. It is no wonder few Western democratic governments after the July 17 uprising came to the effective defense of the Second Republic, including anticlerical France.

The Insurrection of July 17, 1936, and the Scope of Religious Persecution in Republican Spain. The military insurrection or levantamiento of July 17, 1936, was not initially approved by either the Spanish bishops or the HOLY SEE. The conspirators did not share specific religious reasons to revolt, and they certainly did not consult bishops or clergymen before proceeding. The Holy See did not recognize the request of the new government, approved by the military regime, to represent all of Spain. The government established by the military junta allied itself with Benito Mussolini, and it also engaged in political extermination of many of the leftists in the territories it controlled. But the Church was respected and not attacked in the new "Nationalist" Spain.

Once the military insurrection began, an intraleftist conflict erupted in the territories under the Republican regime. Further radicalization of the Anarchist and Communist parties took the form of "popular" takeovers of various municipalities. Republican Spain also experienced a chaotic economic downturn. Historian Julio de la Cueva describes the revolutionary millenarian upheaval these terrorist factions advocated: All social divisions were formally abolished; factories were to be worker-controlled; lands were forcibly collectivized; authority was dissolved into a multitude of committees and organizations—all of this combined with an immense feeling of freedom (de la Cueva 1988, p. 364).

Early Republican propaganda tended to justify the killing of clerics as the outraged reaction of mobs acting in self-defense against priests who were shooting people. But the facts proved otherwise. The executioners acted under the protection of party or union membership cards, and those in authority did not protect clerics; the atrocities were "allowed to happen." The first victims of this genocidal terror were in fact clergymen. Killing a cleric became a sort of revolutionary obligation. Priests had to be killed because they were priests, and as such they were necessarily evil and anti-Republican; they were the epitome of all human vice and wickedness. They were the perfect scapegoats. A whole class of people had to be exterminated. Revolutionary workers were not only absolutely free but powerful, more powerful than God Himself, insofar as they were taking decisions regarding human life.

The killing of priests, friars, nuns, seminarians, and well-known Catholic laypeople began immediately after the military coup, but did not last as long as the war itself. In cities and towns throughout the country, the burning of churches and slaughtering of priests began on July 19. In most places such atrocities peaked in the first three months of the conflict, after which period they gradually declined well into 1936 (due at least in part to the facts that fewer priests were still living and that some had fled to the other side of the conflict). By May 1937 the massive killings were for the most part under control. But the bishop of Teruel was killed as late as January 1939. Throughout Loyalist Spain, about 50 percent of the murders of priests and clerics were committed during the first two months of the war.

Numbers and Circumstances of the Martyrs. All in all, 6,832 members of the Catholic clergy were massacred, including 13 bishops, 4,172 diocesan priests and seminarians, 2,364 monks and friars, and 283 nuns. In the Diocese of Barbastro up to 88 percent of the diocesan clergy was slaughtered. 66 percent of the priests in Lérida were killed; 62 percent in Tortosa; 44 pecent in Segorbe. Half of the priests of Málaga, Minorca, and Toledo were killed; 40 percent of the priests in Ciudad Real and Ibiza were murdered; a third of the priests in Almería, Córdoba, Jaén, Madrid-Alcalá, Tarragona, Valencia, and Vic fell victim to religious persecu-tion. Between a fourth and a fifth of the total number of priests in Barcelona, Cuenca, Gerona, Teruel, and Urgel were killed in the Republican side of the conflict.

The massacres were carried out in different ways and under varying circumstances. Most of the diocesan priests were individually hunted down and killed, but religious were usually rounded up in groups. Mock trials preceded some executions, but sometimes death came without any such proceedings. A vast number of victims were "taken out for a ride" and shot by the roadside. Others were hanged, drowned, suffocated, burned to death, or buried alive. Some victims were tortured, especially male clerics, with a morbid fixation on their genitalia, which were sometimes cut off. In all, it appeared to be a massacre committed by perpetrators who felt no guilt whatsoever. The frequent cruelty and macabre ritualism of the murders could legitimately be described as "satanic."

De la Cueva indicates that the sacrophobic actions which often accompanied the killings were more numerous than the murders themselves (de la Cueva 1988, p.

362). The executioners, who wielded unprecedented and unchecked power, believed they proved the impotence of the Catholic God and His saints. Many holy images were stripped, slapped, ridiculed, and processed in sacrilegious ceremonies where holy vestments were worn by profane sinners, before being hacked to pieces or tossed in bonfires. In many places on the Republican side of the Civil War that unexpectedly erupted, the word "God" was banished from common discourse and even from theatrical performances. In Catalonia the names of more than one hundred villages that had the word "Saint" attached to them were changed.

The Civil War Develops (1936–1939). Soviet Russia intervened on behalf of its political sympathizers in the Second Republic, while Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy intervened on behalf of the rightist military officers who lead the insurrection. On October 17, 1936, the official government publication La Gaceta de Madrid publicized the decree that all religious (i.e., Catholic) worship in Republican territory was prohibited. An officially approved policy of thoroughgoing ATHEISM was thus instituted in the Republican- or Loyalist-held territories, with the notable exception of the more religiously inclined Basque region. All traces of religion would have to be eliminated, because, as the Barcelona leftist newspaper La Batalla proclaimed on October 18, 1936: "religion and revolution are mutually exclusive." Religious symbols would have to disappear, beginning with crosses. The program of destruction did not spare great works of art or significant religious monuments, and, needless to say, Catholics of all states of life, including unmarried members of the Catholic Youth Organization, elderly women, young and particularly pious married men and women, and even pious gypsies. A person's unwillingness to blaspheme was reason enough to arouse suspicion that he was a counterrevolutionary. The vandalic orgy did not even spare religious cemeteries or the tombs of saints, priests, friars, and nuns. Their cadavers were disinterred and exposed for public ridicule in front of burned-out churches in Madrid, Barcelona, Toledo, and elsewhere.

On August 1936, the Holy See appealed to both sides to stop the carnage and agree to a ceasefire. Some 3,500 clergymen, not to mention thousands of Catholic laypeople, had already been killed. Only on September 14, 1936, when Pope PIUS XI received some refugees from Republican Spain, did he describe the victims of the Spanish persecution as "martyrs." But he still called for his children in Christ on the Republican side to heed his call for peace. On July 7, 1937, almost a year since the beginning of the Civil War, did the Spanish bishops issue a collective letter dismissing the Republican claims of religious impartiality. By then 6,500 clergymen had been killed on the Republican side, including twelve bishops. Catholic institutions were closed or totally destroyed in the Loyalist territories, with the exception of the Basque country. The local Catholic bishops had taken sides with the insurrectionists, which were the only ones who offered the Church respite and true freedom of worship. Yet the Holy See still maintained its diplomatic relations with Republican Spain well until 1938. Its requests for an armistice were to no avail.

The Civil War ended on April 1, 1939, when the National forces took over Madrid, Valencia, and Alicante, and the rightist authoritarian regime of Francisco FRANCO was established. Almost all the dioceses, religious orders, and congregations began assembling facts, documents, and testimonies related to the deaths of their members. Many of the dioceses and congregations began the process of BEATIFICATION by sending the necessary documents to the Holy See. The new Spanish government desired the quick and massive beatification of thousands of martyrs. Popes PIUS XII, JOHN XXIII, and PAUL VI were reluctant to proceed with haste, however, for fear the Franco regime would make political use of this religious recognition of heroic virtue. In April 1964, when the cause of a cloistered nun, who had been murdered in Valencia in October 1936, was to be considered by the Congregation of RITES, a Spanish Catalonian cardinal who was a member of the Congregation requested that Paul VI suspend the proceedings until political change took place in Spain. The pope agreed, and all Spanish causes from the Civil War period were frozen for twenty years.

Political prudence on the part of the Holy See, not just doubts about the authentic character of martyrdom, help to explain the slow pace of canonization for these victims of the Civil War period. One could ask, however, if the Church has a moral obligation to proclaim the HOLINESS of martyrs since rendering them such honors is to honor Jesus Himself, the first and foremost Martyr. The recognition of martyrdom is reserved to the Holy Church. No matter how virtuous a victim might be, if a beatification process identifies political or social reasons for the killing of a believer, that person cannot authentically be labeled a martyr. A martyr may have been a victim of political repression that was fueled by a fierce antireligious sentiment, but he must not have had any evident political preferences. He must not have been involved in political parties or movements. Also, he must have died forgiving his victimizers. The cause of death must have been, strictly speaking, in odium fidei (in hatred of the faith) and in odium Ecclesiae (in hatred of the Church).

Franco died in 1975, and Juan Carlos I Bourbon was subsequently proclaimed king. The process of political transition to a complete democracy began immediately thereafter, and culminated with a new constitution promulgated in 1978. By 1982 the Socialists came to power after a democratic election.

SEE ALSO 498 MARTYRS OF THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR, BB.; ABAD CASASEMPERE, AMALIA, AND COMPANIONS, BB.; ALMERÍA, MARTYRS OF, BB.; ANARCHISM; ANTICLERICALISM; BARBAL COSAN, JAIME (JAMES) HILARIO, ST.; BARBASTRO, MARTYRS OF; BLANES GINER, MARINO, BL.; CANONIZATION OF SAINTS (HISTORY AND PROCEDURE); DÍAZ GANDÍA, CARLOS, BL.; GALBIS GIRONÉS, VICENTE, BL.; FAUBEL CANO, JUAN BAUTISTA, BL.; GIMÉNEZ MALLA, CEFERINO, BL.; HOSPITALLERS OF ST. JOHN OF GOD, MARTYRS OF THE, BB.; JESUITS; JOSÉ APARICIO SANZ AND 232 COMPANIONS, MARTYRS OF THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR, BB.; MARTYR; MOTRIL, MARTYRS OF, BB.; POLANCO FONTECHA, ANSELMO, BL.; SPAIN, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; TORRÓ GARCÍA, MANUEL, BL.; TURÓN, MARTYRS OF, SS.; VIRTUE, HEROIC; VISITATION SISTERS, MARTYRS OF, BB.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jordi Albertí, La Iglesia en Llamas, la Persecución Religiosa en España durante la Guerra Civil (Barcelona 2008).

Julio de la Cueva, "Religious Persecution, Anticlerical Tradition and Revolution: On Atrocities against the Clergy during the Spanish Civil War," Journal of Contemporary History 33, no. 3 (July 1998): 355–369.

Gregorio Rodríguez Fernández, El Hábito y la Cruz, Religiosas asesinadas en la Guerra Civil Española (Madrid 2007).

Maurizio Fontana, "La Iglesia entre las dos Españas, de la Segunda República a la dictadura de Franco a través de las atrocidades de la persecución religiosa," L'Osservatore Romano, Spanish edition (April 10, 2009): 12–16.

Vicente Cárcel Ortí, La Persecución Religiosa en España durante la Segunda República (1931–1939) (Madrid 1990).

Vicente Cárcel Ortí, La Gran Persecución, España, 1931–1939 (Barcelona 2000).

Stanley G. Payne, The Collapse of the Spanish Republic, 1933–1936, Origins of the Civil War (New Haven, Conn. 2006).

José Saraiva Martins, "Los nuevos beatos son patrimonio del mundo entero, de la Iglesia universal," L'Osservatore Romano, Spanish edition (November 2, 2007): 7.

Msgr. Fernando B. Felices
Pastor, Gruta de Lourdes Parish
Archdiocese of San Juan, Puerto Rico (2010)

SPOTO, FRANCESCO, BL.

Priest, religious, superior general of the Congregation of the Missionary Servants of the Poor; b. Raffadali, Sicily, Italy, July 8, 1924; d. martyred Rungu, Democratic Republic of the Congo, December 27, 1964; beatified April 21, 2007, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Francesco Spoto was born in Raffadali, Sicily, the first of three children of Vincenzo Spoto and Vincenza Marzullo. His parents were farmers of modest means, who educated him in Catholic faith and piety. In 1936, at the age of twelve, he entered the seminary of the Congregation of the Missionary Servants of the Poor, following a visit to Raffadali by Fr. Vitale Bruno, then vicar general of the congregation. On July 22, 1951, Spoto was ordained a priest for the congregation. Only eight years later, at the age of thirty-five, he was elected its superior general. Owing to Spoto's solicitude for vocations and for missions, the congregation grew steadily in members, as well as in missions, under his leadership.

On August 4, 1964, Spoto left Italy in order to support the congregation's first mission in Biringi in what is now the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The country was at the time being ravaged by guerrilla forces known as Simba, or Lions, who were the followers of the recently assassinated prime minister, Patrice Lumumba (1925–1961). By November, these guerrilla forces had forced Spoto and three of his confreres into hiding. In December, Spoto and his confreres fled toward the Ugandan border after guerrillas destroyed their mission. However, on the evening of December 11, 1964, guerrillas captured Spoto. Leaving the others behind, they beat Spoto severely and left him for dead. His confreres then rescued him and transported him on a makeshift stretcher to Rungu. Despite difficulty in speaking on account of the severity of his injuries, Spoto forgave his attackers and instructed his companions not to seek retaliation. On December 27, 1964, two days after slipping into a coma, Spoto succumbed to his injuries.

On December 16, 1992, Salvatore Cardinal Pappalardo (1918–2006), Archbishop of Palermo, began a diocesan inquest concerning Spoto's reputation for sanctity. The decree on his martyrdom appeared on June 26, 2006, and the Mass for his BEATIFICATION took place in Palermo on April 21, 2007. Salvatore Cardinal De Giorgi, who celebrated the Mass, emphasized in his HOMILY Bl. Spoto's commitment to leading his congregation by example and to enduring extreme suffering for the sake of the GOSPEL.

Feast: December 27.

SEE ALSO CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; MISSIONARIES OF AFRICA; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "Domine, meam accipe," (Apostolic Letter) Acta Apostolicae Sedis 99 (2007): 787–789.

Vincenzo Bertolone, E il mandorlo fiorì: Tracce del "Volto" in Padre Francesco Spoto (Rome 1999).

Salvatore De Giorgi, "Beatificazione di P. Francesco Spoto" (Homily, April 21, 2007), available (in Italian) from http://www.beatofrancescospoto.it/download/omelia_card_de_giorgi.pdf (accessed November 18, 2009).

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Decretum super martyro," Acta Apostolicae Sedis 98 (2006): 953–955.

Sergio C. Lorit, Padre Spoto: Diario di un martirio (Palermo, Italy 1966).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Francesco Spoto," L'Osservatore Romano, English ed. (May 23, 2007): 5.

Jacob W. Wood
Ph.D. Student, Systematic Theology
The Catholic University of America (2010)

ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST, SISTERS OF

(CSJB, Official Catholic Directory #3820) Commonly called Baptistines, this congregation began in Angri, southern Italy, when Bl. Canon Alfonso Maria FUSCO (beatified by Pope John Paul II on October 7, 2001) organized a group of women to take care of orphaned and abandoned children. Maddalena Caputo, a young woman who desired to consecrate herself to God in religion, and at the same time devote her life to the care of the needy and the poor, joined with Fusco in his project.

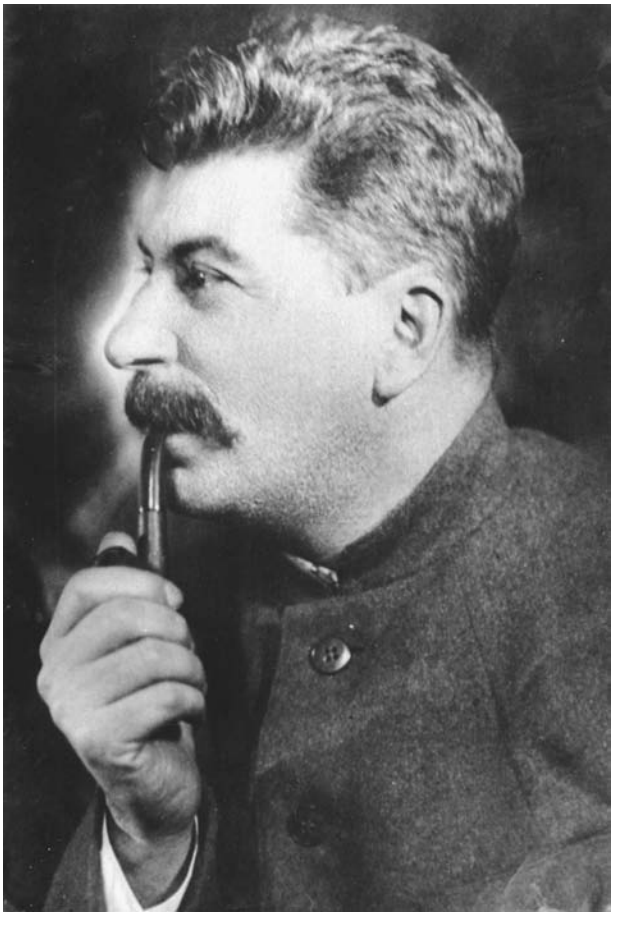
On Sept. 25, 1878, Maddalena and three companions began their work. The rapid growth of the congregation resulted in the opening of houses throughout Italy. On Aug. 2, 1888, the bishop of Nocera, where the motherhouse was then located, approved the community. The final approbation of the HOLY SEE in 1927 placed the congregation under pontifical jurisdiction. Mother Bernardino d'Auria brought the sisters to the United States in 1906, when she came with five companions to assume the direction of St. Lucy's parish school and orphanage in Newark, New Jersey. The community has since extended its work to education, healthcare, and care of the elderly and children. In 1939 four members of the United States community went to assist their sisters from Italy to establish a foundation in Brazil. The following year sisters from the United States opened a mission in Chile, another in Rhodesia (modern Zimbabwe) in 1947, and in Canada in 1962. As of 2009, the congregation of 820 religious had 123 houses in sixteen countries on five continents (Catholic Almanac 2010, p. 487). The generalate is in Rome; the United States provincialate is in the Bronx, New York.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Salvatore Garofalo, Alfonso Is His Name: A Translation of Operaio di Dio, tr. by Angelica Vilardi (Purchase, N.Y. 1981).

Sisters of St. John the Baptist Official Web site, available from http://www.baptistines.org/ (accessed November 4, 2009).



Sister Adolfa Gallo CSJB
Retreat Coordinator
St. Joseph's Villa House of Retreats, Peapack, N.J.

EDS (2010)

STALIN, JOSEF

Born Josef Vissarionovich Dzughashvili; Bolshevik revolutionary leader of the Soviet Union; b. December 21, 1879, Gori, Georgia; d. March 5, 1953, Moscow, Russia; alias Stalin; also known as Koba.

Josef Stalin was a Bolshevik revolutionary of Georgian background who succeeded Vladimir Lenin (1870–1924) as supreme leader of the Soviet Union and ruled from the mid-1920s until his death in 1953. Stalin built on Lenin's foundation to create a brutal dictatorship characterized by an exaltation of a powerless working class, strict Communist party control of all political activity, an extravagant personality cult of its leader, a repressive secret police apparatus, and an extensive network of harsh labor camps for those considered opponents of the regime.

Stalin, Josef (1879–1953). Photo taken of the Soviet premier in 1928. AP IMAGES

Early Life. Stalin was born Josef Vissarionovich Dzughashvili on December 21, 1879, in Gori, Georgia, then a part of the Russian Empire. His father was a cobbler; his mother, a housecleaner. He began his studies at the Gori Church School at the age of nine, but in 1894 he won a scholarship and enrolled in the Orthodox Theological Seminary in Tbilisi, the Georgian capital. While at the seminary he immersed himself in Marxist literature and in 1898 was expelled for revolutionary activism. Later that year he joined the newly formed Russian Social Democratic Labor Party (RSDLP) and devoted himself to the political organization of railway workers. Arrested in 1902 and exiled to Siberia, the first of many arrests, he quickly escaped and returned to Georgia by 1904. When news of the split among the Russian Social Democratic leadership in emigration reached the rank-and-file members in the Russian Empire, Stalin sided with the Bolshevik faction, even as most Georgian Social Democrats opted for the Mensheviks.

Before adopting the alias "Stalin," from the Russian word for "steel," he was known as "Koba" in the Georgian revolutionary underground. In 1912 he was elected to the Bolshevik Central Committee, which elevated him to the higher levels of the party. That same year he traveled to Western Europe, where he met exiled Bolshevik leaders. Because of his non-Russian background, he was given the task of collecting information, especially from the multiethnic Austrian empire, to develop Bolshevik policies on the national question within the Russian empire. Back in Russia, he was arrested and exiled to Siberia once more, only to be freed after almost four years by the 1917 February Revolution that overthrew the Russian monarchy and liberated its political prisoners.

Stalin returned to Petrograd (St. Petersburg), and with Lev Kamenev (1883–1936) edited the Bolshevik party newspaper Pravda. In this capacity they developed a relatively conciliatory policy toward the Provisional Government that Lenin later forcefully denounced upon his return to Russia in April 1917. Not yet considered a frontline Bolshevik, Stalin did not play a major role during the revolutionary year of 1917 that ended with the Bolshevik overthrow of the Provisional Government in October. The civil war that followed the Bolshevik seizure of power, however, brought Stalin's organizational talents and capacity for work to the forefront. He was appointed People's Commissar for Nationalities in 1917 and People's Commissar for State Control in 1919, and held both positions until 1923. Like many leading Bolsheviks he served as a troubleshooter, traveling to various fronts to settle the numerous crises that threatened to overwhelm the Bolsheviks (known as Communists after 1919) in their first years of power. During the Russian Civil War, he came into frequent conflict with Leon Trotsky (1879–1940), who, as People's Commissar of War, directed the Bolshevik effort to retain power. Their highly personal rivalry developed into enmity and contributed to the brutal tone of Soviet politics during the next two decades.

Rising Through the Ranks. Stalin's emergence in the Bolshevik inner circle dates from 1922, when he was appointed secretary-general of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Ironically, this was a relatively unglamorous, bureaucratic position, which other leading Bolsheviks felt was beneath them. Lenin's ill health, beginning with a series of strokes in 1922, gave Stalin the opportunity to exercise day-to-day power within the Communist Party and to expand his influence among rank-and-file members, who would produce a younger generation of party leaders who later became instrumental supporters as Stalin consolidated his power. Lenin's death in January 1924 brought the struggle for succession out into the open, and Stalin proved highly adept at internal maneuvering to disarm and defeat rivals. Stalin's considerable administrative abilities and his control of the party's ever-growing patronage network outweighed his rivals' greater Marxist theoretical grounding and oratorical gifts. In rapid succession his better-known rivals—Leon Trotsky, Lev Kamenev, and Grigorii Zinoviev (1883–1936) and, finally by 1928, Nikolai Bukharin (1888–1938)—were dislodged from leadership positions.

The Second Revolution. Scholars have labeled the years between 1928 and 1932 the Second Revolution, a period of accelerated state-sponsored social transformation and renewed revolutionary activism that had a large measure of support, especially among urban workers and young party activists. Features of this revolution were a planned economy through a system of five-year plans, the introduction of collective farms in the countryside, and a renewed commitment to the creation of a truly proletarian culture. But Stalin and his allies in the party put their own distinctive stamp on this revolutionary activism, guiding it at a frenetic pace in a more rigidly ideological direction. Marked by a high degree of compulsion and outright violence, this Second or Stalin revolution represented a dramatic departure from the New Economic Policy (NEP), inaugurated in 1921 and characterized by small-scale private trade, a hands-off attitude toward the peasantry, and relative tolerance of non-Communist ideas in literature and the arts. Driven by Stalin's slogan of establishing "socialism in one country" and amidst increasing international isolation, the Soviet Union embarked on a crash program of industrialization that essentially co-opted Trotsky's earlier ideas. Stalin also broke with previous moderate agricultural policies, defended by Bukharin, and instead began a program of forced collectivization of agriculture that the Soviet peasantry violently and bitterly resisted.

Increased persecution of religion was an important feature of the cultural revolution of the late 1920s and early 1930s. Although in 1918 the Soviet government had restored the patriarchate, abolished in 1721, it actively harassed the Russian Orthodox Church and tried to subvert it by promoting the activities of a dissenting reformist group of priests known as the Living Church. Churches and temples were closed or used for decidedly nonreligious purposes such as workers' clubs, storage areas, or museums of atheism. The Church was not allowed to appoint a successor to Patriarch Tikhon after his death in 1925. With the foundation of the League of the Militant Godless in 1925 and the upsurge of revolutionary activism in the late 1920s, antireligious activity took on a more organized and violent character that affected all major religions represented within the borders of the Soviet Union.

By 1934 Stalin and his group had dramatically transformed the Soviet Union. But another unprecedented and even more extensive wave of state-sponsored violence was about to strike Soviet society. Soon after the assassination of Sergei Kirov (1886–1934), Stalin's main lieutenant, in December 1934, Stalin unleashed a campaign of terror, initially directed against the party and the state bureaucracy, but that eventually reached the officer corps of the Red Army, provincial and local government officials, and civilians. The grandly orchestrated show trials of 1936 to 1938, where Stalin's old rivals Kamenev, Zinoviev, and Bukharin were among the lead defendants under trumped-up charges, were merely the most visible tip of a vast process of intimidation, false accusations, and mass arrests. The network of labor and prison camps, known by the acronym gulag, first created by the Bolsheviks during the Civil War, expanded immensely as millions of Soviet citizens were sent to remote locations across the Russian north and Siberia. Prison labor became one of the dominant features of the Stalinist system and Soviet economy of these years.

Stalin's Foreign Policy. Following Adolf HITLER's accession to power in 1933, Stalin's foreign policy was increasingly preoccupied with the threat posed by Nazi Germany, which was aggressively expansionist and fiercely anti-Soviet. In 1934 the Soviet Union broke out of its diplomatic isolation and joined the League of Nations from which it had been excluded at its conception. For the next five years, Stalin pursued a policy of collective security to thwart Germany's expansionism, but without success, in great part because France and Great Britain did not trust the Soviet Union. In August 1939, after years of harsh anti-fascist rhetoric, the Soviet Union shocked the world and many Communist faithful in Western Europe by signing a non-aggression pact with Nazi Germany. Under the terms of the pact, Hitler now had a free hand to attack Poland from the west, while Stalin invoked the pact's secret protocol and occupied the eastern two-thirds of Poland. The Red Army also occupied the Baltic republics that had become independent at the end of WORLD WAR I.

The non-aggression pact lasted almost two years until June 22, 1941, when the German army invaded the Soviet Union, moving rapidly into the Ukraine, Belorussia, and western Russia. By December 1941, German armies were on the outskirts of Leningrad (St. Petersburg) and Moscow, but did not advance any farther. Historians have extensively debated Stalin's performance as a war leader. He has been faulted for ignoring early warning signs of the German invasion and for a puzzling absence in the first week of the war. But in time he emerged as a bold and steady leader who rallied his country to victory. Leaving military operations to his generals, Stalin relaxed the tenor of domestic politics, while in the area of diplomacy, he proved a crafty counterpart to Franklin D. Roosevelt (1882–1945) and Winston Churchill (1874–1965). Domestically, he recognized that the wave of Russian nationalism triggered by the German invasion was linked to a deep religious belief that decades of antireligious persecution had failed to diminish. Age-old Russian heroes such as the thirteenth-century prince Alexander Nevsky (1220–1263) were again featured prominently, while Orthodox believers were given greater freedom to practice their faith, and in 1943, after almost two decades, the Church was allowed to fill the vacant office of the patriarch.

Aftermath of World War II. The victory over Nazi Germany came at an immense cost—more than twenty-five million casualties—but left the Soviet Union as one of two superpowers in a new international landscape. Clever diplomacy, backed by the presence of the Red Army in Berlin and across most of eastern Europe, allowed Stalin to create a bloc of satellite Communist regimes from the Baltic to the Black Sea. By 1949 the Soviet Union, now armed with atomic weapons, was locked with the United States and its allies in a Cold War that lasted another four decades.

Stalin and the Papacy. Stalin's long rule overlapped with the papacies of PIUS XI and PIUS XII. During these three decades, the HOLY SEE attempted to come to terms with a militantly antireligious government in a country where the relatively small numbers of Catholics gave it little leverage for diplomacy. Under Pope Pius XI, the VATICAN conducted secret negotiations, led by Cardinal Eugenio Pacelli, aimed at reestablishing diplomatic relations and restoring prerevolutionary arrangements in the areas of Church property, education, and ordination of clergy. Without any significant results, these negotiations were suspended in 1926. Anticlerical campaigns increased in intensity and brutality in the late 1920s, leading Pope Pius XI to call for a worldwide Day of Prayer in March 1930 to protest Communist persecution of all religions. Even as the Soviet Union sought a diplomatic rapprochement with the West during the 1930s as a counterweight to the threat posed by Nazi Germany, its religious persecutions did not abate. In March 1937 the Vatican issued its most forceful condemnation of Communism and Soviet policies, the encyclical Divini Redemptoris. Following the strongly anti-Fascist message of the encyclical Mit brennender sorge of the same month, Pope Pius XI rejected Communist overtures for Catholic participation in a broad popular front against Hitler and his sympathizers.

Pope Pius XII, who as Cardinal Pacelli had negotiated with the Soviets in the 1920s, followed the strong anti-Communist line of his predecessor, but faced different diplomatic dilemmas once war broke out in Europe in September 1939. The Holy See declared its impartiality and refrained from any direct criticism of the Soviet Union. It cautiously welcomed Stalin's wartime relaxation of antireligious policies inside the Soviet Union. But as the war came to a close, Pope Pius XII became increasingly concerned with the fate of Eastern Catholics as more of them fell under direct Soviet or Communist rule in the newly Sovietized nations of Eastern Europe.

Postwar territorial changes brought more Catholics, a majority in Poland and Lithuania but a relative minority in Orthodox Russia, under Soviet rule. Although persecuted, the Catholics in these regions maintained their institutions. The government followed a more aggressive policy toward its Eastern Catholic populations, particularly the Ukrainian Catholics. Established in 1596, the UKRAINIAN CATHOLIC CHURCH maintained its allegiance to the See of Rome, while observing Eastern Byzantine rites and traditions, such as ordaining married men to the priesthood. In 1946 the Soviet government capped decades of persecution by banning the Church and forcing Ukrainian Catholics to join the Russian Orthodox Church. It would be another four decades before the Ukrainian Catholic Church was legalized again in the twilight of the Soviet era.

The postwar extension of Soviet hegemony to countries with large numbers of Catholics, such as Poland, Hungary, and parts of Czechoslovakia, heightened tensions between the Soviet Union and the Vatican. The Soviets also applied the anticlerical policies that had been a hallmark of their rule since 1917 to the Catholic churches of these countries. The Vatican's response was in line with the highly charged atmosphere of the Cold War that was in its early stages. The response itself contributed to the growing polarization between East and West. In the decree against Communism of July 13, 1949, Pope Pius XII threatened to excommunicate any Catholic who knowingly defended the "materialist and anti-Christian doctrine of Communism" (New York Times 1949, p. 14).

The Later Years of Stalin's Rule. The years between 1945 and 1953 remain the least known of Stalin's long rule, even though they have been the subject of greater scholarly research in recent years. They were marked by increasing paranoia and secretiveness on Stalin's part, a dominant role for Lavrenti Beria's (1899–1953) security apparatus, greater cultural conservatism and officially sanctioned patriotism, and a return to the isolationism of the pre-war years, sometimes bordering on xenophobia. During these years the personality cult of Stalin, based on massive propaganda, the exaggeration of his achievements, and the falsification of inconvenient episodes reached its height. Sightings of Stalin were rare, and, amidst a climate of increasing paranoia and secretiveness, an alleged conspiracy known as the Doctors' Plot was officially uncovered in January 1953. To a wary Soviet public, these signs indicated a possible new wave of purges, in this case, one that would target Soviet Jews. Stalin's death on March 5, 1953, from a cerebral hemorrhage cut short these preparations. The absence of a clearly designated successor opened a struggle that was not resolved until 1956 when Nikita Khrushchev (1894–1971) emerged as supreme leader of the Soviet Union. The struggle for understanding and control of his historical legacy took much longer; in many ways it continued to be waged up through the dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991.

SEE ALSO BOLSHEVISM; BYZANTINE CHRISTIANITY; COLD WAR AND THE PAPACY; DIVINI REDEMPTORIS; MARXISM; ORTHODOX AND ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCHES; RUSSIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; TIKHON, PATRIARCH OF MOSCOW.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Sarah Davies and James Harris, Stalin: A New History (Cambridge, U.K. 2005).

Dennis J. Dunn, The Catholic Church and the Soviet Government, 1939–1949 (New York 1977).

Steven Merritt Miner, Stalin's Holy War: Religion, Nationalism, and Alliance Politics, 1941–1945 (Chapel Hill, N.C. 2003).

New York Times, "Papal Decree against Communism," July 14, 1949.

Robert C. Tucker, Stalin as Revolutionary, 1879–1929: A Study in History and Personality (New York 1973).

Robert C. Tucker, Stalin in Power: The Revolution from Above, 1928–1941 (New York, 1990).

Dmitriĭ Antonovich Volkogonov, Stalin: Triumph and Tragedy, edited and translated by Harold Shukman (New York 1991).

Elena Zubkova, Russia after the War: Hopes, Illusions, and Disappointments, 1945–1957, translated and edited by Hugh Ragsdale (Armonk, N.Y. 1998).

Mauricio Borrero
Professor, Department of History
St. John's University (2010)

STATES OF THE CHURCH

When the concept of papal temporal rule came into existence in the eighth century, it combined elements of papal patrimonial rights, of former imperial jurisdiction, and of the traditional supremacy of the Roman bishops. In the High MIDDLE AGES, the question of whether the popes ought to be rulers of a given territory in central Italy did not really present itself. For the first time, in the early fourteenth century, Pierre Dubois (c. 1255–c. 1312) posed the problem in these terms. The Middle Ages knew the papal territory as terrae seu patrimonium ecclesiae (lands under the patrimony of the Church). The imperial donors spoke of papal lands as being in iure principatu et ditione ecclesiae Romanae (under the rule and authority of the Church of Rome); Otto I swore to defend the terra sancti Petri (land of Saint Peter).

It is impossible to treat the Papal State on a purely regional and territorial basis. On the one hand its history is inseparable from that of the papal theocracy and the papal Curia; on the other, one cannot make a clear distinction between Papal State policy and papal temporal policy elsewhere in Italy or indeed in Europe. It is also hard to draw a line between developments of the papal bureaucracy that affected the Papal State and those that did not. From the early fourteenth century, the APOSTOLIC CAMERA was both the financial and juridical bureau for the Papal State and for the Roman Church in general. Financial and Papal State policy were always closely related.

Origins of the Papal State. From the time of the Peace of the Church (AD 313), the Roman see possessed great landed wealth, both in Italy and as far afield as Asia Minor. This wealth was used primarily to maintain the

The Lands of St. Peter. The popes' ability to exert their rule over these lands fluctuated greatly during the entirety of the time that these lands were under their banner. REPRODUCED BY PERMISSION OF GALE, A PART OF CENGAGE LEARNING

Roman churches and shrines and to support the social welfare of the Roman people. For the latter purpose the PAPACY from the late sixth century assumed many responsibilities formerly met by the imperial government. An elaborate organization existed to run the papal estates, and the rectors and defenders influenced later administrative developments.

The Papal State emerged out of the quarrel between the HOLY SEE and the imperial government at the time of the controversy over ICONOCLASM. In 725–726 Pope GREGORY II put himself at the head of regional Italian resistance to taxation by the emperor Leo III. Some scholars have suggested that his actions and those of later eighth-century popes were part of a long-meditated plan prepared by the papal bureaucracy; others have suggested that the military pressure of the LOMBARDS and Byzantine impotence to resist it were the decisive factors. In 739 Pope GREGORY III sent an embassy to CHARLES MARTEL, the Frankish mayor of the palace, referring to him as PATRICIUS ROMANORUM and asking for help. In 749 the approval given by Pope ZACHARY to Pepin's usurpation of the Frankish crown proved the turning point. When Pope STEPHEN II faced a Lombard threat from King Aistulf (d. 756) in 752, he wrote to Pepin for aid. In 753 he traveled to Francia and met Pepin at Ponthion in Champagne. The Frankish king swore to restore the Exarchate of RAVENNA and the rights and territories of the res publica (Roman Republic). Two Frankish campaigns then occurred against Aistulf, who in 756 was made to swear to return to the Romans the Exarchate of Ravenna, most of Pentapolis, and towns in Emilia and Umbria. A papal territory may be said to have existed from this point.

Some scholars emphasize the care that the eighth-century popes took, in spite of the iconoclast controversy, not to derogate explicitly from Byzantine sovereignty. The territorial interests and ambitions of the Roman nobility, strongly represented in the Roman clergy, also may have played a part. The juridical position of the new state was for long unclear, complicated by these factors and others, such as the confusion between papal patrimonies or landed estates in the strict sense and other lands occupied by Romans.

Development and Early Constitution. The first period of the history of the Papal State probably ended with the tragic death of Pope JOHN VIII (882). The state entered into treatylike relations with the CAROLINGIANS that left it as an autonomous region under Frankish protection. Political turbulence in ROME, sometimes abetted by the popes, led Louis the Pious (778–840) to direct his son Lothair in 824 to issue the Constitutio Romana, which imposed a stricter regime of protection on Rome and its surrounding territories. The Constitutio called for papal and Frankish missi, or envoys, to sit together in Rome and to hear appeals against officers of the papal administration. The Romans, moreover, but not the popes, had to swear allegiance to the Frankish emperor. Within a generation, however, the political dissolution of the Carolingian empire, factional squabbling in Rome, and Muslim attacks combined to leave Carolingian protection a dead letter and papal territorial authority severely curtailed.

A second period ran from the early tenth century to the era of the GREGORIAN REFORM. This period was marked by a continuous, but weak, German presence in Rome and by frequent factions among the Roman nobility—notably the CRESCENTII and TUSCULANI. But also significant was the emergence of a more autonomous Papal State, no longer impeded by Carolingian officials, and showing some consciousness of its powers in its appointments of rectors and in the legal formulas used by papal officials in the exercise of their jurisdiction. Although under the dynasty of MAROZIA and the rule of Alberic of Spoleto (932–954), the Papal State was subject to an aristocratic clique, its administrative foundations were being laid. The restoration of Ottonian power in Italy after 962, however, placed important checks on the Papal State. While Otto III recognized that the popes exercised potestas legalis (legal power) in their dominions, he claimed for himself the final say in all matters of State.

One must distinguish between the areas over which the popes had treaty rights and those that they effectively governed. No reliable text exists of any treaty made between the popes and the Frankish government prior to 817, but it is probable that from the promises made by Pepin from 754 onward, the Franks guaranteed Roman rule over areas wider than Roman power was able to administer. It may be that the early papal-Frankish treaties were based on the frontiers between the BYZANTINE EMPIRE and the Lombards, at periods in the seventh or early eighth century when Byzantine power was relatively strong. This would explain the papal claim, mentioned in the Liber pontificalis, to the area south of a line from Luni in Liguria to Monfelice on the Adriatic.

The core of the Papal State was the former Byzantine duchy of Rome. The Franks imposed a compromise territorial settlement on the papacy. To the north of Rome, the popes asked for Venetia and Istria, Ravenna and the Pentapolis, and all of Lombard Tuscany. CHARLEMAGNE declined to hand over Venice and Istria; permitted shared rule in Ravenna among the popes, the patriarch of Ravenna, and himself; and added a slice of southern Tuscany to the duchy of Rome while retaining the rest of Tuscany as part of the Lombard kingdom. In central Italy Charlemagne extended papal rule into the Sabina, added some lands around Perugia to effect communications between Rome and the northeast, and advanced papal territory to the south into the Liri valley. He did not assign the duchy of Benevento to the papacy. Effective papal power in Emilia and in the Exarchate of Ravenna dwindled almost to nothing in the late ninth century, and a similar decline of power occurred in Pentapolis, as is made clear in Otto III's donation of eight counties there to Pope SYLVESTER II.

Growth of the Papal State. The policies of Pope LEO IX and his successors in the Gregorian reform were vital to the temporal power, particularly in their results for southern Italy. The papal court was beginning to be acutely affected by feudal law. The reform policy of active intervention on the southern borders of the Papal State and of establishing feudal sovereignty over the new Norman principalities strengthened papal authority in the Papal State proper, as did the reform emphasis on the patrimonial and financial rights of the Holy See. Benevento became a papal enclave (1050).

The key to papal ambitions in southern Italy was control of the town and duchy of Benevento. In the early eleventh century, the Byzantines expelled the Lombards from Benevento, but Byzantine rule proved weak.

Residents of Benevento therefore offered to acknowledge Pope Leo IX's authority in 1051. To legitimize this transfer, the pope sought support from the German emperor Henry III (1017–1056), who agreed in 1053 to exchange Benevento for the bishopric of Bamberg. However, the Lombards hired Norman mercenaries under Robert Guiscard (1016–1085) to reclaim Benevento. Guiscard defeated a papal army at the battle of Civita in 1053, but rather than hand Benevento over to the Lombards, he restored it to the pope in exchange for papal blessings for all future Norman conquests in southern Italy and Sicily. In 1081 Pope GREGORY VII finally secured control of the town when he deposed the sitting bishop and replaced him with a loyal supporter. Rectors reporting to the Papal Curia ruled Benevento. In the 1190s the Hohenstaufen dynasty drove the Normans out of southern Italy and Sicily, and threatened Benevento. In the thirteenth century, Pope URBAN VI secretly promised the French prince, Charles of Anjou (1226–1285; Charles I of Naples), the Kingdom of Naples in exchange for French support. This came to pass with the defeat and death of Manfred of Sicily (1232–1266) in 1266 at the Battle of Benevento.

In the twelfth century the Papal State was still essentially the area from Acquapendente to Ceprano. In this zone Church rights were interpreted in an increasingly feudal sense, whereas the Holy See showed itself willing to acquiesce to some extent in setting up communes. The most important exponents of the feudal policy were Pope ADRIAN IV and his chamberlain, Cardinal BOSO. Although twelfth-century popes had not abandoned their claims to the eastern lands (particularly Ferrara) and had added to them the claim to the allodial lands of MATILDA OF TUSCANY, effective papal rule was nevertheless sometimes reduced to Rome. And in Rome and the district, the new commune that had come into existence in 1143 made the popes' task more difficult.

Pope Innocent III laid the foundations of the later Papal State. To the existing area of effective rule, he added the duchy of Spoleto (in its late imperial sense) and the march of Ancona. To administer the state he set up rectorates in these areas and in the other provinces of Campagna-Marittima, Sabina, and the Patrimony of St. Peter in Tuscany. Building on this basis, subsequent thirteenth-century popes set up a machine of provincial taxation and justice. By mid-century, parliaments existed in most provinces for conciliar, financial, and legislative purposes. Particularly after the acquisition of Romagna in 1278, the new state possessed a modest, but appreciable, military and financial power.

The papacy established a presence in Romagna in northern Italy in 1276 when Bologna accepted the Holy See's protection to safeguard its communal liberties after years of strife between the GUELFS AND GHIBELLINES. Bologna was a leading city in Europe with a renowned university, a flourishing economy, and a rich cultural life. That status diminished in the period that followed. In 1347 the Visconti of Milan briefly captured Bologna, but it returned to papal control in 1370. Papal patronage favored artists and architects involved in building or refurbishing churches and the establishment of new religious houses. A splendid new palace, the Rocca di Galliera, was built for its legate. With papal help, Bologna's republican regime gradually fell under the domination of the BENTIVOGLIO family in the fifteenth century. In 1506 Pope JULIUS II incorporated Bologna and the duchy of Romagna into the Papal States, though the city retained a modicum of communal autonomy. A legate at first ruled the city for the papacy; in time, however, a titular bishop handled these duties. In 1542 Bologna hosted several sessions of the Council of TRENT.

By 1300 most of the essential governmental organs of the later Papal States were in existence. In spite of the severe strain placed on the state by the absence of the popes during the AVIGNON PAPACY and by their long and costly struggles with the Ghibelline tyrants of north Italy, the administrative machine held its ground and developed. By the mid-fourteenth century, most of the communes were too weak to oppose the formidable attempt to centralize and rationalize the state institutions effected by the Spanish Cardinal Gil Álvarez Carrillo de ALBORNOZ. Many minor tyrannies, however, remained a source of disorder until the sixteenth century.

Later Avignon popes (notably Pope GREGORY XI) advanced the work of Albornoz, only to be all but undone by the WESTERN SCHISM. Fifteenth-century popes (notably MARTIN V and NICHOLAS V) had to rebuild the Papal State with financial and political resources far inferior to those of the Avignon popes. Under Pope SIXTUS IV and especially under Pope ALEXANDER VI, an exaggerated nepotism became the aim rather than the instrument of papal policy.

The declining international position of the papacy was offset in the Papal State by increasingly centralized administration and by the inability of all but the largest units—whether feudal lordships, communes, or tyrannies—to resist central pressure. Tyrants such as the MALATESTA of Rimini succumbed largely from economic debility. Finally, under the new strains placed on them by the wars of France and Spain in Italy, most of the remaining semiautonomous communes or seigniories were reduced to obedience. Bologna and Perugia, the ESTE of Ferrara, and the Montefeltro of Urbino all lost their old positions in the first half of the sixteenth century. The action of Pope PIUS IV against the CARAFA and the COLONNA marked the end of the old style of baronial nepotism. His attempt at a root-and-branch reform of the Papal State was abortive, but reorganization of the various provincial legations and of central justice and finance nevertheless took place in the course of the century.

Economic and Demographic Factors. The economic power of the early Papal State was closely related to the patrimonial wealth of the Roman see and the application of that wealth on behalf of the Roman people through the agency of the Roman deaconties and xenodochia. In the period from Zacharias to Leo III, the papal patrimonies were partly reorganized into larger units (domuscultae). Roman nobles, who wished to be granted church property at nominal rents, resented this reorganization.

The influence of the nobles prevailed after the death of John VIII; in the late ninth and early tenth centuries most of the huge papal estates were feudalized and fell into the hands of the great Roman families. At the same time, the value of many of the great estates experienced a decline because of Arab raids, political disorders, and the effects of these on the productivity of the soil. It is, however, disputed whether the decline in agricultural production was as great as was once thought. The turnover to grazing in many parts of south Italy likely preceded this period. Many papal and Roman estates, however, were lost, such as those in the Neapolitan campagna and possibly most of those around Ravenna.

In spite of the reorganization of the finances of the Roman see during the reform period, demesne and Papal State revenues were slow in expanding, and the great alienated estates were never recovered. The Liber censuum, compiled at the end of the twelfth century, shows a wide variety of patrimonial and feudal dues, but mostly of a residual nature and amounting in all to only a modest revenue. Only after the great expansion of the Papal State in the thirteenth century, particularly with the absorption of such rich areas as the march of Ancona, with its port of Ancona, did the state acquire a respectable revenue. It is true that military expenditure often exceeded income, but the same was true of many European states.

Following depression, plague, and war in the fourteenth century, the population and wealth of the Papal State decreased, but the government became stronger, which suggests that revenues did not fall dramatically. In the fifteenth century the Papal State revenues formed an even larger proportion of total papal income, accentuated in the sixteenth century by more centralized government and by the increased prosperity of Rome, which rose from 30,000 to 100,000 inhabitants in that century.

Following years of consolidation and centralization, the two centuries prior to the French invasion of 1796 witnessed a progressive decline in the Papal State, culminating in its temporary disappearance in 1798. The change from the previous period was notable.

1600 to 1796. Sixteenth-century popes had succeeded in transforming their authority over their realms into a system of absolute monarchy. They regained the large, quasi-independent fiefs and neutralized or abolished the political and judicial power of the feudal families. Through the instrumentality of the papal secretary of state and Cardinal Camerlengo, charged with administering the temporal domain, the popes made their authority effective in the provinces, or legations, where they named the resident functionaries. They created specialized central administrative organisms, which functioned suitably. The College of Cardinals was fragmented into specialized congregations and lost its collegial power, which had once rivaled papal authority. Brigandage declined with the decline of the feudatories, who had profited by protecting brigands. Giovanni Botero (c. 1540–1617) wrote in 1595: "The ecclesiastical state is more peaceful today than formerly, and the authority of the ruler greater than ever." The danger was that this machine, well designed for a state expanding economically and socially, would become outmoded; this happened in the ensuing period when internal and international factors conspired to jeopardize its future.

Internally, the Roman aristocracy and families owing their wealth and honors to nepotism, such as the Pamphili, Rospigliosi, CHIGI, Ottoboni, and Pignatelli, amassed great political influence and economic power, to the detriment of the central authority. Pope INNOCENT XI (1676–1689) attempted to remedy these evils by eliminating the post of cardinal legate, by combating small-scale nepotism, and by introducing rigid economies to ward off bankruptcy. His successors tried to unify the provinces administratively. In this work Cardinal Giulio ALBERONI distinguished himself when, as legate to Ravenna under Pope CLEMENT XII (1730–1740), he sought to eliminate the existing autonomies of medieval origin and annexed the ancient republic of SAN MARINO to the States of the Church, at least temporarily. Bologna completely lost its ancient municipal autonomy in 1788.

Political Decline. These attempts at internal renovation failed to stem the growing political weakness of the state. Internationally, the balance of power preserved an equilibrium among the states of the peninsula, but left Italy vulnerable to outside pressure from the national monarchies. These powers took advantage of this situation by impertinently, even brutally, seeking to extort from the papal government renunciations of some of its rights and prerogatives, to force it to support their selfish political interests, and to introduce changes conformed to their own juridical and anticurial views. LOUIS XIV, King of France (1638–1715), used strong pressure, and at times violence, to humiliate this state and its rulers. Thus when the Duke of Créqui, the French ambassador, unjustifiably insisted on extending the diplomatic "right of quarters" beyond his dwelling in Rome to embrace an area "as far as his eye could behold," an incident occurred between his entourage and the Corsican guards, which the French government used to impose its will on Pope ALEXANDER VII (1662). Innocent XI (1676–1689), however, refused to bow to a repetition of these pretensions, and Pope ALEXANDER VIII in 1691 caused Louis XIV to renounce these claims, tolerated in no other capital. More extreme were the pressures applied to CLEMENT XIII (1758–1769) and CLEMENT XIV (1769–1774) by the Bourbon courts to break down papal resistance to the suppression of the JESUITS. Besides severing diplomatic relations, France occupied AVIGNON and Venaissin, and Naples seized Benevento and Pontecorvo.

Economic Decline. Agriculture, industry, and trade remained static or deteriorated. The same was true of social conditions. Decline was especially marked in Latium, a region almost denuded of population, where the rule was large-scale ownership, concentrated almost entirely in the hands of the Roman aristocracy, whose income derived largely from rents paid by shepherds for pasturage. The plain neighboring on Rome, the agro romano, occupied 485 square miles, but its ownership was limited in 1789 to a mere 113 families. The BORGHESE family alone possessed 55,000 acres; the SFORZA, 27,000. Instead of improving conditions and exploiting these holdings efficiently, the wealthy proprietors leased their lands, subleased, and then sub-subleased to wretched contadini weakened by disease contracted from the undrained, malaria-breeding Pontine marshes. Their primitive methods eked the barest subsistence from their tiny parcels. The wheat crop barely sufficed for local consumption; its export was forbidden.

The only industries of any size were the alum mines at Tolfa and the foundries at Canino, Bracciano, and Conca, employing about 300 to smelt the iron ore mixed on the island of Elba. Other than these, the shops were small, family-run affairs. The marches were relatively prosperous, especially Ancona, which became a free port in 1732, and Senigallia, which attracted merchants from Italy and abroad to its famous fair. Foreign trade was, however, minimal. Despite the number of small towns, no real middle class developed.

Rome always remained an important commercial center because of the constant flow of ecclesiastics, pilgrims, and tourists. A cultural capital, it was a magnet for artists in search of inspiration, scholars in search of the past, and collectors in quest of purchases. In 1768 Rome had some 159,000 inhabitants; the entire state about two million.

Papal Attitudes. No help could come from the sovereign or the state. The popes, who supported a court, a diplomatic corps, festivals, building construction, and maintenance, had to bear all the expenses of a great power with the revenues of a poor one. Rome itself absorbed the meager income. At the death of Clement XIV (1774), who was a good administrator, the public debt totaled 74 million scudi, although the annual revenue was only 2.5 million scudi. When financial distress became more acute, sumptuary expenses were trimmed, but profitable, long-term investments were impossible. No policy existed for inaugurating great public works. The draining of the Pontine marshes scarcely passed the planning stage. Economic development was a minor preoccupation of the popes, who did not wish to overload their subjects with taxes and remedied misery by increasing alms when they could.

The governmental and administrative system finally became dilapidated. Papal departments were encumbered with inactive employees, said to number 30,000 by 1800. The clientele of cardinals and the great families could not be allowed to starve. Papal officialdom, like Roman beggary, was an institutionalized form of parasitism. The most enlightened and energetic reformer would have wasted his efforts, because the basic difficulty was economic and social sluggishness.

Peace was preserved in the States of the Church during these two centuries, but it was often accompanied by humiliation and internal disorder. It was disturbed mainly by the endemic brigandage. Public order was not seriously ruffled, save for occasional quarrels concerning diplomatic precedence or squabbles between the Romans and the dependents of foreign ambassadors. The outbreak of the FRENCH REVOLUTION quickly altered this situation. During the nineteenth century disturbances and movements originating outside this state caused ever-increasing public disorders and dissatisfaction within it.

French Intervention, 1796 to 1815. Neither the economic recession of the seventeenth century, the economic stagnation of the eighteenth, the critique of the ENLIGHTENMENT, nor the slow deterioration of governmental and administrative organisms had sufficed to disturb seriously the States of the Church. A tremor of adequate magnitude came from abroad, started by the French Revolution in 1789, which was so powerful that this state, even were it better equipped, would not have remained shockproof, any more than other European states. French revolutionists soon occupied the papal territories of Avignon and Venaissin lying within French borders, and the Constituent Assembly decreed their annexation to France (September 14, 1791). Rome became the refuge of numerous émigrés following the condemnation of the CIVIL CONSTITUTION OF THE CLERGY by the papal bull Charitas. Their tragic tales filled the Roman Curia and, still more, the populace with terror and detestation of the revolution. At the same time many republican agents arrived in Rome to propagate revolutionary ideas and found admirers in educated circles influenced by the doctrines of the Enlightenment, who were sympathetic toward Freemasonry. The first revolutionary associations arose as well as popular antirevolutionary outbursts. One of these resulted in the assassination of the French diplomat Nicolas de Bassville (1793); another in the murder of General Mathieu Duphot (1797).

Active French intervention began when General Napoleon Bonaparte's army descended into Italy in 1796. Bonaparte proposed to the Directory that he lay hands on Loreto, containing "the immense treasures that superstition has amassed during 15 centuries. They are valued at one million pounds sterling." In May 1796 he received orders to occupy Rome, but he took only the legations (Bologna, Ferrara, Ravenna) in June. Bonaparte proved a prudent governor, because he foresaw his later need for papal cooperation to regulate the affairs of the Church in France. "The influence of Rome is incalculable," he declared. "I ambition more the title of savior than that of destroyer of the Holy See." Once more the Papal State became involved in the general history of the Church. Bonaparte evacuated Ravenna, Faenza, and Ancona (June 23) after 33 million francs were paid to the Directory. Despite the size of this ransom, Rome expressed relief. In 1796 the French occupied Bologna and included it in the Cisalpine Republic and the Kingdom of Italy established by Napoleon, while in 1799 Benevento joined the short-lived Republic of Naples.

After the Austrians were badly defeated in 1797, Pope PIUS VI, who had manifested hostility toward France, had to sign the Treaty of Tolentino (February 19, 1797), ceding Avignon, Bologna, and Ferrara to France, and Romagna to the Cisalpine Republic, an emanation of French power. After Duphot's murder General Berthier seized Rome under orders from the Directory (February 1798). Five days later a group of patriots took advantage of the presence of French arms and proclaimed the birth of the Roman Republic and the demise of papal temporal power. Pius VI was carried off a prisoner to Tuscany, then to Valence in southern France, where he died (August 29, 1799). Defeats in the War of the Second Coalition forced the French to evacuate Rome (September 30, 1799), ended the Roman Republic, and led to the restoration of the States of the Church, minus the legations, according to the Treaty of Lunéville (February 9, 1801). The Neapolitan government, whose army had delivered Rome, continued acting as sovereign there, but in 1800 it turned over the city to the newly elected Pope PIUS VII (1800–1823). The French victory at Marengo (June 14, 1800) would have threatened this fragile restoration of papal authority, had not Napoleon been eager to restore religious peace to France and to arrange the CONCORDAT OF 1801. It was he who obliged the Austrians to abandon their claims to the legations, and the king of Naples to evacuate the States of the Church, including Benevento and Pontecorvo. The Cisalpine Republic, however, was restored and soon was called the Kingdom of Italy (January 26, 1802). This placed the northern boundary of the States of the Church along the line established by the Treaty of Tolentino.

First Restoration. Pius VII was now sovereign of a territory reduced in size and economically less viable than before. He sought first a reorganization of the whole government and administration, and designated four commissions to elaborate a plan. The papal bull Post diuturnas (October 10, 1800), which promulgated the reforms, reflected two diverse currents of opinion evident in these commissions. The traditionalists regarded all the recent French innovations as diabolical and wanted only a return to the old state of affairs. The second group considered the former organization outmoded and a fresh start essential. The papal decision favored the conservatives, with few exceptions. Such improvements as were introduced were rendered inoperative by the passive resistance of the prelates assigned to the new posts. The statute did, however, envision the confiding of some positions to laymen, that is, to representatives of the nobility. All that remained of this first restoration was the noble guard.

Another measure, which might have produced good results, was the freeing of commerce, up to then practically a state monopoly. But lack of ports or industry left the States of the Church unable to develop commerce in the near future. A timid agrarian reform was inaugurated, which aimed to divide the latifundia (landed estates) and make it possible for cultivators to purchase the land. But these poor persons lacked the capital to buy. Structural reforms hesitantly outlined, devoid of means or will to put them into effect, represented the extent of the restoration in 1800. The States of the Church continued to vegetate during their remaining decades of life.

Relations with Napoleon I. When Bonaparte became Emperor NAPOLEON I (1804), he allowed Pius VII to consecrate him but did not intend to leave to the pope the least liberty of political option as a temporal sovereign, even that of declaring his neutrality in European conflicts. Napoleon sought to impose the Continental System upon the Papal State. Pius VII thought otherwise and refused to put the boycott into effect in his territory. This led to a crisis that began with the French occupation of Ancona (1805), continued with the seizure of Civitavecchia (1806), the Marches (1807), and Rome itself (1808). In 1806, Napoleon made his minister Talleyrand prince of Benevento. Pius VII was arrested (June 5, 1809) and kept in captivity at Savona and Fontainebleau until 1814. An imperial decree annexed the States of the Church to the French Empire and announced the formation of a commission (Consulta) charged with administering the former papal realm (1810). The region was then divided into the two departments of Tiber and Trasiméne. Rome was proclaimed second city of the empire after Paris, and Napoleon's son became king of Rome, a post once held by his father. Though a prisoner, the pope still urged passive resistance. The reactions of the Romans varied. Most ecclesiastics observed the papal instructions; most of the nobles collaborated with the French in the hope of saving their wealth and position. The mass of the populace maintained a stubborn, malevolent opposition because of affection for the pope, the influence of the religious, and discontent with increased taxes and the suppression of charitable institutions, which had distributed the indispensable alms. Young men fled military conscription and formed wandering bands, always ready to take to highway robbery.

French laws of the Civil Code were applied in the region. De Tournon, a capable administrator, was named prefect of Rome and undertook considerable public works, such as restoring ancient monuments, urban planning, laying out the Pincio as a public park, clearing the Tiber channel, improving highways, and draining marshes. Napoleon was eager to revive the old Rome and build a new one, and to improve economic conditions, but he lacked time and was too much preoccupied with his perennial wars. From 1814 on, the French Empire was in its death throes.

Pius VII was liberated and reentered Rome (May 24, 1814), where he was hailed with enthusiasm. A second restoration was about to begin but immediately faced imposing obstacles. Joachim Murat (1767–1815), King of Naples, coveted the States of the Church but lost his claim and his throne when he allied with Napoleon, who had returned from Elba. Then the Congress of Vienna, which aimed to give a territorial status to Europe after Napoleon's downfall, refused for a while to recognize the papal temporal sovereignty. Austria wanted to annex part of Italy and install princes devoted to her. Due in good part to the diplomatic skill of Cardinal E. CONSALVI, papal secretary of state, the congress permitted the pope to regain his former states, save for some alterations of borders and the permanent loss of Avignon and Venaissin (June 1815). Benevento and Bologna were restored to papal control at the Congress of Vienna in 1815, but Bologna rebelled against the papacy in 1831 and 1849.

1815 to 1870. This final period presents two aspects. One concerns domestic events in the papal realm; the other deals with developments outside this region. In a sense the RISORGIMENTO, the movement for Italian unification, combined the two and was largely responsible for the disappearance of the papal temporal power.

Second Restoration. Upon returning from his long imprisonment, Pius VII confronted the problem of administrative realignment, because the French occupation, for all its unpopularity, had roused middle-class aspirations for a more modern regime. Consalvi favored these demands within limits and was largely responsible for the promulgation of a constitutional charter in 1816, which marked some progress, although it still bore close resemblance to the privileges accorded by enlightened despots in the mid-eighteenth century. Opposition to these modest innovations in curial and aristocratic circles was strong enough to impede the effecting of substantial reforms. This, coupled with the worsening economic situation in 1816 and the impact of the Risorgimento, led to the formation of numerous secret societies such as the CARBONARI, especially in Romagna. These found a strong following among the lesser nobility and bourgeoisie eager for opportunities to hold public office and participate in the government. Soon after this restoration started, sectarian influences caused incidents in the legations and marches.

Gregory XVI. Counterrevolutionary forces regained full strength under Popes LEO XII (1823–1829), PIUS VIII (1829–1830), and GREGORY XVI (1831–1846). Following the July Revolution in Paris (1830), the Carbonari joined forces with the liberals against the papal temporal power, in the hope that France would impose on the HOLY ALLIANCE respect for the principle of nonintervention. Insurrection broke out in Bologna (February 4, 1831) and spread rapidly to Umbria, Romagna, and the marches. It gave rise to several provisional governments, which were unified under Terenzio Mamiani (c. 1802–1885). The revolt failed only because of Austrian and French armed intervention, which quickly restored the papal authority. The great powers (France, Great Britain, Austria, Russia, and Prussia) met in conference and in a memorandum cataloged the reforms required in the Papal States to avert further revolutionary outbursts.

Gregory XVI refused to accept most of its proposals, such as the admission of the laity to positions of authority, enforcement of the 1816 constitution, organization of consultative representative assemblies on the municipal and provincial levels, and creation of an auditor's office. Minor changes were introduced in 1832, notably the establishment of a corps of Swiss soldiers, but the memorandum was essentially shelved in the VATICAN ARCHIVES. Because papal authority was based on divine right, criticisms were regarded as disrespect toward God Himself, and revolutionary attempts as sacrilegious. The papacy found it difficult, if not impossible, to introduce the requested political and administrative reforms in its state. This was reinforced by the fact that the papacy considered its temporal and spiritual power inextricably intertwined and therefore feared that limitations on the former would inevitably impinge on the latter.

Final Quarter Century. PIUS IX (1846–1878) appeared to Italian patriots for a short time to herald a new era. He had earlier outlined a reformist program for the temporal power in his "Thoughts on the Public Administration of the Papal States" (1845). Once pope, he granted a generous amnesty to political offenders, organized a lay council (Consulta di Stato) and a civil guard, permitted limited press freedom, and protested against Austrian occupation of Ferrara. All this gave further impetus to the movement for Italian unification and to constitutional tendencies. By the Fundamental Statute (March 14, 1848), the pope provided his subjects with a constitution. He also allowed the papal banner to be adorned with the tricolor cockade and sent troops to guard the Po River during the hostilities between Piedmont and Austria.

As spiritual head of all Catholics, however, the pope could not make war on Austria, an impossibility reaffirmed in the papal allocation of April 29, 1848. This alienated both liberals and patriots and made difficult his relations with the legislature, which opened on June 5, and with the constitutional ministry presided over by Mamiani. Pellegrino ROSSI, who succeeded Mamiani early in September, was not acceptable to conservatives because of his constitutional convictions, or to liberals because of his opposition to involving the Papal States in warlike enterprises. Rossi's opposition to the Piedmontese requests for a military league against Austria increased the hatred of the radicals, by whose hands he was assassinated on November 15, 1848.

The ensuing popular tumults forced Pius IX to flee Rome (November 24, 1848) and take refuge at Gaeta in the Kingdom of Naples. Revolutionaries proclaimed the Roman Republic (February 9, 1849), soon placed under the control of a triumvirate composed of Giuseppe MAZZINI, Aurelio Saffi (1819–1890), and Carlo Armellini (1777–1863), who determined to resist the imminent invasion by Catholic France, Austria, Spain, and Naples, which accepted the petition of Cardinal G. ANTONELLI for aid. With Austrian troops pressing from the north and French forces besieging Rome, the republic collapsed. Pius IX reentered his capital (April 1850), but French soldiers remained in the city and Austrian ones in the legations. It was now clear that papal temporal power could continue only with foreign military aid. The events of 1848–1849 deeply troubled the pope, who believed that his goodwill had been unworthily abused. Henceforth, he was hostile to all liberal programs.

The final years of the States of the Church formed an episode in the unification of the Italian peninsula. Bolgona became part of Italy on June 12, 1859, when Romagna was annexed by the Kingdom of Sardinia during the unification, while Benevento joined Italy in 1860. Because of this movement, the papal territory lost the legations (1860). After the papal volunteer army of ZOUAVES met defeat at Castelfidardo (September 18, 1860), Italy annexed the Marches (with 133,000 votes favoring it in a plebiscite and 1,200 opposed) and Umbria (with 97,000 votes favoring it and 380 opposed).

In 1861 Cavour proclaimed Rome the capital of the new Kingdom of Italy. Napoleon's troops protected the remaining papal territory, but the French emperor sought to evacuate them as soon as possible. By the September Convention of 1864, concluded between the Paris government and the Italian kingdom without papal consultation, French forces were to be withdrawn within the course of the next two years. This prompted Pius IX to issue the encyclical Quanta cura, deploring contemporary developments, to which was attached the SYLLABUS OF ERRORS. French troops returned to stop Giuseppe GARIBALDI's intrusion into the Papal States in 1867 and remained there until 1870. Once the Franco-Prussian War demanded the withdrawal of the French garrison, the Italians invaded the state and took Rome after some hours of bombardment, breaching the Porta Pia (September 20, 1870). A plebiscite in the small area in papal hands recorded 133,681 votes in favor of annexation to Italy; 1,507 opposed. VICTOR EMMANUEL II in October proclaimed the annexation of Rome and the surrounding area. Thus ended the States of the Church. In the opinion of some, the impending demise of the temporal power played a part in bolstering spiritual power and in the proclamation of papal infallibility in July 1870 during the Vatican Council.

The principal states continued to recognize the personal sovereignty of the pope, admitting among other things his active and passive right to diplomatic representation. When the Law of GUARANTEES proved unacceptable to Pius IX and his successors, the ROMAN QUESTION continued to be a major problem for Italy until its definitive settlement in the LATERAN PACTS (1929). The state of VATICAN CITY, which then originated, is not, however, a resurrection of the former States of the Church.

SEE ALSO CURIA, ROMAN; DONATION OF CONSTANTINE; LEO III, BYZANTINE EMPEROR; LIBER CENSUUM; LIBER PONTIFICALIS; LOUIS XIV, KING OF FRANCE; NAPOLEON I; OTTO I (THE GREAT), EMPEROR; OTTO III, EMPEROR; PEPIN III, KING OF THE FRANKS; QUANTA CURA; TALLEYRAND-PÉRIGORD, CHARLES MAURICE DE; VATICAN COUNCIL I.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Maurice Andrieux, La vie quotidienne dans la Rome pontificàle au XVIII^e siècle (Paris 1962).

Sergio Anselmi, ed., Economia e società: le Marche tra XV e XX secolo (Bologna, Italy 1978).

Roger Aubert, Il Pontificato di Pio IX (Turin, Italy 1969).

Ottorino Bertolini, "Il problema delle origini del potere temporale dei papi," Miscellanea Pio Paschini, 2 vols. (Rome 1948–1949) 1:103–171.

Moris Brosch, Geschichte des Kirchenstaates (Gotha, Italy 1882).

Mario Caravale and Alberto Caraciolo, Lo stato pontificio da Martino V a Pio IX (Turin, Italy 1978).

Giampiero Carocci, Lo stato della Chiesa nelle seconda metà del secolo XVI (Milan, Italy 1961).

Owen Chadwick, A History of the Popes, 1830–1914 (Oxford, U.K. 1998).

Frank J. Coppa, Cardinal Giacomo Antonelli and Papal Politics in European Affairs (Albany, N.Y. 1990).

Frank J. Coppa, The Modern Papacy since 1789 (London 1998).

Paolo Dalla Torre, L'opera riformatrice ed amministrativa di Pio IX fra il 1850 e 1870 (Rome 1945).

Luigi Dal Pane, Lo stato pontificio e il movimento riformatore del settecento (Milan, Italy 1959).

Luigi Dal Pane, "Elementi e tentativivi di riforma nello stato pontificio del settecento," Rivista Storica Italiana 75 (1963): 778–817.

Jean Delumeau, "Le progrès de la centralisation dans l'état pontifical au XVI^e siècle," Revue historique 226 (1961): 399–410.

Jean Delumeau, L'alun de Rome, XV^e–XIX^e siècle (Paris 1963).

Domenico Demarco, Una rivoluzione sociale: La Repubblica Romana del 1849 (Naples, Italy 1944).

Albert Dufourcq, Le régime jacobin en Italie: Étude sur la République romaine, 1798–1799 (Paris 1900).

Mario Fanti, "Bologna nell'eta moderna (1506–1796)," in Storia di Bologna, edited by Amedeo Benati (Bologna, Italy 1978), 240–253.

Augustin Fliche and Victor Martin, eds., Histoire de l'église depuis les origines jusqu'à nos jours (Paris 1935–1960).

Alberto Mario Ghisalberti, Roma da Mazzini a Pio IX: Ricerche sulla restaurazione papale del 1849–1850 (Milan, Italy 1958).

Hanns Gross, Rome in the Age of the Enlightenment: The Post-Tridentine Syndrome and the Ancien Regime (Cambridge, U.K. 1990).

Jean Guiraud, L'état pontifical après le grand schisme (Paris 1896).

Ludo M. Hartmann, "Grundherrschaft und Bureaukratie im Kirchenstaate vom 8. bis zum 10. Jahrhundert," Vierteljahrschrift für Sozialund Wirtschaftsgeschichte 7 (1909): 142–158.

Fernand Hayward, Le dernière siècle de Rome pontificale, 1769–1870, 2 vols. (Paris 1927–1928).

Stefano Jacini, Il tramonto del potere temporale nelle relazioni degli ambasciatoriaAustriaci a Roma (1860–1870) (Bari, Italy 1931).

Karl Jordan, "Das Eindringen des Lehnswesen in das Rechtsleben der römischen Kurie," Archiv für Urkundenforschung 12 (1931) 13–110.

Manfred Laufs, Politik und Recht bei Innocenz III (Cologne, Germany 1980).

Jean Leflon, La Crise révolutionnaire, 1789–1846 (Paris 1949).

Maria Lupi, Il clero a Perugia durante l'episcopato di Guiacchini Pecci (1846–78): Tra stato pontficio e stato unitario (Rome 1998).

Louis Madelin, La Rome de Napoléon: La domination Française à Rome de 1809 à 1814 (Paris 1906).

Federico Marazzi, I "Patrimonia Sanctae Romanae" nel Lazio (secoli IV–X): Struttura amministrativa e prassi gestionali (Rome 1998).

Giacomo Martina, "La fine del potere temporale nella coscienza religiosa e nella cultura dell'epoca in Italia," Archivum Historiae Pontificiae IX (1971): 309–376.

Giacomo Martina, Pio IX (1846–1850) (Rome 1974).

Giacomo Martina, Pio IX (1851–1866) (Rome 1986).

Giacomo Martina, Pio IX (1867–1878) (Rome 1990).

C.T. McIntire, England against the Papacy, 1858–1861: Tories, Liberals and the Overthrow of the Papal Temporal Power during the Italian Risorgimento (New York 1983).

Norbert Miko, Das ende des Kirchenstaates (Vienna 1962–1970).

Guillaume Mollat, La question romaine de Pie VI à Pie IX, 2nd ed. (Paris 1932), copious bibliog.

Thomas F.X. Noble, The Republic of St. Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia 1984).

Margaret M. O'Dwyer, The Papacy in the Age of Napoleon and the Restoration: Pius VII, 1800–1823 (Lanham, Md. 1985).

Peter Partner, The Lands of St. Peter (Berkeley, Calif., and Los Angeles 1972).

Massimo Petrocchi, La restaurazione: Il cardinale Consalvi e la riforma del 1816 (Florence, Italy 1941).

Massimo Petrocchi, La restaurazione romana, 1815–1823 (Florence, Italy 1943).

Paolo Prodi, Lo sviluppo dell'assolutismo nello Stato pontificio (secoli XV–XVI) (Bologna, Italy 1968).

Paolo Prodi, The Papal Prince: One Body and Two Souls: The Papal Monarchy in Early Modern Europe, translated by Susan Haskins (Cambridge, U.K. 1987).

Antonio Quacquarelli, La rìcostituzìone dello Stato Pontificio (Bari, Italy 1945).

Alan J. Reinerman, Austria and the Papacy in the Age of Metternich: Revolution and Reaction, 1830–1838, vol. 2 (Washington, D.C. 1989).

Alessandro Roveri, La Santa Sede tra rivoluzione francese e res- taurazione: il cardinale Consalvi 1813–1815 (Florence, Italy 1974).

Mario Tedeschi, Francia e Inghilterra di fronte alla questione romana, 1859–1869 (Milan, Italy 1978).

Pierre Toubert, Les structures du Latium médiéval: Le Latium méridional et la Sabine du IXe siècle à la fin du XIIe siècle, 2 vols. (Rome 1973).

Walter Ullmann, The Growth of Papal Government in the Middle Ages: A Study in the Ideological Relation of Clerical to Lay Power 2nd ed. (London 1962).

Alfonso Ventrone, L'amministrazione dello stato pontificio dal 1814 al 1870 (Rome 1942).

F. Ventura, Settecebti rifornatore, vols. 1–3 (Turin, Italy 1972–1979).

Daniel P. Waley, The Papal State in the Thirteenth Century (New York 1961).

Anthony David Wright, The Early Modern Papacy: From the Council of Trent to the French Revolution, 1564–1789 (London 2000).

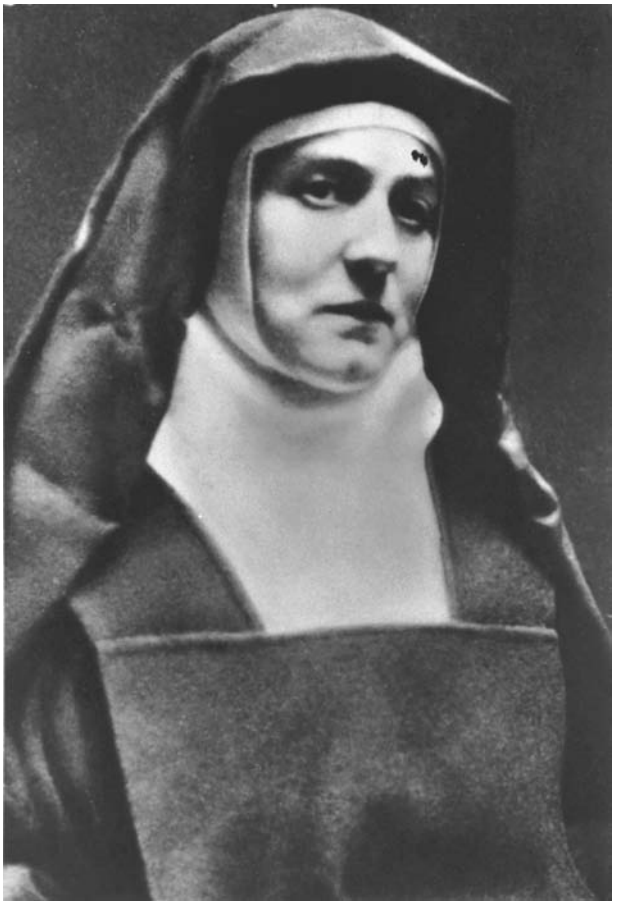
Peter D. Partner
House Master
Winchester College, Winchester, England



Thomas F.X. Noble
Director of the Medieval Institute
University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind.

Very Rev. Eugène Jarry
Professor, Faculté des Lettres and Faculté de Théologic
Institut Catholique, Paris, France

Renato Mori
Professor of the History of the Risorgimento
University of Rome, Italy

Frank J. Coppa
Professor of History
St. John's University, New York

Michael Wolfe
Professor of History
St. John's University, , New York (2010)

Stein, Edith (1891–1942). Known in religion as Sister Teresa Benedicta of the Cross, this saint was martryed in the Auschwitz-Birkenau death camp in 1942. © BETTMANN/CORBIS

STEIN, EDITH (TERESA BENEDICTA OF THE CROSS), ST.

Martyr; Carmelite nun; philosopher and pedagogue; b. Wrocław (Breslau in Prussian Silesia), Poland, October 12, 1891; d. Birkenau section of Auschwitz death camp, August 9, 1942.

Born of devout Jewish parents, Edith gave up her faith as a teenager and became interested in philosophy after dissatisfaction with her studies in psychology. She read the important philosophical treatise Logical Investigations of Edmund HUSSERL, the founder of PHENOMENOLOGY, and went to Göttingen University to study with him. There, contacts with Husserl's former pupil Max SCHELER began her acquaintance with Catholicism. After several years of searching, she asked to enter the Church upon reading the autobiography of St. TERESA OF AVILA, and was baptized on January 1, 1922. She accepted a teaching post at a girls' school run by Dominican teaching sisters in the cathedral city of Speyer. Along with her teaching duties, she acquainted herself with Catholic philosophy and translated the treatise On Truth by St. THOMAS AQUINAS.

Stein traveled to several German-speaking countries to address Catholic audiences, especially on women's and educational topics. Her growing reputation led her to leave the school at Speyer to teach at a more specialized institution of higher learning. In 1932 she became a lecturer at the German Institute for Scientific Pedagogy in Münster, but in the next calendar year she had to leave this post because of anti-Semitic legislation introduced by the Nazi Party. Convincing her spiritual director the time had come, she now acted on a long-cherished wish and entered the Carmel of Cologne, taking the name of Sr. Teresa Benedicta of the Cross. After her initial training at Cologne her monastic superiors invited her to resume writing. She transformed an earlier philosophical essay, developed in an unsuccessful effort to obtain a university position a few years previously, into her major opus Finite and Eternal Being, in which she attempted to synthesize the philosophy of St. Thomas with modern thought, especially with phenomenology. From her monastery she remained a faithful correspondent with former colleagues, among them the Polish phenomenologist Roman Ingarden.

Soon after the Nazi persecution of the Jews turned violent in the nationwide Kristallnacht pogrom of November 9–10, 1938, she left Germany for exile in the Dutch Carmel of Echt on the last day of the year. Here she wrote another important work, The Science of the Cross, a presentation of the life and teaching of St. JOHN OF THE CROSS. This contained several sections that incorporate the phenomenological method. Nazi Germany invaded the Netherlands in 1940, and both Sr. Teresa Benedicta and her sister Rosa Stein, now living at the Echt Carmel as a lay assistant, had to comply with anti-Semitic regulations. SS agents arrested them both on a day Sr. Teresa Benedicta was putting the finishing touches on her John of the Cross manuscript (which was published posthumously). That round-up on Sunday, August 2, 1942, led to deportation of several hundred priests and religious and Catholic laity of Jewish origin as a reprisal for an outspoken pastoral letter written by Dutch bishops condemning the anti-Semitic measures of the German occupation forces. One week later they arrived at the Auschwitz concentration camp, where she and her sister died in the gas chamber.

Official introduction of her cause for canonization took place in 1962, leading to her BEATIFICATION at Cologne by Pope JOHN PAUL II on May 1, 1987. He canonized her at ST. PETER'S BASILICA in the Vatican on October 11, 1998. In the same week he recommended reading her works in his encyclical Fides et Ratio. The following year the pope declared her copatroness of Europe, the only twentieth-century saint to be so honored.

Stein's early phenomenological writings cover the nature of empathy (our mode of access to another's experience), the individual, community, and the state. She articulates an account of our structure which distinguishes differing types and levels of experience, including more private types of experience (e.g., purely physical experience and personal, free acts) and more communal levels which enable us to understand another's experience, follow intelligible relations, and form genuine communities. (Stein understands communities as neither mere masses nor associations, which have external goals for their formation. Rather, communities develop around an internally shared life based in common values.) Stein's account of the state builds on these analyses; although states per se are not communities, the strongest states are those which grow out of communities and enable the cultivation of a culture.

Stein's lectures on women are less explicitly phenomenological, and in them she distinguishes feminine and masculine souls. All traits (and souls) are fundamentally human; no traits belong exclusively to one gender. Analogously, she argues that no profession ought to be limited to females or males. Nonetheless, she thinks that our souls have gendered natures which incline them toward the development of certain of the human traits, and generalizations can be made about feminine and masculine ways of engaging in common activities. For example, she claims that women tend toward holistic and personally-oriented development, while men toward specialized and object-oriented development. Even while affirming a strong account of intrinsically gendered souls, Stein makes clear both that the goal of development is a common one (full human development) and that our unique individuality marks each of us so that no individual is simply an expression of the more feminine or masculine tendencies.

Stein's translations and writings from the 1930s reveal a deep interest in bringing together the phenomenological and medieval traditions. Her translation of Aquinas's De veritate was the first into German, and she makes Thomas speak a more modern language, dropping the form involving objections and replies and providing commentary to help initiate more contemporary thinkers into Aquinas's concerns. Potency and Act continues this synthesizing project, and it comes to maturity in Finite and Eternal Being. In these later writings, Stein understands philosophy as capable not only of providing a foundation for the other disciplines (as phenomenology) but also of articulating the nature of being (as METAPHYSICS). Hers is a metaphysics, however, arrived at through phenomenological analyses.

Stein frames much of her synthetic project around Thomistic themes. She understands the movement from potency to act to be key to understanding living things; she affirms the centrality of the TRANSCENDENTALS (placing particular importance on BEAUTY) and articulates a variety of ways in which we are oriented toward the eternal; and she employs the analogy of being, understanding our knowledge of God to be fundamentally analogical rather than univocal or apophatic. These more medieval topics are discussed, however, in relation to contemporary concerns with philosophical method and advances in the natural sciences (including quantum physics and evolutionary theory).

Although adopting much from Thomism, Stein's metaphysics differs markedly in her affirmation of an individual form and her understanding of being. She adopts the broadly Aristotelian-Thomistic hylomorphic account of human nature, understanding us as a unity of matter in which potencies are actualized and soul, or form, as the seat of our distinctively human potencies. (This model is slightly adapted to be a unity of body, soul, and spirit, the latter of which is the I or conscious, free, and first-personal engagement.) In contrast to Thomas, however, Stein takes the most basic structure of the soul not to be the species form, but rather a unique individual form. Similarly, Stein's account of being is distinctive, understanding being not simply as act. She distinguishes actual being (efficacious being), mental being (being in the understanding), and essential being (wesenhaftes Sein, the being of intelligible structures). What comes to act actualizes the structures which are already in essential being. Thus, Stein's understanding of potencies coming to act is one of a thing unfolding in act what already is in essential being.

Stein's early writings make contributions to the general Husserlian project, providing a detailed account of intersubjectivity and a phenomenology of types of social groupings. After her conversion, Christian themes become more noticeable, and she draws heavily from the Christian medieval tradition. Throughout all of her work, however, certain themes are constant, including a commitment to a personal core or individual form and the essential communal dimension which are a part of our structure as human beings.

SEE ALSO AUSCHWITZ-BIRKENAU; DIRECTION, SPIRITUAL; DOMINICAN SISTERS; FIDES ET RATIO; HOLOCAUST (SHOAH); HYLOMORPHISM; PHILOSOPHY AND SCIENCE; WORLD WAR II.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WORKS BY EDITH STEIN

Life in a Jewish Family (Washington, D.C. 1986).

On the Problem of Empathy, 2nd ed. (Washington, D.C. 1989).

Selected Writings, translated by Susanne Batzdorff (Springfield, Ill. 1990).

The Hidden Life (Washington, D.C. 1992).

Self-Portrait in Letters, 1916–1942 (Washington, D.C. 1993).

Day Book, translated by Susanne Batzdorff (Springfield, Ill. 1994).

Essays on Woman, Rev. ed. (Washington, D.C. 1997).

Knowledge and Faith (Washington, D.C. 2000).

Philosophy of Psychology and the Humanities (Washington, D.C. 2000).

Finite and Eternal Being (Washington, D.C. 2002).

The Science of the Cross (Washington, D.C. 2002).

An Investigation Concerning the State (Washington, D.C. 2006).

WORKS ABOUT EDITH STEIN

American Catholic Philosophical Quarterly 82, no. 1 (Winter 2008), edited by Antonio Calcagno, special issue.

Mary C. Baseheart, Person in the World: Introduction to the Philosophy of Edith Stein (Dordrecht, Netherlands 1997).

Susanne Batzdorff, Aunt Edith: The Jewish Heritage of a Catholic Saint (Springfield, Ill. 1998).

Sarah Borden, Edith Stein (London 2003).

Sarah Borden Sharkey, Thine Own Self: Individuality in Edith Stein's Later Writings (Washington, D.C. 2009).

Antonio Calcagno*, The Philosophy of Edith Stein* (Pittsburgh, Pa. 2007).

Contemplating Edith Stein, edited by Joyce Berkman (Notre Dame, Ind. 2006).

Waltraud Herbstrith, Edith Stein: A Biography (San Francisco 1985).

Holiness Befits Your House, edited by John Sullivan (Washington, D.C. 2000).

Josephine Koeppel, Edith Stein: Philosopher and Mystic (Scranton, Pa. 2007).

Alasdair MacIntyre, Edith Stein: A Philosophical Prologue, 1913–1922 (Lanham, Md. 2006).

Never Forget: Christian and Jewish Perspectives on Edith Stein, translated by Susanne Batzdorff (Washington, D.C. 1998).

Maria Amata Neyer, Edith Stein: Her Life in Photos and Documents (Washington, D.C. 1999).

Marianne Sawicki, Body, Text and Science: the Literacy of Investigative Practices and the Phenomenology of Edith Stein (Boston 1997).

John Sullivan
Publisher
Institute of Carmelite Studies, Washington, D.C.

Sarah Borden Sharkey
Associate Professor, Philosophy Department
Wheaton College, Ill. (2010)

STENMANNS, JOSEPHA HENDRINA, BL.

Cofoundress of the Congregation of Missionary Sisters, Servants of the Holy Spirit; baptized Hendrina; b. Issum, Germany, May 28, 1852; d. Steyl, Netherlands, May 20, 1903; beatified June 29, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Hendrina Stenmanns was the oldest of seven children born to William Francis Stenmanns and Anna Maria Wallboom. Upon finishing elementary school, Hendrina began working as a silk weaver, a trade she practiced for nearly twenty years. Attracted to the religious life, Hendrina joined the Franciscan Third Order when she was nineteen, but the policies of the KULTURKAMPF in Germany prevented her from joining a religious order. Her religious aspirations were further complicated by a promise she made to her dying mother in 1878 to care for her siblings.

Hendrina learned about the recently founded missionary Society of the Divine Word from Lambert Wellers, a former apprentice of her father's who had joined the order. She traveled to Steyl in the Netherlands to visit the order's mission house in 1879, then returned there annually for the celebration of PENTECOST. On February 12, 1884, with the approval of the order's founder, St. Arnold JANSSEN, Hendrina joined the mission house as a kitchen maid.

In the next few years, plans crystallized for the foundation of a women's congregation to assist the Society of the Divine Word in its missionary work. On December 8, 1889, Hendrina, along with Bl. Helena STOLLENWERK and a few other women, became postulants in this new congregation, the Congregation of Missionary Sisters, Servants of the Holy Spirit, also known as the HOLY SPIRIT MISSIONARY SISTERS. Fr. Janssen named Hendrina and Helena cofoundresses of the congregation.

On January 17, 1892, Stenmanns received the habit and the religious name Josepha. She made her final vows on September 8, 1901. When Stollenwerk stopped serving as the congregation's first superior general in order to found a contemplative counterpart to the Holy Spirit Missionary Sisters, Sr. Josepha was named the order's superior (1898). As superior, Mother Josepha was responsible for supervising the formation of women entering the order and for running the order's printing press. She oversaw the departure of the first of the order's missionary sisters, to Argentina, Togo, New Guinea, the United States, and Brazil.

Mother Josepha fell ill in late 1902 and died several months later after a painful struggle. The cause for her BEATIFICATION was initiated on October 17, 1950. In anticipation of her beatification, her remains were transferred from the cemetery to the chapel of Sacred Heart Convent in Steyl on April 18, 2008.

Feast: May 20.

SEE ALSO DIVINE WORD, SOCIETY OF THE; NETHERLANDS, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 99 (2007): 617–619.

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Bl. Josepha Hendrina Stenmanns (1852–1903)," Vatican Web site, June 29, 2008, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2008/ns_lit_doc_20080629_stenmanns_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Franziska Rehbein, Come, Holy Spirit (Rome 2002).

Ortrud Stegmaier, My Heart Is Ready: Final Sickness and Death of Mother Josepha (Rome 1997).

Robert Saley
Graduate Student, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

STERNI, GAETANA, BL.

Foundress, Sisters of the Divine Will in Bassano del Grappa, Italy; b. June 26, 1827, Cassola, Italy; d. November 26, 1889, Bassano del Grappa; beatified November 4, 2001, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

One of six children of Giovanni Battista Sterni and Giovanna Chiuppani, Gaetana suffered a series of tragedies in her early life. Her older sister and father died, and a brother left the family to become an actor. Though these events precipitated severe financial stress, Gaetana, guided by her mother, was devout and studious and grew into a beautiful young woman. At fifteen she married Liberale Conte, a widowed businessman with three children. Tragedy struck this new family when Liberale died while Gaetana was pregnant with their first child; the young wife had a premonition of this heartbreaking event. Although devastated by the loss, she continued to care for her much loved stepchildren and gave birth to her first child, who died just days later. Due to discord with Liberale's family, Gaetana lost custody of the children and returned to her mother's home. Gaetana persevered in her support for the now fatherless children and, in time, repaired relations with her husband's family.

After a period of prayer and reflection, Gaetana entered the Canossian religious community. While there she had another premonition, this one regarding the death of her mother. Tragedy struck again and, after only five months at the convent, the postulant was forced to leave to care for her siblings who were now orphaned. Gaetana maintained her faith through this trying period and ultimately came to believe that she should dedicate her life to God's will by ministry to the poor. Her family obligations satisfied and supported by Fr. Bedin, a Jesuit priest, in 1853 Gaetana began to work in the municipal poor house, a shelter and hospice to the elderly, sick, and indigent of Bassano del Grappa. In 1860 she made a personal vow of devotion to God, approved by her CONFESSOR.

Joined by two other women who shared her faith and commitment to follow only the will of God and serve the poor, Gaetana established the Sisters of the Divine Will in 1860. The local bishop recognized the congregation in 1875. Gaetana worked among the residents of the shelter until her death at sixty-two. In beatifying her, Pope John Paul II said Gaetana "learned that the will of God is only love," and that she "reminds each believer of the need to seek the will of God in confident abandonment to Him and in generous service to one's brothers and sisters." Today the Sisters of the Divine Will serve the poor in Europe, the Americas, and Africa.

Feast: November 26.

SEE ALSO BEATIFICATION; ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; JESUITS; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Eight Servants of God," (Homily, November 4, 2001), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2001/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20011104_beatification_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Angelo Montonati, E la donne disse: "Dio vuole così," 2nd ed. (Cinisello Balsamo, Italy 2002).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Gaetana Sterni (1827–1889)," Vatican Web site, November 4, 2001, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20011104_beat-sterni_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Gaetana Sterni, Mistica Feriale, edited by Gaetano Passarelli (Milan 2001).

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York, New York (2010)

SUÁREZ, FRANCISCO

Philosopher, theologian; b. Granada, Spain, January 5, 1548; d. Lisbon, Portugal, Sept. 25, 1617.

In 1561 Francisco Suárez enrolled at the University of SALAMANCA to study law. In June 1564, he entered the fledgling Society of Jesus and began to study PHILOSOPHY. In 1566, he went on to study THEOLOGY, still at Salamanca, where his most important professor was Juan Mancio, O.P. (1497–1576), a successor of the great Francisco de VITORIA, O.P., in the chair of prime at the university. In 1570, Suárez began to teach philosophy, first at Salamanca and then at Segovia, where in March 1572, he was ordained a priest. He continued to lecture in philosophy until, in September 1574, he began teaching theology at Valladolid. In following years, he taught theology at Ávila (1575), Segovia (1575), Valladolid (1576), ROME (1580), the University of ALCALÁ (1585), Salamanca (1593), the University of COIMBRA (1597), Rome (1603–1606), and again at Coimbra until his retirement in 1615.

Work and Writings. Besides teaching, Suárez took part in theological disputes. Best known of these was the debate De auxiliis (On the Helps [for Salvation]) between JESUITS and DOMINICANS, concerning divine foreknowledge, CAUSALITY, grace, and human freedom. On the core question of conditional future contingents (called futuribles), Suárez adopted Luis de MOLINA's doctrine of a "middle knowledge" between GOD's knowledge of mere possibles and his knowledge of actual things other than himself. For Molina's view that God knows things other than himself in their actual reality by a "supercomprehension," he substituted a view that God knows such things in an intentional way.

More political was a quarrel between the Republic of Venice and the PAPACY, for which Suárez in 1607 composed a treatise, De immunitate ecclesiastica a Venetis violata (About the ecclesiastical immunity violated by the Venetians). Commending his effort, Pope PAUL V stated that the work revealed him to be "an eminent and pious theologian" (de Scorraille, 1912–1913, vol. 2, pp. 126–127). From this came the honorific title with which Suárez passed into history: Doctor eximius ac pius. Also largely political was a work that appeared at Coimbra in 1613, with a title that translates as A Defense of the Catholic Faith against the Errors of the Anglican Sect, with a Reply to the "Apology" for the "Oath of Fidelity" and the "Warning Preface" of James, the Most Serene King of England. This was condemned by James and publicly burned in London, because in it Suárez opposed the absolute power of kings and defended the indirect authority of the Church over temporal rulers, as well as resistance to a tyrannical monarch, even to a point of TYRANNICIDE.

Most of Suárez's theological writings tracked areas of the Summa theologiae of St. THOMAS AQUINAS. In early volumes the Doctor eximius reproduced Aquinas's text, followed it with brief commentary and then lengthy "disputations." In later volumes the Thomistic framework endured, but the text disappeared and Suárez's own presentation became much more important.

In correlation with the First Part of the Summa theologiae are the Suarezian treatises "On the Divine Substance and Its Attributes," "On Divine Predestination," and "On the Mystery of the Most Holy Trinity," published together at Coimbra in 1606 as De Deo uno et trino (On God, One and Triune). In the same setting are "On the Angels," "On the Work of the Six Days [of Creation]," and "On the Soul," published together posthumously as De Deo effectore creaturarum omnium (On God, the Maker of all Creatures) at Lyons in 1620–1621.

Corresponding to the First Part of the Second Part of the Summa are the treatises "On the Last End of Man," "On the Voluntary and the Involuntary," "On the Goodness and Evil of Human Acts" (which contained Aquinas's teachings on PROBABILISM and moral being), "On Passions and Habits," and "On Vices and Sins," published together at Lyons in 1628. Also here is the important and influential De legibus seu de Deo legislatore (On Laws or on God the Lawgiver). The fruit of Suárez's theological teaching between 1601 and 1603, the De legibus was published at Coimbra in 1612. Again in this Thomistic area are three volumes On Grace, I and III published at Coimbra in 1619 and II at Lyons in 1651. These related to the controversy De auxiliis, as did Two Books on the Knowledge Which God Has of Future Contingents, appearing at Madrid in 1599, and On the True Understanding of [God's] Efficacious Aid, composed in 1604 and 1605 and published at Lyons in 1655. To the Second Part of the Second Part of the Summa correspond On Faith, Hope, and Charity (Lyons and Coimbra, 1621) and four volumes, On the Virtue and State of Religion (containing, among other items, Aquinas's main thoughts on spirituality), of which two appeared at Coimbra in 1608 and 1609 and the others at Lyons in 1624 and 1625.

Conforming to the Summa's Third Part are On the Incarnate Word (Alcalá, 1590), On the Mysteries of the Life of Christ, and On the Sacraments (Alcalá, 1592, and Coimbra, 1602, respectively) plus On Censures (Coimbra, 1603). In On the Mysteries of the Life of Christ, Suárez also develops MARIOLOGY in a systematic manner.

Metaphysics. Outside the Thomistic frame is Suárez's best-known work, the Disputationes metaphysicae (Metaphysical Disputations), published at Salamanca in 1597. Comprising fifty-four "Disputations," the work was intended as Christian philosophy, propaedeutic to theology. It differed from previous metaphysical treatises, which usually had been either short works, such as Aquinas's On Being and Essence, or commentaries on ARISTOTLE. One approach was incomplete and the other too tied to the rambling text of Aristotle. In contrast, Suárez gave a complete systematic exposition of METAPHYSICS.

By any gauge, the Metaphysical Disputations displays huge learning. Through 2,000 pages, after stating each problem, Suárez searched history for solutions offered to it. Almost every Greek, Arabic, Patristic, and Scholastic writer seems cited, as many as twenty-two for a single question. Of 245 authors, Aristotle is most mentioned, a total of 1,735 times, while Aquinas is next, cited 1,008 times. But not just compiling opinions, Suárez clearly presented his own metaphysics, to which end he divided the work into two main parts presented in two tomes.

In "Disputation 1" he explains that the object of metaphysics, which is "being insofar as it is real being," (Suárez, Disputationes metaphysicae, I, s. 1, n. 26, in Opera Omnia, Vol. 25, p. 11) includes all that is actual or possible but excludes BEING of reason and being per accidens. "Disputation 2" considers the concept of being which, transcending all genera, SPECIES, and differences, represents everything real—from extrinsic denominations, through mere possibles, to the purely actual reality of God. The concept itself is further sharpened by two distinctions. The first is between the formal concept as an ACT of the mind and the objective concept as what that act immediately intends as its object. The second falls between being as a participle, which refers to actual existents and being as a noun, which refers to whatever is not a mere fiction but is true in itself and apt to exist. The object of metaphysics is then identified with the common objective concept of being as a noun.

"Disputation 3" treats the transcendental properties (i.e., UNITY, TRUTH, and goodness) of being, and then considers the principles of CONTRADICTION, IDENTITY, and the EXCLUDED MIDDLE. In "Disputation 4," Suárez discusses unity. This continues in "Disputation 5," with discussion of INDIVIDUATION, and in "Disputation 6," which deals with UNIVERSALS. Still under unity, "Disputation 7" considers real, rational, and modal distinctions. "Disputation 8" discusses transcendental truth, which is balanced by a discussion of FALSITY in "Disputation 9." Transcendental goodness is the subject of "Disputation 10," which is followed by a treatment of EVIL in "Disputation 11." After the properties of being, in "Disputations" 12 through 27 there is treatment of the causes of being. "Disputation 12" treats causes in general while "Disputations" 13–25 deal with material, formal, efficient, and final causes. "Disputation 26" compares causes with effects, and "Disputation 27" rounds out the first part of the work with consideration of the relations of causes to one another.

The second part descends to items under the common concept of being as a noun. "Disputation 28"—of which Section 3 presents the analogy of being—divides being into infinite and finite. Infinite being is the subject of the next two disputations. The existence of God is demonstrated in "Disputation 29." Suárez rejects any physical proof that would use the principle "Everything that is moved is moved by another," to pass from motion to a First Mover. Instead, he proceeds metaphysically, in a way that, reflecting AVICENNA, employs the principle "Everything which comes to be, comes to be by another" and follows the analogous concept of being from lesser and lower being to a First Being. "Disputation 30" investigates divine perfection, simplicity, immensity, immutability, WISDOM, and OMNIPOTENCE. "Disputation 31" begins treatment of FINITE BEING with the denial of a real distinction between essence and existence in creatures. "Disputation 32" considers SUBSTANCE and ACCIDENT in general. Substance is treated in the next four disputations, whereas the categories of accident are the subject matter of "Disputations" 37 to 53. Important here is "Disputation 47"; it considers real relations, which may be transcendental or categorical. Transcendental relations—as between matter and form, accidents and substance, creatures and God—transcend categories, whereas categorical relations are restricted to the category of relation. Every categorical relation (e.g., one of likeness) involves a real SUBJECT (e.g., one man), a real terminus (e.g., another man), and a real foundation (say, whiteness). Suárez maintains that such a relation is reducible to its foundation as this exists in its subject and connotes a terminus. "Disputation 54" concludes the work with a discussion of "beings of reason," comprising negations, privations, and mind-dependent relations. Suárez added a "Most Ample Index to the Metaphysics of Aristotle," which amounted to a medium-size commentary on Aristotle's work.

On the Soul. The Tractatus de anima (On the SOUL), which Suárez regarded as part of the Aristotelian philosophy of nature, as well as complementary to theology, once again presents its subject systematically. Its six books treat the nature, attributes, faculties, operations, and ultimate status of the rational soul. This soul, the only substantial form of a human being, is through distinct powers the source of vegetative, sensitive, and intellectual activities. Departing from the general Scholastic tradition, Suárez united the common sense, imagination, memory, and the estimative sense in one internal sense power. At another level, he distinguished between the adequate object of the INTELLECT as such (i.e., being as being, which embraces all intelligible items, including beings of reason) and the object of the human intellect in its present state (i.e., sensible or material things). On the level of the intellect, Suárez allows for a direct and immediate knowledge of the singular.

The excellence of its intellectual operations indicates the spirituality and the transcendence of the soul over the body. Suárez offers two un-Aristotelian proofs for the soul's immortality. First, inasmuch as the soul is spiritual and incorporeal it is also substantially simple. It is, then, incorruptible and thus immortal. Second, under the JUSTICE OF GOD, evildoers should be punished and GOOD persons rewarded. Since that often does not happen in this life, there must be another life in which it can happen, and this can only be if the soul is immortal. But in any AFTERLIFE, the soul without the body would be incomplete, which suggests an argument for the resurrection of the body.

Law and Political Theory. Suárez was just as learned in LAW and political science as in metaphysics. All law is rooted in the "Eternal Law," which is a decree of God's will, establishing the order to be observed either generally in the universe or especially by intellectual creatures in their free operations. In his emphasis on God's will, Suárez parted company from Aquinas, who identified the eternal law with divine reason governing the universe. For both Suárez and Aquinas, the natural law is immediately derived from the eternal law. Residing in human minds, it enables human beings naturally to discern what is morally good or evil. In De legibus, Suárez says that natural law first embraces general principles such as "Good must done and evil avoided." Next come principles more particular but evident from their terms, such as "Justice should be observed," "God should be worshipped," or "One should live with self-control." From these principles conclusions are derived that are more or less easily known (e.g., that ADULTERY and THEFT are wrong). Needing more reasoning and not easily known by all are conclusions such as "Fornication is intrinsically evil" or "Lying is never justified." Although they may be affected extrinsically from circumstances, true precepts of NATURAL LAW cannot be abrogated or diminished by any human law or power. Suárez rejects both WILLIAM OF OCKHAM's opinion that God can dispense from the entire Decalogue and John DUNS SCOTUS's view that God can dispense from Decalogue commands that relate to creatures. Rather, the whole Decalogue is indispensable, even by the absolute power of God. Thus, despite its root in divine will, law is not arbitrary either for men or for God.

Verging on natural law, the law of nations (jus gentium) is human law, positive but unwritten. Established by the customs of almost all nations, it can in principle, although not with ease, be changed. In one sense, it is "the law of nations among themselves (inter se)," a law that nations must observe with regard to one another. Items such as the immunity of ambassadors and free commerce, as well as the right of war (jus belli), belong to the jus gentium in this sense. In a second way, it is "the law of nations within themselves (intra se)." This is the law individual states commonly observe within their own borders. Items like private property, buying and selling, and the use of money, belong to the jus gentium in this second way. The first way, in effect an international law, is most properly called the law of nations.

War should be avoided whenever possible. But at times war may be the only option for the preservation of the republic, which has a right and even a duty to defend itself. For the justice of any war, a legitimate, public, and supreme authority was required to declare it. Also needed was a just cause of sufficient gravity. Right conduct should rule at the start of a war, in its prosecution, and in victory. Authority to declare and wage war is based on one state's right to punish or avenge an injury done to it by another. According to Suárez, each state, supreme in its own order (i.e., the temporal order) with no tribunal beyond, has the authority to forcibly redress injuries against itself. In this, Suárez departed from Vitoria, for whom a state should redress injuries "by the authority of the whole world" (Doyle 1991–1992, p. 907). This difference between the two great Scholastics is reflected in debates about each nation's right to defend its own interests versus its obligations to the community of nations.

Because civil power is similar among Christians and pagans, Christians cannot have more reason than pagans for a just war. Neither can Christians make war against pagans for the sole reason that pagans lack faith. By Suárez's day, issues occasioned by the evangelization of the American Indians were largely settled for Catholic thinkers. The common view was that the Indians were persons, masters of their own lives and possessions, and that it was never lawful, absent just cause, to subjugate or despoil them—even in order to evangelize them. This was Suárez's position. Against any application to the American Indians of Aristotle's division of human beings into those fitted by nature to rule and those who were by nature slaves, Suárez's view was straightforward: It is unbelievable that people in any region have all been born "monstrous and in a way that contradicts the natural disposition" (Doyle 1991–1992, p. 890) of human beings to be free. Rather, because they have been created in the IMAGE OF GOD, persons in all regions are equally capable of dominion over themselves and their possessions.

In origin, the republic is natural. But it is also voluntary inasmuch as free persons, who are naturally inclined to political association, must still agree to it. States then arise from a "consensus," explicit or tacit, freely entered into by communities. People are not by nature forced to choose a particular form of state, and in fact, different, naturally equal forms exist. In practice, the best government is a MONARCHY. But what form a monarchy takes and how much power any monarch has will depend on the initial grant of the people. Thus, civil authority or power, in any form, is ultimately from nature and God but immediately from the people.

Although each state is "supreme in its own order" (Doyle 1991–1992, p. 907), the power of one ends where that of another begins, according to Suárez. Again, while the state has power to enact laws from which there is no appeal to any other earthly tribunal, the power of any state, even within its own territory, is not absolute. Although ordinarily their gift of power is irrevocable, in principle the people retain authority over their government. Hence, as the common good demands, political power, even that of a monarch, may be changed or limited. State power is also limited at the private zones of persons and families, which are by nature prior to the state. For even at a natural level human beings seek a happiness beyond the reach of civil power and civil laws. At another level, God has given men a Revelation and a Church, through which he has called all to a supernatural HAPPINESS. Much less then, will state power and laws reach to this level of human reality.

In contrast with temporal power—which is from God but whose immediate origin is human—ecclesial power is immediately "from the special promise and grant of Christ" (Doyle 1991–1992, p. 895). While church and state are each supreme in its own order, the fundamental relation between the two is hierarchical. State power in this world aims at a common temporal good of political happiness, which does require ethical behavior. Beyond this, the power of the one Christian church, aimed at the eternal SALVATION of its members, is directly within the spiritual order. Indirectly, however, that church has power, at least over a Christian state, even in temporal matters. Suárez counts it a plus for Christian states that their power is raised to a new height as it is subordinated to the Church.

SEE ALSO CATEGORIES OF BEING; CONGRUISM; SUAREZIANISM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jesús Iturrioz,"Bibliografía suareciana," Pensamiento 4, número extraordinario (1948): 603–638.

Ceferino Santos-Escudero, "Bibliografía suareciana de 1948 a 1980," Cuadernos Salmantinos de Filosofía 7 (1980): 337–375.

Jacob Schmutz, with Salvador Castellote Cubells, Francisco Suárez (1548–1617): Bibliographie Generale (Madrid, 2005), available from http://www.scholasticon.fr/bibsuarez.htm (accessed March 10, 2008).

WORKS BY FRANCISCO SUÁREZ

De anima: Commentaria una cum quaestionibus in libros Aristotelis De anima, introducción y edición crítica por Salvador Castellote, 3 vols. (Madrid 1978–1991). Various English translations published by Marquette University Press, Milwaukee, Wis. (1947–2006).

The Metaphysical Demonstration of the Existence of God: Metaphysical Disputations 28–29, translated by John P. Doyle (South Bend, Ind. 2004).

The Metaphysics of Good and Evil According to Suárez, translated by Jorge J. E. Gracia and Douglas Davis (Munich, Germany 1989).

On Creation, Conservation, and Concurrence: Metaphysical

Disputations 20, 21, and 22, translated by Alfred J. Freddoso (South Bend, Ind. 2002).

On Efficient Causality: Metaphysical Disputations 17, 18, and 19, translated by Alfred J. Freddoso (New Haven, Conn. 1994).

Opera omnia, 28 vols. (Paris 1856–1878).

General Studies on Suárez and Biography

Gonzalo Díaz Díaz, "Suárez, Francisco," in Hombres y documentos de la Filosofia Española, Vol. vii (Madrid 2003), 383–426.

John P. Doyle, "Suárez, Francisco," in Routledge Encyclopedia of Philosophy, general editor, Edward Craig (New York 1998), 9:189–196.

E. Elorduy, "Suárez, Francisco," in Diccionario histórico de la Compañía de Jesús, edited by Charles E. O'Neill and Joaquín Ma. Domínguez (Rome and Madrid 2001), 4:3654–3656.

F. Rodríguez, "Suárez (François)," in Dictionnaire de spiritualité ascétique et mystique (Paris 1990), 14:1275–1283.

Raoul de Scorraille, François Suárez de la Compagnie de Jesus, 2 vols. (Paris 1912–1913).

Particular Studies on Suárez

Adelino Cardoso et al., eds., Francisco Suárez (1548–1617), Tradição e Modernidade (Lisbon, Portugal 1999).

Jean-François Courtine, Suárez et le système de la métaphysique (Paris 1990).

Rolf Darge, Suárez' transzendentale Seinsauslegung und die Metaphysiktradition (Boston 2004).

John P. Doyle, "Suárez on Beings of Reason and Truth," Parts 1 and 2, Vivarium 25, no. 1 (1987): 47–75; 26, no. 1 (1988): 51–72.

John P. Doyle, "Francisco Suárez: On Preaching the Gospel to People Like the American Indians," Fordham International Law Journal 15 (1991–1992): 879–951.

João Manuel A. A. Fernandes, Die Theorie der Interpretation des Gesetzes bei Francisco Suárez (Frankfurt, Germany and New York 2005).

Elisabeth Gemmeke, Die Metaphysik des sittlich Guten bei Franz Suárez (Freiburg, Germany 1965).

Jorge J. E. Gracia, "Francisco Suárez: The Man in History," Special Issue, American Catholic Philosophical Quarterly 65 (1991): 3.

José Hellin, ed., La analogia del ser y el conocimiento de Dios en Suárez (Madrid 1947).

Joaquín Iriarte, "La proyección sobre Europa de una gran metafísica, o Suárez en la filosofía de los días del Barocco," Razón y fe 138 (1948): 229–265.

José Pereira, Suárez: Between Scholasticism and Modernity (Milwaukee, Wis. 2007).

Teresa Rinaldi, Francisco Suárez: cognitio singularis materialis: De anima (Bari, Italy 1998).

Heinrich Albert Rommen, Die Staatslehre des Franz Suárez (Munich-Gladbach, Germany 1927).

Norman J. Wells, "Suárez on the Eternal Truths, I and II," Modern Schoolman, 58 (1980–81): 73–104, 159–174.

John P. Doyle
Professor Emeritus, Department of Philosophy,
St. Louis University, St. Louis, Mo.
Distinguished Professor of Philosophy,
Kenrick-Glennon Seminary, Shrewsbury, Mo. (2010)

SURIANO, GIUSEPPINA, BL.

Foundress, Daughters of Mary, Partinico, Italy; b. February 18, 1915, Partinico; d. May 19, 1950, Partinico; beatified September 5, 2004, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Born to Giuseppe Suriano and Graziella Costantino, Giuseppina, known as Pina, was a pious and loving child. She was enrolled at the nursery school of the Collegiate Sisters of St. Anthony at the age of four and then attended public school in Partinico. She became a member of the lay organization CATHOLIC ACTION in 1922, and increased her activities in the Church as she matured.

Though she displayed a vocation from an early age, Pina's family was unanimously opposed to her plan to enter religious life. Her mother took extreme steps to dissuade Pina from pursuing her desire; the family wanted the young woman to marry and raise a family. Unable to overcome her family's objections, Pina continued to pursue lay activities in the parish and diocese, and became a leader in the community. Her public persona, however, belied deep despair and a sense of isolation. Her diary reveals her anguish: "My soul cries out and is in danger of falling into a bottomless pit ... it is a constant martyrdom of the heart." She wrote of her feeling of abandonment, even by God, but also of offering her pain as a sacrifice for her faith.

Pina respectfully refused all suitors and, on April 29, 1932, took a personal vow of CHASTITY that she renewed monthly. She became the secretary of Catholic Action in 1939. In 1940 Pina's family finally agreed to let her enter the Institute of the Daughters of St. Anne in Palermo to begin religious training. Medical tests revealed a heart condition, and Pina was forced to leave the convent after only eight days. She returned to Partinico and her work as secretary for Catholic Action, and was president of Youth Catholic Action from 1945 to 1948.

In 1948 Pina created an organization called the Daughters of Mary, which she led as president until her death. Also that year she was diagnosed with a particularly severe form of rheumatoid arthritis that probably exacerbated her heart condition and contributed to her death. Unable to realize her dream of becoming a nun but with the unabated desire to demonstrate her devotion, Pina and three other women offered themselves as victims for the sanctification of priests on Easter Sunday, March 30, 1948. In beatifying her Pope John Paul II noted her "ardent and faithful love" of Jesus and her "simple, steadfast desire to give her young life to God as an offering of love and especially for the sanctification and perseverance of priests."

Feast: May 19.

SEE ALSO BEATIFICATION; ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Beata Pina Suriano," Blessed Pina Suriano Official Web site, available from http://www.pinasuriano.it/index_en.htm (accessed August 30, 2009).

John Paul II, "Visit of His Holiness John Paul II to Loreto, Celebration of Mass for the Beatification of: Pere Tarrés I Claret, Alberto Marvelli, Pina Suriano" (Homily, September 5, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20040905_loreto_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Massimo Naro, L'amore è il distintivo: Pina Suriano, la sua cittá e il suo tempo (San Cataldo, Italy 2004).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Giuseppina Suriano (1915–1950)," Vatican Web site, September 5, 2004, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20040905_suriano_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York, N.Y. (2010)

SZYMKOWIAK, SANCJA (SANTIA), BL.

Baptized Janina, religious, Daughters of the Sorrowful Mother of God (Seraphic Sisters), Poznań, Poland; b. July 11, 1910, Mozdzanów, Poland; d. August 29, 1942, Poznań; beatified August 18, 2002, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Janina, as she was baptized, was one of five children born to a wealthy family. Unusual for a girl of those times, she was encouraged in her studies and, due to her family's privileged position, able to pursue an advanced education. After graduating from high school, she attended the University of Poznań's program of foreign language and literature, where she studied French. During the summer of 1934 she made a pilgrimage to the shrine of the Blessed Virgin in LOURDES, France. The experience proved to be a turning point in Janina's life. She consecrated herself to the Virgin and entered the convent of the Oblate Sisters of the Sacred Heart at Montluçon. After many months, Janina gave in to her family's wishes and returned to Poland.

Janina was resolved to enter religious life, writing that "Jesus wants me to be a holy religious, and he will not be happy with me until I use all my strength for him and become a saint. God is everything, I am nothing." In 1936 she joined the Daughters of the Sorrowful Mother of God in Poznań, taking the name Maria Sancja. On June 30, 1938, Sr. Sancja took first vows. Thereafter she worked in a nursery school and started a course in pharmacology, which was interrupted by the Nazi invasion of Poland in 1939.

The congregation was forced to work for the occupying forces and to care for the English and French soldiers who had been taken prisoner and were held at the convent. Conditions were extremely hard, but Sr. Sancja never stopped in her efforts to alleviate the pain and suffering that was all around her. Given an opportunity to leave the convent and return to her family in 1940, she refused, wishing to remain with her sisters. Sr. Sancja's unflagging spirit, despite the terrible conditions of privation, became a mainstay of strength for those around her, particularly the prisoners who saw her as an "angel of goodness."

Sr. Sancja took solemn vows on July 6, 1942, although she was already in failing health, and she died on August 29, 1942. In beatifying her in a ceremony in Poland, Pope John Paul II said that the "work of mercy" led Sr. Sancja to commit her life to God, and that even through the horror of war she "considered her religious vocation a gift of Divine Mercy."

Feast: August 29.

SEE ALSO BEATIFICATION; POLAND, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); WORLD WAR II.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Blessed Sr. Sancja," Congregation of the Daughters of the Sorrowful Mother of God Web site, available from http://www.seraphicsisters.com/index.php?page=pages/sistersancja.html&menu_id=10 (accessed August 30, 2009).

Paul Burns, ed., Butler's Lives of the Saints: The Third Millennium (London 2005).

John Paul II, "Apostolic Voyage to Poland, Holy Mass and Beatifications: Zygmunt Szczęsny Feliński, Jan Balicki, Jan Beyzym, Sancja Szymkowiak" (Homily, August 18, 2002), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2002/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20020818_beatification-krakow_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Sancja Szymkowiak (1910–1942)," Vatican Web site, August 18, 2002, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_ lit_doc_20020818_szymkowiak_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York, N.Y. (2010)

T

TADINI, ARCÁNGELO, ST.

Diocesan priest, founder of the Congregation of Worker Sisters of the Holy House of Nazareth; b. Verolanuova near Brescia, Lombardy, Italy, October 12, 1846; d. Botticino Sera, Brescia, May 20, 1912; beatified October 3, 1999, by Pope JOHN PAUL II; canonized April 26, 2009, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Arcángelo Tadini was the youngest in a noble family headed by Pietro Tadini, a widower with seven children by his first wife, along with four by his second wife, Antonia Gadola. Arcángelo's father, the communal secretary and a patriot during the struggle for Italian independence, died in 1860. A sickly child, Arcángelo studied in the local schools until he entered secondary school at Lovere. He began his seminary studies in Brescia in 1864 at age eighteen. An accident during these years left him with a limp. He was ordained in 1870, but due to illness he remained for a year with his family.

After he regained his health, Fr. Tadini served as a parish priest and elementary school teacher in the mountain village of Lodrino in Voltrompia (1871–1873), at Santa Maria della Noce near Brescia (1873–1885), and for a brief time at San Nazzaro in Brescia. At one point, after a flood devastated his parish, he set up a soup kitchen that served three hundred meals a day. In 1885 he was transferred to Botticino Sera, where he ministered for the rest of his life. There, he proved himself a zealous pastor, who preached with a warmth and conviction that energized his parish to come alive with many activities, including a choir, catechetical classes for all ages, and various confraternities.

By promoting the sanctification of daily work, Fr. Tadini gave flesh to the teachings of Rerum novarum (Of new things), an encyclical on the rights and duties of capital and labor issued by Pope LEO XIII in 1891. He taught his parishioners that work is not a burden but a way in which men and women can become holy in their daily lives. With the spread of the Industrial Revolution, Fr. Tadini found ample ways to serve the local people. In order to help ill, disabled, and elderly workers, he founded the Workers' Mutual Aid Association. In addition, he established an agricultural cooperative and built a spinning factory with his own inheritance to provide work for the unemployed, acquiring the adjacent villa to house the female workers. To ensure the continuance of his work, Fr. Tadini founded the Congregation of Worker Sisters of the Holy House of Nazareth in 1900. The sisters went into factories to work alongside those whom they sought to evangelize. Today, the order operates in Italy, England, Switzerland, Africa, and Latin America.

Fr. Tadini, who came to be known as the Apostle of the Working World, taught his parishioners to sanctify the workplace, taking the Holy Family of Nazareth as their example. During his life, he had a deep and steadfast devotion to the Eucharist, which gave impetus to all his charitable works. At his BEATIFICATION in 1999, Pope John Paul II emphasized this devotion to the Eucharist:

> In the school of the Eucharist he learned to break the bread of God's Word, to practice charity, and to respond with pastoral resourcefulness to the social and religious challenges that marked the end of the last century.... The needs arising then in the working world spurred his pastor's heart to search for new ways to proclaim and bear witness to the Gospel.

At his canonization in 2009, Pope Benedict XVI also emphasized this Eucharistic theme, stating: "He reminds us that only by cultivating a constant and profound relationship with the Lord, especially in the Sacrament of the Eucharist, can we bring the Gospel leaven to the various fields of work and to every area of our society."

Feast: May 20.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "Holy Mass for the Canonization of Arcángelo Tadini, Bernardo Tolomei, Nuno de Santa Maria Alvares Pereira, Gertrude Comensoli and Caterina Volpicelli" (Homily, April 26, 2009), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2009/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20090426_canonizzazioni_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Luigi Fossati, Don Arcángelo Tadini e la sua opera sociale (Brescia, Italy 1977).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six Servants of God: Ferdinand Mary Baccilieri, Edward Joannes Maria Poppe, Arcángelo Tadini, Mariano of Roccacasale, Diego Oddi and Nicholas of Gesturi" (Homily, October 3, 1999), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/1999/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_03101999_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Franco Molinari and Alberto Comuzzi, Il prete sociale e le operaie di Dio (Brescia, Italy 1990).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Arcángelo Tadini (1846–1912)," Vatican Web site, April 26, 2009, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2009/ns_lit_doc_20090426_tadini_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

L'Osservatore Romano, Italian daily edition (October 6, 1999): 2.

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Laurie Malashanko
Independent Scholar
Ann Arbor, Michigan (2010)

TALAMONI, LUIGI, BL.

Priest and founder, Congregation of the Merciful Sisters of St. Gerard (Suore Misericordine); b. October 3, 1848, Monza, Italy; d. January 31, 1926, Milan, Italy; beatified March 21, 2004, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Born to hatter Giuseppe Talamoni and his wife Maria Sala, Luigi was the second oldest of six children. A devout child, he went to daily Mass with his father and was an altar boy. He attended the oratorio at Carrobiolo, an institution run by Barnabite priests serving young men who wanted to study for the priesthood but were unable to pay for training. In 1865 Luigi transferred to the Theological Seminary at Milan to complete his religious studies. He was ordained on March 4, 1871; he also was awarded a degree in literature and PHILOSOPHY from a lay institution. Fr. Talamoni taught at Collegio San Carlo in Milan, and in 1875 he was assigned to the seminary in Monza.

Fr. Talamoni's tenure at the seminary at Monza, where he worked for the rest of his life, was marked by considerable difficulty. Internal conflict caused incidents of personal cruelty among the priests, who had divided themselves into liberal and conservative factions. Fr. Talamoni, perhaps considered too traditional in his faith, was the butt of jokes and attempts by some to cause embarrassment and humiliation. Throughout Fr. Talamoni showed himself to be honorable and forgiving, never allowing himself to become mean-spirited or angry.

Fr. Talamoni taught and spent a great deal of time hearing confessions; in this latter role he served both the lay population and his fellow priests. He was a well-respected spiritual guide and trainer for priests and religious. Unusual for the time, he accepted civil obligations by serving on the city council at Monza from 1893 to 1916, and again from 1923 to 1926.

Untiring in service to the poor, Fr. Talamoni was particularly devoted to the homebound elderly and sick. Providently, the priest, desperate to find a way to serve this population, met Maria Biffi Levati, a laywoman of great faith, who was also dedicated to easing the suffering of those sick people living in poverty. Together they founded the Congregation of the Merciful Sisters of St. Gerard in 1891. Fr. Talamoni wrote the first rules of the congregation.

Achille Ratti, the future Pope PIUS XI, taught by Fr. Talamoni as a high school seminary student, called him a "gem of Ambrosian [Milanese] clergy." In beatifying him, Pope John Paul II said Fr. Talamoni stood as "a faithful reflection of God's mercy," and lauded his work as confessor, minister to prisoners, and champion of the sick indigent.

Feast: January 31.

SEE ALSO BEATIFICATION; DIRECTION, SPIRITUAL; ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Beato Luigi Talamoni," Suore Misericordine Web site, available from http://www.suoremisericordine.it/Beato.htm (accessed August 30, 2009).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Four Servants of God" (Homily, March 21, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20040321_beatifications_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Luigi Talamoni (1848–1926)," Vatican Web site, March 21, 2004, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20040321_talamoni_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Rosella Radaelli and Riccardo Rosa, "Prete e consigliere comunale, è il primo beato di Monza," Corriere della Sera (March 20, 2004): 54.

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York, N.Y. (2010)

TAPARELLI D'AZEGLIO, LUIGI

Baptized Prospero; Jesuit priest, social, political, economic, and NATURAL LAW theorist; b. Turin, Italy, November 24, 1793; d. Rome, September 20, 1862.

Son of the Marquis Cesare d'Azeglio, of ancient Piedmontese nobility, young Prospero was inducted into the military academy of Saint-Cyr in Paris in 1809, and released after a few months upon request to study for the priesthood. The marquis served King Vittorio Emanuele I in exile and, after Napoleon's fall, was made ambassador to the HOLY SEE. He took a leading role in the early Catholic action movement.

In 1814 Prospero, taking the name Luigi after St. ALOYSIUS GONZAGA, entered the novitiate of the reinstituted Society of Jesus. He became director of the Collegio di Novara in 1818, and the first rector of the restored Collegio Romano (later, GREGORIAN UNIVERSITY) in 1824. Concluding as early as 1825 that philosophical confusion required a return to SCHOLASTIC PHILOSOPHY, Taparelli formed a clandestine circle at the Gregorian to study the writings of St. THOMAS AQUINAS, and he advocated in 1827 for the society to reaffirm its commitment to the Angelic Doctor in the revised Ratio Studiorum. In this period, Gioacchino Pecci, future Pope LEO XIII, was among his students. Taparelli was relocated to Naples in 1829, where as provincial he brought together other supporters of the scholastic cause. He was relocated again in 1833, to the Collegio Massimo in Palermo, where he taught, among other things, natural law. This led to the composition of his magnum opus, the Saggio Teoretico di Dritto Naturale Appogiatto sul Fatto (Theoretical Treatise on Natural Law Based on Fact, 1840–1843), in which he sought to refound modern political thought on Catholic anthropology. His novel methodological approach to social and political questions involved confronting rights and duties derived from scholastic natural law reasoning with empirical historical facts, resolving competing rights and interests with JUSTICE and PRUDENCE, and confirming conclusions in the light of revelation and sound doctrine. Taparelli developed the view that subjective rights were the product of objective human duties; thus the duty of "sociality" yields a right of association. He coined the new term "social justice" to describe the rights (and duties) of intermediary associations formed thereby, governed by the principle of SUBSIDIARITY (his phrase, "dritto ipotettico"), which defines the hierarchy of rights and duties between interrelated associations that make up every vital society. Versions of the book were translated into German, Spanish, and French for use in Jesuit schools. In Palermo during the revolutions of 1848, Taparelli defended the claims of the rebels and the freedom of the Church in the pamphlet Sulla Libertà di Associazione, which precipitated his temporary exile from the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies.

In 1849 Pope PIUS IX invited Taparelli and two colleagues, Carlo Maria CURCI, S.J., and Matteo LIBERATORE, S.J., to establish a journal to engage the reigning ideas of the day, La Civiltà Cattolica. Taparelli wrote biweekly essays for the journal from 1850 until his death in 1862, and in these he applied the scholastic natural law principles of man and society that he developed in the Saggio to pressing economic, social, and political issues. Taparelli's dialectical method and the polemical zeal with which he deconstructed liberal shibboleths irritated even moderate Catholic liberals, and fostered a lasting prejudice in RISORGIMENTO Italy and across liberal Europe, especially among those who had only superficial knowledge of his writings. The separate publication of a series of articles critical of the absolute claims for representative government, Esame critico degli ordini rappresentativi nella società moderna (1854), contributed to the simplistic characterization of his political ideals. Toward the end of his life, while he was working on the emerging science of political economy (series translated into French by Robert Jacquin, Essai sur les principes philosophiques de l'économie politique, Paris, 1943), Taparelli indicated the need for economists to account for the "three motors" of human action: material interests, social interests, and spiritual interests. Few scholars have elaborated on the significance of this neo-Aristotelian-Thomistic psychology for social scientific inquiry.

Shifting political contexts and the course of the Thomistic revival itself tended to obscure Taparelli's paradigmatic contribution to Catholic social thought, let alone the significance of his social scientific methodology. Taparelli's influence on Leo XIII is evident in the encyclical Aeterni Patris (1879), on restoring Thomistic philosophy, and in the "magna carta of Catholic social thought," Rerum novarum (1891), the last draft of which was written by Taparelli's protégé, Liberatore. The Jesuit Oswald von Nell-Breuning employed Taparelli's principles of sociality (or solidarism, as rephrased by Heinrich Pesch, S.J.) and subsidiarity in the drafting of PIUS XI's Quadragesimo anno. Pius XI believed that Taparelli's writings could "never be studied enough" (Divini illius magistri, 1939), and ranked Taparelli in importance for Catholic thought right after St. Thomas himself.

SEE ALSO AETERNI PATRIS; ANTHROPOLOGY, THEOLOGICAL; CIVILTÀ CATTOLICA, LA; DIVINI ILLIUS MAGISTRI; JESUITS; NAPOLEON I; QUADRAGESIMO ANNO; RERUM NOVARUM; SOCIAL JUSTICE; SOCIAL THOUGHT, CATHOLIC; TAPARELLI D'AZEGLIO, MASSIMO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Thomas Behr, "Luigi Taparelli d'Azeglio, S.J. (1793–1862) and the Development of Scholastic Natural-Law Thought as a Science of Society and Politics," Journal of Markets and Morality 6, no. 1 (Spring 2003): 99–115.

Thomas Behr, "Luigi Taparelli's Natural Law Approach to Social Economics," Journal des Economistes et des Études Humaines 13, nos. 2/3 (June/September 2003): 213–233.

Thomas Behr, "Luigi Taparelli and Social Justice: Rediscovering the Origins of a 'Hollowed' Concept," Social Justice in Context 1 (2005): 3–16.

Francesco Dante, Storia della "Civiltà Cattolica" (1850–1891) (Rome 1990).

Gabrielle DeRosa, I Gesuiti in Sicilia e la Rivoluzione del '48 (Rome 1963).

Gabrielle DeRosa, Il movimento cattolico in Italia, Dalla Restaurazione all'età giolittiana (Rome 1988).

Paul Droulers, S.J., "Quéstion Sociale, Etat, Eglise dans la 'Civiltà Cattolica' à ses Débuts," in Cattolicesimo Sociale nei Secoli XIX e XX (Rome 1982).

Robert Jacquin, S.J., Taparelli (Paris 1943).

Gerald A. McCool, S.J., Nineteenth-Century Scholasticism, the Search for a Unitary Method (New York 1977).

Pietro Pirri, S.J., Carteggi del Padre Taparelli d'Azeglio (Turin, Italy 1932).

Thomas C. Behr
Lecturer, Department of History
Director, Liberal Studies
University of Houston (2010)

TAPARELLI D'AZEGLIO, MASSIMO

Piedmontese statesman, Italian unification leader, author, and painter; b. Turin, Italy, October 24, 1798; d. Turin, January 15, 1866.

Massimo was the son of the Marquis Cesare d'Azeglio and brother of Jesuit NATURAL LAW theorist, Luigi Taparelli d'Azeglio. His first wife was Giulia Manzoni, daughter of author Alessandro Manzoni. Massimo was Prime Minister (1849–1852) of the Kingdom of Sardinia (Piedmont) under VICTOR EMMANUEL II.

As a young man, Massimo set out in ROME as a painter of romantic and patriotic subjects. He turned to writing historical novels with the hope of having greater political impact. His patriotic novels Ettore Fieramosca (1833) and Niccolò de' Lapi (1841) brought him some early popularity. In his pamphlet Degli ultimi casi di Romagna (1846, On the Latest Events in Romagna), d'Azeglio criticized both the clerical administration of the Papal States as well as the ineffective insurrectionary approach to Italian unification advocated by Giuseppe MAZZINI and other radicals. That pamphlet thrust him to the forefront of nationalist politics. Believing war inevitable with Austria over its claims in Lombardy and the Veneto, and with the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies, supported by Austria and Russia, d'Azeglio had early on been convinced Italian unification could be accomplished only through Franco-Piedmontese military might. D'Azeglio's memoir of his upbringing and early career, I miei ricordi, is an important RISORGIMENTO autobiography.

As a constitutional monarchist, the moderately liberal (now Marquis) d'Azeglio was briefly among the leaders of the neo-Guelf movement, supporting an Italian confederation under symbolic papal leadership before the ill-fated First Italian War of Independence (1848–1849). With the military defeat and abdication of Carlo Alberto, Victor Emmanuel invited d'Azeglio to form a government to negotiate peace with Austria and to salvage what he could of Piedmont's constitutional government in the face of popular but unrealistic demands to renew the war. D'Azeglio brought Count Camillo di CAVOUR into the cabinet in 1850, out of respect for his experience with industrial and financial matters. He soon came to regret the latter's opportunism and ambition, however, as Cavour conspired successfully to supplant him as prime minister with a more aggressive unification program.

The anticlerical d'Azeglio's relationship with his Jesuit brother Luigi is among the more interesting personal dramas of Risorgimento Italy. As one of the chief writers of the papal intellectual journal La Civiltà Cattolica, Luigi was publicly among the chief defenders of the temporal authority of the pope. Correspondence of the two reveals an abiding respect and fraternal love, as well as much closer shared social and political perspectives than has been widely known or imagined. Massimo wrote to their brother Roberto concerning Luigi, "It is odd that while he has such a fervent faith, and I am altogether on the other side, that we are almost always in agreement on the social questions" (Jacquin 1943, p. 74).

SEE ALSO ANTICLERICALISM; CIVILTÀ CATTOLICA, LA; JESUITS; NEO-

GUELFISM; TAPARELLI D'AZEGLIO, LUIGI.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Frank J. Coppa, The Origins of the Italian Wars of Independence (New York 1992).

M. Craveri, "Un gesuità in una familia de liberali: Padre Luigi Taparelli d'Azeglio," Nuova Rivista Storica, 1968, v. 52, 631–660.

Massimo D'Azeglio, Things I Remember (I miei ricordi) (London 1966).

Harry Hearder, Italy in the Age of the Risorgimento, 1790–1870 (New York 1983).

Robert Jacquin, S.J., Taparelli (Paris 1943).

Pietro Pirri, S.J., Carteggi del Padre Taparelli d'Azeglio (Turin, Italy 1932).

Denis Mack Smith, The Making of Italy, 1796–1866 (New York 1988).

Thomas C. Behr
Lecturer, Department of History
Director, Liberal Studies
University of Houston (2010)

TARRÉS I CLARET, PERE (PETER), BL.

Priest and doctor; b. May 30, 1905, Manresa, Spain; d. August 31, 1950, Barcelona; beatified September 5, 2004, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Born to pious parents of modest means, Pere was a quiet and thoughtful child. A loving brother to his sisters, who both entered religious life, Pere showed an early interest in medicine and worked in a local pharmacy. Awarded a scholarship, he began medical studies in 1921 in Barcelona.

Kindling a strong devotion to the Holy Eucharist and the Blessed Mother, Pere first became actively involved in Catholic organizations during his medical training. He joined the lay Federation of Young Christians and led by example in the group's apostolic work. He served as president of the local branch and later as the vice president of the federal group. A member of CATHOLIC ACTION, another lay organization dedicated to addressing social issues from the Catholic perspective, Pere served as vice secretary and secretary of the diocesan committee. He was an inspirational voice in both groups.

Pere's personal faith guided his work as a doctor, and he was known as a compassionate and selfless healer. The Spanish Civil War heralded a time of persecution against Christians by the Spanish government, and for a time, Pere lived in hiding, but in 1938 he was conscripted and served as a military doctor. The physical and psychic horrors of war haunted Pere. A gifted writer, he recounted his experiences in diaries that were published as El meu diari de guerra: 1938–1939.

Emerging from the war years with the belief that God wanted him to heal not only bodies but also souls, in 1939 Pere began religious training at the seminary in Barcelona, and he was ordained in 1942. He was awarded a degree in theology from the Pontifical University of Salamanca in 1944. Returning to Barcelona, Fr. Pere continued his work of ministering to the poor and became the spiritual advisor to religious congregations and to a hospital that cared for prostitutes; he was appointed the diocese's delegate for the welfare of women. He also continued his work with Catholic Action.

Diagnosed with lymphatic cancer and facing death, Fr. Pere wrote of the "joy to have the possibility to be a priest." In beatifying him, Pope John Paul II noted that "he devoted himself with special concern to the poorest of the sick, convinced that 'the sick person is a symbol of the suffering Christ.'" In 1936, during his residency, Fr. Pere cofounded a clinic that served the poor in the community. That clinic is now the site of the Pere Tarrés Foundation, which is dedicated to continuing Fr. Pere's work.

Feast: May 19.

SEE ALSO DIRECTION, SPIRITUAL; MARY, BLESSED VIRGIN, DEVOTION TO; SPAIN, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Dr. Pere Tarrés," Pere Tarrés Foundation Web site, available from http://www2.peretarres.org/fundacio/eng/biografia.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

John Paul II, "Visit of His Holiness John Paul II to Loreto, Celebration of Mass for the Beatification of: Pere Tarrés i Claret, Alberto Marvelli, Pina Suriano" (Homily, September 5, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20040905_loreto_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Pere Tarrés i Claret (1905–1950)," Vatican Web site, September 5, 2004, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20040905_tarres_en.html (accessed August 30, 2009).

Pere Tarrés, El meu diari de guerra: 1938–1939 (Barcelona 1987).

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York (2010)

TAVERNIER GAMELIN, ÉMILIE, BL.

Religious foundress; b. February 19, 1800, Montreal, Quebec, Canada; d. September 23, 1851, Montreal; beatified October 7, 2001, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Marie Émilie Eugène Tavernier lived her childhood and adolescence between the homes of her aunt, brother, and cousins, having lost her mother in 1804 and her father in 1814. Between boarding school and her initiation into the bourgeois social circles of Quebec City, Émilie sought out opportunities to practice the love of underprivileged persons, instilled in her at an early age by her parents, Antoine Tavernier and Marie Josephte Maurice. In 1823 Émilie married quinquagenarian apple merchant Jean Baptiste Gamelin, who shared her sensibilities and compassion for the poor. Tragedy marked their brief marriage: of their three children, only Toussaint François Arthur survived his father, who died in 1827.

The widow Gamelin immersed herself in organized CHARITY and devotional PRAYER. As a member of the Ladies of Charity of Montreal, she founded a refuge for impoverished and neglected old women. After Toussaint's death in 1828, she bound herself ever more closely to Our Lady of Sorrows and expanded her ministry for her aged "guests," while continuing to visit poor, sickly, and imprisoned persons.

In his efforts to ensure the permanence of Émilie's apostolate, the bishop of Montreal, Ignace BOURGET, eventually decided to form the Sisters of Charity of the House of Providence (1843). After some months, Émilie asked for admission into the novitiate; she was accepted, and after taking their vows the fledgling congregation elected Sr. Gamelin their first superior on March 30, 1844. In the face of precarious finances, the SISTERS OF PROVIDENCE under Mother Gamelin multiplied their charitable works: housing orphans, retired priests, and mentally handicapped persons; opening schools, including a pioneering institute for deaf girls; and providing relief from typhus and cholera epidemics. Just as her congregation was beginning to flourish, the founder suddenly fell ill during the night and died the following afternoon.

The cause for the BEATIFICATION of Émilie Tavernier Gamelin was opened in Montreal in 1980. After Pope John Paul II officially recognized her heroic virtues on December 23, 1993, the diocese investigated the case of Yannick Fréchette, who was allegedly healed from acute lymphoblastic leukemia through Mother Gamelin's INTERCESSION. The miracle was confirmed, and within a year her beatification followed. The pope's beatification HOMILY highlighted Mother Gamelin's profound confidence in divine providence as a bountiful source of her charity, creativity, compassion, and joy.

Feast: September 23.

SEE ALSO CANADA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Katherine Burton, The Table of the King: The Story of Mother Gamelin, Foundress of the Sisters of Charity of Providence (New York 1952).

John Paul II, "Beatification of 7 Servants of God" (Homily, October 7, 2001), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2001/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20011007_beatification_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

Denise Robillard, Émilie Tavernier-Gamelin, translated by Lina Gaudette (Montreal 1992).

Mark J. DeCelles
Doctoral Candidate
School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America,
Washington, DC (2010)

TEILHARD DE CHARDIN, PIERRE

Paleontologist and proponent of a synthesis of evolution with the Christian world view; b. Sarcenat (Orcines, Puy de Dôme), France, May 1, 1881; d. New York City, Apr. 10, 1955.

After graduating from the Jesuit College of Mongré, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin entered the Society of Jesus (in the Province of Lyons) in 1899. In 1901, however, French anti-clerical laws forced the Jesuits and other religious orders to leave France. Teilhard continued his studies in Jersey and then, as part of his training, taught physics and chemistry at the Jesuit school in Cairo. In 1908 he began studying theology in England and was ordained in 1911. By 1912 the anti-clerical laws were relaxed and he returned to France to begin doctoral studies in paleontology under Marcellin Boule at the Museum of Natural History in Paris. These studies were interrupted by World War I, during which Teilhard served as a stretcher-bearer. He defended his doctoral thesis at the Sorbonne in 1922.

Teilhard taught geology for a brief period at the Institut Catholique in Paris before leaving for China in 1923. It was on this trip that he and Émile Licent, S.J., became the first to find early human tools in China. Soon after returning to France in 1924, Teilhard found that an essay that he had written on original sin (see Christianity and Evolution, 45–55) had been sent to

Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre (1881-1955). Consulting Paleontologist of the National Geological Survey of China, Rev. de Chardin is shown at a symposium of Early Man at the Academy of Natural Science in Philadelphia, PA., in this March 18, 1937 photo. He holds a skull of a Peking man he found in China. AP IMAGES

Rome. In this essay, he judged the story of Adam and Eve to be a parable rather than history, and he suggested that humans originated from more than a single set of parents. The Church responded by requiring him to submit further writings in philosophy or theology to Rome for approval (no restriction was ever placed on his scientific writings). In addition, he could no longer teach at the Institut Catholique. He had become an important figure in Catholic intellectual circles in Paris and this concerned the archbishop. So the Jesuits suggested in 1926 that he return to China. There he soon began writing a devotional work titled The Divine Milieu.

As a consultant to the National Geological Survey of China, Teilhard focused on the stratigraphy and paleontology of northern China. He participated in the excavations at Zhoukoudian (or Choukoutien), where the Peking Man fossils were found. China became his base as he went on numerous scientific expeditions in Central Asia, India, and Burma, and he attended many scientific conferences in Europe and the United States. Teilhard accepted natural selection as the basic process of EVOLUTION, but he also believed that evolution had a built-in direction toward increased consciousness. His understanding of evolution is presented in The Phenomenon of Man, a work completed in 1940.

Teilhard spent the years of World War II in China. However, stenciled copies of his writings were circulated in Paris, and when he returned there in 1946 he found he had a large popular following. Thus, the French bishops were relieved when he relocated to New York in 1951 as a fellow of the Wenner-Gren Foundation, which twice sent him to South Africa. He died suddenly on Easter Day, April 10, 1955.

With the approval of his religious superior, Teilhard had bequeathed his religious and philosophic manuscripts to a friend who, after Teilhard's death, proceeded with publication. These works became a minor sensation, and Teilhard became a popular hero to many people because of his ideas, his hope for the human future, and his adventurous spirit. Some see his influence on Vatican II, especially in Gaudium et spes (Joy and Hope), the Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World. Indeed, he was quoted four times in the general assembly.

> Gaudium et spes speaks of the importance of science, technology, and human development. It speaks of Christ as omega and as "the goal of human history" (45). It tells of humanity today being "struck with wonder at its own discoveries and power" (3). It asks that individuals and nations join together in "the promotion of global progress" (84). It tells of humanity having a "more dynamic and evolutionary" concept of reality (54). "The future of humanity lies in the hands of those who are strong enough to provide coming generations with reasons for living and hope" (31).

Teilhard's religious and philosophic writings are now collected in thirteen volumes (ten of which are collections of essays), and his scientific writings are collected in ten volumes. There are also fifteen volumes of his letters.

In 1980 Teilhard was accused of complicity in the 1912 Piltdown hoax, in which modern bone fragments were claimed to be the skull and jaw of an unknown form of early human. On June 30, 1962, the VATICAN issued a monitum (warning) stating that his writings contained ambiguities and "even serious errors, as offend Catholic doctrine." Despite this criticism, on May 12, 1981, Agostino Cardinal CASAROLI, the Vatican secretary of state, called Teilhard "a man seized by Christ in the depths of his being and concerned to honor faith and reason at the same time" (Origins, July 16, 1981, vol. 11, no. 8). On July 20, 1981, however, the Vatican stated that the earlier monitum was still in effect.

Teilhard's theology was shaped both by his work in science and his understanding of Saint Paul. His studies in evolution showed him over time matter has been formed into increasingly complex units, and with this rise in complexity he saw a corresponding rise in consciousness. With the first humans, he believed, consciousness became reflective. He saw modern humans moving toward the formation of a single organism, much as separate cells once joined to form the first multicelled animals. A single soul, he believed, progressively animates this growing organism, and, using Pauline texts (especially Colossians and Ephesians), he argued that this soul is the risen Christ.

Teilhard believed that human work to build a society of justice and love provide the infrastructure needed for Christ to achieve his fullness (pleroma). He wrote, "Fundamentally—since all time and forever—but one single thing is being made in creation: the Body of Christ" (Christianity and Evolution, p. 74). Christ, he pointed out, is the one "in whom all things hold together" (Col 1:17; see also Eph 4: 9–16). Some have seen his understanding of such texts as verging on pantheism. In 1968, Joseph Ratzinger (later Benedict XVI) outlined Teilhard's vision, noting, "here the tendency of Pauline Christology is in essentials correctly grasped from the modern angle and rendered comprehensible again, even if the vocabulary employed is certainly rather too biological" (Ratzinger 1969, p. 239). In 1995, John Paul II used a quote of Teilhard to say what the Mass meant to him: The Eucharist is "celebrated in order to offer 'on the altar of the whole Earth the world's work and suffering' in the beautiful words of Teilhard de Chardin" (John Paul II 1996, p. 73).

SEE ALSO ANTICLERICALISM; CHINA, CHRISTIANITY IN; FRANCE, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; JESUIT RELATIONS; JESUITS; PAUL, APOSTLE, ST.; VATICAN COUNCIL II.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WORKS BY PIERRE TEILHARD DE CHARDIN

The Phenomenon of Man, translated by Bernard Wall (New York 1959). This work was also published as The Human Phenomenon, translated and edited by Sarah Appleton Weber (Brighton, U.K. 1999).

The Divine Milieu, translator not identified (New York 1960).

Christianity and Evolution, translated by René Hague (New York 1971).

The Heart of Matter, translated by René Hague (New York 1978).

SECONDARY WORKS

Claude Cuénot, Teilhard: A Biographical Study, translated by Vincent Colimore (Baltimore 1965).

John Paul II, Gift and Mystery: On the Fiftieth Anniversary of My Priestly Ordination (New York 1996).

Thomas M. King, S.J., Teilhard's Mass (New York 2005).

Ursula King, Spirit of Fire: The Life and Vision of Teilhard de Chardin (Maryknoll 1996).

Henri de Lubac, S.J., The Religion of Teilhard de Chardin, translated by Rene Hague (New York 1967).

Joseph Ratzinger (Benedict XVI), An Introduction to Christianity, translated by J.R. Foster (London 1969).

Rev. Edouard Louis Boné SJ
Professor of Biology and Anthropology
University of Louvain, Belgium

Rev. Thomas M. King SJ
Professor, Department of Theology
Georgetown University (2010)

TERESIAN ASSOCIATION

An association of Catholic women founded in Spain by St. Pedro POVEDA (canonized May 4, 2003 by Pope John Paul II) in 1911; it subsequently spread throughout Western Europe, Mexico, South America, the Philippines, Japan, Formosa, Jordan, West Africa, and the Congo. In the U.S. the institute was established (1961) in Boston, MA, and Coral Gables, FL. Its members, known as Teresians, devote their lives to the apostolate of Christian education, teaching all age levels, irrespective of class or nationality. The aim of the institute is a harmonious blend of action and contemplation; every member must follow some course of study in order to obtain a university degree or other professional qualification. No habit or special uniform is worn by Teresians, whose patroness is ST. TERESA OF AVILA. As of 2009, this private international association was present in thirty countries on four continents, and was part of the Pontifical Council for the Laity.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Marisa Rodríguez Abancéns, Pedro Poveda: Gentle Challenge? (Dublin, Ireland 2003).

Teresian Association Official Web site, available from http://www.rcsouthwark.co.uk/teresian_index.html (accessed October 28, 2009).

Anna Mandiola
Independent Writer
Boston, Mass.

EDS (2010)

THÉRÈSE DE LISIEUX, ST.

French Carmelite nun celebrated for her autobiography; b. Alençon, France, January 2, 1873; d. Lisieux, France, September 30, 1897.

Early Life. Marie Françoise Thérèse Martin was the youngest of nine children born to Louis and Zélie (Guérin) MARTIN (who were beatified as a married couple October 19, 2008, by Pope Benedict XVI), two boys and two girls having died before her birth. Louis was a successful watchmaker and jeweler, while Zélie was a lacemaker. Their last child, Thérèse, was a sickly infant and had to be boarded with a wet nurse for the first year of her life. As she was a warm and affectionate child, deeply devoted to her family, her mother's death constituted a traumatic experience in her young life and plunged her into a state of sadness and sensitivity that she endured for eight years.

Thérèse, in her autobiography, divided her own early life into three distinct periods: The first was the happy and untrammeled period of her infancy before her mother died; the second, the eight years from 1877 to 1886, her "winter of trial," as she called it, a time of sensitivity and weariness and occasional religious scruples; the third was the period between 1886 and 1888, beginning with what she called her "conversion" and terminating with her entrance into the convent.

The family moved to Lisieux in 1881, and Thérèse was enrolled in the Benedictine Abbey school as a day student. She was a bright, retentive student, but shy and somewhat withdrawn, and consequently found school life unpleasant. In 1883 at the age of ten she contracted a strange illness during which she suffered a mixture of convulsions, hallucinations, and comas for three months. Finally, while earnestly imploring the help of the Blessed Virgin, she was instantaneously cured. Thérèse always believed her cure was miraculous and that the statue of Our Lady of Victories, before which she had been praying, actually smiled at her.

On Christmas 1886, Thérèse experienced her "conversion," an instant change that marked the inception of a new maturity and a more intense religious program. The actual occasion of this experience was simple. She had just returned from midnight Mass, and her father made an impatient remark about the festivities arranged for his youngest daughter. Ordinarily she would have been deeply hurt by the careless remark but, as she wrote: "Thérèse was different now, Jesus had changed her heart." Her sister Céline stated: "I was a witness to that sudden change, and I thought I was in a dream. That transformation was not limited only to a new self-possession but, at the same time, her soul could be seen to develop and grow in the practice of zeal and charity." From her earliest years Thérèse had been extraordinarily religious; in fact, she remarked near the end of her life that from the age of three she had never refused anything to the good God. She had been diligent at prayer and extremely conscientious in the practice of virtue. But the experience of Christmas 1886 marked a new stage in her religious development, as she acquired an intense interest in the apostolate, conceived a desire to suffer for God, and began to make immediate plans for entering the Carmelite convent in Lisieux.

A Carmelite. Her two older sisters, Pauline and Marie, had already entered the cloistered convent of the Discalced Carmelite nuns in Lisieux, and it was there that Thérèse wished to serve God. At one time she had wanted to become a foreign missionary but she finally concluded she could help in the conversion of even more souls by joining a contemplative order. She was only 14 when she made application to the Carmel, and while the nuns were willing to receive her, the Abbé Delatroette, ecclesiastical superior of the convent, felt she should wait until she was 21. Thérèse, accompanied by her father, visited Bishop Hugonin to petition her early admission to the Carmel. The bishop took the matter under advisement; while waiting for his ultimately favorable reply, she and her father and her sister Céline embarked on a pilgrimage to Rome. During a general audience Thérèse was presented to LEO XIII, and despite the prohibition to speak she asked him to allow her entrance into Carmel at the age of 15. He gently assured her she would enter if it were God's will.

On April 9, 1888, at 15 she entered the Carmelite convent, spending the remaining nine-and-a-half years of her life in the red brick building on the Rue de Liverot. All was far from serene in the Carmelite convent of Lisieux during the years that Thérèse lived there, and the major part of the difficulties can be ascribed to her superior for most of her time in the convent, Mother Marie de Gonzague, a woman of mercurial temperament, jealously guarding her position of authority and allowing the convent to be split into two factions. Thérèse abstained from the inner politics of the convent and concentrated on her own life of prayer. She was intensely faithful to the rule of the order, quietly performing the duties assigned her; the full heroism of her life of fidelity and closeness to God was not even comprehended by most of the nuns in the convent until her memoirs were published posthumously.

In 1893 Thérèse was appointed acting mistress of novices, an office she held for the last four years of her life. During that time she articulated her "Little Way," that attitude of approaching God that Pope BENEDICT XV said "contained the secret of sanctity for the entire world." There was nothing essentially new about her "Little Way," but it was a fresh and vigorous restatement of basic Christian truths. Pope PIUS XI defined it by saying "it consists in feeling and acting under the discipline of virtue as a child feels and acts by nature." Her "Way," therefore, is not a single virtue or a slogan, but a whole attitude of soul, the basis of an entire relationship with God.

The first manifestations of a tubercular condition came some 18 months before her death, but she continued the monastic observances as well as she could for more than a year until she was finally placed in the convent infirmary. During her final illness she was often fatigued, wracked with pain, and plunged into a bitter temptation against faith. Shortly before her death she said: "I did not think it was possible to suffer so much." Her final words were: "My God, I love You."

Autobiography. One year after her death a form of her autobiography was published privately and mailed to a number of other Carmelite convents in lieu of the traditional obituary notice. There was an immediate demand for additional copies and a general printing was ordered. In the next 15 years it was translated in countries all over the world and more than a million copies were printed. Thérèse did not originally intend to compose an autobiography, and it was only in the last months of her life, when she realized she had a mission to teach others her "Little Way," that she asked her sister to collect and edit her writings. The first section of the memoirs was written as a feast day present for her sister Pauline, the second as a short spiritual essay for her sister Marie, and the third for the prioress, Mother Gonzague. The document is epistolary in form and baroque in style, thus the language often appears coy and saccharine. Thérèse, writing in the full stream of the late Romantic movement, used the only language she knew, but she wrote with a complete honesty and candor that is the ultimate appeal of these amazingly successful memoirs.

Cult. Worldwide reaction to the young French nun was impressive. Pius XI called it a "hurricane of glory." As Thérèse's autobiography gained popularity, letters began to inundate the Carmel of Lisieux and there were countless reports of favors, spiritual and material, granted through her intercession. The HOLY SEE waived the usual 50-year waiting period, and allowed the investigations for beatification to be inaugurated. She was beatified in 1923 and canonized May 17, 1925, less than 28 years after her death.

In 1997, JOHN PAUL II declared Thérèse a DOCTOR OF THE CHURCH in the Apostolic Letter, Divini amoris scientia (The Science of Divine Love). She is the youngest to be granted this title and also the most recent. Of Thérèse, the Pope said:

> Thus we can rightly recognize in the Saint of Lisieux the charism of a Doctor of the Church, because of the gift of the Holy Spirit she received for living and expressing her experience of faith, and because of her particular understanding of the mystery of Christ. In her are found the gifts of the new law, that is, the grace of the Holy Spirit, who manifests himself in living faith working through charity. (Divini amoris scientia n. 7)

In the bull of canonization, Pius XI said that she fulfilled her vocation and achieved sanctity "without going beyond the common order of things." This phrase is the key to understanding her message and popularity. Her life was simple, devoid of the drama and major conflict that characterize the lives of so many saints, but in the framework of that simple life she achieved sanctity.

Feast: October. 1.

SEE ALSO CARMELITES, DISCALCED; MARY, BLESSED VIRGIN, DEVOTION TO; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WORKS BY THÉRÈSE OF LISIEUX

St. Thérèse of Lisieux: Her Last Conversations, translated by John Clarke (Washington, D.C. 1977).

Letters of St. Thérèse of Lisieux: General Correspondence 1 and 2, translated by John Clarke (Washington, D.C. 1982 and 1988).

The Poetry of Saint Thérèse of Lisieux, translated by Donald Kinney (Washington, D.C. 1995).

Story of a Soul: The Autobiography of Saint Thérèse of Lisieux, translated by John Clarke, 3rd rev. ed. (Washington, D.C. 1996).

The Prayers of Saint Thérèse of Lisieux: The Act of Oblation, translated by Aletheia Kane (Washington, D.C. 1997).

WORKS ABOUT THÉRÈSE OF LISIEUX

Patrick Ahern, Maurice & Thérèse: The Story of a Love (New York 1998).

Pierre Descouvement, Thérèse and Lisieux, translated by Salvatore Sciurba and Louise Pambrun (Toronto, Ontario 1996).

Pierre Descouvement, Thérèse of Lisieux and Marie of the Trinity: The Transformative Relationship of Saint Thérèse of Lisieux and Her Novice Sister Marie of the Trinity, translated by Alexandra Plettenberg-Serban (Dearborn, Mich. 1997).

Experiencing Saint Thérèse Today, edited by John Sullivan, Carmelite Studies 5 (Washington, D.C. 1990).

Guy Gaucher, The Story of a Life, St. Thérèse of Lisieux, translated by Anne Marie Brennan (San Francisco 1987).

Guy Gaucher, The Passion of St. Thérèse of Lisieux: The Story of the Final Months in the Life of this Modern Saint, translated by A.M. Brennan (New York 1989).

Jean Guitton, The Spiritual Genius of Saint Thérèse of Lisieux, translated by Felicity Leng (Liguori, Mo. 1997).

John Paul II, Divini amoris scientia (Apostolic Letter, October 19, 1997) Vatican Web Site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/apost_letters/index.htm (accessed November 3, 2009).

Patricia O'Connor, Thérèse of Lisieux: A Biography (Huntington, Ind. 1983).

Saint Thérèse of Lisieux: Her Life, Times, and Teaching, edited by Conrad De Meester (Washington, D.C. 1997).

Rev. Peter-Thomas Rohrbach OCD
Prior
Discalced Carmelite Monastery, Washington, D.C.

Laurie Malashanko
Independent Scholar
Ann Arbor, Mich. (2010)

THEURGY, DOCTRINE OF

The term theurgy first appears in the Chaldean Oracles, a syncretistic collection of religious verse dating from the middle of the second century AD. Theurgy itself denotes the "work of God" or "work of the gods," from the Greek theos ("god") and ergon ("work"). As such, theurgy can be etymologically distinguished from theology, the rational discourse (logos) of God, or from liturgy, the work of an assembly of people (laos). In antiquity it was also necessary to differentiate religious theurgy from magic (goeteia), which sought merely to amuse or effect vengeance. However, whether the meaning of theurgy is taken as the work executed by the divine (taking theos as a subjective genitive) or as the work performed for the divine (theos as an objective genitive), the goal of theurgic ritual is the same: the deification of the human soul, the unity of created spirit with the divine through symbolic utterances and a prescribed set of ritualistic actions. That is, through the proper incantations, chanting of hymns, NUMEROLOGY, or the manipulation of divine "vehicles" such as rocks, plants, or even certain animals, theurgy culticly represents nature's divinely bestowed power to elevate and thus reinstate the rational soul to its proper place in the cosmic hierarchy. It seeks to reorder the soul's location from its enervating relationship with the temporal order, as well as the concomitant individuality and laws of growth and decay inevitably occasioned by embodiment, so as to reestablish the soul's place among the divine.

History of Non-Christian Theurgy. A shadowy figure by the name of Julianus was the first to receive the title of theurgos: A contemporary of the Emperor MARCUS AURELIUS (121–180), this Julianus is arguably the compiler of the Chaldean Oracles. As described there, a theurgist is one who has not only been released from the limitations of the realm of fate, but who has also been made a member of the heavenly pantheon. From here, the history of theurgy becomes intertwined with the rise of NEOPLATONISM (in all probability through the second century Neo-Pythagorean and Neoplatonic precursor, Numenius of Apamea).

Since PLOTINUS (c. 205–270), the founder of Neoplatonism, conceived of all psyche as a single, divine continuum, his philosophical SOTERIOLOGY never required a doctrine of theurgy. That is, if the soul has not in essence broken away from God, there is no fissure to bridge through ritual and external mediation; CONTEMPLATION (theoria) is therefore enough to discover the One latent within the undescended soul. Plotinus' most devoted disciple, PORPHYRY (d. circa 305), though, began to make room for the possible need for theurgic ritual. Dividing the human spirit into a descended and an undescended part, Porphyry maintained, as evidenced in his De Regressu Animae, that theurgy could assist the lower soul in returning to the divinity from whence it fell, while later Platonists (Athenian more than Alexandrian) came to give theurgy an even more prominent and hence secure role in the soul's SALVATION.

For instance, IAMBLICHUS (d. c. 325) argues in De Mysteriis 2.11 that union with the divine "is attained only by the perfective operation of unspeakable acts correctly performed, acts which are beyond all understanding, and by the power of unutterable symbols which are intelligible only to the gods." Finally, in the theophilosophical macrostructures of PROCLUS (412–485) and Damascius (d. c. 538) theurgy received a more systematic treatment, in that reason's ability to redeem was muted, and true ascent (aneleusin) could be achieved only through the particular rites and unifying prayers of theurgy.

Christian Reaction and Incorporation. A Christian instance of theurgy first comes through Syntagma ad quendam politicum at Patrologia Graeca 28.1505C, a text spuriously attributed to St. ATHANASIUS, but it is not effectively incorporated into Christian theology until later Greek theologians. Christian theurgy is rarely employed objectively but is always used in the subjective sense, to describe God's saving work on behalf of his faithful. That is why Dionysius the Areopagite (fl. 485–525) found in theurgy the perfect term to describe the liturgical rites and symbols initiated and enacted by God to unify his creatures to himself and to one another. Jesus Christ, Dionysius writes in Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, §3.3.7, has established "saving sacraments by means of which the participants are divinized" and all of these channels of grace represent "the work of God (theurgy) on our behalf." Similarly, in Ambigua ad Thomam, §4, MAXIMUS THE CONFESSOR (c. 580–662) describes Christ's divinization of human nature as the most perfect act of theurgy. In such theologians we see how theurgy retains its strictest etymological sense to convey God's work among creatures. It is also employed to reveal that the truest work of God is the deification of humanity. Yet, now stripped of any pagan overtones, such deification is always explained as a participation in the perfect humanity of Christ, a state attainable only within the sacramental worship of Christ's Church.

St. AUGUSTINE is the first churchman to Latinize the term, appearing as theurgia—and its various cognates—in book ten of his De Ciuitate Dei (however, nowhere else in his entire corpus). In chapter nine Augustine sees the cosmic sympathy on which theurgy is based as a "nefarious curiosity" and its manipulation of creatures to bring about a desired effect nothing other than diabolic superstition. Since he and the Latin fathers received their understanding of theurgy mainly from Porphyry, who wrote so vehemently against Christianity, it is understandable that theurgia never became an acceptable way of describing the sacred rites of the Church in the West.

Byzantine and RENAISSANCE attempts to incorporate various theurgic practices into a Christian worldview arose through the cosmologies of Michael Psellus (1018–1078) in CONSTANTINOPLE as well as Marsilio FICINO (1433–99) among the Florentine literati. Such later revivals were in the main short-lived.

SEE ALSO BYZANTINE THEOLOGY; CHALDEANS; COSMOLOGY; NEOPYTHAGOREANISM; ORACLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E.R. Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational (London 1951).

Hans Lewy, Chaldaean Oracles and Theurgy (Cairo 1956).

Ruth Majercik, ed., The Chaldean Oracles (Leiden, Netherlands 1989).

Gregory Shaw, Theurgy and the Soul (University Park, Pa. 1995).

Rev. David Vincent Meconi SJ
Asst. Professor of Patristic Theology
Saint Louis University, St. Louis, Mo. (2010)

THEVARPARAMPIL, AUGUSTINO, BL.

Diocesan priest; also known as Kunjachan; b. April 1, 1891, Ramapuram (Kottayam), Kerala, India; d. October 16, 1973, Ramapuram; beatified April 30, 2006, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Augustino Thevarparampil was the youngest of five children born to farmers in southern India. Educated in Ramapuram and Athirampuzha (Kottayam), he entered the seminary shortly after high school and was ordained a priest of the Syro-Malabar Catholic diocese of Palai on December 17, 1921. After serving one year at St. Augustine's Forane Church in Ramapuram, Kunjachan (as he was known during his priestly life) accepted the role of assistant pastor at a parish church in Kadanad (Kottayam), only to return to his home village in March 1926 to recover from an illness.

When Kunjachan regained his health, the pastor at Ramapuram charged him with the spiritual care of a large number of neophytes from among the low castes of Indian society. With this assignment, Fr. Thevarparampil began a four-decade ministry dedicated to ameliorating the spiritual, economic, and social condition of poor Indians, especially those considered untouchable, the Dalits. Spreading the GOSPEL among them, he treated each one with compassion and respect as he labored to promote their education and culture and to help provide for their basic needs. Energized by prayer before the Blessed Sacrament, he continually nurtured his growing flock through frequent home visits.

While not everyone liked the "Apostle of the Dalits" or appreciated his work, many looked upon Kunjachan as a holy man, even a saint, prior to his death. In spite of his explicit request to be buried among the Dalits, he was honored with a tomb before the altar at St. Augustine's. Thereafter, many began to seek his INTERCESSION for every kind of need, just as they had sought his prayers and blessings during his lifetime.

At the request of Sebastian Vayalil (1906–1986), bishop emeritus of Palai, the diocese of Palai initiated the official process that led to the opening of Kunjachan's cause for canonization in 1987. Pope JOHN PAUL II declared him VENERABLE in 2004, and in 2005 Pope Benedict XVI officially recognized that Gilson Varghese had been healed through Kunjachan's intercession from talipes equinovarus of the right foot. Authorized to declare Fr. Thevarparampil BLESSED in the pope's name, Varkey Cardinal Vithayathil delivered the HOMILY at the BEATIFICATION ceremony in Kunjachan's parish. He stressed the blessed's simplicity, devotion, and tireless efforts on behalf of his Dalit brothers and sisters, in whom he encountered Christ.

Feast: October 16.

SEE ALSO CASTE SYSTEM, INDIAN; INDIA, CHRISTIANITY IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kurian Mathothu, Kunjachan, a Good Shepherd: Blessed Kunjachan (Ramapuram, India 2006).

Mark J. DeCelles
Doctoral Candidate, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C. (2010)

TOLERATION ACTS OF 1639 AND 1649, MARYLAND

The import of neither of these acts is entirely clear; the first is all the more tolerant for being imprecise. In 1639 Maryland's first provincial assembly included two religious provisions in its original ordinance of government. One, "An Act for Church liberties," reads this way: "Holy Churches within this province shall have all her rights and liberties." An earlier form of the act used the singular, "Church," and it is likely that the law passed under pressure from JESUITS who feared that the colonial proprietor, Cecil Calvert, though a fellow Catholic, might threaten their privileges. The more significant provision was the second, "An Act for the liberties of the people," which stated that Maryland's inhabitants "shall have all their rights and liberties according to the Great Charter of England [i.e., the Magna Carta]." An earlier draft granted to provincials all those rights natural born subjects "hath or ought to have" in England proper. The assembly had in mind a very extensive claim to liberty.

That was not the case in 1649. True, the "Act concerning Religion" guaranteed that no one "professing to believe in Jesus Christ, shall henceforth be any waies troubled, Molested or discountenanced for or in respect of his or her religion nor in free exercise thereof ... nor any way compelled to the beleife or exercise of any other Religion [sic]." The act also punished those who used religious terms pejoratively—and the terms ran the gamut, from "heretic" to "Puritan" to "Jesuit," with many stops between. Interestingly, Catholics thought their faith especially vulnerable, and reserved the same punishments (capital, on the third offense) for scorning the Virgin Mary as for blaspheming Christ or the Trinity. The act also protected the Sabbath with a vigor that was less Catholic than puritanical—a sign of the times and of the balance of power in the colony as well as at home.

George Calvert, first Lord Baltimore (in the Irish peerage), and his heir, Cecil, were converts to the Roman Catholic faith, but the colony they founded was, in its formative years, colored by the older and resilient culture of Anglo-Catholicism. The uniform appeal and political primacy of the Church—the status quo before the Henrician reforms—were never to be recovered. Queen Mary had tried and definitively failed. The late Stuart attempt to find a place for Catholics in the vanguard of England's governing class would also fail. What persisted was the Faith itself, as its priests and practitioners maintained an active, if enclosed, life within the manors of the Catholic nobility and gentry. Cecil Calvert joined this culture when he married Anne Arundell, the daughter of Lord Arundell of Wardour.

Their Catholicism preferred the prerogatives of the laity over those of the clerical hierarchy. The political ambitions of leading Catholics were modest, and they recognized only the spiritual authority of the pope. Temperament as well as necessity encouraged their belief in liberty of conscience. This Anglo-Catholic elite provided, through its cadet branches, the original elite in Maryland, and the characteristic attitudes of this group were those of the colony's first cadre of leaders.

The manorial style of Maryland Catholicism was formalized in the colonial charter. The proprietor enjoyed Palatine privileges on the model of the old Durham bishops. The king's writ did not run, or run as quickly and smoothly, in either medieval Durham or Lord Baltimore's Maryland. And, in an age when parliament's powers were beginning to trump those of the sovereign, this meant that the colonial government could ignore those parliamentary statutes it deemed unsuited to its jurisdiction.

Cecil Calvert thought he could dominate that government, but, like other proprietors after him, he was dismayed to find that even a benign authority was questioned—and questioned not only by Protestants, who were in the majority from almost the very beginning, but by the ruling minority of Catholic squires as well. Such men controlled the assembly that passed the tolerant measures of 1639. There was, however, no clear statement of religious tolerance, as there would be ten years later. The assembly met without an explicit call from the proprietor. That independent streak grew wider as it refused to accept Baltimore's proposed code of laws in its entirety. Some of his recommendations, such as a seigniorial veto and harsh punishment for SACRILEGE and sorcery, were put aside; others, such as Baltimore's already rather liberal ideas about freedom of worship for all Christians, were revised in such a way as to strengthen the case for CONSCIENCE. According to the ordinance of 1639, religious and civil freedoms alike rested on a broad interpretation of individual rights. Christianity did not create or encompass those rights—a Jew sat in Maryland's assembly in that first momentous decade.

Hope would, however, retreat before the hard-earned anxieties of the period. England suffered through its civil war, as parliament and its army—both increasingly Puritan in character—hounded and eventually killed a king seen as soft on popery. In Maryland, a colony named for Charles's Catholic queen, the 1640s saw the temporary collapse of Baltimore's government. Protestant rogues led by Richard Ingle invaded the colony and nearly destroyed its political institutions. Priests abandoned the colony or were deported from it in shackles. Baltimore managed to resurrect his proprietorship in 1647, but thenceforward he and other Catholic settlers took no chances. They could no longer rely on manorial privilege or natural rights to protect their Church.

The Act Concerning Religion, passed in 1649, was more specific and less forgiving than the 1639 ordinance. It provided for the toleration of all Christian—and only Christian—forms of worship. In line with the sitting parliament, the act punished various heresies and blasphemies. This was tolerance in the Cromwellian mode, and, though Maryland would prosper in the years ahead, it did so under conditions of Protestant hegemony.

SEE ALSO CHURCH AND STATE IN THE UNITED STATES (LEGAL HISTORY); CROMWELL, OLIVER; MARY STUART, QUEEN OF SCOTS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W.H. Browne, ed., Archives of Maryland, vol. 1 (Baltimore 1883).

Gerald P. Fogarty, "Property and Religious Liberty in Colonial Maryland Catholic Thought," Catholic Historical Review 72 (October 1986): 573–600.

Thomas O'Brien Hanley, "Church and State in the Maryland Ordinance of 1639," Church History 26 (December 1957): 325–341.

John D. Krugler, "Lord Baltimore, Roman Catholics, and Toleration: Religious Policy in Maryland during the Early Catholic Years, 1634–1649," Catholic Historical Review 65 (January 1979): 49–75.

John D. Krugler, English and Catholic: The Lords Baltimore in the Seventeenth Century (Baltimore 2004).

Timothy A. Milford
Associate Professor, Department of History
St. John's University, New York (2010)

TOLOMEI, BERNARD, ST.

Baptized Giovanni, founder of the Olivetan Benedictines; b. Siena, Italy, May 10, 1272; d. Siena, August 20, 1348; beatified in 1634 by Pope Innocent X; canonized April 26, 2009, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

As a youth, Bernard Tolomei wanted to become a religious but he could not obtain his father's consent. He served in the armies of King Rudolph I (1218–1291) and was knighted. He later studied law and became podestà (magistrate) of Siena. While working successfully as a magistrate, he also dedicated his time to serving the sick. At this point, Bernard began to lose his eyesight, which caused him to leave his position but also provided the occasion for Bernard to begin a more radical form of ascetic discipleship.

In 1313, with two companions, he withdrew into solitude at Accona, a tract of land outside of Siena that was owned by his family. In 1319 Bishop GUIDO OF AREZZO gave the little community a white habit to honor the Virgin Mary and also established the BENEDICTINE RULE for their group. At Accona, Bernard founded the monastery of Our Lady of Monte Oliveto, from which developed the strongly centralized Olivetan Benedictine Congregation. The primitive penitential observance exercised a strong appeal, and for a while the institute grew rapidly. Bernard was elected abbot of the monastery in 1322 and served in that capacity until his death in 1348. With many of his fellow monks dying from the plague, Bernard left Mount Oliveto to serve them. He died caring for victims of the Black Death shortly thereafter.

St. Bernard was officially canonized on April 26, 2009, the third Sunday of Easter, by Pope Benedict XVI. During the canonization HOMILY, the pope reflected on the RESURRECTION OF CHRIST and the centrality of the Eucharist. The homily focused on the renewal that is brought about by the risen Christ in the lives of the faithful. Additionally, Benedict XVI emphasized the nourishment St. Bernard received from the Eucharist and the wellspring it provided for him to live a life of profound love for others. Speaking of the sacrifice St. Bernard made in serving his fellow monks with the plague, the pope stated, "His was a Eucharistic life, entirely dedicated to contemplation, expressed in humble service to neighbor." The homily was concluded with the exhortation for the faithful to follow St. Bernard's example of prayer, service, and sacrifice.

Feast: August 21.

SEE ALSO BENEDICTINES, OLIVETAN; MONASTICISM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Stanislao Maria Avanzo, Fratello Bernardo: "Vester sum totus," Bernardo Tolomei iniziatore e protagonista del movimento monastico benedettino di Monte Oliveto (Siena, Italy 1990).

Benedict XVI, "Holy Mass for the Canonization of Five New Saints: Arcangelo Tadini, Bernardo Tolomei, Nuno de Santa Maria Alvares Pereira, Gertrude Comensoli, and Caterina Volpicelli," (Homily, April 26, 2009), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2009/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20090426_canonizzazioni_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Alban Butler, The Lives of the Saints, edited by Herbert Thurston and Donald Attwater, rev. ed. (New York 1956), 3:379–380.

Armando Donatelli, Il beato Bernardo Tolomei: La sua risposta alla chiamata di Dio (Siena, Italy 1976).

Armando Donatelli, Giovanni Bernardo Tolomei: Padre e maestro di monaci (Siena, Italy 1977).

B. Heurtebize, Dictionnaire d'histoire et de géographie ecclésiastiques, edited by Alfred Baudrillart et al. (Paris 1912–), 8: 728–730.

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Bernardo Tolomei (1272–1348)," Vatican Web site, April 26, 2009, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2009/ns_lit_doc_20090426_tolomei_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Philibert Schmitz, Histoire de l'ordre de Saint-Benoît, 7 vols. (Paris 1942–1956), 3: 22–23.

Rev. Anselm Biggs OSB
Chairman, Department of History
Belmont Abbey College, Belmont, North Carolina

Randall Woodard
Theology Department
Saint Leo University (2010)

TORRES MORALES, GENOVEVA, ST.

Religious, foundress of the Congregation of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and the Holy Angels (Angelicas); b. Almenara, Castile, Spain, January 3, 1870; d. Saragossa, Spain, January 5, 1956; beatified January 29, 1995; canonized May 4, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Young Genoveva Torres Morales endured many tragedies during her lifetime: By the time she was eight, four of her five siblings and both her parents had died. She grew up as a child homemaker for her older brother and had her left leg amputated to the thigh due to gangrene in 1883, forcing her to use crutches for the rest of her life. Spiritual reading and prayer strengthened her fortitude. Because of her disability, she was barred from joining the CARMELITES of Charity, in whose Mercy Home she had lived from 1885 to 1894. During this time, she developed skills in sewing and grew in piety, being guided in the spiritual life by the diocesan priest, Fr. Carlos Ferris, who went on to found a leprosarium.

In 1911 Canon Barbarrós encouraged Genoveva and the two women with whom she lived to form a religious community to assist needy women. They opened their first boardinghouse in Valencia. Despite the numerous obstacles of a new enterprise, the community soon spread to other parts of Spain: Barcelona, Bilbao, Madrid, Pamplona, Santander, and Saragossa. In 1925 Genoveva and eighteen others founded the Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and the Holy Angels, the religious order known as the Angelicas. The order's boardinghouses were closed by the government during the Spanish Civil War (1936–1939), yet Genoveva ensured that they would rebuild later. The institute of the Angelicas received papal approval in 1953, several years before Mother Genoveva's death. She continued to minister through the boardinghouses until her death on January 5, 1956.

When Pope John Paul II beatified Mother Genoveva in 1995, he stated that her love of the Sacred Heart "led her to devote her life to caring for retired women, to remedy the loneliness and deprivation in which many of them lived, looking after them materially and spiritually in a true home." Genoveva was canonized in the Plaza de Colón, Madrid, by John Paul II on May 4, 2003, during his apostolic visit to Spain. The Holy Father described her as "an instrument of God's tender love for lonely people in need of love, comfort and physical and spiritual care" who "made an enormous impact on the Church and society of Seville in her day."

Feast: January 5.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SPAIN (THE CHURCH DURING THE SPANISH REPUBLIC AND THE CIVIL WAR: 1931–1939).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Apostolic Journey of His Holiness John Paul II to Spain" (Homily, May 4, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20030504_canonization-spain_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Bernardino Llorca, Angel de la soledad: La madre Genoveva Torres Morales fundadora de las Hermanas del Sagrado Corazón de Jesús y de los Santos Angeles (Zaragoza, Spain 1970).

Mario Angel Marrodán, Loores a la madre Genoveva (Tarragona, Spain 1996).

Genoveva Torres Morales, Escritos personales: Genoveva Torres Morales, edited by Bernardino Llorca (Barcelona, Spain 1973).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Genoveva Torres Morales (1870–1956)," Vatican Web site, May 4, 2003, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20030504_torres-morales_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Neil P. Sloan
Research Assistant
Secretariat of Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs
United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (2010)

TOUS Y SOLER, JOSÉ, BL.

Laurie J. Edwards
Independent Scholar
Reidsville, N.C. (2010)

Also known as Josep Tous Soler or Josep de Igualada; founder of the Congregation of the Capuchin Sisters of the Mother of the Divine Pastor; b. March 31, 1811, Igualada, Barcelona, Spain; d. February 27, 1871, Barcelona, Spain; declared VENERABLE by Pope BENEDICT XVI, December 22, 2008.

José Tous y Soler entered the Order of Friars Minor Capuchin when he was fifteen years old and professed his vows at the age of sixteen on February 19, 1828. He was ordained in Barcelona six years later on May 24, 1834.

Within a few months, anti-clerical violence broke out in Catalonia and forced him into exile in France. He continued to minister there until 1843, but, although Father Josep returned to his homeland, he was unable to rejoin his order because the Spanish government had outlawed religious orders. Instead, he served as a parish priest for the remainder of his life.

Father Josep remained true to his Franciscan beliefs and in 1850 encouraged a group of young women to follow these ideals as well. The women later became the Capuchin Sisters of the Mother of the Divine Shepherd on December 22, 1858, and devoted themselves to the care and teaching of young children. Father Josep died in 1871, shortly before he would have turned sixty, as he was celebrating Mass.

In light of his heroic virtues, he was declared venerable on December 22, 2008, by Pope Benedict XVI, and one year later, on December 19, 2009, the same pope recognized a miracle attributed to Father Josep's intervention, leading to his beatification in 2010. At the time of the publication of this entry, a date had not been set for his beatification.

SEE ALSO FRANCISCANS, FIRST ORDER; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SPAIN, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Josep Tous Soler (Josep from Igualada)," The Hagiography Circle, December 17, 2009, available from http://newsaints.faithweb.com/year/1871.htm#Soler (accessed January 6, 2010).

"The 21 Decrees of the Congregation for Saints' Causes," Coo-ees from the Cloister, December 20, 2009, available from http://coo-eesfromthecloister.blogspot.com/2009/12/21-decrees-of-congregation-for-saints.html (accessed January 6, 2010).

"Venerable Josep Tous Soler," Saints.SQPN.com, December 19, 2009, available from http://saints.sqpn.com/venerable-josep-tous-soler/ (accessed January 6, 2010).

TOVINI, MOSES, BL.

Diocesan priest, catechist; b. Cividate Camuno, Italy, December 27, 1877; d. Brescia, Italy, January 28, 1930; beatified September 17, 2006, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

The oldest of the eight children of Eugenio Tovini and Domenica Malaguzzi, Moses Tovini began to discern his vocation to the priesthood as a teenager. With the support of his uncle and godfather, Bl. Giuseppe TOVINI, Moses Tovini began his seminary studies at Brescia. After his uncle's death in 1897 and a period of military service, Tovini completed his preparation for the priesthood and was ordained on June 9, 1900. Tovini spent four more years of study in Rome, after which his bishop appointed him professor at the seminary in Brescia (November 1904). He served in this position until his death, teaching mathematics, philosophy, and theology.

Tovini would go on to also serve in many other positions in the diocese, including canon of the cathedral (from 1923) and rector of the seminary where he taught (from 1926). In addition to his activity in the formation of clergy, Tovini worked with the laity by teaching catechism and preparing catechists. With Don Giuseppe Schena, Tovini began the lay movement CATHOLIC ACTION in Italy. In January 1930, Tovini contracted pneumonia and died shortly thereafter.

At his HOMILY at the BEATIFICATION Mass in 2006, Cardinal José Saraiva Martins praised Bl. Moses Tovini as "a model of priestly life, a teacher of Christian life in difficult times and a shining sign of the continuous help of the Holy Spirit."

Feast: January 28.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 95 (2003) 630–633.

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 98 (2006) 155–157.

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Holy Mass for the Beatification of the Servant of God Moses Tovini Homily of Cardinal José Saraiva Martins, C.M.F," Vatican Web site, September 17, 2006, available from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/csaints/documents/rc_con_csaints_doc_20060917_beatif-tovini_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Bl. Moses Tovini (1877–1930)," Vatican Web site, September 17, 2006, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20060917_tovini_en.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

Robert Saley
Graduate Student, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

TRČKA, METOD DOMINIK, BL.

Redemptorist priest and MARTYR; b. Frýdlant nad Ostravicí, in what is now the Czech Republic, July 6, 1886; d. Leopoldov Prison, Czechoslovakia (now Slovakia), March 23, 1959; beatified November 4, 2001, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Metod Dominik Trčka entered religious life in 1902, made his profession on August 25, 1904, and was ordained a priest on July 17, 1910, at Prague. After preaching parish missions, he was sent to L'viv, Ukraine, in 1919 to serve Greek Catholics. In L'viv, he met Fr. Mykola Čarneckyj (1884–1959), who taught him the language and customs of the Greek Catholic faithful. In 1921 Metod moved to Stropkov to cofound the first biritual Byzantine-Latin Redemptorist community, of which he became superior in 1924.

Metod preached effectively in the eparchies of Prešov, Užhorod, and Križevci. The community moved to Michalovce in 1931. Then, in 1932, he returned to Stropkov for a few years. He rejoined the Michalovce community in 1935 and was elected superior in 1936. During his tenure, he founded a convent, two retreat houses, and an association for women. He resigned the position in 1942 in order to protect the community from the Czechoslovakian Communist government's suspicions that the REDEMPTORISTS were spreading anti-Communist propaganda.

On December 21, 1945, the vice province of Michalovce was erected, and Metod was elected vice provincial on March 23, 1946. Immediately, he launched several mission projects and publications that made him a target for the Communist government. The government suppressed the vice province in 1949 and took all the Redemptorists to concentration camps on April 13, 1950, for interrogation and torture. Often, Metod would offer himself for torture in place of his confreres to alleviate their suffering.

In a show trial on April 12, 1952, Metod was convicted of collaboration with Bishop Pavel Peter GOJDIČ of Prešov for disseminating the bishop's pastoral letters. Additionally, he was convicted of espionage for communicating with his Roman superiors. He was sentenced to twelve years of hard labor. He served out the sentence in several prisons: Illana, Mírov, and finally Leopoldov, to which he was transferred in April 1958. In Leopoldov, a guard caught him singing a Christmas carol and took him to the "correction cell." When another prisoner pleaded on his behalf, the guards transferred Metod to solitary confinement. After forgiving his persecutors, he died as a martyr in solitary confinement on March 23, 1959.

Metod was beatified by Pope John Paul II on November 4, 2001, at St. Peter's Basilica. In his HOMILY, the pope emphasized Bl. Metod's heroic service to the GOSPEL, demonstrated by his supreme sacrifice.

Feast: March 23.

SEE ALSO COMMUNISM; CZECH REPUBLIC, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN THE; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SLOVAKIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Decree of Beatification of Methodius Dominic Trčka," Acta Apostolicae Sedis 95 (2003): 168–171.

John Paul II, "Beatification of Eight Servants of God" (Homily, November 4, 2001), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2001/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20011104_beatification_en.html (accessed November 23, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Methodius Dominic Trčka, (1886–1959)," Vatican Web site, November 4, 2001, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/documents/ns_lit_doc_20011104_beat-trcka_en.html (accessed November 23, 2009).

L'Osservatore Romano, English Edition (November 7, 2001): 4.

Mark B. Giszczak
Ph.D. Student, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C. (2010)

U

ÜFFING, MARIA EUTHYMIA (EMMA), BL.

Baptized Emma; nurse, Sister of Charity; b. Halverde, Germany, April 8, 1914; d. Münster, Germany, September 9, 1955; beatified October 7, 2001, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Born in the northwest of Germany in Halverde and christened Emma, Bl. Maria Euthymia Üffing endured a difficult childhood. One of eleven siblings, she developed rickets at the age of eighteen months, which permanently interrupted her growth and destabilized her physical constitution. Nonetheless, she continued to labor on the family farm until the age of fourteen, at which time she opted for a religious vocation.

Somewhere between her seventeenth and nineteenth birthdays, while stationed at the hospital of St. Ann in Hopsten, Emma encountered the Sisters of Charity of Münster, otherwise known as the Clemens Sisters. Despite initial reluctance on the part of the sisters due to her physical condition, Emma was admitted to the order in July 1934 and joined the motherhouse in Münster with forty-seven other postulants. She made her vows in October 1936 and took the name Maria Euthymia.

Shortly thereafter, she was sent to St. Vincent's hospital in Dinslaken. There, on the threshold of WORLD WAR II (1939–1945), Sr. Euthymia received her nursing degree with honors on September 3, 1939. Throughout the war years, she cared for the sick. In 1943 she was given the special charge of overseeing the care of prisoners of war, including British, French, Poles, Russians, Ukrainians, and many other nationalities. She became known to those she cared for as Mamma Euthymia, and the French priest Émile Esche later referred to Sr. Euthymia as "a canticle of hope amidst the war." Following the war, Sr. Euthymia was assigned to be the head of a laundry room, a job she accepted with obedience. She was subsequently moved to a larger laundry with an adjacent clinic.

After being afflicted with a severe form of cancer, several weeks of intense suffering concluded with Sr. Euthymia's death on September 9, 1955. During her lifetime, Sr. Euthymia's character and reputation for holiness were well known; she was often asked to intercede for others in prayer.

Sr. Euthymia was beatified on October 7, 2001. In his HOMILY, Pope John Paul II extolled "her faith in small things" in which "lies her greatness." Speaking of her assignment to a laundry room after the war, the pope noted that "she would have preferred to serve human beings rather than machines," but concluded by praising her for remaining "a dedicated sister who had a friendly smile and a kind word for everyone."

Feast: September 9.

SEE ALSO GERMANY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Alban Butler, Butler's Lives of the Saints: The Third Millennium, Supplement of New Saints and Blesseds, edited by Paul Burns (London 2003), 221–122.

John Paul II, "Beatification of 7 Servants of God" (Homily, October 7, 2001), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2001/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20011007_beatification_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Bl. Maria Euthymia (Emma) Üffing (1914–1955)," Vatican Web site, October 7, 2001, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20011007_beat-uffing_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

A. J. Kim
Graduate Student, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

V

VALDÉS, JOSÉ OLALLO, BL.

Religious of San Juan de Dios Brothers; b. Havana, Cuba, February 12, 1820; d. Camagüey, Cuba, March 7, 1889; beatified November 29, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

José Olallo Valdés was born in Havana to unknown parents and was baptized on March 15, 1820, after being entrusted to the care of an orphanage, the Casa Cuna San José de La Habana. As a young man, he was inspired to join the Order of the San Juan de Dios Brothers, whose purpose is to help the ill and impoverished. At the age of fifteen, Valdés was selected to serve in the San Juan de Dios Hospital in eastern Camagüey Province. He gained recognition in the region for his medical expertise, and dedicated his life to the service of the hospital's patients. In fifty-four years, he was absent only one night, due to circumstances beyond his control. In 1856 he was named the superior of the community there.

In his many years of service to the hospital, Valdés overcame great adversity. Along with the Spanish government's confiscations from and suppression of ecclesiastical orders, Valdés had to endure the social strife brought about by a war that spanned ten years (1868–1878). During this period, he did not resist the demands of the military administration that the hospital be used for the care of soldiers. Olallo nevertheless continued to provide care for all without regard to class, race, or religion. Toward the end of the war, he interceded on behalf of the population of Camagüey to avoid a massacre in the face of military hostility. Olallo was best known for his unceasing kindness and love of the poor of Camagüey, where he was known as the "apóstol de la caridad" (apostle of charity) and "padre de los pobres" (father of the poor).

Padre Olallo died on March 7, 1889. His funeral was well attended. In 1999 Olallo was credited with a miraculous INTERCESSION on the behalf of a three-year-old girl who was dying of cancer. On November 29, 2008, he was declared BLESSED by Cardinal José Saraiva Martins in the first BEATIFICATION ceremony to take place on Cuban soil. Olallo's remains lie in the general cemetery of the San Juan de Dios Church.

Feast: March 7.

SEE ALSO CUBA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dominik Hartig, "Cubans Recognize a Hero of Charity," Zenit, November 7, 2008, available from http://www.zenit.org/article-24392?l=english (accessed August 5, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "José Olallo Valdés (1820–1889)," Vatican Web site, November 29, 2008, available (in Spanish) from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2008/ns_lit_doc_20081129_olallo_sp.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

A. J. Kim
Graduate Student, School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

VALLE, GIULIA NEMESIA, BL.

Religious of the Sisters of Charity of St. Joan Antida THOURET; b. June 26, 1847, Aosta, Italy; d. December 18, 1916, Borgaro, Italy; beatified April 25, 2004, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Baptized on the day she was born, Giulia Valle was the daughter of a businessman and a milliner. Her mother died when she was four, and her father sent her to live with relatives, causing her great homesickness. At age eleven, she was sent to a French boarding school run by the Sisters of Charity. When Giulia returned home, she found her father remarried and living in Pont Saint Martin. Both Giulia and her brother, Vincenzo, found their stepmother difficult. Vincenzo left the household, never to be heard from again, and Giulia channeled her discomforts into caring for the lonely and needy.

When the Sisters of Charity of St. Joan Antida Thouret started a community in Pont Saint Martin, Giulia refused a good marriage offer in order to join them at the age of nineteen. On the Feast of the NATIVITY OF MARY, September 8, 1866, Giula's father accompanied her to the monastery of St. Margherita in Vercelli, where the Sisters of Charity had their novitiate. Throughout her novitiate, Giulia regularly prayed this aspiration: "Jesus, empty me of myself, let me be clothed in you."

In the monastery, Giulia took the name of Nemesia, an early Christian MARTYR. She spent time in Tortona at St. Vincent's Institute, where she founded two schools and an orphanage. At the age of forty, she became the superior of her community. Her motto in all difficulties was, "Concentrate on the one goal: God alone!"

In 1903 Sr. Nemesia left Tortona for Borgaro to be the novice mistress at the monastery there. Emphasizing charity, self-mortification, and patience, Sr. Nemesia formed a group of novices, carefully considering each one's needs and abilities. The provincial superior strongly disagreed with Sr. Nemesia's methods, favoring a much stricter course of discipline for the young women. Despite being chastised and humiliated, Sr. Nemesia carried on smilingly. In her thirteen years at Borgaro, she formed over five hundred novices. She is now buried there.

Sr. Nemesia was beatified by John Paul II on Easter Sunday, April 25, 2004, for her heroic virtue. In his HOMILY, John Paul II called Sr. Nemesia an "example of a shining holiness directed towards the high summits of evangelical perfection, which can be translated in the simple gestures of daily living, completely spent in God's service."

Feast: December 18.

SEE ALSO RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SISTERS OF CHARITY, FEDERATION OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 96, no. 6 (June 4, 2004): 377–378.

"Bl. Nemesia Valle (1847–1916): Virgin, Professed Sister of the Congregation of the Sisters of Charity of St. Joan Antida Thouret," L'Osservatore Romano 1841 (April 28, 2004): 9.

Matthew Bunson and Margaret Bunson, John Paul II's Book of Saints (Huntington, Ind. 2007): 294–295, 562.

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six Servants of God" (Homily, April 25, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20040425_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

Elizabeth-Jane P. McGuire
Doctoral Candidate
School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

VAN LIESHOUT, EUSTÁQUIO, BL.

Baptized Humberto; priest of the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, missionary; b. November 3, 1890, Aarle-Rixtel, Holland; d. August 30, 1943, Belo Horizonte, Brazil; beatified June 15, 2006, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

The eighth of eleven children, Humberto van Lieshout grew up in a family of devout Catholic farmers. He attended a school run by the Sisters of Charity of Schijndel, and early on he felt a vocation to the priesthood. Despite being discouraged by several teachers and his father, Humberto declared, "I am determined to give the best of myself, and we should have trust in our Lord. Things will go well."

In 1913 Humberto entered the novitiate of the Priests of the Sacred Hearts in Tremeloo, Belgium, after reading an inspiring biography of Fr. Damien de VEUSTER, the Apostle of the Lepers. Taking the name Eustáquio, he was ordained on August 10, 1919. He ministered in Holland as an assistant novice master and parish priest for five years, paying special attention to the Wallonians, an immigrant group of Belgian glasscutters. The Belgian government gave him an award for his service to this population.

In 1924 Fr. Eustáquio went to Spain to study so he could go to Uruguay as a missionary. However, a year later he was sent to the Portuguese-speaking country of Brazil. There, he spent ten years in Agua Suja, or Romaria. In 1935 he was moved to Our Lady of Lourdes in Poá, where he became known as a healer, praying through the INTERCESSION of St. JOSEPH. Word spread of his abilities, and thousands of people came to see him. Civil authorities were displeased with the disruptions this caused, and during the last two years of Fr. Eustáquio's life, his superiors moved him frequently, sending him to Rio de Janeiro, Fazenda de S. José de Rio Claro, Patrocinio, Ibiá, and lastly to St. Dominic's in Belo Horizonte. While in Belo Horizonte, he heard as many as forty confessions a day. Land was donated for a parish church dedicated to the Sacred Hearts by the prefect, Juscelino Kubitscheck, who believed he had been healed by Fr. Eustáquio's prayers.

In August 1943, Fr. Eustáquio contracted typhus and died. He was beatified in Belo Horizonte on June 15, 2006, after a priest was miraculously healed from throat cancer due to his intercession. At his BEATIFICATION, Cardinal José Saraiva Martins emphasized Fr. Eustáquio's concern for "the poor, the afflicted, all those who suffered, and children."

Feast: August 30.

SEE ALSO BRAZIL, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); SACRED HEARTS OF JESUS AND MARY, CONGREGATION OF THE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 98, no. 2 (February 3, 2006): 165–167.

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 98, no. 11 (November 3, 2006): 789–791.

José Vicente de Andrade, Mão que abençoa: Vida do servo de Deus, Padre Eustáquio van Lieshout, ss. cc. (Belo Horizonte, Brazil 1967).

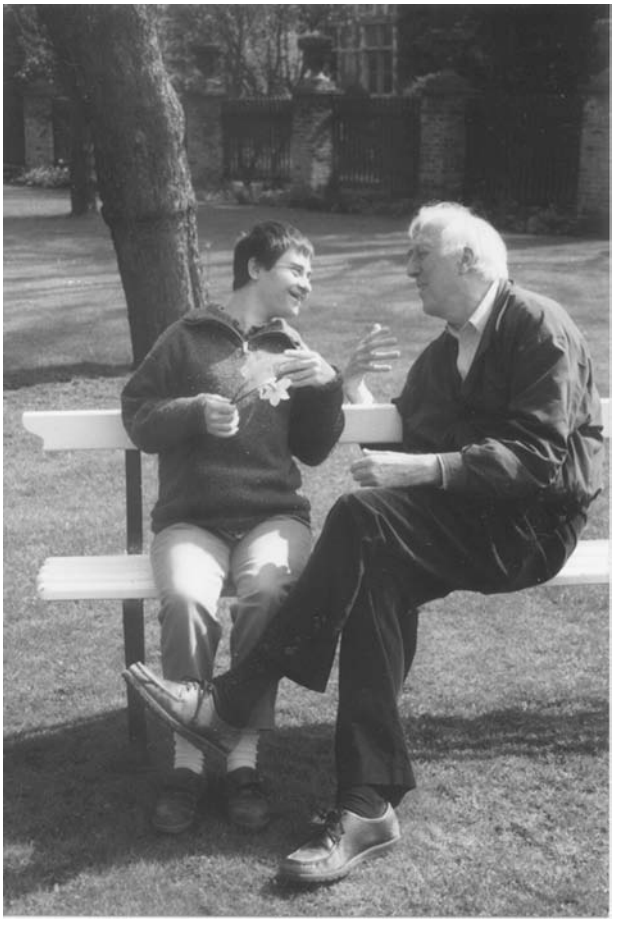
"Bl. Eustáquio van Lieshout (1890–1943): Priest, Missionary of the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary," L'Osservatore Romano 1951 (July 5, 2006): 4.

Congregation for the Causes of Saints, "Padre Eustáquio van Lieshout (1890–1943), Beatificado em Belo Horizonte, Brasil, pelo Cardeal José Saraiva Martins," Vatican Web site, June 15, 2006, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20060615_eustaquio_po.html (accessed November 6, 2009).



Venerable Father Eustaquio: Missionary of the Health and the Peace, available from http://www.padreeustaquio.com/english/index.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

Elizabeth-Jane P. McGuire
Doctoral Candidate
School of Theology and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America (2010)

VANIER, JEAN

Founder of L'ARCHE®, co-founder of Faith and Light and Intercordia, founder of Faith and Sharing, writer, speaker, humanitarian; b. September 13, 1928; Geneva, Switzerland, of Canadian parents.

Jean Vanier was educated in England and Canada. His father, Georges P. Vanier, had a distinguished diplomatic career and in 1959 became Governor General of Canada. Vanier's father and his mother Pauline were both devout Catholics who were well known and loved for their social concern.

Pleasant Coversation. Jean Vanier (right) and Mark Zeigler of L'Arche Antwerp. COURTESY OF LIEVEN VANKEER

Early Years. Vanier's early life was touched by world events. In 1940, the family, then in Paris, fled the Nazis with other refugees and after numerous perils arrived back in Canada. In 1942 at age thirteen, Vanier asked his father's permission to make the dangerous trip back across the Atlantic and enter the Royal Naval College in Dartmouth, England. His father's trust in him at that time was a formative event.

Vanier served a total of eight years in the navy, beginning in the Royal Navy and later transferring to the Royal Canadian Navy. Although he loved naval life, by age twenty he increasingly engaged in a spiritual quest. He resigned his naval commission and went to Paris, where he met Père Thomas Philippe (1905–1993), a Dominican whose HOLINESS was obvious to him and whom he asked to be his spiritual director. The priest had a life-long influence on Vanier.

While studying PHILOSOPHY at the Sorbonne, Vanier lived in and later headed Eau Vive, a community of students who were close to Père Philippe. Vanier completed a doctorate (cum maxima laude) on Aristotle at the Institut Catholique in 1962.

Establishment of L'ARCHE. Vanier taught briefly at St. Michael's College, University of Toronto. In 1964, convinced that he had not yet found his life's work, he gave up a promising teaching career and returned to France. Père Philippe was then chaplain to an institution for men with intellectual disabilities in the village of Trosly-Breuil. The suffering of people in the institutions appalled Vanier. Hearing their cry for relationship and for someone to be committed to them, he purchased a small house and invited two men with developmental disabilities to live with him—a step that he knew was irrevocable. He named the house "L'ARCHE," after NOAH's Ark, a safe abode. Vanier soon discovered an unexpected mutuality in his new relationships: He learned much about LOVE, forgiveness, celebration, and what he refers to as "our common humanity," from those whom he welcomed into L'ARCHE.

Growth of L'ARCHE. The time was ripe for the deinstitutionalization of people with developmental disabilities, and Vanier was in the forefront of this movement. L' ARCHE grew quickly. New homes were opened as young people from various countries, some his former students, flocked to live and help in the new community. After spending time in Vanier's new little community in Trosly, they took L'ARCHE back to their home countries. As of 2009 there were over 130 communities in 34 countries on 6 continents, including 16 in the United States.

In the early 1970s Vanier, with others, established the International Federation of L'ARCHE communities. It soon became clear that L'ARCHE would be ecumenical and sometimes interfaith, reflecting local populations, and Vanier embraced this reality. He also maintained an important relationship with the VATICAN. Since his first visit to the Pontifical Council for the Laity in 1966, he and others have met annually with the various pontifical bodies to which L'ARCHE has been assigned. In 1998 he was invited to address 350,000 members of lay communities gathered in ROME. He has also spoken at World Youth Days as well as at numerous ecumenical and secular gatherings. He had a personal bond with Pope JOHN PAUL II, who invited Vanier to accompany him on the pope's last pilgrimage to LOURDES.

Beyond L'ARCHE. In 1971, recognizing the isolation of families who have a child with a disability, Vanier joined Marie-Hélène Mathieu to co-found Faith and Light. There are over 14,000 Faith and Light groups around the world. He also founded Faith and Sharing, an inclusive retreat movement, and in the 1990s, cofounded Intercordia, a university-accredited program applying the L'ARCHE principles to develop peace-making skills.

By 1980 Vanier had given over his administrative responsibilities for L'ARCHE to focus on sharing his gospel-based message about the needs and the gifts of people with developmental disabilities. At the heart of this message is his firm belief that those with developmental disabilities have the unique ability to bring others together across differences of culture and religion, breaking down barriers and creating unity. He continues to spread his message through his writing and public addresses all across the world. Profoundly a man of PEACE, Vanier has a breadth of vision that speaks to people of all faiths as well as to those of no particular faith. In such books as his best-selling Becoming Human (1998) he writes about loneliness and belonging and expresses a vision of a different kind of society from that which we have today, one that is not a pyramid with a few powerful people at the top but rather a body where everyone has a place and can contribute (1999). Vanier lives in the original L'ARCHE community in Trosly.

Vanier has received many honors including the "Pope PAUL VI Prize," the "Gaudium et spes Award" from the International KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS, the "Blessed are the Peacemakers Award" from the Catholic Theological Union in Chicago, and the highest civilian honors of state from Canada and France. He has accepted these in the name of the people with disabilities, his teachers.

SEE ALSO ARCHE, L'; CANADA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; FRANCE, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; MERCY, WORKS OF; PERSON (IN PHILOSOPHY); PERSON (IN THEOLOGY); PONTIFICAL COUNCILS; WORLD YOUTH DAY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SOURCES

L'Arche Canada Foundation, "Jean Vanier" (2007), available from http://www.lArche.ca/en/jean_vanier/journey/.

L'Arche USA Web site, http://www.lArcheusa.org

University of St. Michael's in the University of Toronto, "Faith and Sharing Fonds: Faith and Sharing Federation/Foi et Partage Fonds" (2007), available from http://www.utoronto.ca/stmikes/library/faith_sharing/index.html.

STUDIES

Deborah Cowley and George Cowley, One Woman's Journey: A Portrait of Pauline Vanier (Ottawa 1992).

Kathryn Spink, The Miracle, The Message, The Story: Jean Vanier and L'Arche (Toronto 2006).

Organizations Founded by Jean Vanier

Foi et lumière et ISCAM-production, Faith and Light International Web site, http://www.foietlumiere.org.

Intercordia Canada Web site, http://www.intercordiacanada.org.

Works by Jean Vanier

Community and Growth, rev. ed. (Mahwah, N.J. 1991).

An Ark for the Poor: The Story of L'Arche (Ottawa 1995).

Becoming Human (Toronto 1998, Mahwah, N.J. 1999).

Made for Happiness: Discovering the Meaning of Life with Aristotle, translated by Kathryn Spink (Toronto 2001). First published as Le goût du bonheur: au fondement de la morale avec Aristotle (Paris 2000).

Finding Peace (Toronto 2003).

Drawn into the Mystery of Jesus through the Gospel of John (New York 2004).

Our Life Together: A Memoir in Letters (Toronto 2007).

Beth Porter
Director of Educational Initiatives and Publications
L'ARCHE Canada, Richmond Hill, Ontario (2010)

VARIARA, LUIGI, BL.

Priest, Salesian, founder of the Congregation of the Daughters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary; b. January 15, 1875, Viarigi, Asti, Italy; d. February 1, 1923; beatified April 14, 2002, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

At age twelve, Luigi Variara entered the Salesian Oratory at Turin, Italy, where he had the opportunity to meet Don BOSCO. On August 17, 1891, Variara entered the Salesian novitiate. He made his perpetual vows a year later on October 2 in the presence of Bl. Michael Rua.

While studying philosophy, Variara met Fr. Michele Unia, a Salesian who had come to speak of his apostolate to the lepers. When Unia returned to his apostolate in Colombia in 1894, Variara joined him and began working with the lepers in Agua de Dios. After being ordained on April 24, 1898, Variara, in addition to teaching music and drama to the young lepers, exercised priestly duties, notably, hearing confessions often for four to five hours daily. In 1905 he opened the Michele Unia Youth Hostel, which was a leprosarium dedicated to helping leprous youths learn the faith, to read and write, and a manual skill, all so that they might avoid a destitute and vicious life. On October 7, 1905, Variara founded the Congregation of the Daughters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary to care for the residents of the hostel and to permit its members to offer themselves as expiatory victims to God. The congregation was intended, also, to permit leprous women to join, so as to consecrate their lives to God.

This founding of the congregation caused Variara much suffering; indeed, many SALESIANS thought this to be an error on his part. In 1907 Variara was transferred from Agua de Dios to Venezuela, never to be stationed again with his lepers and his congregation. He was living the life of expiatory victim. Variara was moved repeatedly, arriving in 1921 in Táriba, his final assignment. Throughout this period, he remained in contact with Mother Lozano of the congregation by letter. On November 17, 1941, his remains were interred at the sisters' shrine in Agua de Dios.

The miracle necessary for his BEATIFICATION was approved by the Congregation for the Causes of Saints on December 21, 2001. In 1989 Sr. Hedwig Roso of the Congregation of the Daughters of Mary Auxiliatrix was miraculously cured of an incurable ovarian cancer through the INTERCESSION of Variara. During the HOMILY following Variara's beatification, John Paul II mentioned Variara's closeness to Christ's suffering.

Feast: January 15.

SEE ALSO Colombia, The Catholic Church in; Religious (Men and Women).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 95 (2003): 574–576.

"Biographies of the Newly Beatified Servants of God," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (April 17, 2002): 7–8.

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six Servants of God" (Homily, April 14, 2002), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2002/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20020414_beatification_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

John Paul II, "Risen Lord, Draw Near and Go with Us," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (April 17, 2002): 1–2.

Eulalia Marín Rueda, La espiritualidad propuesta por el padre Luis Variara (1875–1923): Lectura contextualizada de las cartas generales (Rome 1998).

Albert Edward Doskey
Doctoral Student in Historical Theology
The Catholic University of America (2010)

VENERINI, ROSE, ST.

Foundress of schools and the Order of the VENERINI SISTERS; b. Viterbo, Italy, February 9, 1656; d. Rome, May 7, 1728; beatified May 4, 1952, by Pope PIUS XII; canonized October 15, 2006, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Rose Venerini was the third of four children born to Goffredo, a physician, and Marzia (Zampichetti)

Venerini. An early biographical account describes her decision to consecrate herself to God at age seven. A highly intelligent young woman, the formation in prayer and education she received from her family helped shape her talents. At times, she felt a conflict between the attractions of the world and her desire to serve God. Engaged to be married at one point, she entered a contemplative Dominican order at age twenty, after the death of her fiancé. Her father died shortly after her entrance, however, and she returned home to care for her mother. Within the next few years, her older brother and mother died. With her older sister married and only her younger brother remaining at home with her, Venerini searched for a way to serve God.

At age twenty-four, Venerini began to host a prayer group at her home, inviting the local women to pray the ROSARY together. The women's lack of moral and spiritual formation dismayed her. Encouraged by her spiritual director, Fr. Ignatius Martinelli, who recognized her gifts as a teacher and prompted her to consider a vocation in the world, Rose realized that her mission was to provide education and Christian formation for young women, an urgent need for the society of her time.

Aided by two friends, and with the approval of the local bishop, Cardinal Urbano Sacchetti (1640–1705) of Viterbo, Rose started Italy's first free school for girls on August 30, 1685. Some local clergy, as well as some upper-middle-class women, were initially hostile to her efforts. Her school became popular, nonetheless, and several years later Cardinal Mark Antonio Barbarigo (1640–1706) of Montefiascone invited her to open schools in his diocese. There she became friends with Lucy FILIPPINI, to whom she entrusted the care of the Montefiascone schools once they were established.

After starting ten schools in Montefiascone, Venerini opened schools in Lazio and then attempted to establish one in Rome, in 1706, which failed. This failure affected her deeply, but she persevered and by 1713 opened another. Three short years later, the school was visited by Pope CLEMENT XI, who attended lessons and, greatly pleased with her work, is reported to have told her, "Signora Rosa, you are doing what we cannot do. We thank you very much because with these schools you will sanctify Rome."

As appreciation for her work spread, she traveled tirelessly, training teachers, founding more schools, visiting those already established, and offering her life in sacrifice and service. By the time of her death in Rome on May 7, 1728, she had founded more than forty schools. After her death, her lay teachers were formed into the religious congregation of the Venerini Sisters. The fire that ignited Rose's work was her love of God and her desire to save souls. She realized that ignorance of moral and spiritual truths was a chain that bound the girls and women of her time. She sought to educate them in order to free them to respond to the good news and God's plan for each one of them. Realizing that her human efforts alone would be in vain, she united her work and self-sacrifice to Christ's sacrifice on the CROSS and joined herself spiritually each day to all of the Masses offered in the world. Following the inspiration of their foundress, "Educate to Save" became the motto of the Venerini Sisters.

Feast: May 7.

SEE ALSO ITALY, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS EDUCATION; VENERINI SISTERS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "Eucharistic Concelebration for the Canonization of Four New Saints: Rafael Guízar, Valencia (1878–1938), Filippo Smaldone (1848–1923), Rosa Venerini (1656–1728), Théodore Guérin (1798–1856)," (Homily, October 15, 2006), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2006/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20061015_canonizzazioni_en.html (accessed November 18, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Rosa Venerini (1656–1728)," Vatican Web site, October 15, 2006, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20061015_venerini_en.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

Tony Staley, "St. Rose Venerini Gave Bright Future to Women: Despite Critics and Odds, St. Rose Started the Venerini Sisters and First Schools for Girls," The Compass (Official newspaper of the Catholic diocese of Green Bay, Wisconsin), April 28, 2009, available from http://www.thecompassnews.org/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id =332:st-rose-venerini-gave-bright-future-to-women &catid =57:saint-of-the-day&Itemid=110 (accessed November 19, 2009).

Laurie Malashanko
Independent Scholar
Ann Arbor, Michigan (2010)

VENERINI SISTERS

(MPV; Official Catholic Directory #4180) The Religious Venerini Sisters are a congregation with papal approbation, founded August 30, 1685, in Viterbo, Italy, by St. Rose VENERINI (1656–1728; canonized October 15, 2006, in Rome by Pope Benedict XVI; feast: May 7). The congregation's mission is centered on the Christian education of young women, especially among the poorer classes according to the CHARISM of St. Rose, "Educate to set free."

As a diocesan institute under the bishop of Viterbo, the congregation spread to other dioceses, especially to Montefiascone where St. Lucy FILIPPINI took up their work. At the death of St. Rose there were 40 houses in 17 dioceses. The sisters came to the United States in 1909, to a parochial school in Lawrence, Massachusetts. In 1914 they added a school in Providence, Rhode Island. Other foundations, usually in parishes of Italian immigrants, were established in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New York. In 1926, they opened their United States novitiate in Worcester, Massachusetts, where Venerini Academy is located. In parochial schools, day nurseries, and high schools, the sisters follow the method of their foundress, who was a pioneer in the education of young women. They hold frequent meetings with the mothers of their students, in order to coordinate the school with the family.

The Congregation also offers laypersons to enter an associate program, through which they share in the work and prayer of the congregation. These associates do not live in community with the sisters and are only asked to make yearly promises, instead of permanent vows, to live a life of poverty, chastity and obedience.

SEE ALSO EDUCATION (PHILOSOPHY OF); EDUCATION, CATHOLIC (K THROUGH 12) IN THE UNITED STATES; VENERINI, ROSE, ST.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gremigni Vescovo, La beata Rosa Venerini (Rome 1952).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Rosa Venerini (1656–1728)," Vatican Web site, September 30, 2009, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20061015_venerini_en.html (accessed October 14, 2009).

Religious Venerini Sisters Official Web site, available from http://venerinisisters.com/ (accessed October 14, 2009).

Rev. James H. Lambert SM
Assistant General and Secretary-General of the Marist Fathers
Rome, Italy

EDS (2010)

VEUSTER, JOSEPH DE (FR. DAMIEN), ST.

Picpus (Ss. Cc.) priest, missionary to lepers; b. January 3, 1840, Tremeloo, Belgium; d. April 15, 1889, Molokai, Hawaii; beatified June 4, 1995, by Pope JOHN PAUL II; canonized October 11, 2009, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Joseph, one of many children of a prosperous farming family, was sent to college at Braine-le-Comte to prepare for a commercial career, but decided to follow his eldest brother, Auguste (later Fr. Pamphile), into the Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary (Picpus Fathers) at Louvain. He was professed on October 7, 1860, and took the name Damien. When Pamphile fell sick and was unable to sail for the missions, Damien received permission to go in his place, even though he had not yet been ordained. Before his departure, he wrote to his parents: "The sacrifice is great indeed for one who tenderly loved his parents, his family, his brethren and the land of his birth. But the voice that has called upon us to make a generous sacrifice of all is the voice of God Himself." He arrived in Honolulu, Hawaii, on March 19, 1864, and was ordained on May 21 in Our Lady of Peace Cathedral.

Father Damien (1840–1889). Born Joseph de Veuster, he showed heroic virtue in ministering to a leper colony before he succumbed to the disease himself. THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Damien served for eight years as a missionary on the island of Hawaii at Puna and Kohala. In 1873, when the vicar apostolic, Louis Maigret, decided to supply a priest for Kalaupapa, the Molokai leper settlement, Damien volunteered. On May 10, 1873, he went to Molokai and was subsequently given permission to remain there permanently. The colony's 800 lepers had only the clothing and meager food rations supplied by the government. Officially, Damien was the pastor of the Catholics in the colony, but in fact he served all the lepers as physician, counselor, teacher, house-builder, sheriff, maker of musical instruments, gravedigger, and undertaker, laboring to transform their prison into a home. He founded two orphanages at the leprosarium, and effectively fought the despair, immorality, drunkenness, and general lawlessness he found among the adult lepers upon his arrival. Most importantly, he instilled in his flock a sense of their human dignity; he taught them to live rather than simply await death.

For ten of his sixteen years with the lepers, he was without the companionship of other priests. In a letter home he wrote, "Without the Blessed Sacrament, a position of mine would not be tolerable. But having the Lord with me, I am happy and work cheerfully for the relief of the unfortunate patients." By 1884, at which point he had contracted leprosy (Hansen's disease), he wrote that he would not wish to he cured if the price of his cure involved leaving the island and giving up his work. He continued that work untiringly until the month before his death. He was buried next to the church he built, St. Philomena.

Before and after his death, rumors circulated regarding Damien's morals, primarily because some held the mistaken belief that Hansen's disease was sexually transmitted. A thorough investigation made shortly after he died completely exonerated him, however. During his last years he was also troubled by the misunderstandings of his superior and some fellow priests, which arose due to his fundraising efforts and an invitation he had made, asking a secular priest to join him in Molokai. One posthumous attack upon Damien's reputation by a Protestant clergyman was answered by Robert Louis Stevenson's scathing retort, Father Damien: An Open Letter to the Reverend Doctor Hyde of Honolulu.

Less than two months after his death, a leprosy fund was established in London, the first such organized effort devoted to helping the victims of this disease. In 1936 his RELICS were translated to Louvain, Belgium, where they were placed in a crypt of his congregation's church. In honor of his sacrifices, in 1965 a bronze statue of Damien was placed in the U.S. Capitol's Statuary Hall to represent the State of Hawaii.

Pope PAUL VI declared Damien venerable on July 7, 1977. In 1985 Sr. Simplicie Hue, a French nun of the same order as Damien, had been cured of a chronic intestinal condition after asking for Damien's INTERCESSION. Her healing was officially accepted as miraculous in 1992, and Pope JOHN PAUL II beatified Damien at the Sacred Heart Basilica in the Koekelberg neighborhood of Brussels, Belgium, on PENTECOST Sunday, June 4, 1995. After the BEATIFICATION ceremony, Damien's right hand was returned to the Hawaiian people, who placed it in his original grave at Kalaupapa, Molokai.

In 1999 Audrey Toguchi, a retired teacher from Honolulu, was miraculously cured of terminal lung cancer after asking for Damien's intercession. In 2008, after an investigation by the Congregation for the Causes of Saints, the healing was officially recognized as miraculous and attributed to Damien's intercession. On October 11, 2009, at ST. PETER'S BASILICA in Rome, Pope Benedict XVI canonized Damien along with four other saints. The eighty-one year old Toguchi and her doctor, Walter Chang, participated in the canonization Mass, which was attended by more than 10,000 people, including Belgian and Hawaiian officials. In a homily that emphasized the new saints' examples of selfless giving, Pope Benedict observed that Damien "teaches us to choose the good fight—not those that lead to division, but those that gather us together in unity."

Damien is the patron of lepers and those with incurable diseases, particularly AIDS.

Feast: May 10 (the day Damien arrived on Molokai).

SEE ALSO CANONIZATION OF SAINTS (HISTORY AND PROCEDURE); HAWAII, CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; SACRED HEARTS OF JESUS AND MARY, CONGREGATION OF THE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "Eucharistic Celebration for the Canonization of Five New Saints, Zygmunt Szczesny Felinski (1822–1895), Francisco Coll y Guitart (1812–1875), Jozef Damiaan de Veuster (1840–1889), Raphael Arnaiz Baron (1911–1938), Marie de la Croix (Jeanne) Jugan (1792–1879)," (Homily, October 12, 2009), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2009/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20091011_canonizzazioni_en.html (accessed November 26, 2009).

Matthew Bunson and Margaret Bunson, Saint Damien of Molokai: Apostle of the Exiled (Huntington, Ind. 2009).

Gavin Daws, Holy Man: Father Damien of Molokai (Honolulu 1984).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "St Jozef Damien de Veuster (1840–1889)," Vatican Web site, October 11, 2009, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2009/ns_lit_doc_20091011_de-veuster_en.html (accessed November 26, 2009).

William Petrie, Ss. Cc., "The Damien I Know," Columbia (November 2009).

Robert Louis Stevenson, Father Damien: An Open Letter to the Reverend Doctor Hyde of Honolulu (London 1890).

Damien de Veuster, Un étrange bonheur. Lettres du Père Damien lépreux (Paris 2008).

Damian X. Lenshek
Ph.D. Student, School of Theology
and Religious Studies
The Catholic University of America,
Washington, D.C. (2010)

VIGNE, PETER, BL.

Founder of the Congregation of the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, associate member of the Priests of the Blessed Sacrament; b. Privas, France, August 20, 1670; d. Rencurel, France, July 8, 1740; beatified October 3, 2004, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Born in Privas, France, in 1670, Peter Vigne was the son of Peter Vigne Sr. and Frances Gautier. Two of Peter's sisters died in infancy, and he lived with his two older siblings, John-Francis and Eleonore, in relative comfort. When he was eleven years old, the parish priest asked him to serve as a witness, in which post he was responsible for signing the parish register for baptisms, marriages, and deaths.

Peter received a good education through his teenage years and entered the Sulpician Seminary in Viviers after a transformative experience that increased his awareness of the presence of Jesus in the Eucharist. He was ordained a priest on September 18, 1694, in Bourg-Saint-Andéol.

After working as a parish curate for six years, he felt called to continue his work as a missionary for the poor. He continued his formation in 1700 by joining the Vicentians in Lyon, with whom he received a solid foundation for his future work with the poor. After leaving the Vicentians in 1706, he became an itinerant missionary, traveling for more than three decades on foot or on horseback. He evangelized, visited the sick, catechized children, and administered the sacraments. He gave special care to celebrating the Mass and exposing the Blessed Sacrament.

On November 30, 1715, Peter founded the Congregation of the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament in Boucieu-le-Roi. He instituted the CROSS and religious HABIT, and encouraged community life and adoration of the Blessed Sacrament. He also opened schools for youth and established teacher training schools.

Peter Vigne relied heavily on the support he received from his former colleagues at the Sulpician Seminary, including his spiritual director and confessor. He also found himself drawn to the spiritual dedication of the Priests of the Blessed Sacrament, and he was accepted as an associate member of the order in 1724.

Peter's constant traveling and pastoral work finally began to take their toll. At age seventy, during mission work at Rencurel, he became ill and was unable to continue celebrating Mass. He retired to private prayer, and died on July 8, 1740. His remains were taken to the church in Boucieu.

In his HOMILY beatifying Fr. Peter Vigne, Pope John Paul II extolled the missionary zeal and the discipleship he manifested through his love of the Eucharist: "By contemplating Christ present in the Eucharist and in his salvific passion, Father Peter Vigne was led to be an authentic disciple and faithful missionary of the Church."

Feast: July 8.

SEE ALSO BLESSED SACRAMENT, SISTERS OF THE; FRANCE, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Pierre Dhombre and Alain d' Orange, Pierre Vigne et le journal des Soeurs du Saint-Sacrement de Valence (Paris 1983).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Five Servants of God," (Homily, October 3, 2004), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2004/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20041003_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 23, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Peter Vigne (1670–1740)," Vatican Web site, October 3, 2004, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20041003_vigne_en.html (accessed November 23, 2009).

Alexander Andujar
Alumnus
Saint Leo University (2010)

VISINTAINER, AMABILE LUCIA, ST.

Known in religion as Mother Paolina (Pauline) of the Agonizing Heart of Jesus; foundress of the Daughters of the Immaculate Conception (Irmazinhas da Imaculada Conceiçao); b. Vigolo Vattaro, Trentino, Italy (then Austria), December 16, 1865; d. São Paulo, Brazil, July 9, 1942; beatified October 18, 1991; canonized May 19, 2002, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

For two years before emigrating to Brazil with her family in 1875, Amabile Visintainer, the daughter of Antonio Napoleone Visintainer and Anna Pianezzer, worked in the local silk mill. With other immigrants, they established the village of Vigolo (now part of Nova Trento, 60 miles from Florianópolis) in Santa Catarina Province in Brazil. Amabile received her FIRST COM-MUNION at age twelve and participated in parish life by taking catechism classes, visiting the sick, and cleaning the chapel of Vigolo. Upon her mother's death in 1886, Amabile assumed household responsibilities and cared for her twelve siblings. When her father remarried, Amabile was free to respond to her recurring dream of religious life.

In 1890 Amabile and Virginia Nicolodi began caring for a woman dying of cancer in an abandoned shack. This act of mercy led to the formation of the Congregation of the Little Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, which was approved by Bishop José de Camargo Barros of Curitiba. Along with two sisters, Virginia and Teresa Anna Maule, Amabile pronounced religious vows on December 7, 1895, and assumed the name Sr. Paolina of the Agonizing Heart of Jesus.

The Sisters of the Immaculate Conception soon spread to nearby towns and to São Paulo, where they directed hospitals and asylums and assisted the recently emancipated slaves. In 1909, after difficult internal conflicts in the order, Mother Paolina accepted her removal from the office of mother general ad vitam (for life) by the archbishop, Duarte Leopoldo da Silva. For the next ten years, she humbly served her sisters by caring for the sick at Santa Casa de Bragança Paulista and remained assiduous in prayer.

Although she never reclaimed her office as superior, Sr. Paolina's reputation was rehabilitated, and she was venerated during her lifetime as the congregation's founder. On the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the order, Sr. Paolina called on the sisters to "Be humble. Trust always and a great deal in divine Providence; never never must you let yourselves be discouraged, despite contrary winds. I say it again: trust in God and Mary Immaculate; be faithful and forge ahead!" Beginning in 1938, she suffered complications from diabetes that led to her death in 1942. Her final words, after spending the last two months of her life blind, were "God's will be done."

During the October 18, 1991, ceremony of the first Brazilian citizen to be beatified, Pope John Paul II said: "She was able to convert all her words and actions into a continual act of praise to God.... This being-for-others is the background for her whole life." She was canonized on May 19, 2002, by John Paul II. In his canonization HOMILY, he described St. Paolina's work as "a manifestation of the Holy Spirit who is 'the best comforter; the soul's most welcome guest, sweet refreshment here below.'"

Feast: July 9 (Bolzano).

SEE ALSO BRAZIL, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Frederick A. Farace, Love's Harvest: The Life of Blessed Pauline, edited by Joe Kindel and Bonnie Lewis (Milford, Ohio 1994).

John Paul II, "Canonization of Five Blesseds," (Homily, May 19, 2002), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2002/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20020519_canonization_en.html (accessed November 19, 200).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Paulina do Coração Agonizante de Jesus (1865–1942)," Vatican Web site, May 19, 2002, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/2002/documents/ns_lit_doc_20020519_paulina_en.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

L'Osservatore Romano, English edition, 19 (1995): 6.

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Neil P. Sloan
Research Assistant, Secretariat of Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs
United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (2010)

VITCHEV, KAMEN, BL.

Baptized Peter; priest, Augustinian of the Assumption, educator, writer, MARTYR; b. May 23, 1893, Strem, Bourgas, Bulgaria; d. November 11, 1952, Sofia, Bulgaria; beatified May 26, 2002 in Plovdiv, Bulgaria, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Baptized into the Byzantine rite of the Catholic Church as Peter, Kamen Vitchev attended grammar school in Bulgaria and parts of the Ottoman Empire (Bulgaria only became fully independent in 1908). On September 8, 1910, he entered the novitiate of the Augustinians of the Assumption in Gemp, Belgium, and took the religious name Kamen. He made his final profession in 1912. From 1918 to 1920, Vitchev taught in Bulgaria and Turkey. He returned to Louvain, Belgium, for one year to complete his studies and afterward returned to Kadiköy, Turkey, a suburb of Istanbul, where he taught THEOLOGY until 1925 and where he was ordained to the priesthood on December 22, 1921, according to the Byzantine rite.

After having gone to Rome and Strasbourg, France, for further studies, Vitchev obtained a doctorate in theology in 1929. In 1930 he returned to the College of St. Augustine in Plovdiv, Bulgaria, where he had taught previously. There he would hold the positions of rector, dean of studies, and lecturer of philosophy until the school was closed by Communists in 1948. He was both known for his severity and deeply respected by his students. The school successfully accepted non-Catholics, which seems to have been notable. While at the college, Vitchev wrote articles for, among other publications, Istina and Review of Byzantine Studies, sometimes under pseudonyms.

After the school was closed, Vitchev was made superior of the seminary in Plovdiv, and when all foreign religious were expelled from Bulgaria, he was appointed provincial vicar for the ASSUMPTIONISTS in Bulgaria. Having foreseen his fate, he was arrested on July 4, 1952; nothing further was known until his name was published in newspapers on September 20 as one accused of being a spy for the VATICAN and France and for seeking to foment war against the U.S.S.R. and its allies. After having been tortured in prison and found guilty, he was executed on November 11, 1952; the details of his execution were only confirmed after the fall of the Eastern Bloc.

According to the norms at the time of his BEATIFICATION, no miracle was needed for the beatification of a martyr. At the HOMILY following the beatification of Vitchev, John Paul II stressed Vitchev's desire to be faithful to Christ and the Church in his daily life so that he could witness (become a martyr) when the time came.

Feast: November 11.

SEE ALSO BULGARIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Acta Apostolicae Sedis 96 (2004): 88–90.

"Biographies of the Blesseds," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (May 22–29, 2002): 11.

Pierre Gallay, The Martyrdom of Three Bulgarian Assumptionists (Paris 2002).

Lucien Guissard, The Assumptionists: From Past to Present (Paris 2002).

John Paul II, "Thinking of the New Beati," L'Osservatore Romano, English edition (May 22–29, 2002): 1–2.

John Paul II, "Apostolic Visit of His Holiness Pope John Paul II to Azerbaijan and Bulgaria: Eucharistic Celebration—Beatifications" (Homily, May 26, 2002), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2002/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20020526_beatification-plovdiv_en.html (accessed November 6, 2009).

Albert Edward Doskey
Doctoral Student in Historical Theology
The Catholic University of America (2010)

VOLPICELLI, CATERINA, ST.

Foundress of the Servants of the Sacred Heart; b. Naples, Italy, January 21, 1839; d. Naples, December 28, 1894; beatified April 29, 2001, by Pope JOHN PAUL II; canonized April 26, 2009, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Born into an upper-middle-class family, Caterina Volpicelli received an excellent education at the Royal College of San Marcellino under the tutelage of Margherita Salatino (who would later cofound the Franciscan Grey Sisters of St. Elizabeth). As a young woman, Caterina often attended the theater and ballet, and competed with her sister to be noticed in society. Gradually, however, she was drawn to a life of holiness rather than luxury and entertainment.

In 1854 she became the spiritual mother to Bl. Bartolo LONGO after meeting him in the home of her brother-in-law, Marchese Francesco Imperiali. Under the influence of Bl. Ludovico da Casoria PALMENTIERI, she joined the Third Order Franciscans and developed an ardent devotion to the Sacred Heart. Bl. Ludovico impressed upon her the good she could accomplish while remaining in society if she became a "fisher of souls." Guided by her spiritual director, however, she sought entrance into the Adorers of the Blessed Sacrament on May 28, 1859. She later left the community due to illness. Upon her recovery, she was active in promoting the APOSTLESHIP OF PRAYER. On July 20, 1861, she received approval from Cardinal Sisto Riario Sforza (1810–1877) to promote holy hours for the conversion of sinners.

In addition to founding the Servants of the Sacred Heart in Naples with the Third Rule of St. Francis on July 1, 1874, Caterina instituted the Daughters of Mary, opened an orphanage, established a lending library, and participated in the national Eucharistic conference in Naples (November 19–22, 1891). The Congregation of the Servants of the Sacred Heart, which includes both cloistered nuns as well as married and single oblates, tended to the sick during a cholera epidemic in 1884. The constitution was approved in 1911.

Caterina was beatified by Pope John Paul II, April 29, 2001, for being "prophetically oriented to the promotion of the laity and new forms of consecrated life." In the HOMILY for the Mass of her canonization, Pope Benedict XVI stated:

> St. Caterina shows to her spiritual daughters and to all of us the demanding journey of a conversion that radically changes the heart, and is expressed in actions consistent with the Gospel. It is thus possible to lay the foundations for building a society open to justice and solidarity, overcoming that economic and cultural imbalance which continues to exist in a large part of our planet.

Feast: December 28.

SEE ALSO Italy, The Catholic Church in; Religious (Men and Women).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benedict XVI, "Holy Mass for the Canonization of Arcangelo Tadini, Bernardo Tolomei, Nuno de Santa Maria Alvares Pereira, Gertrude Comensoli and Caterina Volpicelli," (Homily, April 26, 2009), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/homilies/2009/documents/hf_ben-xvi_hom_20090426_canonizzazioni_en.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Caterina Volpicelli (1839–1894)," Vatican Web site, April 26, 2009, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2009/ns_lit_doc_20090426_volpicelli_en.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

L'Osservatore Romano, English edition 18 (2001): 1, 6–8.

L'Osservatore Romano, English edition 19 (2001): 7, 10.

Katherine I. Rabenstein
Senior Credentialing Specialist
American Nurses Association, Washington, D.C.

Laurie Malashanko
Independent Scholar
Ann Arbor, Michigan (2010)

W

WALDHEIM, KURT

Jurist, politician, and diplomat; b. December 21, 1918, Sankt Andra-Wordern, Austria; d. June 14, 2007, Vienna, Austria.

Kurt Waldheim was born at the tail end of WORLD WAR I, in a small village near Vienna. His father, Walter, a minor school official of Czech origin, changed his last name from Watzlawick to Waldheim the year his son was born. Despite the dislocation caused by the Great War, he raised his family in a firmly bourgeois, Roman Catholic home. Young Kurt Waldheim attended primary and secondary school in a town near his home. He showed promising intellectual aptitude and an ambitious streak early in life, and, having already decided on a career in the diplomatic service, he enlisted for a one-year term in the Austrian army upon graduation from secondary school in 1936. He was encouraged, perhaps, by a newly passed law making prior military service mandatory for all future government employees.

On His Military Career. Waldheim successfully completed his basic military training and received his orders on his eighteenth birthday in December 1936. He reported to the garrison town of Stockerau as a reserve officer assigned to a light cavalry unit. Popular among his fellow officers, efficient, and intelligent, Waldheim compiled a fine record. After completing his service year he earned an academic scholarship to the prestigious and highly selective Consular Academy in Vienna. There Waldheim studied international relations and law, in addition to the standard curriculum, which focused heavily on languages and the classics. He acquitted himself very well and showed an uncanny ability to attract the favorable attention of his superiors.

Unfortunately for millions of people like the Waldheims, world events began to eclipse individual wills and shape individual fates. As Germany began to pressure Austria to surrender state sovereignty in 1937, the Waldheim family, patriotic Austrians loyal to their nation and justifiably concerned about German hostility toward the Catholic Church, publicly opposed the German efforts to undermine Austria. After the German annexation of Austria in 1938, the family came under suspicion. Kurt lost his scholarship at the academy and had to borrow money to resume his schooling. The family suffered routine harassment and the German Secret Police twice arrested Walter Waldheim, who eventually lost his job as a school inspector.

On April 1, 1938, Kurt Waldheim joined the National Socialist Students League, although he would later deny joining this Nazi organization. He probably joined the League only as a means of continuing his education, as most friends considered him to be nonpolitical in nature. In July 1938 Waldheim returned to his military unit for more training, although this time he found himself under direct German command. Shortly after completing his training Waldheim enrolled in the mounted Corps of the Nazi SA. In later years he vigorously denied that he had ever joined the corps, but membership rolls confirmed his status. Once again, it is likely that he enrolled not out of political convictions but to protect his family and to advance his own career.

Waldheim graduated from the Consular Academy in the spring of 1939. He planned to pursue graduate study in Italy, but the world scene darkened, and Waldheim reported for military service as a cavalry officer in late August. WORLD WAR II began three days later, with the German invasion of Poland on September 1, 1939. In his autobiography written years later, Waldheim claimed to have served in the Wehrmacht very reluctantly, harboring great hope that the war would end in short order. He stated that he fought in Russia as a junior officer, suffered a serious leg wound during the Russian offensive on December 14, 1941, and was declared unfit for further active duty. He claimed that he mustered out of the army at that point and began doctoral studies in Vienna. This tale apparently answered questions concerning his whereabouts during the war years, and Waldheim stuck with it for decades, but the story would fall apart under close scrutiny in 1986.

On His Political Career. Waldheim finished his studies and earned a doctor of laws degree at the University of Vienna in 1944. He joined the Austrian Foreign Service the same year and served in progressively more responsible positions from 1946 through 1966. He served a term as Austrian foreign minister, and was also the Austrian representative at the United Nations. He resigned from the latter position to run unsuccessfully for the presidency of Austria in 1971. Following his loss in the presidential race, he was elected to the secretary generalship of the United Nations (U.N.) in December 1971.

Waldheim earned modest credit during his first term as secretary general, mainly by avoiding ideologically charged issues, with the exception of the infamous U.N. Resolution 3379, which branded Zionism a form of racism. During the remainder of his first term Waldheim concentrated on convening and sponsoring conferences on matters of world interest. For the most part his efforts to participate actively in diplomatic initiatives were fruitless. Despite some Third World opposition, in 1976 Waldheim won a second term as secretary general, during which he played a generally ineffective, albeit well-intentioned, role as a peacemaker, trying to mediate wars in various parts of the world. He also tried, without success, to defuse the U.S.-Iranian confrontation of 1979–1980, when he personally lobbied for the release of American embassy personnel held hostage in Iran. Waldheim made a dramatic trip to Iran in January 1981, but the Iranian government refused to see him.

Waldheim enjoyed his role as secretary general immensely and, despite few concrete accomplishments, sought a third term. Chinese opposition to this measure doomed Waldheim's bid; he returned to Austria in 1982, but the final acts of his long career still lay ahead. He announced plans to seek the presidency of Austria in 1985, and he won the election in June 1986. Waldheim had not anticipated politically motivated inquiries into his past, but rumors concerning his falsified war record were commonplace in Austrian political, diplomatic, and intelligence circles. His campaign elicited a deluge of intrigue, controversy, and criticism worldwide, and Waldheim's evasive answers and explanations simply prompted more questions and criticism.

Exhaustive studies would later establish that Waldheim served as an intelligence officer with a German unit in Greece, which had participated in notable atrocities, including sending Italian soldiers to German slave labor camps after Italy abandoned the war in 1943. Waldheim signed the memoranda and other forms authorizing these actions. A full commission absolved him of any charges of war crimes. It added, however, that he had been complicit in the acts committed by his unit and that he had acted as an accessory in the strict legal sense. A continuing stream of revelations stained Waldheim's credibility. In 1987 U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III placed Waldheim's name on a list of people prohibited from entering the United States. Waldheim found himself unwelcome in most other Western countries, and during his term of office he made only two state visits, one to Jordan and another to the Vatican in 1987. Waldheim's personal isolation proved to be a source of international embarrassment, and he declined to run for reelection in 1992.

Waldheim retired to the Austrian countryside after his term of office. He had been a practicing Catholic all of his adult life and remained grateful to the Church for helping to lessen his international isolation while he was president of Austria. In 1992 Waldheim received an honorary membership in the KHV Welfia Klosterneuburg, a Catholic student fraternity. Two years later, Pope JOHN PAUL II awarded him a knighthood in the Order of Pius IX. The announcement of these awards ignited intense criticism in certain quarters and inevitably raised the old and thoroughly discredited questions of Catholic complicity in the Holocaust. Some have speculated that the pope served as a personal spiritual mentor to the elderly Waldheim, helping to direct him back to a state of grace, but this explanation failed to appease critics.

Kurt Waldheim died of heart failure on June 14, 2007.

SEE ALSO HOLOCAUST (SHOAH); NAZISM, PAPAL RESPONSE TO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Elizabeth Barker, Austria 1918–1972 (London 1973).

Richard Bassett, Waldheim and Austria (New York 1988).

Robert Herzstein, Waldheim: The Missing Years (New York 1988).

International Commission of Historians, The Waldheim Report (Copenhagen 1993).

Kurt Waldheim, In The Eye of the Storm: The Memoirs of Kurt Waldheim (London 1985).

Brian E. Birdnow
Adjunct Professor of History
Harris Stowe State University, St. Louis, Mo. (2010)

WIECKA, MARTA MARIA, BL.

Religious, b. Nowy Wiec, Poland, January 12, 1874; d. Sniatyn, Poland (now Ukraine), May 30, 1904; beatified May 24, 2008, by Pope BENEDICT XVI.

Marta Wiecka was the third of thirteen children of Marcello Wiecki and Paulina Kamrowska. At the age of two, her recovery from a serious illness was credited to the INTERCESSION of the MOTHER OF GOD of Piseczno. Marta joined the Daughters of Charity of St. VINCENT DE PAUL, the Grey Sisters, at the age of eighteen and spent many years serving hospital patients. Her superior, Sr. Maria Chablo, once reflected on her gift to evangelize others through love and service: "It is difficult to describe how much effort she put to convince patients to go to confession, to receive holy sacraments. Hard hearts melted and were sincerely united with God, influenced by her words" (quoted in Watroba 2008).

It has been said that none of Sr. Marta's patients died without receiving the Sacrament of Reconciliation. She was even approached by Jewish patients asking to be baptized. It is reported that in 1899 Marta had a vision of Jesus on the Cross. This experience preceded a trying time in her life caused by a mentally ill man who spread a rumor that Marta was pregnant due to an affair with a patient. Sr. Marta suffered greatly from the gossip, until time passed and it was evident that she had not been pregnant.

It was her selflessness that led to her early death. After the job of disinfecting the room of a typhoid patient was assigned to another nurse, Marta took on the task to protect him, and she contracted the disease. Witnesses of her final moments on Earth believe that she was in a state of ecstasy after receiving the Eucharist. She died on May 30, 1904, in Sniatyn and was buried there. The local Jewish community held a prayer service for her at their synagogue, and Christians of various denominations continue to pray at her grave.

Marta was beatified on May 24, 2008, in the Cathedral of L'viv, Ukraine. Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, Vatican Secretary of State, presided at the rite. He noted how the grave of Sr. Marta had become a symbol of national unity and an example of ecumenical dialogue. "When you care for the sick do not forget to consider their spiritual needs, necessary for full health," the cardinal said, concluding, "Today this humble Sr. Marta of Sniatyn shines in heaven among the blessed and she sends us a hymn of life. She encourages us to love life and protect it in all phases, from conception to natural death."

Feast: May 30.

SEE ALSO POLAND, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN); UKRAINE, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

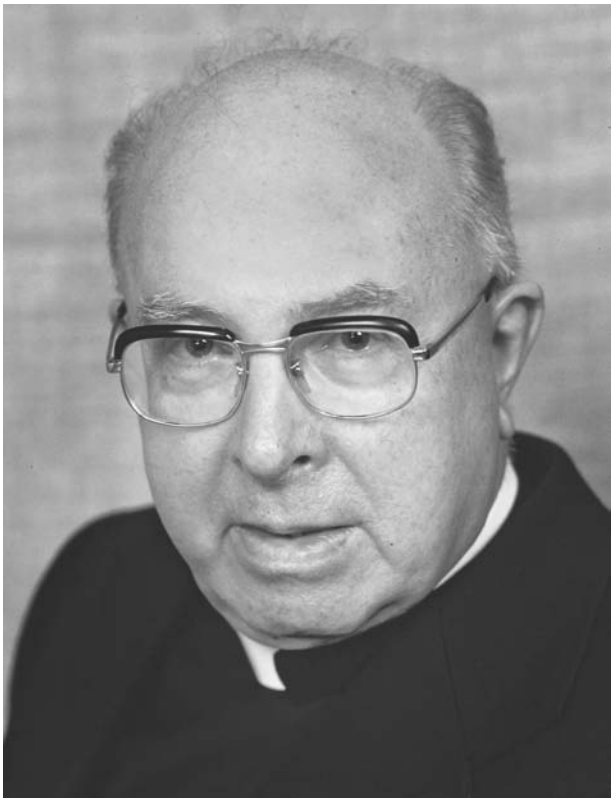
BIBLIOGRAPHY

Elzbieta Krawczyk, "The Secret of Life Is Love," translated by Maria Kantor, Sunday Catholic Weekly (Niedziela) 22 (2008), available from http://sunday.niedziela.pl/artykul.php?dz=wiara&id_art=00103 (accessed November 19, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Bl. Marta Maria Wiecka (1874–1904)," Vatican Web site, May 24, 2008, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/2008/ns_lit_doc_20080524_marta_en.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

Roman Curia, Secretariat of State, "Visita in Ucraina in Occasione della Beatificazione della Serva di Dio Suor Marta Wiecka Lviv-Kyiv, 23–26 Maggio 2008: Celebrazione della Santa Messa e Rito di Beatificazione della Serva di Dio Suor Marta Wiecka: Omelia del Cardinale Tarcisio Bertone, Segretario di Stato," Vatican Web site, May 24, 2008, available (in Italian) from http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/secretariat_state/card-bertone/2008/documents/rc_seg-st_20080524_wiecka-lviv_it.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

Jozefa Watroba, "Sr. Marta Wiecka, SM," translated by Maria Kantor, Sunday Catholic Weekly (Niedziela) 21 (2008), available from http://sunday.niedziela.pl/artykul.php?nr=200409&dz=sylwetki&id_art=00017 (accessed November 19, 2009).



Neil P. Sloan
Research Assistant
Secretariat of Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs
United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (2010)

WILLEBRANDS, JOHANNES

Cardinal, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, archbishop of Utrecht, and primate of Holland; b. September 4, 1909, Bovenkarspel, Netherlands; d. August 2, 2006, Denekamp, Netherlands.

Willebrands studied in the seminary of Warmond and was ordained a priest May 26, 1934. In 1937 he earned a doctorate in philosophy at the University of St. Thomas Aquinas (Angelicum), Rome, with a dissertation titled "The Illative Sense in the Thought of John Henry Newman." Back in Holland he taught at Warmond, becoming rector of the seminary in 1945.

In 1946 Willebrands accepted the presidency of the St. Willebrord Association, a group devoted to promoting Catholic APOLOGETICS. Through his efforts it developed into an instrument for promoting ecumenism in the Netherlands. Even more significant was his cooperation with a priest friend, Frans Thijssen, in founding the Catholic Conference for Ecumenical Questions. This unofficial group of Catholic scholars became, with the knowledge of the Dutch bishops and the Holy See, a kind of informal contact from within the Catholic Church with Orthodox, Anglican, and Protestant ecumenists and leaders. It contributed notably to the development and work of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity.

Willebrands, Johannes Cardinal (1909–2006). This Dutch Cardinal was known at the Vatican as "The Flying Dutchman" for his travels around the world promoting Christian Unity. AP IMAGES

In 1960 Pope JOHN XXIII chose Monsignor Willebrands to be the secretary of the preparatory commission on ecumenism for the Second Vatican Council, under the presidency of Cardinal Augustin BEA, S.J. In 1962 Willebrands visited Orthodox leaders, secretaries of world confessional families (for example, the Lutheran World Federation and the World Alliance of REFORMED CHURCHES), and the World Council of Churches to explain the new ecumenical outreach on the part of the Catholic Church. This prepared the ground for other confessions to send observers to the council and, in the long run, led to the multilateral theological dialogues that began after the council and were to be central in the Catholic ecumenical enterprise.

Working with a number of scholars who had been in the Catholic Conference, Willebrands produced the text that was the basis for the conciliar Decree on Ecumenism (Unitatis redintegratio). Willebrands also had major responsibility for the Declaration on Religious Liberty (Dignitatis humanae), the Declaration on the Relations of the Church to Non-Christian Religions (Nostra aetate), and a substantial part of the Constitution on Divine Revelation (Dei Verbum).

Pope PAUL VI consecrated Monsignor Willebrands titular bishop of Mauritania in 1964. Before the council ended, the preparatory commission for ecumenism was declared a permanent organ of the Roman Curia with the title of Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity. (In 1988 it was renamed the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity.) After Cardinal Bea died in 1968, Willebrands was named president of the new dicastery and created cardinal deacon of Saints COSMAS AND DAMIAN. Under his guidance the secretariat produced a Directory on Ecumenism and initiated a series of international multilateral theological dialogues with major Christian confessions (as of the year 2000 there were nine of these) as well as a cooperative relationship with the WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES, especially its Faith and Order Commission. To promote reception of the ecumenical stance of Vatican II within the Catholic Church, Willebrands encouraged the establishment of ecumenical commissions in bishops' conferences and began to have occasional meetings of their representatives in Rome. In 1974 Willebrands established within the secretariat the Commission for Religious Relations with JUDAISM, based on Vatican II's Nostra aetate 4. He guided it carefully, focusing on questions of doctrine, pastoral practice, and religious formation, and avoiding complicated political questions. This approach bore visible and striking results with the visit of Pope JOHN PAUL II to the Rome synagogue in 1986, as well as the more spectacular papal visit to ISRAEL in 2000.

In 1975 Paul VI asked Cardinal Willebrands to become archbishop of Utrecht and primate of Holland while remaining president of the secretariat. This meant living in Utrecht but returning to Rome regularly. These visits became less frequent as he dealt with a Church in the Netherlands whose institutions had been deconstructed by secularization and postconciliar polarization. Using his sympathetic style and human relations skills, he was able to win respect for his leadership and to establish some sort of equilibrium, although he was unable fully to revive the forces of the Church in the Netherlands. It was a relief for him to hand over the archdiocese in 1983 to a successor whose way he had prepared. He returned to Rome at an important moment, as several of the relationships and ecumenical dialogues were reaching new maturity. His collaboration with Pope John Paul II became closer and ever more fruitful. He provided leadership in such events as the 1986 Assisi World Day of Prayer for Peace, and he responded to the crisis in relations with the ANGLICAN COMMUNION and the Orthodox churches. He also encouraged the ever more promising theological developments with the Lutheran World Federation and the Faith and Order Commission of the World Council of Churches.

When Willebrands reached the statutory age of retirement at seventy-five, John Paul asked him to continue in office; he did so until December 12, 1989, when, several months past his eightieth birthday, he became president emeritus of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity and the Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews (succeeded subsequently as president by Cardinal Edward I. Cassidy, 1989–2001, and Cardinal Walter Kasper, 2001–). Willem Visser't Hooft, the founding secretary of the World Council of Churches, described Cardinal Willebrands as "a man with a fine combination of vision and realism." That quality enabled him to give a stamp and direction to Catholic participation in the ecumenical movement. For the communications media, he never became the iconic figure that Cardinal Bea was. Yet Willebrands was, in many ways, the architect of Catholic ecumenical engagement encouraged by Paul VI and Vatican II and continued by Pope John Paul II and Benedict XVI.

In 1997, Cardinal Willebrands retired to a Franciscan convent in Denekamp in the Netherlands, where FRANCISCAN SISTERS cared for him. He died there on August 2, 2006, at the age of 96. Prior to his death, he was the oldest living member of the College of Cardinals.

SEE ALSO CARDINALS OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH; ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT; MAURITANIA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; NETHERLANDS, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; ORTHODOX AND ORIENTAL ORTHODOX CHURCHES; PONTIFICAL COUNCIL FOR INTERRELIGIOUS DIALOGUE; VATICAN COUNCIL II.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Cardinal J. Willebrands, 96, Who United Faiths, Dies," New York Times (August 3, 2006) available from http://www.nytimes.com/2006/08/03/world/03willebrands.html (accessed July 7, 2009).

Jan Grootaers, "Jan Cardinal Willebrands: The Recognition of Ecumenism in the Roman Catholic Church," One in Christ 6, no. 1 (1970): 23–44.

The Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, Information Service nos. 1–101 (1966–2000), contains most major addresses, letters, and articles by Cardinal Willebrands. Number 101 is devoted to him and includes biographical material, a selection of his writings and speeches, and an evaluation of the present ecumenical situation.

Johannes Willebrands, "The Future of Ecumenism," One in Christ 11, no. 4 (1975): 310–323.

Most Rev. Basil Meeking
Bishop Emeritus of Christchurch, New Zealand

Robert L. Fastiggi
Professor of Systematic Theology
Sacred Heart Major Seminary, Detroit, Mich. (2010)

WORLD WAR I, PAPAL REACTION TO

In the conclave of 1903, Cardinal Melchiore Sarto was elected pope and took the name PIUS X. Like PIUS IX, he was more of a pastoral than a diplomatic pope, and he had never held a diplomatic post. Not surprisingly, during his pontificate (1903–1914) he dealt primarily with matters of faith, focusing on doctrinal, ecclesiastical, liturgical, and institutional issues rather than diplomatic ones. Nonetheless, Pius X recognized the dangers posed by the destabilization of international relations during the prewar decade, and toward the close of his pontificate he had a premonition that Europe and the world were threatened by an impending conflict of immense proportions and unfortunate consequences for Church and society. His prophecy materialized at the end of July 1914, when Austria-Hungary declared war on Serbia following the assassination of the archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife. This sparked the intervention of Germany, France, and Russia and a series of other continental powers, as well as a number of extra-European ones, including the United States and Japan. When Pius X's offer of mediation was rejected, his solution was to pray for peace and to urge Catholics to do likewise. These prayers were not answered, and Pius X died soon after on August 20, 1914. Subsequently, some historians have launched the dubious charge that the Vatican's conclusion of a concordat with Serbia in 1914 precipitated Austria's attack on that Slav state, sparking the world war.

The CONCLAVE of August 1914, which opened as a destructive war raged in Europe, sought a pope who could respond to the threats confronting the peoples of the continent and the Church, while both belligerent camps desired a successor to Pius X who would be sympathetic to their cause. Some hoped, while others feared, that the VATICAN might influence the course of events. A dynamic papal role was rendered difficult during the summer of 1914 because of the restricted diplomatic reach of the HOLY SEE. At this juncture, it did not have a representative in London or Paris, and while it had an apostolic delegate in Washington, he was often ignored. Nonetheless, the Vatican still wielded considerable moral influence that could not be ignored by the powers. On September 3, 1914, the three-day conclave selected the sixty-year-old Giacomo Giambattista della Chiesa, who assumed the name BENEDICT XV. His election followed that of Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924), professor of political science at Princeton University, as president of the United States (1913–1921). The paths of these two figures would cross in the following decade as they both searched for peace.

The Peaceful Pope. Pope Benedict XV on the front cover of a German magazine, Simplicissimus*, published in 1915.* © 2010 ARTISTS RIGHTS SOCIETY (ARS), NEW YORK/VG BILD-KUNST, BONN. PRIVATE COLLECTION/THE STAPLETON COLLECTION/THE BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY

Vatican Impartiality. Della Chiesa, who trained as a papal diplomat in the College for Noble Ecclesiastics, was fluent in French, German, and Spanish, as well as his native Italian, and served as undersecretary of state after 1901. From the start of his pontificate he sought to restore peace by scrupulously preserving Vatican impartiality. In his first message to the Church on September 8, 1914, the pope pledged to do all within his means to hasten the end of the calamity and proved true to his promise. The following month, on the feast of All Saints' Day, Benedict issued an appeal for peace within Europe. In the first of his twelve encyclicals, he revealed his deep distress at the carnage and ruin of the calamitous war. Similar sentiments were expressed in a series of exhortations to the powers—including those of September 8 and December 6, 1914; May 25, July 28, and December 6, 1915; March 4 and July 30, 1916; and January 10 and May 5, 1917—in which he invoked the negotiation of a just peace. He was assisted in his efforts to restore peace by his secretary of state, Pietro GASPARRI, and undersecretary Eugenio Pacelli (who became Pope PIUS XII).

Secretary of State Gasparri was the chief architect of the policy of "impartiality" to which the papacy adhered during the course of the conflict, and which he and the pope differentiated from neutrality. This distinction, although understood by few, served an important function. It assured the Christian world that the pope not only could but indeed would have to make moral judgments between conflicting principles and issue general pronouncements. As Vicar of Christ, he was not, and could not, remain neutral in moral matters. However, he would not necessarily act upon these moral judgments by making concrete political decisions or issuing specific public pronouncements. In the conflict between states, the pope, the Father of all, had perforce to be impartial, because members of the faith were found in both camps, and the Holy See could not support one part of its flock against the other. The pope also proved unwilling to apply the just-war theory, unconvinced that either side fought from a position of justice.

Thus, although he censured the violators of international law in general, Benedict's refusal to cite specific abuses and his silence regarding responsibility earned him the enmity of most of the belligerents. His general denunciations did not satisfy the Allied countries, which believed Benedict should have condemned the invasion of Belgium, with both sides critical of his impartiality and his failure to name those responsible for the calamity. In 1916 a pamphlet titled The Silence of Benedict XV charged that papal silence compromised the Church and hindered its moral mission. Despite this criticism, Benedict steadfastly refused to assume a partisan stance, and, preserving his impartiality, he sought to mediate a peace. This approach was not appreciated in Berlin and Vienna or Paris and London, each side resenting outside interference while nourishing hopes of winning the war. Some even criticized Benedict's efforts to alleviate the suffering.

Paradoxically, both belligerent camps charged that the Vatican supported the other. In 1915 the correspondent Louis Latopié of the French newspaper Liberté wrote that during an interview, the pope blamed England for the war while exonerating Germany—a contention Benedict quickly and publicly denied. Nonetheless, this and other rumors continued to circulate, including the Italian suspicion that the Vatican's peace efforts were really inspired by its desire to gain international support to regain Rome for the papacy. This fear inspired the government of Prime Minster Antonio Salandra (1853–1931) to insist on article 15 of the secret Treaty of London of April 1915, which brought Italy into the war. This article promised that the Vatican would be excluded from any peace conference. To make matters worse for the Vatican, Italy's intervention in the conflict in May 1915 exposed the Vatican's precarious position inside one of the belligerent countries, which some believed compromised the impartiality and even the security of the Holy See.

During the course of that same year, the pope and Gasparri, seeking to limit the conflict, dispatched Eugenio Pacelli, who was known to be sympathetic to German culture and spoke German and six other languages, as the Vatican's special envoy to the multinational Habsburg Empire. In the Vatican note to Emperor Franz Josef (1830–1916) introducing their emissary, Gasparri indicated they were sending a representative who had their complete confidence. This did not matter much to the old emperor, who was more concerned with the message than the messenger. During the meeting, Pacelli concluded that the Austrian emperor was not prepared to make any a priori territorial concessions, adding that diplomatic and military decisions were not made in Vienna but Berlin.

Vatican Efforts to Secure Peace. At the end of 1916, when the Central Powers sent a note to the Entente Powers and the pope suggesting the opening of peace negotiations, the Holy See reacted cautiously, largely because of the skepticism of the secretary of state, Gasparri. The Vatican did not respond to the German initiative because it feared that its support might be seen as favoring the Central Powers. This accusation was deemed plausible in light of the fact that Joseph Caillaux (1863–1944), a former French premier who was pro-German and a political opportunist, planned to venture to Rome to obtain Vatican support for the German plan. Unwilling to jeopardize his absolute impartiality, Benedict did not meet with him. Furthermore, the pope was on the verge of launching his own peace initiative. The papal proposal called for the replacement of military force by moral right, and national self-interest by international cooperation. The proposal reflected the internationalism of the prewar pacifist peace movement, which sought a compromise solution without conquerors or conquered, invoking the restitution of occupied territory and the status quo antebellum.

Meanwhile, the pope urged the Americans, who were still neutral, to launch a peace effort, but at this juncture President Woodrow Wilson would only act if all the warring parties welcomed his intervention. As the war dragged on, Benedict continued his efforts to help the victims of the conflict in both camps, Jews as well as Christians. Both the pope and his secretary of state, Gasparri, made it clear that the pope considered all men brothers and that the papal "crusade of charity" included relief for Jews. Although Benedict did not object to Jewish emigration to Palestine, like his predecessor he had reservations about granting the Jews, or any other religious group, control over the Holy Land and its religious shrines. Benedict, who sympathized with all the victims of the conflict, determined to make a major effort on behalf of peace. In April 1917, the pope and Gasparri decided to have Eugenio Pacelli, a member of a family devoted to the papacy, present the outline of the papal peace proposal to the Germans. To assure he would get a proper hearing, the pope appointed Pacelli apostolic nuncio to Bavaria, whose residence was Munich, but at the same time also accredited him to the Imperial Court at Berlin.

On May 25, Pacelli reached Munich, where he received a quasi-royal reception, presenting his credentials to King Ludwig III (1845–1921) of Bavaria a few days later. Toward the end of June, Pacelli commenced his peacemaking mission when, accompanied by Cardinal Felix von Hartmann (1851–1919), he arrived in Berlin and settled in the nunciature in Briennerstrasse, opposite the building that Adolf HITLER later converted into his Brown House. Soon thereafter, Pacelli met with the German chancellor, Theobald von Bethmann-Hollweg (1856–1921), and discussed the necessary preconditions for a negotiated settlement as outlined by Pope Benedict.

Pope Benedict's seven-point peace proposal called for: (1) a simultaneous and reciprocal decrease in armaments; (2) recourse to arbitration and an international court to resolve disputes rather than reliance on armies; (3) free exchange and liberty of the seas; (4) the reciprocal renunciation of war indemnities; (5) evacuation and restoration of all occupied territories; (6) the resolution of political and territorial claims between Italy and Austria and France and Germany to be determined in a spirit of equity and justice; and finally (7) a similar spirit of equity and justice to determine other territorial and political disputes and particularly those concerning Armenia, the Balkan states, and Poland.

Following the specific instructions Gasparri had dispatched to him on June 13, Pacelli planned to meet with the German emperor to assess whether he was willing to recognize the independence of Belgium and return Alsace-Lorraine to France. On June 29, Pacelli ventured to the kaiser's military headquarters at Kreuzach with Lorenzo Schioppa (1871–1935), the chief political advisor at the Munich nunciature, to present the pope's letter outlining the papal peace plan. The kaiser frowned as he read the papal proposal, and his remarks did little to reassure the nuncio. Wilhelm further disturbed Pacelli, who favored papal impartiality, by complaining that Benedict had failed to use his infallibility to condemn the "atrocities of the Allies." On key issues, the kaiser proved evasive and questioned crucial aspects of the plan, including the future of Belgium as well as French claims on Alsace-Lorraine, jumping from one point to another in rapid succession. Finally, he shocked the sensitive nuncio by suggesting the positive consequences of Benedict dying a martyr's death in the cause of peace. Later, the kaiser boasted that he had provided the inspiration for the papal peace note—an assertion that Pacelli felt constrained to contradict. Nonetheless, a good part of the political class in the Allied camp found it convenient to believe the kaiser's contention—thereby providing another pretext for their rejection of the papal peace proposal.

Neither the Allies nor the Central Powers responded positively to the Vatican peace proposal, with both rejecting the notion of returning to the status quo antebellum. The Germans, who had defeated the Russians, were not prepared to sanction the peace without victory that the pope envisioned. Benedict was saddened to see the destructive conflict continue, and he was distressed by the issuance in November 1917 of the Balfour Declaration, which promised to create a Jewish state in Palestine, which he believed to be to the detriment of Catholic interests there.

Papal Reaction to Woodrow Wilson's Fourteen Points. One positive development from the papal perspective was President Woodrow Wilson's Fourteen Points peace proposal of January 1918, delivered after the United States had entered the war as a cobelligerent. Wilson's program mirrored and appeared to elaborate upon Benedict's earlier peace plan. It called for: (1) renunciation of secret diplomacy; (2) freedom of the seas; (3) removal of economic barriers between nations; (4) reduction of armaments; (5) impartial adjustment of colonial claims; (6) evacuation and restoration of Russian territory; (7) restoration of Belgian sovereignty; (8) evacuation of France and the return of Alsace-Lorraine; (9) redrawing of the Italian frontier along national lines; (10) autonomy for the peoples of Austria-Hungary; (11) evacuation of Montenegro, Romania, and Serbia; (12) self-determination for the peoples of the Ottoman Empire and freedom of navigation through the Dardanelles; (13) establishment of an independent Poland with access to the sea; and finally (14) creation of an association of nations to govern international relations.

Benedict approved of Wilson's Fourteen Points, seeing them as a refinement of the principles he had outlined six months earlier in his own peace plan. He was convinced that a peace without victory would work to assure the tranquility of the continent and the well-being of its people. Having from the beginning of his pontificate invoked a reorganization of international relations and a peaceful manner of resolving disputes, he wholeheartedly supported Wilson's fourteenth point, which called for the creation of an association of nations to govern international relations. He also appreciated the American president's insistence that provision for the proposed league be included in the various peace treaties: Versailles with Germany, Saint-Germain with Austria, Trianon with Hungary, and Neuilly with Bulgaria. The Vatican did have some reservations about the league's structure, which the American president helped draft, including the division between the smaller states and the great powers, as well as the initial exclusion of the vanquished states. Despite these shortcomings, Benedict proved supportive of the projected league.

Early in January 1919, Benedict XV met with Woodrow Wilson, the first president of the United States to be received by a pontiff, and the two discussed prospects for peace and the need to construct a new basis for international relations. Like Wilson, Benedict favored a reorganization of such relations, noting the inability of the prevailing international anarchy to peacefully resolve conflicts. He had long adhered to this stance and as early as 1914 appealed to the nations of the world to find some other means of resolving differences and disputes. Deploring the violation of international law, Benedict believed this contributed to the carnage of the world war and sought a new code of conduct to assure a more tranquil future. Cardinal Gasparri, the pope's chief advisor on foreign affairs, expressed similar sentiments, focusing on Benedict's call for a new world order that included the suppression of compulsory military service and the constitution of a court of arbitration for the solution of international disputes, the prevention of infractions, and the establishment of boycott procedures.

Papal Reaction to the Peace Treaties. The response of the European Allies to the American peace proposal was far from positive, but they chose not to openly reject the Fourteen Points, for the Allies were increasingly dependent upon the Americans to bring the war to a successful conclusion. Instead, they subtly and gradually undermined Wilson's program and the terms under which Germany had surrendered. As a result, Benedict had serious reservations about the treaties concluded at the Paris Peace Conference. The pope believed there would be neither peace nor stability unless there was a return to mutual charity and the banishment of enmity, and he hoped this would be reflected in the treaties. Consequently, he was disappointed by the terms imposed on the defeated Central Powers. Benedict, like the Germans, expected that the treaties would be based on Wilson's points and was deeply disappointed when these provisions and promises were largely disregarded. Following the publication of the terms of the treaties, the Vatican had reservations about the war-guilt clause imposed on the vanquished, the reparations imposed, the exclusion of the defeated from the League of Nations, the attempt to put the kaiser on trial, and the territorial losses imposed on Germany, Austria, and Hungary. Benedict particularly decried the consequences for Catholic Austria, lamenting that this nation, which had valiantly defended Christian civilization over the centuries, had been reduced to a fragment of its former self, lacking the elements for a continued existence.

While the Vatican applauded the restoration of Catholic Poland and the creation of the League of Nations, its secretariat of state decried the fact that most of the other points upon which Germany had surrendered were violated during the peacemaking process, and found the treaty both unfair and counterproductive, observing that the Germans had real cause to complain. These sentiments were registered in the Jesuit periodical La Civiltà Cattolica, which branded the 440 "articles of peace" as "articles of war" and, like the pope, expressed pessimism about the preservation of the peace. These sentiments were shared by the Vatican's journal, L'Osservatore Romano, which noted that the terms imposed on the defeated states, in violation of the terms of surrender, would create rancor and the call for revenge rather than provide for reconciliation and resolution. These predictions proved prophetic.

SEE ALSO League of Nations and the Papacy; War, Morality of; World War II and the Papal Role.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Appeals for Peace of Pope Benedict XV and Pope Pius XI (Washington, D.C. 1931).

Anthony Brennan, Pope Benedict XV and the War (London 1917).

Edoardo Bressan, "L'Osservatore Romano e le relazioni internazionali della Santa Sede (1917–1922)," in Benedetto XV e la Pace, 1918, edited by Giorgio Rumi (Brescia, Italy 1990), 233–253.

Frank J. Coppa, Politics and the Papacy in the Modern World (London 2008).

Great Britain, Foreign Office, British Documents on the Origins of the War, 1898–1914, edited by George P. Gooch and Harold Temperly (London 1926–1938).

Thomas E. Hachey, ed., Anglo-Vatican Relations 1914–1939: Confidential Reports of the British Minister to the Holy See (Boston 1972).

Harry C. Koenig, ed., Principles for Peace: Selections from Papal Documents from Leo XIII to Pius XII (Washington, D.C. 1943).

Harold Nicholson, Peacemaking, 1919 (Boston 1933).

Walter H. Peters, The Life of Benedict XV (Milwaukee, Wisc. 1959).

John F. Pollard, The Unknown Pope: Benedict XV (1914–1922) and the Pursuit of Peace (London and New York 1999).

Frank J. Coppa
Professor of History
St. John's University, New York (2010)

WORLD WAR II AND THE PAPAL ROLE

During the last months of his life and pontificate, the old and ailing Pope PIUS XI (pope 1922–1939) was shocked and scandalized by the racism of Nazi Germany, which he saw imitated by Fascist Italy and which he found both irreligious and inhuman. In response, he adopted a confrontational attitude toward Adolf HITLER and Benito MUSSOLINI, and he questioned the value of the concordats he had earlier signed with Italy (1929) and Germany (1933). By the end of 1938, he deemed the Fascist dictatorships a greater danger than BOLSHEVISM and perceived the appeasement policy of the British toward Hitler as unrealistic and unfortunate, personally adopting a more combative course.

However, his policy created considerable consternation in his secretariat of state, which feared the consequences that might flow from provoking these tyrants and preferred to pursue the policy outlined by Cardinal Pietro GASPARRI, who had served as secretary of state under BENEDICT XV (1914–1922) and Pius XI. The pragmatic cardinal had called for a cautious and conciliatory response to these "dangerous regimes," and this had contributed to his dismissal at the end of 1929 by Pius XI. His successor, Eugenio Pacelli (who became Pope PIUS XII), while more diplomatic than his predecessor, shared Gasparri's determination to appease the dictatorships to preserve the concordats and protect the Church. As a result, Pius XI felt he could not rely on his secretariat of state to draft his projected ENCYCLICAL against racism and ANTI-SEMITISM, assigning the task to an outsider—the American Jesuit John LA FARGE. Political intrigue worked to delay the pope's receipt of the projected encyclical, and the pope died before he could release it.

Pius XII's Conciliatory Course. Following the death of Pius XI on February 10, 1939, the CONCLAVE met in early March to select a successor as Hitler was on the verge of breaking another of his promises and the clouds of war thickened. Some believe and others still maintain that Pacelli was elected pope with the expectation that he would continue the former pope's policies, citing the fact that Pacelli assumed the name of his predecessor and had collaborated with Pius XI for almost a decade. In fact, the cardinals in the conclave knew better, and elected Pacelli pope on March 2, 1939, not because he favored the confrontational course of his predecessor, but because he was known to favor a more conciliatory one. The new pope did not disappoint those who sought to keep the HOLY SEE from becoming embroiled in the impending conflict, for he immediately took steps to improve relations with Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. Among other things, Pius XII shelved the encyclical Pius XI had commissioned against anti-Semitism and had the galleys of Pius XI's last critique of Mussolini's policies destroyed. Finally, he borrowed the policy of impartiality developed by Gasparri and utilized by Benedict during the course of the First World War (1914–1918) by remaining politically neutral while religiously committed. Pacelli justified his recourse to neutrality in order to assume the role of honest broker between the rival powers and because of his analysis of the Lateran Accords of 1929, which he believed mandated impartiality.

One of Pacelli's first aims as pope was to improve relations with the German Reich. In an audience of April 23, 1939, speaking to a group of German pilgrims, Pacelli avoided the condemnations of his predecessor and assured the German ambassador to the VATICAN, Carl-Ludwig Diego von Bergen (1872–1944), that friendly relations would be restored between Germany and the Vatican. In fact, the ambassador immediately sensed a relaxation of the tension that had accelerated during the last year of the pontificate of Pius XI. Hoping to mediate a settlement of disputes, Pius XII invited Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and Poland to a Vatican conference to consider the Polish-German differences and Franco-Italian friction, invoking concessions to avert war. The offer was rejected by both camps. Still, Pius did not lose hope, and toward the end of August 1939 he issued a radio appeal pleading for peace. His prayer was not answered, and on September 1, 1939, Germany invaded Poland. Britain and France declared war on Germany two days later. Pius, still hoping to mediate a settlement, remained publicly neutral and did not condemn the German invasion of Poland. Some saw this as the first instance of papal "silence."

Papal Impartiality. Although Pius refused to condemn the belligerents in the conflict, preserving a rigorous public impartiality, he denounced aggression in general in November 1939, calling for the renunciation of the cult of might against right, and the acceptance of the supreme authority of the Creator as the basis of individual and collective morality. This position represented an indirect criticism of the policies of the Fascist regimes, as well as an indictment of the present order of international relations. Early on, the pope spoke of the need to fashion a new organization to assure the independence of small and large nations, while safeguarding the liberty, human dignity, and prosperity of all. In his Christmas message of December 24, 1939, Pius XII returned to the theme of a reorganization of international life and the construction of new juridical institutions. Here he lamented the "calculated act of aggression against a small, industrious, and peaceful nation." However, when Joachim von Ribbentrop (1893–1946), the German foreign minister, complained, the pope responded that the small nation he had referred to was Finland, the victim of Soviet aggression.

The Mark of War. The central nave of the Basilica of San Lorenzo Fuori le Mura, in Rome, flooded with rubble after the heavy bombardment of July 19, 1943. © ALINARI ARCHIVES/CORBIS

During the first months of the war, Pius XII worked to keep Italy from entering the conflict, as Benedict XV had in 1914, an aim shared by the American president, Franklin Delano Roosevelt (1882–1945), who pondered the prospect of closer relations with the Vatican. To coordinate American and papal efforts to limit the dimensions of the war, and possibly to broker a peace, President Roosevelt decided to dispatch the businessman Myron C. Taylor (1874–1959) to Rome, as his personal representative to the pope, at the end of December 1939. Soon after Taylor arrived in February 1940, the Vatican expressed its fear that Mussolini was preparing to plunge Italy into the war alongside Germany, rendering the position of the Vatican precarious. Despite the best efforts of the two to keep Italy a nonbelligerent, Mussolini brought the country into the conflict on June 10, 1940. This rendered the position of the Vatican all the more precarious and reinforced its determination to remain publicly neutral, even after the Nazi invasion of the Soviet Union in June of 1941 and the American entry into the war in December of that year. In fact, Pius XII remained "silent" following the Italian invasion of Greece, the Nazi invasion of Russia, and the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Pius XII's Private Position during World War II. Privately, the Vatican displayed a certain bias in favor of the Allies by secretly informing the British government early in 1940 that a group of German generals was prepared to overthrow the Nazi regime if they could be assured of a just and honorable peace. The message was transmitted to the cabinet in London, which decided it could not proceed on this "nebulous proposition." Although Pius XII was not prepared to publicly reveal his inner sentiments, he once again revealed a pro-Allied bias when he quietly alerted the Allies to the impending Nazi invasion of the Low Countries. Subsequently, he dispatched messages of sympathy to the rulers of Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxembourg—a gesture that the Nazis loudly condemned, while the Allies found these messages to be "too little, too late."

Surrounded by the dictatorial powers, Pius XII displayed even greater public prudence, rejecting the Allied suggestion that he excommunicate Mussolini or Hitler because he considered the advantages of such excommunications problematic but the disadvantages predictable. Pius scrupulously preserved this public neutrality during the course of the entire conflict. In 1940 and 1941, despite repeated reports of Nazi atrocities, Pius adhered to this diplomatic course. He did lament the evils afflicting not only fighters but entire populations, but he steadfastly refused to cite the specific perpetrators or the victims. The Allies deemed this another instance of papal "silence."

Despite the criticism of papal policy by both camps, Pius rejected both Roosevelt's suggestion that he denounce Nazi atrocities and the Nazi call that he deem their war against Russia as a crusade that warranted the Vatican's moral support. Pius XII's long-awaited Christmas message of December 1942 provided only indirect criticism of Nazi Germany's genocidal policies and practices, without citing the Nazis' specific violations of human rights and persecutions. The pope's message did express Vatican concern for those who, without fault on their part, and sometimes only because of race or nationality, had been consigned to death or to a slow decline. Pius later indicated that he did not publicly condemn the Nazi genocide of the Jews because he feared the consequences of such denunciations for those subject to their occupation. He also feared Nazi retaliation against the organizational Church in Nazi-occupied territories, a stance he shared with a majority in the Curia. Some observers later charged that this "silence" reflected his anti-Judaism, if not his anti-Semitism and indifference to the plight of the Jews. Neither assertion is accurate, and this "silence," as well as his earlier silence regarding the Nazi invasion of Catholic Poland, was prompted by the fear of Nazi retaliation. That he did not speak more openly and frankly was due to his desire to prevent greater evil—Ad maiora mala vitanda.

The Papal "Crusade of Charity." Papal "silence" did not mean papal inactivity, for Pius provided assistance to the Jews of Slovakia, Romania, Hungary, and Turkey, among others. When the government of Slovakia promulgated its anti-Semitic Jewish Code in 1941, Pius had his secretary of state issue an official protest to the Slovakian government. When Msgr. Josef Tiso (1887–1947), the Slovakian president, indicated that he perceived no conflict between Nazi principles and Catholic doctrine, the Vatican threatened to strike him from the list of monsignori if he did not retract. It was only the repeated Vatican protests against the deportation of Jews and their annihilation that led Slovakia in 1943 to discontinue its contribution to the "final solution."

These and other steps indicate that Pius XII was not indifferent to the plight of the persecuted. Drawing upon his experience in assisting the casualties of conflict during the First World War, Pius XII established the Vatican Information Service in 1939, putting relatives in touch with prisoners of war, missing persons, and refugees, while monitoring and mitigating the suffering and separations provoked by the Second World War. The Vatican Information Service was asked to learn the fate of millions of displaced and incarcerated people and report back to their families—and did so with considerable efficiency. Vatican radio transmitted hundreds of thousands of messages on behalf of the relatives of victims and casualties of the war. In addition, the Pontifical Relief Commission provided material assistance to the needy in those countries where it was allowed to function, and Pius quietly instructed the Church and clergy to provide discreet aid to the Jews—which saved many lives. Relief in the form of food and medical supplies was provided to France, Belgium, Holland, Greece, Finland, Norway, Ethiopia, Malaya, and the Philippine Islands, among others. For many, the Vatican effort was the sole avenue of information and assistance, providing a virtual "crusade of charity."

The Vatican's Fear of Soviet Communism. The political and diplomatic as well as the social, economic, and religious consequences of the war caused concern at the Vatican, which quietly opposed the "unconditional surrender" policy that Winston Churchill (1874–1965) and Roosevelt had agreed upon during the Casablanca Conference of January 1943. The pope deemed this Allied demand neither prudent nor practical, fearing this policy would prolong the war and benefit the Soviet Union, which would push its way into Eastern Europe.

A number of factors determined Pius XII's diplomacy toward Nazi Germany: a deep affection for that nation and its people, a strong commitment to the preservation of the Reich Concordat of 1933, an overriding opposition to COMMUNISM, and above all fear of the wrath of an enraged Hitler assisted by Fascist Italy, which surrounded the Vatican. To this one might add the papal concern that publicly ranging itself alongside the Allies would at once undermine the Vatican's mediating role and violate the neutrality it had pledged in the Lateran Accords. Pius XII also feared that abandoning his impartiality would traumatize German Catholics, subject them to Nazi persecution, and jeopardize the unity of the universal Church. Perhaps he also shared the concern expressed by the nuncio in Berlin that if German Catholics were made to choose between their patria and their faith, they might choose the former.

In May 1943, Taylor informed the Vatican that the United States was prepared to negotiate with a successor government to Mussolini's regime. Taylor suggested that this message be transmitted to those in a position to depose the duce. This prospect apparently struck a responsive chord in the Vatican, which again quietly abandoned its neutrality by conveying the message to King Victor Emmanuel III of Italy (1869–1947), who proved cautious and noncommittal. However, the Vatican later learned that the king was involved in the conspiracy that deposed Mussolini.

The "Silence" of Pius XII. The Allied invasion of Sicily in July 1943 provided the rationale for the dismissal of the duce on July 25, 1943, followed by Italy's surrender in September 1943. This development enraged Hitler and prompted a German drive into the peninsula, which included the occupation of Rome on September 10. The Vatican was now much more subject to increased Nazi pressure, as rumors swirled of a Nazi plot to seize the Vatican and kidnap the pope. Hitler did not do so, and Pius remained in the Vatican throughout the German occupation. Nonetheless, on October 16, 1943, the Germans arrested more than one thousand Jews in occupied Rome and commenced transporting them to concentration camps, where more than eight hundred were slaughtered.

Pius XII preserved his diplomatic approach and personal "silence" even when the Germans rounded up the Jews of Rome "under his very windows." However, he indirectly protested the arrest and deportation of Rome's Jews by means of Bishop Alois Hudal (1885–1963), the rector of Santa Maria dell' Anima, who issued the Vatican's complaint to the German commander, General Rainer Stahel (1892–1955), while the papal secretary of state, Cardinal Luigi MAGLIONE, protested to the German ambassador. In this fashion, the Holy See quietly secured the release of some two hundred baptized Jews. Some suspected that this effort revealed that Pius XII was only interested in saving converted Jews. Such was not the case, but rather reflected the German belief that the pope had something to say about those who were now members of the Catholic faith but had no jurisdiction over Jews who remained Jewish. Similar papal prudence restrained Pius from protesting the massacre of 335 Italians in Rome's Ardeatine Caves on March 24, 1944.

Pius XII's adherence to impartiality allowed him to remain politically and diplomatically neutral in public, while permitting him to condemn principles and philosophies that violated the faith. Thus, in his Easter message of 1941, he lamented the evils afflicting not only fighters but entire populations—the old, the innocent, the peace loving, and those bereft of all defense—urging those who occupied territories not to burden the people living there. It is true that here and elsewhere during the genocide, Pius XII did not speak of the Jews as a distinct group of victims. While some suspect this flowed from his alleged anti-Judaism, this cautious approach was sparked by his desire not to arouse the vindictive Nazi regime. Furthermore, he indirectly attacked the Nazi persecution of the Jews in his encyclical Mystici Corporis Christi (On the Mystical Body of Christ) of June 1943, which stressed that the Church embraced all peoples "whatever their nationality or race," commenting that the Catholic Church was not confined by boundaries of race or territory. At the same time, he decried those who "return to the teachings, customs and practices of ancient paganism," indicating that there must be love of one's neighbors rather than persecution. In his Divino afflante spiritu (On Promoting Biblical Studies) of September 1943, he deplored the fact that, in a number of unnamed nations, there was extinguished not only Christian moderation and charity, but humanity as well.

During the war and the genocide, when millions were massacred, Pius XII adhered to his impartial stance, personal public "silence," and cautious diplomacy in the face of heinous Nazi crimes. The documents he issued alluded to this human tragedy in an oblique manner, indirect terms, and legalistic fashion, in contrast to the language of outraged conscience in those released by his predecessor, Pius XI. The pope failed to directly denounce German aggression, Nazi atrocities, and Hitler's Holocaust, and he did not prohibit Catholics from joining a party he described as satanic at the war's end. Following the German occupation of Rome and the roundup of Jews for extermination, the pope did not publicly protest the crime perpetrated "under his very windows."

Thus, though Pius condemned the principles underlying Nazi totalitarianism and paganism, he was reluctant to more publicly, directly, or loudly protest the Nazi crimes culminating in the Holocaust, fearing the consequences that might flow from his abandonment of political neutrality. Clearly, the political and military situation that developed during the course of the Second World War led Pius to appease rather than openly oppose FASCISM and Nazism, but he was not "Hitler's pope," as some have called him. In fact, he indicated that though politically neutral he was not religiously impartial and believed he had spoken out and fulfilled his responsibility as Vicar of Christ without provoking the wrath of Nazi Germany, with which the Vatican preserved diplomatic relations. However, his messages in little-read long encyclicals did not reach the broad masses, as did Pius XI's Mit brennender sorge with burning anxiety (On the Church and the German Reich), issued in March 1937. This earlier encyclical focused more directly on Nazi abuses, and Pius XI conspired to have it read from Catholic pulpits! Privately, Pius XII was uncertain that he had chosen the proper course and wondered whether he should have said more publicly.

Over the years, critics have charged that Pius did not respond to the plight of the Jews with a sense of urgency and moral outrage, failing to raise an authoritative voice on behalf of the persecuted. Others have launched more serious charges, including that of anti-Semitism—which is clearly unwarranted. In turn, his defenders contend that public protests would have made matters worse and proven detrimental to all, including the Church and the Vatican. The debate and the plethora of publications continue. We do not know, and cannot know, what impact more-spirited papal protests of the Holocaust and Nazi aggression would have had on the war and its victims. Many are convinced, however, that it would have better preserved the moral integrity of the papacy, and the reputation of Pius XII.

SEE ALSO CONCORDAT WITH GERMANY (1933); DIVINO AFFLANTE SPIRITU; HOLOCAUST (SHOAH); LATERAN PACTS; MIT BRENNENDER SORGE; MYSTICI CORPORIS CHRISTI; NAZISM, PAPAL RESPONSE TO; WAR, MORALITY OF; WORLD WAR I, PAPAL REACTION TO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gerhard Besier with Francesca Piombo, The Holy See and Hitler's Germany, translated by W.R. Ward (New York 2007).

Pierre Blet, Angelo Martini, and Burkhart Schneider, eds. Records and Documents of the Holy See Relating to the Second World War: The Holy See and the War in Europe, translated by Gerard Noel (Washington, D.C. 1968).

Owen Chadwick, "The Papacy and World War II," Journal of Ecclesiastical History 18, no. 1 (April 1967): 71–79.

Camille M. Cianfarra, The War and the Vatican (London 1945).

Frank J. Coppa, The Papacy, the Jews, and the Holocaust (Washington, D.C. 2006).

Frank J. Coppa, Politics and the Papacy in the Modern World (London 2008).

Italo Garzia, "Pope Pius XII, Italy, and the Second World War," in Papal Diplomacy in the Modern Age, edited by Peter C. Kent and John F. Pollard (Westport, Conn. 1994), 121–136.

Francesca di Giovanni and Giuseppina Roselli, eds. Inter Arma Caritas: Uffizio Informazioni Vaticano per I prigionieri di guerra istituito da Pio XII (Vatican City 2004).

Peter Godman, Hitler and the Vatican: Inside the Secret Archives that Reveal the New Story of the Nazis and the Church (New York 2004).

Sandro Magister, La politica vaticana e l'Italia, 1943–1978 (Rome 1979).

Margherita Marchione, Crusade of Charity: Pius XII and POWs (1939–1945) (New York 2006).

Pius XII, "Address In questo giorno to the Sacred College of Cardinals and Members of the Roman Curia for Christmas" (December 24, 1939), Vatican Web site, available (in Italian) from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/pius_xii/speeches/1939/documents/hf_p-xii_spe_19391224_questo-giorno_it.html (accessed December 2, 2009).

Pius XII, Mystici Corporis Christi, On the Mystical Body of Christ (Encyclical, June 29, 1943), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/pius_xii/encyclicals/documents/hf_p-xii_enc_29061943_mystici-corporis-christi_en.html (accessed December 2, 2009).

Anthony Rhodes, The Vatican in the Age of the Dictators, 1922–1945 (New York 1973).

Ronald J. Rychlak, Hitler, the War, and the Pope (Columbus, Miss., 2000).

Frank J. Coppa
Professor of History
St. John's University, New York (2010)

Z

ZATTI, ARTEMIDE, BL.

Pharmacist, hospital administrator, brother of the Salesian order; b. Boretto, Reggio Emilia, Italy, October 12, 1880; d. Viedma, Argentina, March 15, 1951; beatified April 14, 2002, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

The third of eight children born to Luigi Zatti and Albina Vecchi, Artemide Zatti and his family moved to Argentina in 1897, settling in the town of Bahía Blanca. There, he came into contact with Salesian missionaries, including his parish priest, Fr. Carlo Cavalli, who encouraged his vocation for the priesthood. Zatti entered the Salesian seminary in Bernal on April 18, 1900. However, after caring for a sick priest who later died from tuberculosis, Zatti contracted the disease himself and was forced to leave Bernal and recuperate at the Salesian house in Viedma in Patagonia. After eight years of gradual recovery, Zatti was finally allowed to enter the Salesian novitiate; he took his solemn profession on August 1, 1908, and his final vows three years later. But by this time, Zatti was thirty-one and too old to be considered for ordination.

By 1907, Zatti had already begun working in the pharmacy operated by another Salesian, Fr. Evarisio Garrone. The order had also opened St. Joseph's Hospital in Viedma (the first in Patagonia), and when its administrator died, Zatti was put in charge of its day-to-day operations. From its beginnings, the hospital was plagued by anticlerical opposition. These sentiments came to a head when a prisoner-patient named Patricio Cabrera escaped from the hospital. Zatti took responsibility for the escape and was arrested and incarcerated by the local authorities. However, after five days and numerous demonstrations by the SALESIANS, he was released by a city magistrate.

Zatti was renowned for his home visits to the sick and poor, which he made by bicycle, dressed in his white medical coat. He offered the services of the hospital following the motto of his predecessor: "He who has little pays little, and the one who has nothing pays nothing." Zatti was also beloved for his insistence on personal humility and poverty, rejecting the title "don" and refusing to drive a car because it might embarrass the poor he served. His generosity resulted in a large debt load for the hospital, and therefore fundraising was a constant requirement, in addition to his other duties.

Zatti was deeply disappointed when his superiors ordered that the hospital be torn down in 1941 to make room for a residence for the newly appointed bishop. He then moved the hospital to the nearby Salesian Agricultural School, where it remained until his death. Ever the jack-of-all-trades at the hospital, Zatti injured himself in 1950 when he fell from a ladder while attempting to repair a water tank. An examination after the fall revealed that he suffered from inoperable pancreatic cancer. After his death at the age of seventy, the grateful people of Viedma thronged to his funeral, which was described by the press as the largest demonstration ever witnessed in that city.

At his BEATIFICATION, Pope John Paul II observed that:

> Artemide Zatti, Salesian religious brother, left the diocese of Reggio Emilia with his family to seek a better life in Argentina, the land dreamt of by Don BOSCO. There he discovered his Salesian vocation, which took the form of a passionate, competent and loving service to the sick. His almost fifty years in Viedma represent the history of an exemplary religious, careful to accomplish his duties in his community and totally devoted to the service of those in need. May his example help us to be conscious of the presence of the Lord and bring us to welcome him in all our needy brothers and sisters.

Feast: March 15.

SEE ALSO ARGENTINA, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN; RELIGIOUS (MEN AND WOMEN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

John Paul II, "Beatification of Six Servants of God," (Homily, April 14, 2002), Vatican Web site, April 14, 2002, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2002/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20020414_beatification_en.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

Peter Lappin, Zatti! A Biography (New Rochelle, N.Y. 1987).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Artemide Zatti (1880–1951)," Vatican Web site, April 14, 2002, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/2002/documents/ns_lit_doc_20020414_zatti_en.html (accessed November 19, 2009).

Dennis R. Di Mauro
Graduate Student
The Catholic University of America (2010)

ZEGRÍ Y MORENO, JUAN NEPOMUCENO, BL.

Priest and founder of the Congregation of the Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Mercy, Málaga, Spain; b. October 11, 1831, Granada, Spain; d. March, 17, 1905, Málaga, Spain; beatified November 9, 2003, by Pope JOHN PAUL II.

Born to Antonio Zegrí Martín and Josefa Moreno Escudero, Juan was raised in a Christian environment and given the best secular education available. From an early age, he displayed empathy for the poor. He recognized a vocation to the priesthood and entered the seminary of St. Dionysius in Granada. In 1855 Fr. Juan was ordained and thereafter assigned to the parishes of Huetor Santillan and San Gabriel de Loja, both in Granada.

Fr. Juan's abilities were recognized by the Church hierarchy, and he was appointed to positions of increasing responsibility and visibility. He served as a synodal judge in Málaga, canon of the Cathedral of Málaga, and diocesan visitor to religious orders and formator of seminarians. Fr. Juan was summoned to the royal court in Madrid to be chaplain and preacher to Queen Isabella II, roles in which he served until the queen was deposed in 1868.

Fr. Juan returned to Málaga where he founded the Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Mercy, a congregation dedicated to easing the physical and spiritual suffering of the poor. Believing that "charity is the only answer to all social problems," Fr. Juan used his considerable talents to promote the work of the community. In a short time, the community grew and established religious houses throughout Spain.

The community continued to thrive; however, some sisters brought serious charges of misconduct against Fr. Juan. The allegations were sent to Rome, and Fr. Juan was barred from contact with the congregation by a pontifical decree dated July 7, 1888. A lengthy investigation followed, and a second decree, dated July 15, 1894, vindicated the priest. Fr. Juan was free to return to the community, but since some of the members rejected Rome's verdict, he respected their feelings and did not return. At the time of his death in 1905, he had not obtained a rapprochement with the congregation he had founded.

Though his life ended in loneliness and separation, the community ultimately acknowledged the injustice of the allegations, and in 1925 Fr. Juan was recognized as the founder of the order. In beatifying him, Pope John Paul II said that the spirituality of the new Blessed was "born from intimacy with Christ and directed towards charity for the neediest." The pope also remarked on the congregation founded by Blessed Juan Nepomuceno: "following in the footsteps of its Founder, [it] continues its dedication to witness and promote redemptive charity."

Feast: March 17.

SEE ALSO BEATIFICATION; SPAIN, THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Paul Burns, ed., Butler's Lives of the Saints: New Full Edition, Supplement of New Saints and Blesseds, vol. 1 (Collegeville, Minn. 2005).

John Paul II, "Beatification of Five Servants of God: Feast of the Dedication of the Lateran Basilica," (Homily, November 9, 2003), Vatican Web site, available from http://www.vatican.va/holy_father/john_paul_ii/homilies/2003/documents/hf_jp-ii_hom_20031109_beatifications_en.html (accessed November 9, 2009).

Office of Papal Liturgical Celebrations, "Juan Nepomuceno Zegrí y Moreno (1831–1905)," Vatican Web site, November 9, 2003, available from http://www.vatican.va/news_services/liturgy/saints/ns_lit_doc_20031109_Zegri_en.html (accessed November 9, 2009).

Elizabeth Inserra
Independent Scholar
New York, N.Y. (2010)

INDEX

Locators. *Locators give the volume number followed by a colon and page numbers (1:157). Further locators in the same volume do not have repeated volume numbers (2:157, 159, 160). Entries for subjects of encyclopedia articles are indicated by boldface locators:* 1:26–28. *Subjects of illustrations are indicated by italic locators (*2:524).

A

AAS (Acta Apostolicae Sedis) (journal), 1:4–5

Abandonment, Alumbrados and, 1:35, 36

Abbelen, Peter M. (Father), 1:46

L'ABC des Simples Gens (Gerson), 1:218

Abelard, Peter, 1:280–281, 2:860–861

Abidjan, Ivory Coast, language use, 2:720

Abington School District v. Schempp (1963), 1:335, 336

Abode of the dead
- ancient Greek and Roman views, 1:16, 17
- Biblical views, 1:13, 524–527
- iconographic tradition, 1:528–529
- See also Afterlife; Heaven; Hell

Abolition of slavery, 2:670, 1014–1015

Abortion
- Benedict XVI on, 1:118
- Cuomo, Mario on, 1:379–380
- as excommunicable offense, 1:449
- John Paul II on, 1:4–5, 308
- salvation for aborted babies, 1:522, 2:668–669
- salvation for unbaptized babies, 2:670

Abraham, 1:232–233, 2:600, 722–723, 729

An Abridgment of the Christian Doctrine: With Proofs of Scripture for Points Controverted (Turberville), 1:102, 219–220

Absolute owners of church property, bishops as, 1:325

Absolution, unauthorized, as excommunicable offense, 1:449

Abuse of children, Black Mass and, 1:140

Abyssinia, Battle of Adowa, 1:11

Acacian Schism (484–519), 1:271, 364

Acacius (Patriarch), 1:364

Academic freedom
- Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities and, 1:72
- Curran, Charles and, 1:384
- Ex corde Ecclesiae on, 1:445
- higher Catholic education in the U.S. and, 1:428
- Land O'Lakes Statement on, 1:202, 428, 444, 2:693

Accademia (New York group), 1:46

ACCU. See Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities

Acernese, Lodovico (Father), 2:695

ACJM (Asociación Católica de la Juventud Mexicana), 1:49, 50

ACLU of Kentucky, McCreary County v. (2005), 1:338

Acosta Zurita, Darío, Bl., 1:1–2, 50

Act Against Heresy (1646), 1:314

Act for the Establishment of the Protestant Religion, 1:317

Act in Restraint of Appeals (1533) (England), 1:3

Act of Supremacy (1534) (England), 1:2–4

Act to Prevent the Growth of Popery (1704), 1:317

Acta Apostolicae Sedis (AAS) (journal), 1:4–5

Acta Sanctae Sedis (ASS) (journal), 1:4

L'Action (Blondel), 2:794

Action Française (AF), 1:5–7, 297, 455

L'Action française (newspaper), 1:5, 7

Acts of the Apostles, 1:255–256, 371

Acts of the Apostolic See (AAS) (journal), 1:4–5

Acts of the Holy See (ASS) (journal), 1:4

Acts of the Supreme Pontiff, 1:4

Ad caeli reginam (encyclical, Pius XII), 2:762, 773–774

Ad diem illum laetissimum (encyclical, Pius X), 2:741, 755

Adam (first man), 2:995

Adams, Gerry, 2:643

Adams, John, 1:42, 45

Addai and Mari, Anaphora of (Eucharistic prayer), 1:7–10

Address to the Participants in the International Congress on Life-Sustaining Treatments and Vegetative State: Scientific Advances and Ethical Dilemmas (John Paul II), 1:28

Adenauer, Konrad, 1:10–11
- Christian democratic movements and, 1:10, 396, 399
- European integration and, 1:10, 440–441
- NATO involvement, 1:10, 344

Adenauer, Paul (Msgr.), 1:10

Adiutricem populi (encyclical, Leo XIII), 2:749, 775

Adolescents, Black Mass practice, 1:140–141

Adorers of the Blessed Sacrament and Charity martyrs, 1:475

Adorers of the Blood of Christ, 2:916–917

Adowa, Battle of, 1:11

Adrian IV (Pope), 2:1032

Adrian VI (Pope), 1:187, 288

Adversus haereses (Irenaeus), 1:265, 533

Adversus Judeaos sermon genre, 1:58

AECAWA (Association of Episcopal Conferences in Anglophone West Africa), 1:233

Aeterni patris (encyclical, Leo XIII), 1:304, 505, 2:852, 950–953

Aetheria (pilgrim), 1:269

AF. See Action Française

Africa
- Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:233
- missionary work in, 1:305, 351, 352
- monasticism development, 2:804
- Portuguese colonialism, 2:970
- rising Catholic population, 1:311
- slave trade, 2:1012–1013
- See also North Africa; specific countries

After-before concept, sin and, 2:939

Afterlife, 1:12–23
- ancient civilizations' views, 1:15–20
- Biblical views, 1:13–14, 20, 524–527
- Christian views, 1:21–23
- non-Christian religious views, 1:20–21
- primitive societies' views, 1:12–13

Agapetus (Pope), 1:272, 364

Age of Mary, 2:762

Aggiornamento, 1:23–24, 305, 371

Los Agotes (Aguirre Delclaux), 1:186

Agotes (Cagots), 1:185–186

Aguilar v. Felton (1986), 1:337

Aguillard, Edwards v. (1987), 1:336

Aguirre Delclaux, Maria del Carmen, 1:186

Ahmadinejad, Mahmoud, 2:620

Aichinger, Benno (Father), 1:212

Aids to Scouting (Baden-Powell), 1:151

Aistulf (king of the Lombards), 2:1030–1031

Akbar (emperor), 1:230

Al-Kamil (Egyptian sultan), 1:51

Al-Nasir (Algerian leader), 1:230

Alabama, Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323

Albanenses, 1:225

Albania, European Union candidacy, 1:442

Alberione, James, Bl., 1:24–25, 494, 495

Alberoni, Giulio (Card.), 2:1033

Albert the Great, St., 2:1001

Albert V (duke of Bavaria), 1:248

Albi, Synod of (1254), 1:216

Albigenses, 1:225, 534, 535

Albigensian Crusade (1208–1229), 1:225, 282, 534

Alcoholism treatment, for religious, 1:512

Alcuin of York, 1:275

Alexander II (czar of Russia), 1:459

Alexander II (Pope), 1:51

Alexander III (Pope), 1:107, 195, 277, 2:885

Alexander IV (Pope), 1:51

Alexander V (Antipope), 1:284

Alexander VI (Pope), 1:62, 147, 148, 286

Alexander VIII (Pope), 1:490, 2:997, 1034

Alexander of Hales, 1:355

Alexander Severus (emperor of Rome), 1:267

Alexandria, Egypt
- Constantinople and, 1:364, 368
- early Church in, 1:267
- as major see, 1:268
- rise of Islam and, 1:274
- theological development, 1:270

Alexius IV (Byzantine emperor), 1:366

Alexy II (Patriarch), 1:373

Alfonso XIII (king of Spain), 1:482, 483

Algeria, 1:391, 467, 2:614–615

Alienation, sin and, 2:938, 939, 941

Allamano, Giuseppe, Bl., 1:141

Allen, Board of Education v. (1968), 1:337

Allen, Mueller v. (1983), 1:337

Allen, Richard, 1:348

Allenby, Edmund, 1:25–26

Allende, Salvador, 1:26–27

Allocutio legato regis hispaniae destinata (Paul VI), 1:27

Allocution, papal, 1:27–28

Allocution to the Midwives (Pius XII), 1:27–28

Alpandeire, Leopoldo de, Bl., 1:28–29

Alphonsus de Liguori, St., 1:29–35, 30
- devotion to Mary, 1:32, 2:752, 761
- Errico, Gaetano and, 1:436

Altan Khan, 1:171

Alumbrados (Illuminati), 1:35–36

Amar, Shlomo (Rabbi), 2:595

Amato, Angel (Abp.), 1:146, 2:1021

Ambigua ad Thomam (Maximus the Confessor), 2:1061–1062

Ambrose of Milan, St., 1:206, 355, 2:759

America (journal), 1:36–38

American Academy of Liberal Education, 1:93

American Civil Liberties Union, County of Allegheny v. (1989), 1:337

American Civil War (1861–1865), 1:38–42, 39, 56

American Friends of the Vatican Library, 1:211

American Indians. See Native Americans
American Party (Know-Nothings), 1:55, 56, 2:671, 672
American Protective Association (APA), 1:56
American Republican Party, 1:56
American Revolution (1775–1783), 1:42–46, 43, 55–56
Americanism, 1:46–49, 540, 2:796
Ames, William, 1:314
Amish, compulsory schooling case, 1:332
Ammon, St., 2:802
Ammonas (Bp. of Oxyrhynchus), 2:802
Amoris officio (apostolic letter, Paul VI), 1:371
Amoroso, Philip (Felix of Nicosia), St., 1:460
Anabaptists, heresy and, 1:537
Anacleto González Florez and nine companions, Bb., 1:49–51
Anagni (Italy), 1:51–52
Anaguta people, afterlife views, 1:12, 13
Analytic Thomism, 2:853
Anaphora of the Apostles Addai and Mari (Eucharistic prayer), 1:7–10
Anastasius I (Byzantine emperor), 1:271
Anastasius II (Pope), 1:271
Anchoritic monasticism, 1:269, 2:801, 803, 804
  See also Monasticism
Ancient Asia, afterlife views, 1:19
Ancient causes (sainthood process), 1:197
Ancient China, afterlife views, 1:19
Ancient Egypt, afterlife views, 1:18
Ancient Greece, 1:15–18, 242, 2:860
Ancient Rome, 1:15, 17–18, 242–243
Ancyra, Council of (314), 1:244, 245
Anderson, Carl, 2:648
Andreae, Jacov, 2:683
Andrew, St., 1:363
Andrieu, Pierre (Card.), 1:6
Angelic habits, 2:815
Angelicas (religious order), 2:1065
Anger, Kenneth, 1:140
Anglican Communion, 1:52–54, 2:812–813
  See also Church of England
Anglican Reformation. See English Reformation
Anglican/Roman Catholic International Commission (ARCIC), 1:52, 2:776–777
Anglicanorum coetibus (apostolic constitution, Benedict XVI), 1:52–54
Anglo-Saxon England, medieval Church, 1:273–274
Anglo-Spanish War (1585), 1:457
Angusiola, Lucius, 1:250
Anicetus (Pope), 1:266
Animism, 1:176, 177
Anne, St., 2:919, 920
Annual Report (Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights), 1:229
Annunciation
  Gospel according to Luke on, 2:721–722, 730
  Mary's knowledge, 2:738–739 spiritual maternity of Mary and, 2:755
Annus iam pelnus (encyclical, Benedict XV), 1:87
Anschluss, papacy and, 2:847–848
Anse, Council of (994), 1:247
Anselm of Canterbury, St., 1:280
Anthony of Egypt, St., 2:801, 802
Anthony of Kiev, St., 2:819
Anthropos Institute, 1:408
Anti-Catholicism, 1:54–57
  China, 1:345
  Communist countries, 1:300, 343, 345, 357, 2:1029
  England, 1:457–459
  France, 1:416, 418
  Jacobins, 2:575
  Knights of Columbus activism, 2:646, 648
  liberalism and, 1:397–398
  Mexico, 1:1, 49–51, 2:927, 1019
  Nazi Germany, 1:361–362, 2:846
  Spain, 1:468–479, 495, 2:621–630, 1021–1024
  United States, 1:54–57, 55
    American Revolution and, 1:42, 44–45, 55–56
    Catholic Answers work, 1:227–228
    Catholic K-12 schools and, 1:430
    Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights work, 1:228–230
    colonial period, 1:54–55, 313, 314, 315, 316–317
    disestablishment period, 1:319, 320
    Kennedy, John F. election and, 1:57, 2:638, 639, 641
    Lincoln, Abraham and, 2:671–672
Anticlericalism
  Christian democratic movements and, 1:394
  France, 1:416, 418, 419
  late modern Church, 1:299
  Mussolini, Benito, 2:835, 836
  Nazism, 2:846
  Soviet Union, 2:1028, 1029
  Spain, 1:468, 484, 2:1022, 1023–1024
Anti-Judaism, 1:57–59
  vs. anti-Semitism, 1:57, 2:600
  Crusades, 1:58, 2:609–610
  papacy and, 2:879, 880
  Pius XII and, 2:907
  Reformation period, 2:611
  Roman and Byzantine period, 2:606–607
  See also Anti-Semitism
Antinomianism, 1:35–36
Antioch (historical city)
  Christianity, as name, 1:263
  Constantinople and, 1:364, 368
  early Church in, 1:267, 268
  rise of Islam and, 1:274
  theological development, 1:270
Antiphon: A Journal for Liturgical Renewal, 2:1017
Anti-Polygamy Act (1862), 1:323
Anti-Revolutionary Party (ARP) (Netherlands), 1:399
Anti-Semitism, 1:60–61
  vs. anti-Judaism, 1:57, 2:600
  colonial United States, 1:316
  development of, 2:614
  disestablishment period, 1:320
  Dreyfus Affair and, 1:416, 418
  early Church, 2:598
  fascism and, 1:452, 454, 456
  history of term, 2:620
  John Paul II repudiation, 1:90–91, 308, 348, 398, 454, 2:589–590, 600
  medieval Church, 2:581–582
  The Passion of the Christ charges, 1:229

patristic period, 2:581
racial construct, 2:582, 589
See also Anti-Judaism; Holocaust (Shoah); Jewish-Catholic relations

Antitheses (Marcion), 1:265

Antonelli, Giacomo (Card.), 1:38, 40, 41, 203

Antonelli, Leonardo (Card.), 1:44

Antoninus Pius (emperor of Rome), 1:266

Antonio Primaldo and Companions, 2:872–873

Antony, St., 1:269

Anzer, John Baptist (Bp.), 1:486

APA (American Protective Association), 1:56

Aparicio Sanz, José, Bl., 2:621

Aperturismo, 1:305

Apocryphal imagery, of harrowing of Hell, 1:527–528

Apologetics, cultivation of, 1:304

Apologists, 1:266

Apology of the Augsburg Confession (Melanchthon), 2:683

Apophthegmata Patrum (theological text), 1:269

Apostasy, as excommunicable offense, 1:449

Apostles, evangelization work, 1:263, 264

Apostles' Creed
catechism development and, 1:216, 217, 218, 219
communion of saints and, 1:353, 354–355
harrowing of Hell and, 1:524

Apostles of the Slavs (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:308

Apostolatus Benedictorum in Anglia (Baker), 1:100

Apostolic constitutions
Anglicanorum coetibus (Benedict XVI), 1:52–54
Cum ex eo (Boniface VIII), 2:983
Cum praecelsa (Sixtus IV), 2:754
Deus scientiarum Dominus (Pius XI), 2:692
Divinus Perfectionis Magister (John Paul II), 1:107, 193, 196, 197, 199
Ex corde Ecclesiae (John Paul II), 1:73, 92, 202, 428–429, 444–447, 461, 2:693
Fidei depositum (John Paul II), 1:222, 223
Immensa aeterni Dei (Sixtus V), 1:195
Indulgentarium Doctrina (Paul VI), 1:354
Licet de vitanda discordia (Alexander III), 2:885
Munificentissimus Deus (Pius XII), 2:908
Non debet reprehensible (Innocent VIII), 1:203
Pastor bonus (John Paul II), 1:203
Promulgandi (Pius X), 1:4
Regimini Ecclesiae Universae (Paul VI), 1:203
Romano pontefici eligendo (Paul VI), 2:885
Sacra Rituum Congregatio (Paul VI), 1:107, 196
Sapientia Christiana (John Paul II), 1:444, 2:692
Spirituali militum cura (John Paul II), 1:52
Universi dominici gregis (John Paul II), 2:885

Apostolic Constitutions (collection), 1:244, 392

Apostolic delegates, 1:47, 62–65

Apostolic exhortations
Christifidelis Laici (John Paul II), 1:354
Evangelii nuntiandi (Paul VI), 1:209, 232
Marialis cultus (Paul VI), 2:738, 744, 756, 763, 766–767, 775
Pastores dabo vobis (John Paul II), 2:987
Reconciliatio et penitentia (John Paul II), 2:1001
Sacramentum caritatis (Benedict XVI), 1:118, 354
Signum magnum (Paul VI), 2:756

Apostolic letters
Amoris officio (apostolic letter, Paul VI), 1:371
Cupimus imprimis (Pius XII), 1:345
Già da qualche temp (Pius XI), 1:196
In supremo apostolatus fastigio (Gregory XVI), 1:41, 2:1014
Inter soldalicia (Benedict XV), 2:748
Laetamur magnopere (John Paul II), 1:222
Mane nobiscum domine (John Paul II), 1:426
Maximum illud (Benedict XV), 1:306
Mulieris dignitatem (John Paul II), 2:735, 736, 744, 768
Novo millennio ineunte (John Paul II), 1:425
Nulla celebrior (Pius IX), 2:580
Octogesima adveniens (Paul VI), 1:209
Ordinatio sacerdolatis (John Paul II), 1:116–117
Rosarium Virginis Mariae (John Paul II), 1:426, 2:678, 736, 763, 769
Salvifici doloris (John Paul II), 2:767–768
Sanctitas clarior (Paul VI), 1:196, 197
Spiritus Domini (John Paul II), 1:34
Tertio millennio adveniente (John Paul II), 1:24
Testem benevolentiae nostrae (Leo XIII), 1:46, 48, 49

Apostolic ministry, in charisms, 2:789, 790

Apostolic Process (sainthood), 1:195, 196

Apostolic Seminary Visitations, 2:988

Apostolicae curae (papal bull, Leo XIII), 1:53

Apostolicam Actuositatem (decree, Vatican Council II), 2:692

Apostoline Sisters, 1:24

Appeal to the German Nobility (Luther), 2:682

The Application of "Ex corde Ecclesiae" for the United States (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 1:446, 2:693

Apuleius, 1:18

The Aquarian Conspiracy: Personal and Social Transformation in the 1980s (Ferguson), 2:855 Aquinas, Thomas, St. See Thomas Aquinas, St.

Aquinas Center for Theological Renewal, 1:92

Arabia, early Church in, 1:267

Arab-Israeli conflict
history of, 2:615–618, 619–620
papacy and, 2:591, 592, 879–880, 881–883
PLO and, 1:65–66, 2:616, 617, 881, 882

Arab-Israeli War (1948–1949), 2:616

Arafat, Yasser, 1:65–67, 66, 2:591, 592, 881

Araguàs Guàrdia, Pasqual, Bl., 2:629

Archbishops, authority of, 1:406

Archdioceses, vs. dioceses, 1:405

L'Arche, 1:67–69, 68, 2:865, 1073, 1074

Architecture
- Constantinople achievements, 1:367–368
- Conventual Franciscans involvement, 1:480–481
- medieval, 1:279–280, 283

Archpriests, married, 1:246

ARCIC (Anglican/Roman Catholic International Commission), 1:52, 2:776–777

Arcolino, Elizabeth Comparini, 2:800

Are Catholic Schools the Answer? (Ryan), 1:432

Argentina, 2:653, 892–893

Arhats (Buddhism), 1:161

Arianism, 1:271, 363–364

Arima, Japan, martyrs from, 2:898

Aristotle
- logical determinism, 1:402
- medieval university study of, 1:281
- nominalism and, 2:860
- Owens, Joseph work, 2:875
- on praeter intentionem, 2:914–915
- on slavery, 2:1007, 1012
- Súarez, Francisco influence, 2:1044, 1045

Arizona, legal considerations, 1:323, 324

Ark of the Covenant, 2:723, 724

Arkansas, Epperson v. (1968), 1:336

Arkansas, legal considerations, 1:322, 336

Arles, Councils of (ca. 450 and 524), 1:246

Armellini, Carlo, 2:1037

Armenian Catholic Church, 1:246, 267, 2:819

Arminianism, 1:537, 2:655

Arminius, Jakob, 1:537

L'Armonia della Religione con la Civiltà (journal), 1:241

Arms control, 1:80–81

Arms race, 1:75, 78

Armstrong, Gibson v. (1847), 1:327

Army of Mary, 1:69–70

Arnáiz Barón, Rafael, St., 1:70–71

Arnau Pasqüet, Silvestre, Bl., 2:629

Arnauld, Antoine, 1:294

Arndt, Johann, 2:684

Arnold, Edwin, Sir, 1:178

ARP (Anti-Revolutionary Party) (Netherlands), 1:399

Articles of Colonization (1638), 1:316

Articles of Confederation (U.S.), 1:317

Arts
- Constantinople achievements, 1:367–368
- Conventual Franciscans involvement, 1:480–481
- High Middle Ages, 1:279–280
- redemption motifs, 2:934
- Tibetan Buddhism and, 1:172

Arts v. Guthrie (1871), 1:325

Arver v. United States (1918), 1:329

Ascension, Mary's role, 2:727–728

Ascension of Isaia (early Christian text), 1:266

Ascensión del Corazón de Jesús, Bl., 1:71

Asceticism
- charisms and, 2:789, 790
- early Church, 1:269–270, 2:801, 803–804
- Japanese Buddhism, 1:168–169
- medieval monasticism and, 1:279
- Tolomei, Bernard and, 1:124

Ashkenazi Jews, in Poland, 2:615

Asia
- afterlife views, 1:19
- Communism in, 1:358–360
- early modern Church missions, 1:293
- rising Catholic population, 1:311
- spread of Lutheranism, 2:685–686
- See also specific countries

Asia Minor, early Church in, 1:264, 267, 269

Asociación Católica de la Juventud Mexicana (ACJM), 1:49, 50

Aśoka (king of India), 1:161, 175, 176

ASS (Acta Sanctae Sedis) (journal), 1:4

Assad, Hafiz al-, 2:619

Assembly of the French Clergy, 1:490

Assimilation, cultural, 1:228

Associated churches, property disputes, 1:326–327

Association Jeanne Jugan, 2:673

Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities (ACCU), 1:71–73, 429, 2:693

Association of Episcopal Conferences in Anglophone West Africa (AECAWA), 1:233

Assumption, 2:743, 776, 777

Assumption, Religious of the, 1:73–74, 2:786

Assyrian Church of the East, 1:7, 8–9, 267, 2:775–776

Aśvaghoṣa, 1:162

At the Origin of the Christian Claim (Giussani), 1:496–497

Athanasius, St., 1:269, 411, 2:759, 801, 802

Atheism
- Marxism and, 2:715–716
- neo-atheism, 2:981
- of Sartre, Jean-Paul, 2:978
- secularism and, 2:979, 980, 981
- Spanish Republic, 2:1024

Athenagoras I (Patriarch), 2:1003, 1003

Athos, Mount, monasteries of, 2:815, 816, 817

Atiśa (monk), 1:171

Atomic energy, 1:74–76

Atomic weapons, 1:77–86, 78, 79
- Catholic teaching, 1:79–84
- ethical considerations, 1:74–76
- history, 1:77–79
- papal response to Cold War and, 1:346

Atonement, Lambeth Articles on, 2:655

Atriums, for catechesis of the Good Shepherd, 1:499

The Attitude of the Church Towards The Followers of Other Religions: Reflections and Orientations on Dialogue and Mission (Secretariat for Non-Christians), 1:231, 232

Au milieu des solicitudes (encyclical, Leo XIII), 1:418

Aubert, Roger, 1:86–88

Auctorem Fidei (papal bull, Pius VI), 2:669

Auger, Edmond, 1:219

Augsburg, Peace of (1555), 2:682, 683

Augsburg, Synod of (952), 1:247

Augsburg Confession, 2:682, 683, 684
Augustine (Bp. of Hippo), St.
  Alphonsus de Liguori and, 1:32
  anti-Judaism, 1:58
  Benedict XVI influence, 1:115
  on cardinal virtues, 1:206
  catechism development, 1:217
  on divinization, 1:411
  on heresy, 1:533
  on Jews, 2:581
  on limbo, 2:668, 669
  on mercy, 1:407
  on salvation, 2:973
  on sin, 2:994
  on slavery, 2:1007, 1011, 1012
  theological development, 1:270, 403
  on theurgy, 2:1062
Augustine of Canterbury, St., 1:272, 274
Augustinians, 1:279, 291, 475–477
Augustinus (Jansen), 1:294
Auschwitz-Birkenau, 1:88–92, 89, 90, 348, 2:591–592
Auschwitz Protocol, 1:89
Austin, TX, Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:549
Australia, 1:179, 221, 2:685–686
Austria
  Anschluss, 2:847–848
  catechism development, 1:221
  Christian democratic movements, 1:394, 395, 396
  European integration, 1:441
  Jewish history, 2:613, 614
  Josephinism, 1:295
  late modern monasticism, 2:810
  quasi-fascism in, 1:454
  States of the Church and, 2:1036
  Waldheim, Kurt leadership, 2:591, 1084
Automatic excommunication, 1:449
Auxiliary Priests of Le Mans, 1:548
Avanzini, Pietro (Father), 1:4
Ave Maria (FL), 1:93, 94
Ave Maria University, 1:92–95, 93
Avellanosa, Pamela, 2:579
L'Avenir (newspaper), 1:95–97, 540
Aviat, Francesca Salesia, St., 1:97–98
Avignon Papacy (1309–1378), 1:283, 2:1032
Avignon Residency (1378–1417). See Western Schism (1378–1417)
Avittha (minister), 1:163
Awful Disclosures of the Hotel Dieu Nunnery of Montreal (Monk), 1:56
Aziz, Lubna Abdel, 1:351
Azusa Street Mission (Los Angeles, CA), 1:258

B

Ba'al Shem Tov, 2:612
Babylonian Captivity, Avignon Papacy (1309–1378), 1:283, 2:1032
Babylonian Diaspora, 2:607
Badaliyya movement, 1:230
Badano, Chiara, Bl., 1:99
Baden-Powell, Robert, 1:151
Baianism, 1:537
Bainbridge, Kenneth T., 1:78
Baius, Michael, 1:537
Baker, David Augustine, 1:99–101
Bakunin, Mikhail, 1:300
Balasuriya, Tissa, 1:117
Balfour, Arthur James, 2:878
Balicki, Jan, Bl., 1:101–102
Balmes, Jaime, 1:304
Balthasar, Hans Urs von
  on Hell, 1:522–523
  on Mary, 2:744, 750
  on redemption, 2:947, 948
  theology of the cross and, 1:376
Baltimore, Barron v. (1833), 1:318, 328
Baltimore, Cecil Calvert, 1:317, 2:1063, 1064 Baltimore, Councils of plenary first (1852), 1:103
    second (1866), 1:103
    third (1884), 1:103, 325, 427, 430, 2:985
  provincial, first (1829), 1:103, 324
Baltimore, George Calvert, 1:317, 2:1063
Baltimore Catechism, 1:102, 102–104, 221
Balzan Foundation, 1:306
Bangladesh, Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:550
Bannwart, Clemens, 1:400–401
Baptism
  limbo and, 2:668, 669–670
  Lutheran perspective, 2:688 monasticism development and, 2:803
  Radicalism beliefs, 1:287
  salvation for the unbaptized, 1:522, 2:668–670
Baptistine Sisters of the Nazarene, Congregation of, 1:487
Baptists, 1:314, 318, 319, 320
Bar Kokhba Revolt (132–135), 2:606–607
Baradai, James, 1:271
Barak, Ehud, 2:590
Barat, Madeleine Sophie, St., 1:302
Baratieri, Oreste, 1:11
Barban, Carlo, 1:451
Barban, Eurosia Fabris, Bl., 1:451–452
Barbarigo, Marc'Antonio (Card.), 1:463, 2:1076
Bardesanes (theologian), 1:267
Barlow, Rudesind, 1:100
Barnabites, 1:289
Barnette, West Virginia Board of Education v. (1943), 1:330
Barragán Silva, Juan José, 1:378
Barrett, William, 2:655
Barron Collier Companies, 1:94
Barron v. Baltimore (1833), 1:318, 328
Barroso, José Manuel, 1:443
Barth, Karl, 1:376
Barton, Elizabeth, 2:827
Bascio, Matteo da, 1:291
Basel, Council of (1431–1449), 1:284
Basil of Caesarea, St., 1:269, 2:814
Basilian cenobitism, 2:817
Basilica of San Lorenzo Fuori le Mura, 2:1093
Basilica of St. John Baptist Studium, 1:367
Basil's Rule, 1:269
Bathsheba (queen of Israel), 2:773
Batiffol, Pierre, 1:104–105, 2:793, 797
Battaglia, Maria, 1:488
Batthyány-Strattmann, László, Bl., 1:105–106
Battista da Varano, Camilla, St., 1:106
Bautain, Louis E., 1:539, 540

Bavaria, late modern monasticism, 2:810
Bea, Augustin (Card.), 1:306, 464, 2:1086
Beason, Davis v. (1890), 1:329
Beatific vision, 1:21, 2:668, 670
Beatification, 1:106–108, 107
  canonization and, 1:198–199
  first married couple, 1:111–112
  history, 2:967
  John Paul II involvement, 2:968
Beauraing (Belgium), apparitions of Our Lady of, 1:108–111
Becket, Thomas (Abp. of Canterbury), St., 1:277
Bedini, Gaetano (Msgr.), 1:328
Beecher, Lyman, 1:56
Before-after concept, sin and, 2:939
Beghards, 2:924
Begin, Menachem, 2:619
Beguines, 1:284, 2:924
Being
  personalism and, 2:893–897
  Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio on, 2:960
  Sartre, Jean-Paul on, 2:977–978
  Stein, Edith on, 2:1039, 1040
  Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1044
Being and Nothingness (Sartre), 2:976, 977
Belgian Catholic Radio, 1:61
Belgian Revolution (1830), 1:95
Belgium
  catechism development, 1:221, 222
  Christian democratic movements, 1:394, 395, 396, 398, 399
  European integration, 1:441
  late modern Church, 1:299, 301
  Our Lady of Beauraing apparitions, 1:108–111
Believers (Catharism), 1:226
Bellarmine, Robert, St., 1:219, 221
Beltrame Quattrocchi, Luigi and Maria Corsini, Bb., 1:111–112
Belvisotti, Lorenzo Maurizio, 1:557–558
Benedict I (Pope), 1:272
Benedict VIII (Pope), 1:247
Benedict XII (Pope), 1:21
Benedict XIII (Antipope), 1:112, 113
Benedict XIV-I (Antipope), 1:112–114
Benedict XIV-II (Antipope), 1:112–114
Benedict XIV (Pope)
  catechism development, 1:102, 221
  Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer approval, 1:30 reign, 1:295
  sainthood process, 1:107, 195
Benedict XV (Antipope), 1:113
Benedict XV (Pope)
  Action Française relations, 1:6
  allocutions, 1:27
  on Catholic teachings, 1:87
  Chludzińska, Celina and, 1:262
  Cold War and, 1:342
  d'Annunzio, Gabriele and, 1:388
  devotion to Mary, 2:762
  Divini illius magistri and, 1:409
  Knights of Columbus and, 2:648
  League of Nations and, 2:656, 656–660
  on liturgy, 1:118, 424
  Liviero, Carlo beatification, 2:674
  on love, 1:117, 310
  Lozano Garrido, Manuel declared venerable, 2:677
  Manganiello, Teresa declared venerable, 2:695
  Maria of the Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ beatification, 2:705
  Maria Teresa of St. Joseph beatification, 2:703
  Marian doctrine, 2:770–771
  Martillo Morán, Narcisa de Jesús canonization, 2:710
  on Marxism, 2:716
  on Mary, 2:735, 736–737, 744–745, 748, 751, 752
  Mary Magdalene of the Incarnation beatification, 2:779
  Mastena, Maria Pia beatification, 2:779–780 on McGivney, Michael, 2:649
  Merkert, Maria Luisa beatification, 2:785
  Mexican martyrs beatification, 1:1, 49
  on missions, 1:306
  Mussolini, Benito and, 2:835
  Muttathupandathu, Alphonsa canonization, 2:838 name choice, 1:124
  Nardini, Paul Josef beatification, 2:845
  Nazism and, 2:846
  New Evangelization, 1:239
  on Palestine, 1:66
  papal elections, 2:885
  Pellesi, Maria Rosa beatification, 2:889
  Pereira, Nuno de Santa Maria Álvares canonization, 2:890
  Pérez, Leonardo beatification, 2:891
  Peter Kibe Kasui and 187 Companions beatification, 2:898
  on Pianzola, Francesco, 2:902
  Pius XII declared venerable, 2:908–909
  Preca, George canonization, 2:916 on preventive war, 1:567
  on priestly formation, 2:988–989
  Rangel Montaño, José Trinidad beatification, 2:927
  Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio beatification, 2:961
  sainthood process, 1:108, 2:968–969
  Simon of Lipnica beatification and canonization, 2:994
  on sister churches, 2:1003
  Smaldone, Filippo Mariano canonization, 2:1016
  on social justice, 1:88, 208–210
  Spanish Civil War martyrs beatification, 1:468, 2:630
  spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:757
  Tadini, Arcángelo canonization, 2:1051–1052
  on Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre, 2:1058
  theology of the cross and, 1:376
  on Thérèse of Lisieux, 2:1059
  Thevarparampil, Augustino beatification, 2:1062
  Tolomei, Bernard canonization, 1:124, 2:1064
  Tous y Soler, José beatification, 2:1066
  Venerini, Rose canonization, 1:463
  Veuster, Joseph de canonization, 2:1078
  Volpicelli, Caterina canonization, 2:1081
  World War I peace efforts, 1:260, 440, 2:1088, 1088–1092
  Zionism and, 2:878
Benedict XVI (Antipope), 1:113
Benedict XVI (Pope), 1:114, 114–122, 115, 309–311
  Alpandeire, Leopoldo de beatification, 1:28, 29
  Anaphora of the Apostles Addai and Mari and, 1:9
  Arnáiz Barón, Rafael canonization, 1:70
  Ascensión del Corazón de Jesús beatification, 1:71

Auschwitz-Birkenau memorial visit, 1:89, 91
Badano, Chiara declaration, 1:99
Battista da Varano, Camilla beatification, 1:106
Berkenbrock, Albertina beatification, 1:128
Bessette, André canonization, 1:134
Bonifacio, Francesco Giovanni beatification, 1:146
Bütler, María Bernarda canonization, 1:181
Catanoso, Gaetano canonization, 1:215–216
catechism development, 1:222, 223
Catholic Charismatic Renewal support, 1:259
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:234–236, 235
Celestina of the Mother of God beatification, 1:241
on charity, 1:372, 373
Coll y Guitart, Francisco canonization, 1:350
Comensoli, Gertrude Caterina canonization, 1:353
on communion of saints, 1:354
communion with Anglican Church, 1:52–54
Cope, Marianne beatification, 1:370
Curcio, Maria Crociffisa beatification, 1:382
Curran, Charles and, 1:117, 383
Daronch, Adílio beatification, 1:389
on deaconesses, 1:393
Denzinger references, 1:401
Ecclesia Dei Commission and, 1:424 election of, 1:309, 310
Elia di San Clemente beatification, 1:434
Errico, Gaetano canonization, 1:436 on Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás, Josemaría, 1:438 Euphrasia of the Sacred Heart of Jesus beatification, 1:439 on European integration, 1:440, 442–443
Fabris, Eurosia beatification, 1:451
Feliński, Zygmunt Szczęsny canonization, 1:459–460
Felix of Nicosia canonization, 1:460
Findysz, Władysław beatification, 1:465
Flesch, Margaret beatification, 1:466
Foucauld, Charles Eugène de beatification, 1:467 on Freinademetz, Joseph, 1:486
Galen, Clemens August Graf von beatification, 1:489
Galvão, Anthony of Saint Anne canonization, 1:492
Ginard Martí, María de los Ángeles beatification, 1:495
González, Emmanuel Gómez beatification, 1:498
Gorazdowski, Zygmunt canonization, 1:500
Guérin, Mother Theodore canonization, 1:510–511
Guízar Valencia, Rafael canonization, 1:514
Haddad, Jacques Ghazir venerable beatification, 1:517
on harrowing of Hell, 1:530–531
Holy Land visit, 1:119, 2:882–883
Houben, Charles of Mount Argus canonization, 1:554 Hurtado Cruchaga, Alberto canonization, 1:556 on IAEA, 1:76
Israel and, 2:882, 882–883
as ITC president, 1:563
Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:594–596, 595, 620–621
Jugan, Jeanne canonization, 2:631
Justo de Oliveira, Lindalva beatification, 2:634
Kłopotowski, Ignatius beatification, 2:645 on Laghi, Pio, 2:654
Benedict of Aniane, St., 1:123
Benedict of Nursia, St., 1:122–124, 269–270, 272, 274, 2:805
Benedictine Office, breviary use, 1:157
Benedictine Rule
Gregory I and, 1:272
medieval Church, 1:279, 2:806–807
overview, 1:122–124
spread of, 1:274
Benedictine Sisters of Providence, Congregation of, 1:485
Benedictines, 2:805
Camaldolese, 1:291
England, 1:100
late modern Church, 1:302, 2:810, 811, 812–813
medieval Church, 1:279, 2:807, 808, 809
seminary development, 2:984
Benedictines, Olivetan, 1:124–125, 2:1064
Benedictines of the Congregation of St. Maur, 1:293
Benevento, Italy, papacy and, 2:1031–1032, 1037
Benjamin, Judah, 1:40
Bennett Law (1889) (Wisconsin), 1:431
Benso, Camillo, Count of Cavour, 1:240, 241, 2:1054
Benso, Gustavo, Marquis of Cavour, 1:240–241
Benson, Nelson v. (1873), 1:326
Beo pheung (king of Korea), 1:172
Bergen, Carl-Ludwig Diego von, 2:1092
Bergson, Henri Louis, 1:125–128, 126
Berkeley, William, 1:313
Berkenbrock, Albertina, Bl., 1:128
Berlin Wall, dismantling of, 1:359
Bernadette of Lourdes, St., 1:128–131, 129, 303
Bernadot, V., 1:6
Bernard of Clairvaux, St.
on Abelard, Peter, 1:280
on cardinal virtues, 1:206
Cistercian Order development, 2:807
devotion to Mary, 2:752, 760
on excess, 1:280
influence on leaders, 1:279
Bernard of Corleone, St., 1:131–132
Bernardin, Joseph L. (Card.), 1:191, 383
Bernardine of Siena, St., 2:752
Bertone, Tarcisio (Card.), 1:204, 2:843, 886, 1085
Bérulle, Pierre de (Card.), 1:132–134, 292
Bessette, André, St., 1:134–135
Betancur, Pedro de San José, St., 1:135–136
Bethlehemites, 1:135, 2:958–959
Bethmann-Hollweg, Theobald von, 2:1090
Betto, Frei, 1:215
Beuron Congregation, 2:810
Beyzym, Jan, Bl., 1:136–137
Bible

afterlife views, 1:13–14, 20, 524–527
authorship considerations, 1:19
Calvin, John on, 1:287
canon formation, 1:265–266
catechesis of the Good Shepherd and, 1:499
charism references, 1:254–255
on Christian virtues, 1:206
devotion to Mary, 2:758
Jewish-Catholic relations and, 2:580, 586
late modern Church and, 1:303, 304
Lutheran perspective, 1:287, 2:687–688
Marian doctrine and, 2:748–749, 755, 772–773, 777
Massachusetts colonial period and, 1:314, 315 public school use, 1:324, 335
on rapture, 2:928
on sister churches, 2:1003
on slavery, 2:1005–1006, 1007, 1011
See also New Testament; Old Testament; specific books

Biblical exegesis. See Exegesis, Biblical

Biblioteche predicabili (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:32

Biblische Geschichte der Welterlösung durch Jesum der Sohn Gottes (Galura), 1:220

Biblische Geschichte des Alten und Neuen Testaments (Overberg), 1:220

Bidault, Georges, 1:398

Biel, Gabriel, 2:863

Bill of Rights (U.S.), 1:318

Billington, Ray Allen, 1:54

Billot, Louis (Card.), 1:6, 505

Biological determinism, 1:402

Biondi, Pietro Fumasoni, 1:64

Biraghi, Luigi, Bl., 1:137

Birkat Ha-Mazon (Jewish meal blessing), 1:7–8

Birth control. See Contraception

Bisazza, Felice, 1:479

Bishop, William Warner, 1:211

Bishop Home for Girls, 1:370

Bishops
canonization and, 1:194, 195, 197, 199
Christian democratic movements and, 1:395
as diocesan authority, 1:405–406
early modern Church, 1:286
False Decretals and, 1:276
Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and, 1:461
former Anglican clergy, 1:53
Lutheran Church, 2:683, 689
married, 1:244, 245, 250
medieval Church, 1:276–277
ownership of church property and, 1:324–325
Paul VI on, 1:307
seminary oversight, 2:982, 987 unauthorized consecration, as excommunicable offense, 1:449

Bismarck, Otto von, 1:137–140, 139

Bittremieux, Joseph, 2:752

Bivalence principle, 1:402

bKa' gdams pa Order, 1:171

Black, Hugo, 1:334, 335

Black Mass, 1:140–141

Blackmun, Harry, 1:337

Blaine, James Gillespie, 1:322

Blaine Amendment, 1:322–323, 329, 430

Blanco Márquez, Bartolomé, 1:468

Blessed Virgin. See entries beginning with Mary, Blessed Virgin

Blesseds, 1:106, 2:966–969, 968

Blet, Pierre (Father), 2:592

Blondel, Maurice, 1:6, 2:794

Blouin, Francis, 1:211

Blue Mosque, Benedict XVI visit, 1:310, 443

Blum, Virgil C. (Father), 1:57, 228, 229

Blumberg, Arthur, 1:39

Board of Education, Everson v. (1947), 1:329, 334, 336

Board of Education v. Allen (1968), 1:337

Board of Education v. Mergens (1990), 1:333

Board of Public Works, Roemer v. (1976), 1:336

Boccardo, Giovanni Maria, Bl., 1:141

Boccardo, Luigi, Bl., 1:141

Bodhisattvayāna, 1:159

Boes, Stephen (Father), 1:154

Boethius (philosopher), 1:403, 2:860

Boff, Leonardo, 1:215, 541

Bogomilism, 1:225

Boher Foix, Josep, Bl., 2:629

Böhmer, Justus Henning, 1:183

Bois, Jules, 1:140

Bojaxhiu, Gonxha (Mother Teresa of Calcutta), Bl., 2:787–790, 832–833, 833

Boleyn, Anne, 1:2, 3

Bollandists, 1:293

Bologna, Italy, 1:289, 2:1032, 1037

Bologna, University of, 1:281

Bolshevism, 1:142–145, 144, 357, 2:1027
See also Communism

Bolt, Robert, 2:830

Bonald, Louis de, 1:304

Bonaparte, Napoléon. See Napoléon I (emperor of France)

Bonaventure, St., 1:281, 2:1001

Bön (Tibetan religion), 1:169–170

Bonhoeffer, Dietrich, 2:685

Bonhomme, Pierre, Bl., 1:145–146

Boniface (missionary), 1:274

Boniface VIII (Pope), 1:51, 247, 283, 2:983

Bonifacio, Francesco Giovanni, Bl., 1:146

Bonnefoit, Domingo de, 1:113

Bonnetty, Augustin, 1:539, 540

Bonomelli, Geremia (Bp. of Cremona), 2:864

Bonus Priest Association, 1:500

Book of Common Prayer, 1:288

Book of Concord (Lutheran text), 2:683, 685

Book of Going Forth by Day (Egyptian text), 1:18

Books, prohibited. See Index of Prohibited Books

Boone, Joseph, 1:314

Bordas Piferrer, Javier, Bl., 2:621

Borgia, Cesare, 1:146–148, 147

Boromoraja II (king of Thailand), 1:176

Borromeo, Charles (Abp. of Milan), St., 1:291–292, 462, 2:983, 991

Borzęcka, Hedwig, 1:262

Bosco, John, St., 1:302, 384, 479, 2:709

Bosnia and Herzegovina, European Union candidacy, 1:442

Boso (Card.), 2:1032

Bossilkov, Evgenij (Bp.), Bl., 1:148–149, 262, 345

Bossuet, Jacques-Bénigne (Bp. of Meaux), 1:220, 295, 490, 2:923

Boston (MA), American Revolution, 1:42, 44–45

Boston Personalism, 2:895

Botero, Giovanni, 2:1033

Bouquillon, Thomas Joseph, 1:46

Bourges (cathedral), 1:280

Bourget, Ignace (Bp. of Montreal), 1:149–150

Bourgoing, François, 1:133

Bover, José M., 2:752

Bowen v. Roy (1986), 1:332

Bowne, Borden Park, 2:894–895

Boy Scouts, 1:151–152, 152

Boy Scouts of America v. Dale (2000), 1:151

Boyer, André, 1:221

Boyer, Carlo, 1:505

Boyle, Joseph, 1:83–84

Boys' Brigades, 1:151

Boys Town, 1:152–154, 153

Boys Town (film), 1:152, 154

Brader, María Caridad, Bl., 1:154–155

Brahmanical Vedism, 1:159

Brando, Maria Cristina, Bl., 1:155–156

Braunfeld v. Brown (1961), 1:331

Brazil
- martyrs from, 1:128, 389, 498, 2:634
- Perón, Juan Domingo and, 2:892
- rising Catholic population, 1:311

Bread of Charity project, 1:371–372

Brennan, William, 1:331

Brent, Giles, 1:313

Brentano, Klemens, 1:435

Brest, Union of (1595–1596), 1:292

Brethren of the Common Life, 1:284

Brethren of the Free Spirit, 2:924

Brevets, in Edict of Nantes, 2:844

Breviaries, 1:156–158

Breviarium Horarum, 1:156

Breviary of Pius V, 1:157

Breviary of Pius X, 1:157

Breviary of the Roman Curia, 1:157

Brezhnev, Leonid, 1:143, 348

Briand, Aristide, 1:418

Briand, Jean-Olivier (Bp.), 1:42

Bridge crossing, in afterlife, 1:13, 19

Bridgeport, CT, Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:549, 550

Brightman, Edgar Sheffield, 2:895

The Brights, 2:981

Brignoline Sisters, 1:252

Brisson, Louis Alexander Alphonse (Father), 1:97

Britain
- abolition of slavery, 2:1014
- Arab-Israeli conflict and, 2:617
- Catholic Emancipation, 1:299
- early Church, 1:271–272
- early modern Church, 1:295
- European integration, 1:441
- Gregorian calendar adoption, 1:503
- Israel establishment and, 2:615, 616
- medieval Church, 1:273–274
- Palestine mandate, 2:878–879, 880
- See also England; Ireland; Scotland; United Kingdom (U.K.)

Briz, María, 1:374

Brooklyn Museum of Art, 1:229

Brothers of Christian Schools martyrs, 1:468–470, 2:627

Brothers of Holy Cross, 1:548

Brothers of St. Joseph, 1:548

Brothers of the Holy Family, 1:253

Brown, Braunfeld v. (1961), 1:331

Brown, Nicholas, 1:45

Broychot, Lazaruss, 1:249, 250

Brun, Antoinette, 1:463, 464

Brunner, Maria Anna (Mother), 2:917–918

bSod nams rgya mtsho (leader), 1:171

Btsan po 'khor re (king of Tibet), 1:171

Bu ston (scholar), 1:171

Buber, Martin, 1:115

Buchanan, James, 1:45

Buckley, Siegbert, 1:100

Buckley, William F., Jr., 1:158–159

Buddha, 1:159–160, 161

Buddhamāmaka oath, 1:177

Buddhism, 1:159–180
- afterlife views, 1:19
- Cambodia, 1:177–178
- celibacy, 1:242
- China, 1:165–167, 178
- India, 1:159–163, 160, 162
- Japan, 1:167–169, 168, 178
- Korea, 1:172–174
- Myanmar (Burma), 1:175–176
- Sri Lanka, 1:163–165
- Thailand, 1:176–177
- Tibet, 1:162, 169–172, 170
- Vietnam, 1:174, 174–175
- Western countries, 1:178–179

Buddhist monks. See Monks, Buddhist

Buddhist nuns, 1:163, 171–172

Bufalo, Gaspare del, St., 1:180–181, 2:916, 917

Bulfinch, Charles, 1:45

Bulgakov, Sergius, 1:412

Bulgaria
- Catharism in, 1:225
- church-state relations, 1:149, 345
- European Union membership, 1:442
- martyred priests, 1:149, 261–262, 413, 2:1081
- papal response to Cold War and, 1:345

Bulgaria, Church of, 1:365

Bulletin d'ancienne littérature et d'archéologie chrétiennes (journal), 1:104

Bulletin de littérature ecclésiastique (journal), 1:104

Bullock, Texas Monthly v. (1989), 1:330

Bultmann, Rudolf, 1:376

Buonaiuti, Ernesto, 2:795, 797

Burchard of Worms, 1:247

The Burden of Pride (The Divine Comedy) (Dante Alighieri), 1:22

Burger, Warren, 1:336

Burial customs, ancient, 1:15–16, 17

Buridan, John, 2:862

Burke, Thomas, 1:320

Burma (Myanmar), Buddhism in, 1:175–176

Burns, Leopoldina (Sister), 1:370

Burstyn, Joseph, 2:664

Burstyn v. Wilson (1952), 2:664
Busaeus, Peter, 1:219
Busenbaum, Hermann, 1:33
Bush, George W., 1:564–565, 566, 2:654
Bush Doctrine, 1:565
Butiña, Francisco Javier (Father), 2:954
Butler, James (Abp.), 1:220
Bütler, María Bernarda, St., 1:155, 181
Buttresses, in architecture, 1:280
Byzantine Church, clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:245
  See also Eastern Catholic Church
Byzantine Empire
  caesaropapism, 1:183, 184
  Constantinople significance, 1:362–369
  Crusades and, 1:277–279
  early Church, 1:270–272
  heresies, 1:534
  Jewish history and, 2:607
  medieval Church, 1:276
  States of the Church, 2:1030–1032
  theological development, 1:270
Byzantine Institute of America, 1:367
Byzantium, 1:362, 363
  See also Constantinople

C

Cabala mysticism, 2:610
Cabrera, Patricio, 2:1097
Caccioppoli, Salvatore, 1:436
Cacucci, Francesco (Abp.), 1:434
CADEIO (Catholic Association of Diocesan Ecumenical and Interreligious Officers), 1:234
Caesar, Julius (emperor of Rome), 1:184, 503
Caesarism, 1:538–539
Caesarius of Arles, 1:271
Caesaropapism, 1:183–185
Caetano, Marcelo, 2:971
Cagots, 1:185–186
Cahensly, Peter Paul, 1:47
Caillaux, Joseph, 2:1089
Caillot, Alexandre (Bp.), 1:464
Caixal y Estrade, José (Bp.), 2:696
Cajetan of Tiene, St., 1:289
Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) (Card.), 1:186–190, 187, 206, 2:681
Calasanctian Sisters, 1:241, 242
Caldor, Inc., 1:331
Caldor, Inc., Estate of Thornton v. (1985), 1:331
Calendar Act (1752) (Britain), 1:503
Calendars, in breviaries, 1:157
California, Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323
Calixtus, Georg, 2:684
Call to Action Conference (1976), 1:190–192
Call to Holiness (Cordes), 1:258
Callahan, Patrick Henry, 2:646
Calles, Plutarco Elías, 1:50
Calvat, Mélanie, Bl., 1:479
Calvert, Benedict Leonard, 1:317
Calvert, Cecil, Second Lord Baltimore, 1:317, 2:1063, 1064
Calvert, George, First Lord Baltimore, 1:317, 2:1063
Calvin, John, 1:248, 287, 2:777, 944, 973
Calvinism
  ecumenical dialogue on Mary, 2:777
  France, 1:292, 2:843–845
  heresy and, 1:537
  Lambeth Articles and, 2:655–656
  Lutheranism and, 2:683, 685
  overview, 1:287
Camaldolese Benedictines, 1:291
Cambiagio Frassinello, Benedetta, St., 1:485–486
Cambodia, Buddhism in, 1:175, 177–178
Cambrai, Peace of (1529), 2:826
Cambrai (Flanders), Benedictine community, 1:100
Cambridge Platform, 1:315
Cambridge University, 1:281
Camerlengo (papal chamberlain) role, 2:884
Campeggio, Lorenzo, 2:826
Cana of Galilee, Mary's role, 2:725–727
Canada
  American Revolution and, 1:42
  apostolic delegates, 1:64
  L'Arche in, 1:67, 68, 68, 2:865, 1074
  Army of Mary in, 1:69
  Bourget, Ignace work, 1:149, 150
  Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:549–550
Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, 1:69
Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC), 1:68
Canards (nickname), 1:185
Candelaria of St. Joseph, Bl., 1:192–193
Candidates, European Union, 1:442
Canfield, Francis X. (Msgr.), 1:211
Canisius, Peter, St., 1:218–219, 221, 290–291, 2:761
Canisius, Theodore, 2:671
Cano, Melchior, 1:35
Canon law. See Code of Canon Law (1917); Code of Canon Law (1983)
Canonical missions, for higher education, 2:692
Canonization of saints, 1:107, 193–199, 194, 2:967–969
Canossa (castle and town), 1:199–202, 200
Cantwell v. Connecticut (1940), 1:329, 330
Capita doctrinae christianae compendio tradita (Canisius), 1:218–219
Capital (Marx), 2:714
Capitalism, 1:357, 2:714, 715
Capitol Square Review & Advisory Board v. Pinette (1995), 1:333
Capots, 1:185–186
Cappadocians, 1:411, 2:803–804
Cappello, Felix, 1:505
Capponi, Giovanni, 1:253
Cappuciati movement, 1:281
Capuchin Sisters of the Mother of the Divine Shepherd, Congregation of, 2:1066
Capuchins, 1:291, 302, 2:626–627, 628
Caqueux/Caquins/Caquous, 1:185–186
Caracalla (emperor of Rome), 1:267
Carbon-14 testing (Shroud of Turin), 2:992–993
Cardinal nephew office, 1:203

Cardinal Newman Society for the Preservation of Catholic Higher Education, 1:202–203

Cardinal Secretary of State, 1:203–204, 204

Cardinal virtues, 1:205–208, 207 confessors of the faith and, 2:967
interconnection of sins and, 2:998
Mary and, 2:735–736

Cardinals
College of Cardinals, 1:277, 2:884
early modern Church, 1:286
papal elections, 2:884–886
Paul VI on, 1:307
pseudo-cardinals, 1:112–113
reorganization, 1:291

Caritas in veritate (encyclical, Benedict XVI), 1:88, 118, 208–210, 310, 2:716

Carlen, Claudia (Sister), 1:211–212

Carmelite Missionary Sisters of St. Thérèse of the Child Jesus, 1:382

Carmelite Sisters of Mother Candelaria, 1:192

Carmelite Sisters of the Divine Heart of Jesus, 2:703

Carmelites
Auschwitz convent, 1:91, 2:591–592
founding, 1:291
Pidal y Chico de Guzmán, María Maravillas de Jesús Battista work, 2:903
Spanish Civil War martyrs, 1:470, 471, 472–473, 2:627–628

Carmody, Martin, 2:648

Carolingian Era, 1:274–276, 2:807, 1031

Carrier, Jean, Benedict XIV-II (Antipope), 1:112–114

Carroll, Charles, 1:320

Carroll, John (Abp. of Baltimore)
American Revolution and, 1:42, 43–44
catechism development, 1:102, 220
clerical training, 2:984
Georgetown founding, 1:427

Carroll Catechism, 1:102

Carthage, Council of (390), 1:246, 250, 266

Carthage, Council of (401–419), 1:246

Carthusians, 1:279

Cartwright, Thomas, 1:314

Casablanca Conference (1943), 1:343, 2:1094

Casaretto, Pietro, 2:810

Casaroli, Agostino (Card.), 1:211, 347, 2:788, 1058

Casas y Souto, Pedro (Bp.), 1:374

Casati of Mondov'i (Bp.), 1:220

Cascarrots, 1:185–186

Casey, Richard J. (Father), 2:637

Casey, Solanus (Father), 1:212

Casey, William, 1:348

Cass, Lewis, Jr., 1:45

Cassant, Joseph-Marie, Bl., 1:213

Cassian, John, 1:269, 2:802

Cassidy, Edward Idris (Card.), 2:632

Cassinese Congregation, 2:809

Cassiodorus, Flavius Magnus Aurelius, 1:272

Castang, Jeanne-Germaine, 2:707–708

Castells Brunei, Frances, Bl., 2:629

Casti connubii (encyclical, Pius XI), 1:409

Castillo Ramirez, Susana Paz, Bl., 1:192–193

Castrillón Hoyos, Darío (Card.), 1:393, 424

Castro, Alfonso de, 1:288

Castro, Fidel Ruz, 1:213–215, 214

Catalina Hills School District, Zobrest v. (1993), 1:337

Catalyst (magazine), 1:229

Catania, Eric, 2:916

Catanoso, Gaetano (Cajetan), St., 1:215–216

Catéchisme Historique (Fleury), 1:220

Catéchisme pour Adultes (catechism), 1:222

Catechesis of the Good Shepherd (CGS), 1:498–500

Catechetical Sisters of the Sacred Heart, Congregation of, 2:976

Catechism for Filipino Catholics, 1:222

A Catechism of Christian Doctrine, Prepared and Enjoined by the Order of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, 1:102, 102–104, 221

Catechism of the Catholic Church
afterlife views, 1:21, 22
on atomic weapons, 1:81
Benedict XVI involvement, 1:116
on canonization, 1:193
on Christian virtues, 1:205
on communion of saints, 1:354
on communism, 1:360
Denzinger references, 1:401
on the Devil, 1:404–405
on divinization, 1:410
on harrowing of Hell, 1:530
on Hell, 1:522
introduction, 1:103
on Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:588
on Mary, 2:727, 736, 739, 748
Personal Ordinariates, 1:53 publication, 1:222
on sin, 2:1001
on slavery, 2:1008
on unbaptized infants, 2:669, 670

Catechism of the Council of Trent, 1:102, 219

Catechism of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore. See Baltimore Catechism

A Catechisme of Christian Doctrine Necessarie for Children and Ignorante People (Vaux), 1:219

Catechisms, 1:216–225, 356
See also specific catechisms

Catechismus catholicus (Gasparri), 1:221

Catechismus maior (Busaeus), 1:219

Catechismus romanus, 1:102, 219

Cathari, 1:225–227, 226, 281–282, 534, 535

Catharinus, Ambrosius, 1:188, 288

Cathecyzon (Colet), 1:218

Cathedral schools, 2:982, 983

Cathedrals, 1:274, 280

Catherine of Aragon (queen of England), 1:2

Catherine (queen of Portugal), 1:462

Catholic Action, 1:344, 2:621, 622–624, 836

Catholic Answers (apostolate), 1:227–228

Catholic Association (Ireland), 1:299, 569

Catholic Association of Diocesan Ecumenical and Interreligious Officers (CADEIO), 1:234

Catholic Association of Mexican Youth, 1:49, 50

Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines, 1:222
Catholic Catechism (Australia), 1:221
Catholic Charismatic Renewal (CCR), 1:258–260, 259
Catholic Conference for Ecumenical Questions, 2:1086
Catholic education. See Education, Catholic Catholic Education, Congregation for. See Congregation for Catholic Education
Catholic Educational Association (CEA), 1:72, 427, 431
Catholic Emancipation (1829), 1:299, 569–570
Catholic Epistles (Dionysius of Corinth), 1:266
Catholic identity, Ex corde Ecclesiae on, 1:445, 446
Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, 1:57, 228–230
The Catholic Library World, 1:211
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:230, 230–236, 235
Catholic-Muslim Forum, 1:236
Catholic People's Party (KVP) (Netherlands), 1:399
Catholic political parties, 1:395–397
Catholic Press, 1:261, 408
Catholic Reformation (Counter-Reformation), 1:289–291, 2:611
Catholic scholars. See Scholarship
Catholic Social Science Review, 2:1018
Catholic Social Teaching: An Historical Perspective (Aubert), 1:86
Catholic Students Mission Crusade (CSMC), 1:408
Catholic teachings
  atomic energy and weapons, 1:76, 79–84
  Aubert, Roger contributions, 1:87–88
  Catholic universities and, 1:445 contraception, 1:383, 384
  Marxism, 2:715–716
  on Mary, 2:733, 734, 742, 751
  New Age movement and, 2:857–858 political involvement, 2:638, 641–642 right to dissent, 1:383, 384
  Society of Catholic Social Scientists and, 2:1018, 1019
Catholic Theological Society of America, 1:446
The Catholic University in the Modern World (International Federation of Catholic Universities), 1:72, 444
Catholic University of America
  Americanism and, 1:46
  Curran, Charles and, 1:383–384
  as ecclesiastical institution, 2:693
  founding, 1:427, 2:985
  John Paul II visit, 1:444
  Knights of Columbus and, 2:648
  Sisters College founding, 1:431
Catholic Worker Movement, 1:236–238, 237
The Catholic Worker (newspaper), 1:237, 238
Catholic Youth Organization (CYO), 1:239–240
Catholicism (de Lubac), 1:116, 117
Catholics in Political Life (National Conference of Catholic Bishops), 1:446
El Caudillo. See Franco, Francisco
Causal determinism, 1:402
Causes of Saints, Congregation of. See Congregation for the Causes of Saints
Cavalletti, Sofia, 1:498–499
Cavendish, William, Marquis of Hartington, 2:642
Cavour, Camillo Benso Di, 1:240, 241, 2:1054
Cavour, Gustavo Benso Di, 1:240–241
Cayré, Fulbert, 1:32
CCD (Confraternity of Christine Doctrine), 1:221
CCEE (Council of Episcopal Conferences of Europe), 1:233
CCF (Corpus Christi Fraternity), 2:788–789
CCM (Corpus Christi Movement), 2:788
CCR (Catholic Charismatic Renewal), 1:258–260, 259
CDF. See Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith
CDU (Christian Democratic Union) (Germany), 1:10
CEA (Catholic Educational Association), 1:72, 427
CEC (Conference of European Churches), 1:233
CEDA (Confederación Española de Derechas Autónomas), 1:455
Celestina of the Mother of God, Bl., 1:241–242
Celestine I (Pope), 1:272
Celestine V (Pope), 1:51
Celibacy, clerical, history of, 1:242–252, 249
The Cells (monastic community), 2:802
Celsus (philosopher), 1:266
Cenobitic monasticism development of, 1:269, 2:801–802, 803, 804
  Eastern monasticism and, 2:817, 820
  See also Monasticism
Censorship, 1:558–560, 2:662–665, 663
Censures, excommunication and, 1:448–449
Center Moriches Union Free School District, Lamb's Chapel v. (1993), 1:333 Center Party (Germany)
  Adenauer, Konrad and, 1:10
  Bismarck, Otto von and, 1:138, 139
  Hitler and, 1:361, 455
  Nazism and, 1:454–455
  Pius XI and, 1:396, 398
  social involvement, 1:300, 301
Centesimus annus (encyclical, John Paul II), 2:716
Central America, early modern Church missions, 1:293
  See also specific countries
Centurione Bracelli, Virginia, St., 1:252–253
CERAO (Regional Episcopal Conference of West Africa), 1:233
Ceric, Mustafa, 1:235
Cerioli, Paola Elisabetta, St., 1:253
CERNA (Regional Conference of North Africa), 1:233
Cervera, Pascual, 2:789
CFC (Couples for Christ), 1:239–240
CFC Youth for Christ, 1:239
CGS (Catechesis of the Good Shepherd), 1:498–500
Chadwick, James, 1:77
Chaillet, Pierre, 1:464
Chain reactions (nuclear), 1:77, 78

Chalcedon, Council of (451) on Constantinople, 1:364
deaconess references, 1:392
Donation of Constantine and, 1:415
theological development, 1:270
Chaldean Catholic Church, 1:7, 8, 245
Chaldean Oracles, 2:1061
The Challenge of Peace: God's Promise and Our Response (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 1:75, 76, 81, 82, 83
Challoner, Richard (Bp.), 1:42, 102, 220
Chambers, Marsh v. (1983), 1:337
Chan School, 1:165, 167, 173, 175
Chancellors, 1:406
Chaperones, for married clergy, 1:246–247
Chaplains, government-paid, 1:337
Chaplet of Divine Mercy, 1:407
Chappotin de Neuville, Hélène de, Bl., 1:253–254
Chaput, Charles (Abp. of Denver), 1:229
Charismatic Renewal, Catholic, 1:257, 258–260, 259
Charisms, 1:243, 254–258, 2:789–790
Charity
Augustine on, 1:217
Benedict XVI on, 1:208–210
as Christian virtue, 1:206, 207
Cor Unum work, 1:371–374
of Mary, 2:735
Charity in Truth (encyclical, Benedict XVI). See Caritas in veritate (encyclical, Benedict XVI)
Charlemagne (emperor), 1:184, 275–276, 2:1031
Charles I (emperor of Austria), Bl., 1:260–261
Charles I (king of England), 1:132, 292
Charles I (king of Naples), 2:1032
Charles II (king of England), 1:314, 316
Charles V (Holy Roman emperor), 1:2, 187, 288, 2:682
Charles V (king of Spain), 2:1014
Charles VII (king of France), 1:491
Charles X (king of France), 1:95
Charles XII (king of Sweden), 1:503
Charles Martel (Frankish leader), 1:274
Charter of Fundamental Rights (2000), 1:442
Charue, André-Marie, 1:111
Chastity, celibacy and, 1:242
Chateaubriand, François de, 1:304
Chattel slavery, 2:1007, 1009
See also Slavery
Chavara, Kuriakose (Cyriac) Elias, Bl., 1:261
Chávez Sánchez, Eduardo, 1:378
Chemnitz, Martin, 2:683
Chernobyl nuclear accident (1986) (Ukraine), 1:74
Chevalerie, Henriette de la, Countess, 2:965
Cheverus, Jean-Louis Lefebvre de, 1:45
Chicago, Archdiocese of, Catholic Youth Organization founding, 1:239
Chichkov, Josaphat, Bl., 1:149, 261–262, 413
Chieppi, Agostino (Father), 2:902
Children, 1:140, 229, 498–500
Children of God Relief Institute, 1:372
Children of Mary (France), 1:145
Chile, 1:26–27, 397
Chilean Conference of Catholic Bishops, 1:26
China
afterlife views, 1:19
anti-Catholicism, 1:345
Buddhism in, 1:165–167, 178
Communism in, 1:358–359
early modern Church missions, 1:293
Freinademetz, Joseph missionary work, 1:486
League of Nations and, 2:659
Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre research, 2:1056–1057, 1057
Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association, 1:345
Chinese Rites Controversy, 1:293
Chinul (monk), 1:173
Chinvat Bridge, 1:19
Chizuma, Gershom, 1:487
Chludzińska V. Borzęcka, Celina, Bl., 1:262–263
Chogye Order, 1:173
Chos 'byung (Tibetan text), 1:170
Chosŏn period, Buddhism and, 1:173
Chrestiaas (lepers), 1:185
Christ of St. John of the Cross (painting), 1:375
Christ the King, Sisters of, 1:141
Christenspiegel (Kolde), 1:218
Christian Brothers, 1:302
Christian Democracy (DC) (Italy), 1:399
Christian Democratic Organization of America (ODCA), 1:396–397
Christian Democratic parties. See Democratic parties, Christian
Christian Democratic Union (CDU) (Germany), 1:10, 300, 399
Christian Doctrine (catechism), 1:220
Christian Faith and Demonology (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 1:404
The Christian Faith in the Doctrinal Documents of the Catholic Church (Neuner and Dupuis), 1:401, 421
Christian People's Party/Christian Social Party (CVP/PSC) (Belgium), 1:399
Christian Social People's Party (CSV) (Luxembourg), 1:399
Christian Socialism Party (Austria), 1:395, 396
Christian unity, 1:305
Christian virtues. See Cardinal virtues; Theological virtues
Christianity, as term, 1:263
Christianity and the Religions (Dupuis), 1:421
Christianus (lepers), 1:185
Christifidelis Laici (apostolic exhortation, John Paul II), 1:354
Christmas wars, 1:229
Christology, 1:270–271, 2:603–604, 686–688
See also Jesus Christ
Christotypical vs. ecclesiotypical Mariology, 2:743–744, 762–763, 765–767
Christus Dominus (decree, Vatican Council II), 1:405 Chrysostom, John, St.

anti-Judaism, 1:58
on charisms, 1:256
condemnation of, 1:364
on Mary, 2:736
theological development, 1:270

Church, history of, 1:263–313 early, 1:263–273
anti-Judaism, 1:57–58
anti-Semitism, 2:581, 598
Biblical canon formation, 1:265–266
canonization process, 1:193–194
catechism development, 1:216–217
charisms, 1:254–256
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:243–245, 246
communion of saints, 1:354–355
Constantine conversion, 1:267–269
Constantinople significance, 1:362–363
deaconesses, 1:392
devotion to Mary, 2:758–760
divinization doctrine, 1:410–411
ecclesiastical organization, 1:267, 268
excommunication, 1:447–448
expansion, 1:263–266, 266–267
Gregory I and, 1:272
heresy, 1:532–534
imprimaturs, 1:558
Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:598–599, 607
Justinian age, 1:271–272
monasticism development, 1:269–270, 2:800–806
Patriarchate of Jerusalem, 2:579–580 persecution, 1:263–266, 267
sainthood process, 2:966–967
sister churches, 2:1003
slavery, 2:1007, 1011–1012
theological development, 1:270–271
medieval, 1:273–286
Anagni (Italy), 1:51
anti-Judaism, 1:58–59
anti-Semitism, 2:581–582
beatification process, 1:107
caesaropapism, 1:183–185
canonization process, 1:194–195
Canossa events, 1:199–202, 200
catechism development, 1:216–218
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:246–248
communion of saints, 1:355–356
Constantinople significance, 1:364–367
deaconesses, 1:392–393
devotion to Mary, 2:760–761
early Middle Ages, 1:273–277
excommunication, 1:448
Franciscans, Conventual, 1:480–482
heresy, 1:534–536
high Middle Ages, 1:277–283
imprimaturs, 1:558
late Middle Ages, 1:283–285
monasticism, 2:806–808
nominalism, 2:860–862
Patriarchate of Jerusalem, 2:580
quietism, 2:923
sainthood process, 2:967
sister churches, 2:1003
slavery, 2:1007–1008, 1012
States of the Church, 2:1030–1032 early modern (1500–1799), 1:286–296, 2:923–924
beatification process, 1:107
canonization process, 1:195
catechism development, 1:218–221
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:248–250
communion of saints, 1:356
devotion to Mary, 2:761
divinization doctrine, 1:411
Gregorian University, 1:504–505
heresy, 1:536–539
higher education, 1:427
imprimaturs, 1:558–559
monasticism, 2:808–810
nominalism, 2:862–863
Patriarchate of Jerusalem, 2:580
sainthood process, 2:967
seminary development, 2:982–984
slavery, 2:1008
States of the Church, 2:1032–1035
late modern (1800–present), 1:296–313
anti-Semitism, 2:582
canonization process, 1:195–196
catechism development, 1:220–223
Catholic schools, 1:430–434
charisms, 1:256–257
Christian democratic movements, 1:394–397
clergy and religious changes, 1:301–302
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:250–251
communion of saints, 1:353–354
contemporary Church, 1:305–311
devotions, 1:303, 2:762–764
divinization doctrine, 1:411–412
European Union and, 1:442
evangelization work, 1:304–305
excommunication, 1:448–449
Gregorian University, 1:505–507
heresy, 1:539–542
higher education, 1:427–429
imprimaturs, 1:559–560
liberalism, 1:298–299, 2:665–667
monasticism, 2:810–813
nominalism, 2:863
organizations, 1:299–300, 303
Patriarchate of Jerusalem, 2:580
Restoration period, 1:298
sainthood process, 2:967–969
scholarship, 1:303–304
seminary development, 2:984–989
sister churches, 2:1003
slavery, 2:1008–1009
social involvement, 1:300–301
socialism and, 1:300
States of the Church, 1:298, 2:1035–1038
See also specific events; specific people

The Church - Maintained in Truth? (Küng), 2:651

Church and state, in the United States, 1:313–339
American Revolution and, 1:42, 45
apostolic delegates, 1:64
Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities, 1:72

Catholic K-12 schools and, 1:431
colonial period, 1:313–317, 2:1063–1064
disestablishment period, 1:317–321
nineteenth century, 1:321–328
papal response to Cold War and, 1:343, 344–345, 346, 347
Revolutionary War and, 1:42, 45
separation of church and state and, 1:37 twentieth century, 1:328–338 twenty-first century, 1:338–339
Vatican diplomatic relations, 1:45, 308, 327–328, 2:653–654

The Church in the Age of Liberalism (Aubert), 1:87

The Church (Küng), 2:650

Church of Bulgaria, 1:365

Church of England
Act of Supremacy, 1:2–4
caesaropapism and, 1:184
colonial United States, 1:313, 314, 316, 317
disestablishment period, 1:319, 320
ecumenical dialogue on Mary, 2:776–777
heresy and, 1:538–539
Lambeth Articles and, 2:655–656
See also Anglican Communion

Church of Satan, 1:140

Church of Sweden, 2:683, 685

Church of the Holy Cross (Boston, MA), 1:45

Church property, in the United States, 1:324–327, 331

Church-state relations
apostolic delegates, 1:62–64
Argentina, 2:892–893
Bulgaria, 1:149, 345
caesaropapism, 1:183–185
Canossa events, 1:199–202, 200
Cardinal Secretary of State, 1:203–204
Chile, 1:26–27
Constantinople, 1:363–367
Czechoslovakia, 1:345
early Church, 1:270
early modern period, 1:286, 290–293, 294–295
England, 1:569, 570, 2:827
European Union, 1:440, 440–444
fascism and, 1:453, 454, 455–457
France, 1:297, 416, 418–419, 463–465, 2:1034–1036
Germany, 1:10, 138–139, 360–362, 545, 547, 2:682, 683, 1092
Hungary, 1:347
Israel, 1:309, 2:590–591, 880, 881
Italy, 1:11, 30, 344, 381, 395, 2:835, 836–837, 864
late modern period, 1:297–298, 308 manuscript illumination of, 1:278 medieval period, 1:273–277, 277–283, 283–285
Mexico, 1:39
Palestine administration, 2:877–883
Poland, 1:348, 349, 2:905
Portugal, 2:971
Russia, 1:143
secularism and, 2:979–981
Soviet Union, 1:343–344, 345, 346–347, 348–349, 2:1028–1029
Spain, 1:483–485, 2:1021–1025
States of the Church, 2:1030–1039
Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1046
Yugoslavia, 1:345, 346, 347
See also Church and state, in the United States; Politics; Separation of church and state

Churchill, Winston, 1:90, 343, 344, 345, 2:1094

Cicognani, Amleto, 1:64

Cinthius, Sanctes, 1:249, 250

Circumcision, 2:600

Cirilo, Lucia Sylvia, 2:800

Cisalpine Republic, 2:1035

Cistercians
Catharism and, 1:282
churches of, 1:280
development of, 2:807–808
late modern Church, 2:811
medieval Church, 1:279, 2:809

Ciszek, Walter J., 1:340

Cîteaux monastery, 1:279

Citeri Pulici, Joanna, 1:467

City of Boerne v. Flores (1997), 1:333

City of Struthers, Martin v. (1943), 1:330

Civil Constitution of the Clergy (France), 1:297

Civil law, 1:406, 2:1046

Civil War, Spain (1936–1939). See Spanish Civil War (1936–1939)

Civil War, United States (1861–1865), 1:38–42, 39, 56

Civilian targets. See Noncombatant immunity principle

La Civiltà Cattolica
American Civil War and, 1:41
anti-Semitism in, 1:60
Curci, Carlo Maria and, 1:380–381
on fascism, 1:455
founding, 2:1053
on World War I, 2:1091

CL (Communion and Liberation), 1:496

Clairvoyance de Rome (Bernadot and Maritain), 1:6

Claretian Missionaries martyrs, 1:474

Clark, Steve, 1:258–259

Clark, Tom, 1:335

Clarke, W. Norris (Father), 1:340–342

Clauson, Zorach v. (1952), 1:335

Clavius, Christopher (Father), 1:504

Clement I (Pope), 1:265, 266

Clement II (Pope), 1:200

Clement III (Antipope), 1:201

Clement IV (Pope), 2:885

Clement V (Pope), 1:283

Clement VI (Pope), 1:124

Clement VII (Antipope), 1:284, 2:991

Clement VII (Pope), 1:2, 187, 288

Clement VIII (Antipope), 1:113

Clement VIII (Pope), 1:291

Clement XI (Pope), 1:63, 463, 2:1076

Clement XIII (Pope), 1:102, 131, 221, 2:1034

Clement XIV (Pope), 1:295, 2:1034

Clement of Alexandria, 1:243, 267, 411, 2:972

Clergy, 1:229, 301–302, 392
See also Married clergy; specific types

Clergy, Congregation of. See Congregation for the Clergy

Clermont, Council of (1095), 1:277

Clichtove, Josse, 1:288

Clinton, Bill, 1:373, 2:643

Cloth-collapse theory (Shroud of Turin), 2:992

Clovis (king of the Franks), 1:271, 273

Club Benthorn (Jacobins), 2:574–575

Cluniac Reform, 2:760, 807
Cluniacs, 1:279
Cluny III (church), 1:280
Cluny monastery, 1:276
CMHC (Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation), 1:68
Cochlaeus, Johannes, 1:288
Cochran v. Louisiana State Board of Education (1930), 1:329
Code of Canon Law (1917)
  Acta Apostolicae Sedis and, 1:4
  canonical missions, 2:692
  Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs changes, 1:203
  on dioceses, 1:405
  Divini illius magistri and, 1:409
  on excommunication, 1:448, 449
  imprimaturs and, 1:559
Code of Canon Law (1983)
  Acta Apostolicae Sedis and, 1:4
  Anglicanorum coetibus and, 1:53
  apostolic delegates, 1:63
  Catholic colleges and, 1:73
  clerical training, 2:987
  on excommunication, 1:423, 448–449 higher Catholic education and, 1:428, 429, 445
  imprimaturs and, 1:559–560
  interdict sanctions, 1:560–561
  mandatum requirement, 2:692–693
  McManus, Frederick work, 2:782, 783
  sainthood process, 1:107, 195, 196, 197
Code of Canons of the Eastern Churches (CCEO)
  on excommunication, 1:449
  mandatum requirement, 2:692
  promulgation of laws, 1:4
  sainthood process, 1:196
Codex Justinian, 1:183
Coercion, in establishment clause cases, 1:337
Cognitional Process (sainthood), 1:196
Cohn, Rose, 1:237
Cold War, 1:342–349
  Franco, Francisco and, 1:483
  NATO and, 1:344, 2:841–842
  Pius XII and, 1:342–346, 343, 2:907
  Salazar, António de Oliveira and, 2:970
  Stalin, Josef and, 1:343, 2:1028, 1029
Colder, Winebrenner v. (1862), 1:327
Colet, John, 1:218, 2:824, 826
Coll y Guitart, Francisco, St., 1:349–350
Collectivization program (Soviet Union), 1:358
College of Cardinals, 1:277, 2:884
College of Relators, 1:197
Colleges. See Universities and colleges
Colleges of consultors, 1:406
Cologne, University of, 1:288
Colombia, Franciscan Sisters of Mary Immaculate, 1:155 Colonialism missions and, 1:305
  slave trade and, 2:1008
  U.S., 1:54–55, 313–317, 2:1063–1064
Colonna, Sciarra, 1:51
Colorado, legal considerations, 1:323, 324
Columbanus, St., 1:274
Columbus, Christopher, 2:646
Columbus Day ceremony, 2:647
Combalot, Theodore (Father), 2:786
Combes, Émile, 1:418
Comboni, Daniele, St., 1:350–352
Comboni Missionaries of the Heart of Jesus, 1:351, 352
Comensoli, Gertrude Caterina, St., 1:352–353
Cominform (Communist Information Bureau), 1:345, 358
Coming of Messiah in Glory and Majesty (Lacunza y Díaz), 2:928
Cominterm (Third International), 1:357, 358
Comité de Organización Política Electoral independiente (COPEI), 1:397
Comment Rome est trompé (Pujo), 1:6
Commentary on the Documents of the Second Vatican Council (Vorgrimler), 1:116
Commentary on the Galatians (Luther), 1:248
Commission for Christian-Muslim Relations (Regional Episcopal Conference of West Africa), 1:233
Commission for Relations with Muslims (Secretariat for Non-Christians), 1:231
Commission for Religious Relations with Judaism, 2:1086, 1087
Commission of Cardinals for the Catechism, 1:223
Commission on American Citizenship, 1:431
Committee for Public Education v. Nyquist (1973), 1:337
Committee on Faiths in the World (National Association of Diocesan Ecumenical Officers), 1:234
Common good, Benedict XVI on, 1:208
Common Market (Europe), 1:399
Common Word initiative, 1:235–236
Commonweal (journal), 1:380
Communal living
  Catholic Worker Movement and, 1:237–238
  cenobitic monasticism, 1:269, 2:801–802, 803, 804, 817, 820
Commune sanctorum, 1:156, 157
Communio as mutual interchange, 1:353–354
Communio (journal), 1:116
Communion and Liberation (CL), 1:496
Communion of saints, 1:21, 353–356
Communion under both species, 1:284
  See also Eucharist
Communism, 1:356–360, 359
  Bolshevism and, 1:142–145, 144
  Bulgarian martyrs, 1:149, 261–262, 413, 2:1081
  Chinese Buddhism and, 1:166–167
  Christian democratic movements and, 1:399–400
  Czechoslovakian martyrs, 1:552, 2:979, 1067
  Findysz, Władysław and, 1:465
  Franco, Francisco and, 1:483
  John Paul II and, 1:308
  John XXIII and, 1:306, 2:842
  Knights of Columbus and, 2:648
  late modern Church and, 1:300, 2:813
  Marxism and, 1:356–357, 2:714–717
  NATO and, 2:841–842
  Pius XI and, 1:360, 453, 454
  Pius XII and, 1:342–349, 454, 2:841–842, 907, 1029, 1094–1095

secularism and, 2:979
Stalin, Josef and, 1:358, 2:1027–1029
Tibetan Buddhism and, 1:171–172

Communist Information Bureau (Cominform), 1:345, 358

Communist Party of China, 1:358

Communist Party of the Russian Federation (CPRF), 1:144

Communist Party of the Soviet Union (CPSU), 1:143

Community
Ex corde Ecclesiae on, 1:445
excommunication and, 1:447–448, 449

Company of the Passion of Jesus the Nazarene, 1:422

Compassion, theology of the cross and, 1:376–377

Compassionist Sisters Servants of Mary, 2:701

Compatibilism, 1:402

Compendio della dottrina cristiana (Casati of Mondov'i), 1:220

Compendio della dottrina cristiana (Pius X), 1:221

Compendium of the Catechism of the Catholic Church, 1:223

Compendium theologiae (Thomas Aquinas), 1:218

Complementary Norms, 1:53

Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, 1:81

Compulsory schooling legal case, 1:332

Conaty, Thomas James (Msgr.), 1:71, 72

Concentration camps, 1:88–91, 89, 90, 2:591–592
See also Holocaust (Shoah)

Conceptualism vs. nominalism, 2:860

Concerning Isis and Osiris (Plutarch), 1:18

Concerning Some False Opinions Threatening to Undermine the Foundations of Catholic Doctrine (encyclical, Pius XII). See Humani generis (encyclical, Pius XII)

Conciliarism, 1:288, 294

Concilio, Januarius de, 1:221

Concilium (journal), 1:115

Concordat of 1801, 1:297, 418, 491

Concordat of Bologna (1516), 1:184

Concordat with Germany (1933), 1:360–362, 454, 455, 545

Concordats, 1:396, 454, 455
See also specific concordats

Concupiscence, 1:205, 2:733, 994

Condemning Current Errors (encyclical, Pius IX). See Quanta cura (encyclical, Pius IX)

Condotta ammirabile della divina Providenza (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33

Condren, Charles de, 1:292

Confederación Española de Derechas Autónomas (CEDA), 1:455

Confederacy (U.S.), papacy and, 1:40–41

Conference of European Churches (CEC), 1:233

Confessio catholicae fidei christianae vel potius explicatio quaedam confessonis (Hosius), 1:219

Confession of sins, 2:997

Confessional violations, as excommunicable offense, 1:449

Confessionalism, Lutheranism and, 2:685, 688

Il confessore diretto per le confessioni della gente di compagna (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33

Confessors (sainthood candidates), 1:193, 197–198

Confraternity of Christine Doctrine (CCD), 1:221

Confucianism, 1:19

Congar, Yves, 1:115

Congrégation de St. Pierre, 1:95–96

Congregation for Bishops, 1:446

Congregation for Catholic Education academic laws, 1:444, 445
clerical training, 2:986, 987
on ecumenism, 2:775
mandatum requirement, 2:693

Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments, 1:107, 196, 393, 426

Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, 1:203

Congregation for Institutes of Consecrated Life and Societies of Apostolic Life, 1:69

Congregation for the Causes of Saints
Cerioli, Paola Elisabetta miracle ratification, 1:253
Cuauhtlatoatzin, Juan Diego cause, 1:377, 378
Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio cause, 2:961
sainthood process, 1:107, 108, 196, 197, 198–199

Congregation for the Clergy, 1:191–192, 223, 393, 2:788

Congregation for the Daughters of Mercy, 2:901

Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (CDF)
Acta Sanctae Sedis recognition, 1:4
Anaphora of the Apostles Addai and Mari and, 1:9
Army of Mary excommunication, 1:69
Benedict XVI involvement, 1:116–117
communion with Anglican Church, 1:52
Curran, Charles and, 1:383
on deaconesses, 1:393
on the Devil, 1:404
Dupuis, Jacques and, 1:421
Ecclesia Dei Commission and, 1:424 on euthanasia, 2:914
on Hell, 1:522
heresy and, 1:541
International Theological Commission oversight, 1:562, 564
Küng, Hans and, 2:650–651
on life support care, 1:28
on Marxism, 2:716
Our Lady of All Nations apparitions, 2:874
Personal Ordinariates, 1:53
on political participation, 1:339, 2:638 profession of faith, 1:92 publication in Acta Apostolicae Sedis, 1:5
on redemption, 2:947
Reese, Thomas J. and, 1:37
on salvation, 1:234, 2:974
on sister churches, 2:1002–1003
See also Congregation of the Roman and Universal Inquisition; Holy Office

Congregation for the Eastern Churches, 1:64

Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples, 1:44, 64, 231–232

Congregation for the Oriental Churches, 1:64

Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith, 1:293, 305
See also Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples

Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:548–550, 2:831
Congregation of Missionary Sisters, Servants of the Holy Spirit, 2:1042
Congregation of Sacred Rites, 1:107, 195, 196
Congregation of the Baptistine Sisters of the Nazarene, 1:487
Congregation of the Benedictine Sisters of Providence, 1:485
Congregation of the Capuchin Sisters of the Mother of the Divine Shepherd, 2:1066
Congregation of the Catechetical Sisters of the Sacred Heart, 2:976 Congregation of the Daughters of the Poor of St. Joseph Calasanz, 1:241, 242
Congregation of the Daughters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, 2:930, 1075 Congregation of the Franciscan Sisters of Mary Immaculate, 1:155
Congregation of the Franciscan Sisters of the Family of Mary, 1:459
Congregation of the Franciscan Tertiary Missionaries of Argentina, 2:704
Congregation of the Holy Office, 1:345–346
Congregation of the Little Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, 2:1080 Congregation of the Marians of the Immaculate Conception, 1:407
Congregation of the Merciful Sisters of St. Gerard, 2:1052
Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer, 1:29, 30
Congregation of the Poor Sisters of Saint Gaetan, 1:141
Congregation of the Propaganda Fide, 1:293, 305
Congregation of the Roman and Universal Inquisition, 1:291
See also Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (CDF)
Congregation of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and the Holy Angels, 2:1065 Congregation of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, 2:965–966
Congregation of the Salesian Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, 2:871
Congregation of the Salesian Sisters of the Sacred Hearts, 2:1016
Congregation of the Servants of the Sacred Heart, 2:1081
Congregation of the Sisters, Expiatory Victims of Jesus, 1:155–156
Congregation of the Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Mercy, 2:1098
Congregation of the Sisters of Our Lady of Calvary, 1:145
Congregation of the Sisters of Our Lady of Carmel, 2:702
Congregation of the Sisters of St. Elizabeth, 2:784–785
Congregation of the Sisters of St. Joseph, 1:500
Congregation of the Sisters of St. Veronica of the Holy Face, 1:215
Congregation of the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, 2:1079
Congregation of the Sisters of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Loreto, 2:645
Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, 1:550–551, 2:831
Congregation of the Sisters of the Merciful Jesus, 2:1021
Congregation of the Sisters of the Resurrection, 1:262–263
Congregation of the Sons of Mary Immaculate, 2:888
Congregation of the Sons of the Holy Family, 1:551–552, 2:696
Congregation of the Sons of the Immaculate Conception, 2:822
Congregation of Worker Sisters of the Holy House of Nazareth, 2:1051
Congregational corporations, 1:325
Congregationalism, 1:315, 318, 319
Congregations, religious. See Religious communities
Congress of Vienna (1814–1815). See Vienna, Congress of (1814–1815)
Conjugal relations, 1:27–28, 245
Connaturality of virtues, 1:206
Connecticut
anti-Catholicism, 1:55, 56
colonial period, 1:315
disestablishment period, 1:318–319
Sunday closing laws, 1:331
twentieth century U.S., 1:331
Connecticut, Cantwell v. (1940), 1:329, 330
Connecticut Toleration Act (1784), 1:318
Connell, Francis J. (Rev.), 1:83, 103, 221
Conrad III (king of Germany), 1:279
Consalvi, Ercole (Card.), 1:203, 298
Conscience, sin and, 2:996
Conscientious objectors, 1:329, 2:576
Consciousness, 1:125, 126, 2:977, 995–996
Consecration of the elements, 1:8, 9
Consecration to Mary, John Paul II on, 2:769
Conservatism, vs. liberalism, 2:666
Conservative Christianity, New Age movement criticisms, 2:857
Conservative Judaism, 2:618–619
The Conservative Mind (Kirk), 1:158
Considerations Regarding Proposals to Give Legal Recognition to Unions between Homosexual Persons (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 1:339
Consistory, in sainthood process, 1:198
Consolamentum (Cathari sacrament), 1:226
The Consolation of Philosophy (Boethius), 1:403
Constance, Council of (1414–1418), 1:284, 491
Constans II (Byzantine emperor), 1:365
Constantine I (emperor of Rome)
Arianism and, 1:184
Constantinople founding, 1:362
conversion of, 1:267–269
Donation of Constantine, 1:275, 413–416, 414
early Church, 1:269
Edict of Milan, 1:193
Constantine II (emperor of Rome), 1:363
Constantine IV (Byzantine emperor), 1:365
Constantine IX (Byzantine emperor), 1:366
Constantine XII (Byzantine emperor), 1:366
Constantine of Rhodes, 1:367
Constantinople, 1:362–369, 363

Donation of Constantine, 1:275, 413–416, 414
Fourth Crusade, 1:279
as major see, 1:268, 270
monasticism development, 2:804, 814–815, 816
See also Byzantium

Constantinople, First Council of (381), 1:269, 270, 364

Constantinople, Fourth Council of (869–870), 1:270, 365

Constantinople, Second Council of (553), 1:270, 271, 364

Constantinople, Synod of (1923), 1:503

Constantinople, Third Council of (680), 1:365

Constitutio Romana, 2:1031

Constitutional Convention (1787), 1:318, 322

Constitutiones Apostolorum (collection). See Apostolic Constitutions (collection)

Constitutions of the Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:549

Constitutum Constantini. See Donation of Constantine

Constitutum II (Vigilius), 1:271

Constitutum (Vigilius), 1:271

Consubstantiation, 2:688

Contemplation and quietism, 2:923, 924, 925

Contending emotions, 1:205

Conti, Lotarius di. See Innocent III (Pope)

Continence, 1:242, 243

Continuity of self, 1:12

Contraception, 1:117, 118, 307, 383, 444

Conventuals (Franciscans). See Franciscans, Conventual

Conversations with Msgr. Escrivá de Balaguer (collection), 1:437

Conversion, 1:108, 111, 178–179
See also Evangelization

Cooke, Terrence (Card.), 2:788

Cope, Marianne (Mother), Bl., 1:369–370

COPEI (Comité de Organización Política Electoral independiente), 1:397

Copenhagen criteria (European Union), 1:442

Coppa, Frank J., 1:60

Coptic Church, 1:245, 246, 529

Cor Unum, 1:371–374

Corazón Téllez Robles, Matilde del Sagrado, Bl., 1:374

Cordes, Paul Josef (Card.), 1:258, 371, 372–373

Coredemptrix, Mary as disputes over, 2:752–753
Our Lady of All Nations apparitions and, 2:874 papal teachings on, 2:765, 767–768, 769, 770–771
theology of Mary and, 2:742–743, 746, 747–750

Corinthians, First epistle to, on charisms, 1:254, 255

Cornerstone (group), 1:333

Cornwell, John, 2:907

Corporations aggregate, for church property, 1:325

Corporations sole, bishops as, 1:325

Corpus Christi Fraternity (CCF), 2:788–789

Corpus Christi Movement (CCM), 2:788

Corrigan, Michael Augustine (Abp. of New York), 1:46, 47, 430

Cortez, Hernando, 2:1014

Cosmas the Priest, 1:225

Cottier, Georges (Father), 1:393

Coudrin, Pierre Marie Joseph, 2:965

Coughlin, Charles, 1:64

The Council, Reform and Reunion (Küng), 2:650

Council for Christian Unity. See Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity

Council for Public Affairs of the Church, 1:203

Council of Episcopal Conferences of Europe (CCEE), 1:233

Council of Europe, 1:441

Council of Florence (1438–1445). See Florence, Council of (1438–1445)

Council of Ministers (EEC), 1:441

Council of the European Union, 1:443

Council of Trent (1545–1563). See Trent, Council of (1545–1563)

Council of Vatican II (1962–1965). See Vatican Council II (1962–1965)

Council on the Laity, 1:307

Counterantipopes, 1:112

Counter-Reformation, 1:289–291, 2:611

County of Allegheny v. American Civil Liberties Union (1989), 1:337

Couples for Christ (CFC), 1:239–240

Covenant concept, Massachusetts, 1:314

Covenant with God, Jewish, 2:587, 596, 600–602, 729

CPRF (Communist Party of the Russian Federation), 1:144

CPSU (Communist Party of the Soviet Union), 1:143

Cranmer, Thomas (Abp. of Canterbury), 1:3, 2:983

Creation myths, 1:225, 226, 264

Creative Evolution (Bergson), 1:126

Credo of the People of God (Paul VI), 1:522

Creed, Apostles'. See Apostles' Creed

Creed of Constantinople, redemption theology and, 2:933

Crestia (lepers), 1:185

Crispi, Francesco Saverio, 1:11

Cristeros Rebellion, 1:50

Cristo Rey high schools, 1:433

Cristofori, Carlo Domenico. See Mark of Aviano, Bl.

Croatia, 1:146, 442, 454

La Croix (newspaper), 1:418

Cromwell, Oliver, 1:292

Cromwell, Thomas, 1:2–3, 2:827

Cross, 1:333, 374–377, 375

The Cross and the Switchblade (Wilkerson), 1:258

Crossing of bridges, in afterlife, 1:13, 19

Crossing the Threshold of Hope (John Paul II), 1:522

Crostarosa, Maria Celeste (Sister), 1:29

Crowley, Aleister, 1:140

Crucifixion of Jesus Christ
anti-Judaism and, 1:57–58
anti-Semitism and, 2:581, 582–583
John Paul II on, 2:767–768

Mary's role, 2:726, 727–728, 741, 742–743, 750, 752, 755
redemption theology and, 2:943, 945, 946
Shroud of Turin and, 2:991–992
Crusades, 1:58, 277–279, 366, 2:609–610
Cruz, Isabel de la (Sister), 1:35
Cruz Laplana y Laguna (Bp. of Cuenca), 1:468
CSMC (Catholic Students Mission Crusade), 1:408
CSV (Christian Social People's Party) (Luxembourg), 1:399
Cuauhtlatoatzin, Juan Diego, St., 1:377–379, 378, 507–508
Cuba, 1:213–215, 214, 2:1071
Cuban Missile Crisis (1962), 1:347, 2:642
Cúlavaṃsa (ancient text), 1:163
Cult beatification process and, 1:106, 108 of the dead, 1:16, 17 of heroes, 1:16
of martyrs, 2:966
of Mary, 2:758–765, 759, 766–767
redemption theology and, 2:935
in sainthood process, 1:193, 195, 274
Shroud of Turin, 2:993
Cult of the Supreme Being (France), 2:575
Cultic purity, 1:243
Cultural Revolution (1966–1976) (China), 1:358
Cum alias ad apostolatus (papal brief, Innocent XII), 2:923
Cum ex eo (apostolic constitution, Boniface VIII), 2:983
Cum postquam (papal bull, Leo X), 2:681
Cum praecelsa (apostolic constitution, Sixtus IV), 2:754
Cuomo, Mario M., 1:379–380
Cupimus imprimis (apostolic letter, Pius XII), 1:345
Curci, Carlo Maria, 1:380–382, 2:1053
Curcio, Maria Crociffisa, Bl., 1:382–383
Curia, diocesan, 1:406
Curia, Roman
Communism and, 1:344
Curci, Carlo Maria and, 1:381
deaconesses, 1:393
Denzinger documents, 1:400
establishment, 1:195
publication in Acta Apostolicae Sedis, 1:4
reforms, 1:291
secretary of state role and, 1:203
Curialist party (Council of Trent), 1:289
Curie, Marie, 1:77
Curie, Pierre, 1:77
Curran, Charles, 1:117, 383–384
Cursillo Movement, 1:258
Cushing, Richard (Card.), 1:302
Cutter v. Wilkinson (2005), 1:338
CVP/PSC (Christian People's Party/Christian Social Party) (Belgium), 1:399
CYO (Catholic Youth Organization), 1:239–240
Cyprian (Bp. of Carthage), St., 1:267, 2:972
Cyprus, European Union membership, 1:441
Cyril of Alexandria, St., 1:270, 412
Czartoryski, Augusto, Bl., 1:384–385
Czartoryski, Władysław Ladislaus (prince of Poland), 1:384
Czech Republic, European Union membership, 1:441
Czechoslovakia, 1:345, 358, 552, 2:979, 1067

D

da Costa, Alexandrina Maria, Bl., 1:388–389
The Da Vinci Code (Brown), 1:229
Dabra Libānos (monastery), 2:818
Dahe, Ximeno, 1:113
Dal Toso, Giovanni (Msgr.), 1:373
Dalai Lama succession, 1:171, 172
Dalí, Salvador, 1:375
Damascius (philosopher), 2:1061
Damascus Affair (1840), 2:614
Damasus I (Pope), 1:246, 266, 270
Damien of Molokai, St. See Veuster, Joseph de (Fr. Damien), St.
Dammazedi (king of Myanmar), 1:175
Damned, theology of Hell and, 1:520
D'Amour, O'Neil C. (Msgr.), 1:432
Dance of Death, as motif, 1:283
Daniélou, Jean, 2:951
d'Annunzio, Gabriele, 1:387–388
Dante Alighieri, 1:21, 51, 2:735
Daoan (monk), 1:165
Daoism, 1:19, 165, 166, 242
Darby, John Nelson, 2:928
d'Arcis, Pierre (Bp. of Troyes), 2:991
Dare We Hope "That All Men Be Saved?" (Balthasar), 1:522–523
Daronch, Adílio, Bl., 1:389–390, 498
Darwin, Charles, 1:304
Daudet, Léon, 1:5, 6
Daughters of Charity, 1:422
Daughters of Charity of the Most Precious Blood, 1:488
Daughters of Divine Zeal, 1:479
Daughters of Mary, Mother of the Church, 1:374
Daughters of Mercy, Congregation of, 2:901
Daughters of Our Lady of Mount Calvary (Brignoline Sisters), 1:252
Daughters of St. Paul, 1:24, 495
Daughters of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, Congregation of, 2:930, 1075
Davenport, John, 1:315
Davey, Locke v. (2004), 1:338
David (king of Israel), 2:729, 773
Davies, Samuel, 1:314
Davis, Jefferson, 1:40
Davis v. Beason (1890), 1:329
Dawkins, Richard, 2:981
Day, Dorothy, 1:236–238, 237
Day of reckoning. See Judgment
Dayan, Moshe, 2:617
DC (Christian Democracy) (Italy), 1:399
De anima (Cajetan), 1:189
De auxiliis debate, 2:951, 1043
De catechizandis rudibus (Augustine), 1:217 de Charny, Geoffrey, 2:990
De Ciuitate Dei (Augustine), 2:1062

De coelibatu sacerdotum ad Nicolaum II (Peter Damian), 1:247
De Concilio, Januarius (Msgr.), 1:103
De consideratione (Bernard of Clairvaux), 1:206
De fide et operibus (Cajetan), 1:188 de Gasperi, Alcide, 1:344, 396, 399, 440–441 de Gaulle, Charles, 1:390–391, 441
De Giorgi, Salvatore (Card.), 2:1025
De immunitate ecclesiastica a Venetis violata (Súrez), 2:1043 de la Cueva, Julio, 2:1023
De legibus seu de Deo legislatore (Súarez), 2:1044, 1045
De libero arbitrio voluntatis (Augustine), 1:403 de Lobera, Jean, 1:249
de Lubac, Henri (Card.), 1:116, 117, 2:951–952
de Ludegna, John, 1:249, 250
De Meulemeester, Maurice, 1:31
De moribus ecclesiae catholicae (Augustine), 1:206
De quinque septenis seu septenariis (Hugh of St. Victor), 1:217 de Raeymaeker, Louis, 1:341
De sacrificio missae (Cajetan), 1:188 de Sainctes, Claude, 1:249
De Servorum Dei Beatificatione et Beatorum Canonizatione (Lambertini), 1:107, 195 de Vergy, Jeanne, 2:990–991
De votis monasticis (Luther), 1:248 de Wulf, Maurice, 2:852
Deaconesses, 1:392–394
Deacons, married, 1:244, 245, 246, 247, 250
Deaneries, parishes grouped into, 1:405
Dearden, John (Card.), 1:191
Death, 1:14, 15
  See also Abode of the dead; Afterlife
Debré, Michel, 1:391
Decalogue. See Ten Commandments
Dechamps, Victor, 1:304
Dechant, Virgil C., 2:648
Decius, Gaius (emperor of Rome), 1:267
Déclaration du clergé française (Bossuet), 1:490
Declaration of Rights (1689), 1:313, 315, 316
Declaration of the French Clergy (Bossuet), 1:490 Declaration on Euthanasia (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 2:914
Declaration on Religious Freedom (declaration, Vatican Council II). See Dignitatis humanae (declaration, Vatican Council II)
Declaration on the Relationship of the Church to Non-Christian Religions (declaration; Vatican Council II). See Nostra aetate (declaration, Vatican Council II)
Declarations
  Dignitatis humanae (Vatican Council II), 1:87
  Dominus Iesus (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 1:116, 234, 522, 2:947, 974
  Mysterium Ecclesiae (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 2:651
  Nostra aetate (Vatican Council II), 1:59, 61, 230–231, 232, 233, 307, 2:582–584
Decree of Introduction of the Cause, in sainthood process, 1:195
Decree on Heroic Virtues, in sainthood process, 1:197
Decree on Martyrdom, in sainthood process, 1:197
Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity (decree, Vatican Council II), 2:692
Decrees
  Apostolicam Actuositatem (Vatican Council II), 2:692
  Christus Dominus (Vatican Council II), 1:405
  Inter mirifica (Vatican Council II), 1:307
  Optatam totius (Vatican Council II), 2:986
  Orientalium ecclesiarum (Vatican Council II), 1:307
  Presbyterorum ordinis (Vatican Council II), 1:242, 2:986
  Responsa ad dubia de communismo (Congregation of the Holy Office), 1:345–346
  Unitatis redintegratio (Vatican Council II), 1:307, 2:775
  Urbani VIII Pontificis Optimi Maximi Decreta servanda in Canonizatione et Beatificatione Sanctorum (Urban VIII), 1:195
Decretals (Gregory IX), 1:195
Decretum (Burchard of Worms), 1:247
Decretum pro Armenis (Council of Florence), 1:8
Deepika (newspaper), 1:261
A Defense of the Catholic Faith against the Errors of the Anglican Sect (Súrez), 2:1043
Defense policy, atomic weapons and, 1:75–76, 82
Deferrari, Roy J., 1:401
Degeimbre, Andrée, 1:109, 110, 111
Degeimbre, Germaine, 1:109
Degeimbre, Gilberte, 1:109, 110, 111
Degoudenne, Joseph, 1:110
Deharbe, Josef, 1:221
Dei Verbum (dogmatic constitution, Vatican Council II), 1:115, 2:717
Deification, Doctrine of, 1:410–413
Deir Amba Maqār (monastery), 2:818
Deir as-Surjān (monastery), 2:818
Dejamiento, by the Alumbrados, 1:35
Del gran mezzo della preghiera (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:32
Del primato morale e civile degli Italiani (Gioberti), 1:380
Del sagrificio di Gesù Cristo (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:31
Delahaye, Karl, 1:355
Delaware, 1:55, 317, 320, 322, 323
Delegati sedia apostolicae, 1:47, 62–65
Della Chiesa, Giacomo (Card.). See Benedict XV (Pope)
Dell'uso moderato dell'opinione probabile (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33
Démann, Paul, 1:464
Democracy, Christian, 1:394–397
Democracy, in the European Union, 1:442
Democratic parties, Christian, 1:397–400
  Cold War and, 1:344, 399
  European integration and, 1:399, 440–441, 442
  as movement, 1:395–397
Demons, theology of Hell and, 1:520
Dempsey, Jack, 1:153

Deng Xiaoping, 1:358
Denmark, 1:441, 2:683, 684
Dennett, Daniel, 2:981
Denzinger, Heinrich Joseph, 1:400
Denzinger (handbook), 1:400–402
Depravity of humans, Protestantism on, 1:536–537
Dept. of Public Health, Goodridge v. (2003), 1:339
The Deputy (play), 2:907
Dereppe, Joseph, 1:110
Dereppe, Paulette, 1:110
Derry, George Hermann, 2:648
Desbuquois, Gustave, 2:848
Descent into Hell. See Hell, harrowing of Descoqs, Pedro, 1:6
Desert Fathers, 1:269, 2:802–804
Desert Mothers, 1:269
Dessau, Moses, 2:613
Destiny, sin and, 2:938
Determinism, 1:125, 402–403
Deterrence, nuclear, 1:75–76, 81–82, 83–84
Detroit, Archdiocese of, Catholic Youth Organization, 1:239
Deus caritas est (encyclical, Benedict XVI)
  on charity, 1:373
  on globalization, 1:310
  on love, 1:117, 372, 376
  Marian doctrine, 2:770
  on Marxism, 2:716
  on politics, 1:442
Deus scientiarum Dominus (apostolic constitution, Pius XI), 2:692
Deutsch Katechismus (Luther), 1:218
Deutschkatholizismus, 1:304
Development, human, Benedict XVI on, 1:209–210
Devil, 1:403–405, 404
  harrowing of Hell and, 1:525, 528–529
  theology of sin and, 2:1000
Devil's rights theory, 2:943
Devotions
  Divine Mercy, 1:406–407
  divinization doctrine and, 1:411
  late modern Church, 1:303
  Sacred Heart, 1:303, 407
  Shroud of Turin, 2:993
  See also Mary, Blessed Virgin, devotion to Dewane, Frank (Bp. of Venice, FL), 1:93, 94
dGe lugs pa Order, 1:171
Dharma (Buddhism), 1:164, 167
Dharmakāya (Buddhism), 1:162
Dharmapala, Anagarika, 1:164, 178
Dharmayuthika School, 1:176
Diaconissae, 1:246
Dialectical materialism, 2:713–714
Diálogo de doctrina cristiana (Valdés), 1:35
Dialogue and Proclamation: Reflection and Orientations on Interreligious Dialogue and the Proclamation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ (Secretariat for Non-Christians), 1:231, 232
Diary of the Roman Curia, 1:4
Diaspora (Jewish), 2:607
Dichiarazione piú; copiosa dell dottrina cristiana breve (Bellarmine), 1:219
Dictionary of Papal Pronouncements, Leo XIII to Pius XII (Carlen), 1:211
Didache of the Apostles, 1:7, 8, 264
Didascalia Apostolorum, 1:392
Diego, Juan, St., 1:377–379, 378, 507–508
Dietenberger, J., 1:218
Dieulouard (France), Benedictine community, 1:100
Díez-Alegría, José María, 1:506
Dignitatis humanae (declaration, Vatican Council II), 1:87
Dignity
  Aubert, Roger on, 1:87
  Catholic Worker Movement and, 1:236 slavery as contrary to, 2:1007, 1008–1009
Dilatio inferni theory, 1:520
Dilecctisima nobis (encyclical, Pius XI), 2:1022
Dilucida et pia explanatio symboli (Erasmus), 1:218
Dimitrios I (Patriarch of Constantinople), 2:775
Dinh Bo Linh (emperor of Vietnam), 1:174
Diocesan curia, 1:406
Diocesan finance councils, 1:406
Diocesan pastoral councils, 1:406
Diocesan phase (sainthood process), 1:197, 198
Diocesan seminaries, 2:984–985
Diocesan synods, 1:406
Diocese of Montreal (Canada), 1:149, 150
Diocese of Venice (FL), 1:93, 94
Dioceses, 1:405–406
  See also specific dioceses
Diocletian Persecution (303–313), 1:267
Dionne, E. J., 1:380
Dionysius of Corinth, 1:266
Dionysius the Areopagite, 1:411, 2:1061
Direction, spiritual, 1:100
Directory on Popular Piety and the Liturgy (Congregation for Divine Worship), 2:763 Disabilities, group homes for people with, 1:67–69, 68, 2:865, 1074
Disaster support, Cor Unum work, 1:372
Discalced Carmelite Friars Spanish Civil War martyrs, 1:470–471
Discernment of spirits, as charism, 1:255
La Discorde chez l'ennemi (de Gaulle), 1:390
Discourse, science of, 2:861
Discriminate use principle, 1:80
Disenfranchisement, anti-Catholicism and, 1:54, 55
Disestablishment period (U.S.), 1:317–321
Dispensationalist thought, rapture and, 2:928, 929
Display of religion, public, 1:333, 337, 338
Disputationes metaphysicae (Súarez), 2:1044–1045
Dives in misericordia (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:308, 407, 2:767
The Divine Comedy (Dante Alighieri), 1:22, 51
Divine infallibility, 1:402–403
Divine law
  Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1045
  theology of sin and, 2:940, 941, 943–944, 996–997, 1001
Divine Mercy, devotion to, 1:406–407, 2:1021
Divine Mercy in My Soul (Kowalska), 1:407

Divine Mercy Sunday, 1:407
Divine Office, 1:123, 156–157
Divine simplicity, determinism and, 1:402, 403
The Divine Teacher and Model of Perfection (apostolic constitution, John Paul II). See Divinus Perfectionis Magister (apostolic constitution, John Paul II)
Divine Word, Society of the, 1:408, 2:579, 1042
Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments, Congregation of. See Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments
Divini illius magistri (encyclical, Pius XI), 1:408–410, 431, 455
Divini Redemptoris (encyclical, Pius XI), 1:342, 2:1029
Divinization, Doctrine of, 1:410–413, 2:776
Divino afflante Spiritu (encyclical, Pius XII), 1:303, 2:908, 1095
Divinus Perfectionis Magister (apostolic constitution, John Paul II), 1:107, 193, 196, 197, 199
Divorce, 1:117, 276
Djidjov, Pavel, Bl., 1:149, 262, 413
Djoundrin, Samuil (Bp.), 1:149
Dochkus v. Lithuanian Benefit Society of St. Anthony (1903), 1:327
Doctrinal Note on Some Questions Regarding the Participation of Catholics in Political Life (doctrinal note, Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 1:339, 2:638 Doctrine
  America on, 1:37
  anti-Judaism and, 1:58
  Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) work, 1:188–189
  Council of Trent work, 1:289
  Devil meaning, 1:404
  devotion to Mary, 2:760–761
  on dioceses, 1:405
  divinization, 1:410–413
  early Church, 1:264
  imprimaturs and, 1:558, 559
  Küng, Hans on, 2:650, 651
  Lutheran, 2:686–689
  Marian papal Magisterium, 2:765–772
  Mary as coredemptrix, 2:748, 749–750, 752–753
  redemption theology and, 2:936–941
  spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:754–758
  theology of Hell and, 1:518–521
  See also Catechisms; Dogma
Doctrine of Divinization, 1:410–413, 2:776
Doctrine of justification, Joint Declaration on (JDDJ), 2:631–634, 632, 685
Doctrine of the Faith, Congregation for. See Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (CDF)
Doctrine of theurgy, 2:1061–1062
Documentary evidence (sainthood process), 1:195, 197, 199
Doe, Santa Fe Independent School District v. (2000), 1:336
Dogma
  Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:32–33
  French Modernism and, 2:795 redemption theology, 2:933–935
  salvation with the Church, 2:972–975 theology of Hell development, 1:518–521
  See also Doctrine
Dogmatic constitutions
  Dei Verbum (Vatican Council II), 1:115, 116, 2:717
  Gaudium et spes (Vatican Council II), 1:75, 80, 116, 118, 2:638, 716, 1008–1009, 1057
  Lumen gentium (Vatican Council II), 1:115, 231, 256–257, 307, 353–354, 405, 521, 2:587, 741, 743, 753, 756, 763, 765–766, 774–775, 974
  Sacrosanctum concilium (Vatican Council II), 1:306–307, 423
Dogmatic theology, 1:293
Dollfuss, Engelbert, 1:396, 454
Döllinger, Johannes Ignaz von, 1:304
Dominic, St., 1:282
Dominican Missionary Sisters of the Rosary, 1:71
Dominican Sisters of the Annunciation, 1:350
Dominicans
  Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio), 1:186–190, 187
  De auxiliis debate, 2:951, 1043 dispute with Jesuits, 2:951
  founding, 1:282
  late modern Church, 1:302
  missionary work, 2:973
  seminary development, 2:985
  Spanish Civil War martyrs, 1:471–472, 2:624
Dominum et vivificantem (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:376 Dominus Iesus (declaration, Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith) ecumenism and, 1:234
  on Hell, 1:522
  on redemption, 2:947
  on salvation, 2:974
  on the universal Church, 1:116
Domitian (emperor of Rome), 1:266
Domitilla, St., 1:266
Donati, Marianna, Bl., 1:241–242
Donation of Constantine, 1:275, 413–416, 414
Donation of Pippin, 1:275
Doncoeur, P., 1:6
Dongan, Thomas, 1:54, 316
Donnelly, Lynch v. (1984), 1:337
Donohue, William A., 1:228–229
Döpfner, Julius (Card.), 1:11
Dormans, Adolf, 1:554
Dottrina cristiana breve (Bellarmine), 1:219
Douai (Douay) Catechism, 1:102, 219–220
Douai (Flanders), Benedictine community, 1:100
Double hearsay testimony (sainthood process), 1:195
Douglas, William O., 1:332, 335
Dragovitsa order, 1:225
Dream of St. Benedict (fresco), 1:123
Drexel, Katherine, St., 1:197, 198
Dreyfus, Alfred, 1:416–419, 417
Dreyfus Affair, 1:416–419, 417
Dualism, 1:225, 226, 264, 281
Duarte de Perón, Eva, 2:892, 893
Dubcek, Alexander, 1:358
Duchesne, Louis, 2:793
Duckworth, Gary (Father), 2:789
Dudick, Michael J. (Bp.), 1:340
Duff, Frank, 1:419–420
Dujarié, Jacques-François, 1:548
Dukehart, J. Cyril (Father), 2:986
Dulles, Avery (Card.), 1:523
Dunkers (sect), 1:320

Duns Scotus, John, 1:403
Dupuis, Jacques, 1:401, 420–422, 490, 2:947
Dupuy, Pierre, 1:490
Duquesne University, 1:257, 258
Dura-Europos (historical city), early Church in, 1:267
Durando, Marcantonio (Father), Bl., 1:422
Dürer, Albrecht, 1:404
Durrwell, F. X., 2:942, 946
The Dutch Catechism (Holland), 1:222
Dutch Reformed Church, 1:316
Dutthagamani (king of Sri Lanka), 1:163
Duvergier de Hauranne, Jean, 1:133, 294
Dworkin, Ronald, 2:980
Dzerski, Johann, 1:304

E

Early church history. See Church, history of, early Early Middle Ages. See Church, history of, medieval Early modern church history. See Church, history of, early modern (1500–1799)
Easter, date controversy, 1:266
Eastern Catholic Church
  clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:245–246
  deaconesses, 1:392–393
  Gregorian calendar adoption, 1:503
  monasticism development, 2:814–821
  sainthood process, 1:196
  Soviet Union, 2:1029
  theological development, 1:270
Eastern Europe
  Cold War and, 1:344, 345, 347, 349
  Communism in, 1:358, 360
  Council of Europe and, 1:441
  Jewish history, 2:612, 615
  John Paul II outreach, 1:308
  John XXIII outreach, 1:306
  modern Church in, 1:292, 2:813
  See also specific countries
Eastern Orthodox Church
  caesaropapism, 1:184
  clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:245
  Gregorian calendar adoption, 1:503
  harrowing of Hell iconography, 1:529
  Marian doctrine and, 2:732, 733, 776
  reunion efforts, 1:305
  as sister church, 2:1002–1004, 1003
Eastern Roman Empire. See Byzantine Empire
EC (European Community), 1:441
ECB (European Central Bank), 1:443
Ecclesia de Eucharistia (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:309, 425–427, 2:735, 736, 744, 769–770
Ecclesia Dei Commission, 1:423–425
Ecclesia Dei (motu proprio, John Paul II), 1:423
Ecclesiae unitatem (motu proprio, Benedict XVI), 1:119, 424
Ecclesial communion, Eucharist and, 1:426
Ecclesial power, Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1046
Ecclesiam suam (encyclical, Paul VI), 1:230, 232
Ecclesiastical Gallicanism, 1:491
Ecclesiastical Hierarchy (Dionysius), 2:1061
Ecclesiastical universities and colleges, 2:692–693
Ecclesiotypical vs. Christotypical Mariology, 2:743–744, 762–763, 765–767
Eck, Johann, 1:288
Eckhart, Johann, Meister, 2:924
Economic determinism, 1:402
Economics
  Benedict XVI on, 1:209–210
  liberalism and, 2:665–666, 667
  slavery and, 2:1005–1006, 1010
  States of the Church and, 2:1033, 1034, 1035
  See also specific ideologies
ECSC (European Coal and Steel Community), 1:399, 441
Ecumenical patriarch, as title, 1:364–365
Ecumenism
  Benedict XVI outreach, 1:310
  Gregorian University and, 1:505–506
  John Paul II outreach, 1:308–309
  John XXIII outreach, 1:306
  Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification, 2:631–634, 632, 685
  Lutheranism and, 2:685
  Marian doctrine and, 2:753, 763–764, 774–778
  McManus, Frederick work, 2:783
  monasticism development, 2:813
  Willebrands, Johannes work, 2:1086, 1087
  See also Interreligious dialogue
EDC (European Defense Community), 1:441
Edessa, fall of (1144), 1:278–279
The Edge of the Sword (de Gaulle), 1:390
Edict of Milan, 1:193
Edict of Nantes (1598), 1:292, 2:843–845, 844
Edmunds Act (1882), 1:323
Edmunds-Tucker Act (1887), 1:323
Education, Catholic, 1:427–430, 430–434
  catechesis of the Good Shepherd, 1:498–500
  Divini illius magistri on, 1:408–410 higher in the United States
    Ex corde Ecclesiae and, 1:428–429, 444, 446, 2:693
    Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and, 1:461–462
    mandatum requirement, 1:429, 446, 2:692–694
  K through 12 in the United States, 1:430–434
  More, Sir Thomas on, 2:826
  separation of church and state and, 1:37, 324, 430–432
Education, general. See Schools; Universities and colleges
The Education of Catholic Americans (Greeley and Rossi), 1:432
Edward VI (king of England), 1:287, 538–539
Edwards v. Aguillard (1987), 1:336
EFTA (European Free Trade Association), 1:441
Egypt
  Arab-Israeli conflict and, 2:617, 619
  Eastern monasticism, 2:814, 817–818
  Jewish history, 2:615
  John Paul II visit, 1:309

monasticism development, 1:269
Egypt, ancient, afterlife views, 1:18
Eightfold Path, 1:160
Einstein, Albert, 1:77
Elia di San Clemente, Bl., 1:434–435
Eliliani, Jerome, St., 1:289
Elizabeth, St., 2:722, 723, 919
Elizabeth I (queen of England), 1:3, 288, 457, 2:655, 656
Elizondo, Maur, 1:464
Elk Grove Unified School District v. Newdow (2004), 1:338
Elliott, Walter, 1:48
Ellis, John Tracy (Msgr.), 1:72
Eluvathingal, Rose, Bl., 1:439
Elvira, Council of (ca. 300), 1:246, 267
Elysium, 1:16, 18
Emancipation of Jews, 2:613–615
Emancipation Proclamation, 1:41, 2:1015
Emigrants and Exiles (Miller), 1:40
Emmanuel Philibert (duke of Savoy), 2:991
Emmerick, Anna Katharina, Bl., 1:435
Emotions, 1:205
Empiricism, Bergson, Henri Louis on, 1:125–126
Employment Division v. Smith (1990), 1:332–333
Emptiness (Buddhism), 1:162
Enabling Act (1933) (Germany), 1:545
Enchiridion (Augustine), 1:217
Enchiridion Symbolorum Definitionum et Declarationum de Rebus Fidei et Morum (Denzinger), 1:400–402
Encyclical letters
Ad caeli reginam (Pius XII), 2:762, 773–774
Ad diem illum laetissimum (Pius X), 2:741, 755
Adiutricem populi (Leo XIII), 2:749, 775
Aeterni patris (Leo XIII), 1:304, 505, 2:852, 950–953
Annus iam pelnus (Benedict XV), 1:87
Au milieu des solicitudes (Leo XIII), 1:418
Caritas in veritate (Benedict XVI), 1:88, 118, 208–210, 310, 2:716
Casti connubii (Pius XI), 1:409
Centesimus annus (John Paul II), 2:716
Deus caritas est (Benedict XVI), 1:117, 310, 372, 373, 376, 442, 2:716, 770
Dilecctisima nobis (Pius XI), 2:1022
Dives in misericordia (John Paul II), 1:308, 407, 2:767
Divini illius magistri (Pius XI), 1:408–410, 431, 455
Divini Redemptoris (Pius XI), 1:342, 2:1029
Divino afflante Spiritu (Pius XII), 1:303, 2:908, 1095
Dominum et vivificantem (John Paul II), 1:376
Ecclesia de Eucharistia (John Paul II), 1:309, 425–427, 2:735, 736, 744, 769–770
Ecclesiam suam (Paul VI), 1:230, 232
Evangelium vitae (John Paul II), 1:4–5, 308, 522
Fides et ratio (John Paul II), 1:208, 309, 2:853, 1039
Graves de communi re (Leo XIII), 1:398, 2:797
Haurietis aquas (Pius XII), 2:748
Humanae vitae (Paul VI), 1:27, 209, 307, 383, 409, 444, 461
Humani generis (Pius XII), 1:19, 304, 2:853, 908
Humani generis unitas (Pius XI), 1:61, 456, 2:848
Jucunda semper (Leo XIII), 2:748
Laborem exercens (John Paul II), 1:308, 2:716
Mater et magistra (John XXIII), 1:74, 88, 306, 2:715
Mediator Dei (Pius XII), 2:762, 908
Mense maio (Paul VI), 2:766
Mirae caritatis (Leo XIII), 1:353
Miranda prorsus (Pius XII), 2:664
Mirari vos (Gregory XVI), 1:96, 298, 299, 398, 440
Mit brennender Sorge (Pius XI), 1:362, 440, 455, 545, 2:791–793, 847, 1095
Mystici Corporis Christi (Pius XII), 1:412, 2:756, 908, 1095
Non abbiamo bisogno (Pius XI), 1:455, 2:836
Nostis et nobiscum (Pius IX), 1:360
Pacem, Dei munus pulcherrimum (Benedict XV), 2:658
Pacem in terris (John XXIII), 1:75, 80, 210, 306, 2:715
Pascendi dominici gregis (Pius X), 1:401, 505, 2:793, 795, 797–798, 853
In plurimis (Leo XIII), 2:1014
Populorum progressio (Paul VI), 1:88, 208–209, 307, 371, 2:716
Princeps pastorum (John XXIII), 1:306
Providentissimus Deus (Leo XIII), 2:797
Quadragesimo anno (Pius XI), 1:87, 360, 398, 2:715, 1053
Quanta cura (Pius IX), 1:138, 298, 301, 360, 394, 440, 2:1037
Quas primas (Pius XI), 1:62
Quod nunquam (Pius IX), 1:139
Redemptor hominis (John Paul II), 1:232, 308, 2:767
Redemptoris mater (John Paul II), 2:738–739, 744, 757, 763, 768, 774, 775
Redemptoris missio (John Paul II), 1:232, 2:974
Rerum novarum (Leo XIII), 1:37, 87, 301, 306, 360, 398, 454, 2:667, 715, 852
Sacerdotalis caelibatus (Paul VI), 1:307
Singulari nos (Gregory XVI), 1:96, 299, 398
Slavorum apostoli (John Paul II), 1:308
Sollicitudo rei socialis (John Paul II), 1:87, 88, 2:716
Spe salvi (Benedict XVI), 1:117–118, 310, 2:716, 770–771
Summi pontificatus (Pius XII), 1:343, 440, 456, 2:908
Ut unum sint (John Paul II), 1:308–309, 2:769, 775
Vehementer nos (encyclical, Pius X), 1:418–419
Veritatis splendor (John Paul II), 1:205, 206, 207, 308, 2:952, 1001, 1008–1009
End times rapture, 2:928–929
Endorsement of religion test, 1:337
Energy, atomic, 1:74–76
Enfranchisement, anti-Catholicism and, 1:54, 55
Engel v. Vitale (1962), 1:335
Engels, Friedrich, 1:356, 357, 2:713–715
England
Act of Supremacy (1534), 1:2–3

American Revolution and, 1:42, 43, 44
Anglo-Spanish War, 1:457
anti-Catholicism, 1:54
Benedictines in, 1:100
catechism development, 1:219–220
church-state relations, 1:569, 570, 2:827
early modern Church, 1:292
Irish nationalism and, 1:568–570
liberalism, 2:665
medieval Church, 1:273–274, 276
Modernism in, 2:796
Western Schism and, 1:284
See also Britain; United Kingdom (U.K.)

English Benedictine Congregation, 1:100

English Reformation, 1:2, 287–288, 457–459
See also Reformation

Engodding term, 1:412

Enlightenment
Buddhism, 1:160, 162
catechism development, 1:220
Jewish emancipation and, 2:613
liberalism and, 2:665
Lutheranism and, 2:685
monasticism and, 2:809
Tibetan Buddhist views, 1:172

Enola Gay (bomber), 1:78

Environmental considerations, atomic energy, 1:74

Envoys extraordinary, 1:62–63

Envy, Devil's fall and, 1:404

Eparchial phase (sainthood process), 1:197, 198

Ephesians, Epistle to, 1:255

Ephesus, Council of (431), 1:270, 533, 2:759, 776

Ephrem the Syrian, St., 2:803

Epic of Gilgamesh (ancient text), 1:18

Epiclesis, 1:8

Epicurus, 1:16

Epiphanius of Constantia, St., 1:533, 2:803

Episcopal Church (U.S.), disestablishment period, 1:318, 320

Episcopal Conferences, Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:233–234

Episcopal Delegates (sainthood process), 1:196–197

Episcopal succession, 2:689

Episcopal vicars, 1:406

Epperson v. Arkansas (1968), 1:336

Eppstein, John, 2:658

Equal Access Act (1984), 1:333

Equiprobabilism, Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:33–34

Equisse d'une philosophe (Lamennais), 1:97

Equitable vs. legal ownership, of church property, 1:325

Equivalent beatification, 1:106–107

Erasmus, Desiderius, 1:218, 2:825

Erasmus als Katechet (Padberg), 1:218

Erdő, Péter (Card.), 2:972

Eremitic monasticism, 2:817

Erhard, Ludwig, 1:399

Eritrea, League of Nations and, 2:659

Errico, Gaetano (Father), St., 1:435–436

Eschatology. See Afterlife; Redemption, theology of; Salvation

Eschatology: Death and Eternal Life (Ratzinger and Auer), 1:530–531

Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás, Josemaría, St., 1:194, 437, 437–439, 2:868, 912

Espírito Santo, Helena Maria, 1:492

Espino, Fernando (friar), 1:135

Essence, in philosophy, 1:188, 2:896

Esta Es Nuestra Fe. Esta Es la Fe de la Iglesia (catechism), 1:222

Establishment of religion, 1:317–318, 334–338

d'Estaing, Jean, 1:113

Estate of Thornton v. Caldor, Inc. (1985), 1:331

Esterhazy, Ferdinand, 1:416

Estonia, European Union membership, 1:441

Etchegaray, Roger (Card.), 1:371

Eternal law. See Divine law

Eternity, determinism and, 1:403

Ethics. See Morality

Ethiopia, 1:11, 2:659, 818

Ethiopian (Ge'ez) Catholic Church, 1:245–246

Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church, 1:529

Ethnicity, Greeley, Andrew M. research, 1:502

Etruscan afterlife views, 1:17

Etudes sur l'Américanisme, Le Père Hecker, est-il un Saint? (Maignen), 1:48

Eucharist
Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:31–32
communion of saints and, 1:355
excommunication and, 1:447, 449
John Paul II on, 1:309, 425–427
Kilmartin, Edward J. on, 2:644
Lutheran perspective, 1:287, 2:688
Marian doctrine and, 2:763 offered by ordained priests only, 1:541
Radicalism beliefs, 1:287

Eucharistic adoration, 1:303, 425–426

Eucharistic prayer, 1:7–9, 529–530

Eucharistie (Batiffol), 1:104

Eudes, John, St., 1:292, 411, 2:983–984

Eugene II (Pope), 2:983

Eugene IV (Pope), 1:284

Eugenio Balzan Foundation, 1:306

Eugenius III (Pope), 1:279

Euphrasia of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Bl., 1:439

Euratom (European Atomic Energy Community), 1:441

Euro, as medium of exchange, 1:443

Europe
anti-Judaism, 1:58, 59
anti-Semitism, 1:60
Buddhism, 1:178–179
Catharism, 1:225–227
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:233
Christian democratic movements, 1:394–400
Communism, 1:357–358
early modern Church, 1:293–295
fascism, 1:452–457
late modern monasticism, 2:810, 811
medieval Church, 1:273, 2:809–810 medieval universities, 1:280–281
Roma people, 2:956–957
slavery, 2:1012, 1013
spread of Lutheranism, 2:684
See also Eastern Europe; specific countries

European Atomic Energy Community (Euratom), 1:441
European Bishops, Synod of, 1:442
European Central Bank (ECB), 1:443
European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC), 1:399, 441
European Commission, 1:443
European Community (EC), 1:441
European Court of Justice, 1:443
European Defense Community (EDC), 1:441
European Free Trade Association (EFTA), 1:441
European Parliament, 1:441, 442, 443
European People's Party, 1:400
European Recovery Program, 1:344, 441
European Union, Treaty of (1993), 1:441, 442, 443
European Union and the papacy, 1:440, 440–444
Eusebius of Caesarea (Bp.), 1:244, 266, 268, 362
Eusebius of Nicomedia, 1:268
Eustathius (Bp. of Sebaste), St., 2:803
Euthanasia, 1:117, 308, 545–546, 2:914
Evagrius Ponticus, 1:269, 2:802
Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, 2:683–684
Evangelii nuntiandi (apostolic exhortation, Paul VI), 1:209, 232
Evangelium vitae (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:4–5, 308, 522
Evangelization
  Catholic Answers, 1:227–228
  Catholic Youth Organization, 1:239–240
  charismatic renewal and, 1:258
  Jewish-Catholic relations and, 2:603
  legal cases, 1:330
  Society of the Divine Word, 1:408
  See also Missionary work
Evangelization of Peoples, Congregation of. See Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples
Eve, Mary as new, 2:741, 744–745, 749, 756, 767–768
Eve (first woman), 2:995
Everson v. Board of Education (1947), 1:329, 334, 336
Evidence-gathering, in sainthood process, 1:195–196 Evil
  Buddhist views, 1:166
  Catharism and, 1:225, 226
  Devil and, 1:404–405
  praeter intentionem and, 2:915
  redemption theology and, 2:938–941, 944
Evolution, 1:125, 126, 336, 2:1057, 1058
Evolution and Dogma (Zahm), 2:796
Ex corde Ecclesiae (apostolic constitution, John Paul II), 1:444–447
  Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities and, 1:73
  Ave Maria University and, 1:92
  Cardinal Newman Society and, 1:202
  Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and, 1:461
  higher Catholic education in the U.S. and, 1:428–429, 444, 446, 2:693
Excluded middle principle, 1:402
Excommunication, 1:447–450, 561
Exegesis, Biblical, 1:104, 188, 189, 272
Exemplar redemption theory, 2:942–943
Existence, 1:188, 2:875, 893–897
Existentialism, 1:12–13, 2:976–978
Exorcism, Catechism of the Catholic Church on, 1:405
Expiation, sacrifice of, 2:945–946
Expiatory penalties, 1:448–449
Expositio super Evangelium secundum Lucam V (Ambrose of Milan), 1:206
Exsurge, Domine (papal bull, Leo X), 1:288, 2:682
External causes of sin, 2:999–1000
Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, Congregation of, 1:203
Eyewitness testimony (sainthood process), 1:195, 196, 199

F

FABC (Federation of Asian Bishops' Conferences), 1:233
Fabri, Johannes, 1:288
Fabris, Eurosia, Bl., 1:451–452
Facts and Arguments in Response to the Many Words of Vincenzo Gioberti (Curci), 1:381
Faculty, higher Catholic institutions, 1:428, 429
Facundus of Hermiane, 1:271
Fahey, Joseph, 1:75
Faith
  Calvin, John on, 1:287
  as charism, 1:255
  Denzinger documents on, 1:400
  harrowing of Hell and, 1:524
  Lutheran perspective, 1:287, 2:686–688
  of Mary, 2:735, 738–739
  nominalism and, 2:861
  Protestant views on Mary and, 2:777
  theology of the cross and, 1:374, 376
Faith, Hope and Charity (Augustine), 1:217
Faith and Reason (encyclical, John Paul II). See Fides et ratio (encyclical, John Paul II)
Faith healing. See Healing
Falcoia, Thomas (Bp. of Castellamare di Stabia), 1:29
Falconetti, Aldo, 2:699
False Decretals, 1:276
Family
  Benedict XVI on, 1:210
  Christian education and, 1:409
  Knights of Columbus activism, 2:649
  slave life and, 2:1011
  Society of Catholic Social Scientists and, 2:1019
Fanfani, Amintore, 1:399
Fanning, William, 1:49
Farald, Jean (pseudo-Card.), 1:113, 114
Faribault Plan, 1:47
Fascism, 1:452–457, 453
  Christian democratic movements and, 1:396, 398
  Italy, 1:452, 454–455, 456, 2:835–837
  Pius XII and, 2:1092, 1093
  rise of, 1:300
Fascist March on Rome (1922), 1:396
Fat Man (bomb), 1:77, 78, 79
Fatah (organization), 1:65
Father (God), communion of saints and, 1:354, 355

Fathers of the Church, 2:581, 582, 935–936, 972–973

Fátima (Portugal), 1:303, 342, 2:767

Fatti ed argomenti in risposta alle molte parole di Vincenzo Gioberti (Curci), 1:381

Faulhaber, Michael von (Card.), 2:791

Fawkes, Guy, 1:457–459, 458

FBI (Federal Bureau of Investigation), 1:236

FCS (Fellowship of Catholic Scholars), 1:461–462

Feast days, of Mary, 1:111, 2:760, 761

Feast of Faith (Benedict XVI), 1:118

Febronianism, 1:294, 539

Febronius, Justinus, 1:294, 539

Febronius (Hontheim), 1:294

Fedayeen, 2:617

Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), 1:236

Federal vs. state governments (U.S.), 1:318

Federalist Party (U.S.), 1:318

Federation of Asian Bishops' Conferences (FABC), 1:233

Federazione Universitaria Cattolica (FUCI), 1:396

Felbiger, Johann Ignaz von, 1:220, 221

Felici, Angelo (Card.), 1:424

Felicitas of Rome, St., 1:267

Feliński, Zygmunt Szczęsny, St., 1:459–460

Felix III (Pope), 1:364

Felix of Nicosia, St., 1:460

Fellowship of Catholic Scholars (FCS), 1:461–462

Feltin, Maurice (Card.), 1:464

Felton, Aguilar v. (1986), 1:337

Female religious. See Religious orders of women

Fénelon, François, 1:294, 538, 2:923

Ferdinand I (Holy Roman Emperor), 1:248

Ferdinand of Aragon (king of Naples), 1:147

Ferendae sententiae censures, 1:449, 561

Ferguson, Marilyn, 2:855

Fermi, Enrico, 1:78

Fernandes, Bartolomeu dei Martiri, Bl., 1:462–463

Ferragud Roig, María Teresa, Bl., 2:621

Ferraria v. Vascanelles (1860), 1:327

Ferraro, Geraldine, 1:379

Fessio, Joseph D. (Father), 1:93

Feurbach, Ludwig, 2:714

Fichter, Joseph (Father), 1:512

Ficino, Marsilio, 2:1062

Fidei depositum (apostolic constitution, John Paul II), 1:222, 223

Fides et ratio (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:208, 309, 2:853, 1039

Le Fil de l'épée (de Gaulle), 1:390

Filioque phrase, 1:276, 365

Filippini, Lucy, St., 1:463, 2:1076

Fillmore, Millard, 1:56

Film industry, regulation of, 2:662–665

Filograssi, Giuseppe, 1:505

Final judgment. See Judgment

Final Solution, 1:88, 89, 547
See also Holocaust (Shoah)

Finaly, Fritz, 1:463

Finaly, Gérald, 1:463–465

Finaly, Robert, 1:463–465

Finaly Affair (1945–1953), 1:463–465

Finance councils, diocesan, 1:406

Finance officers, 1:406

Findysz, Władysław (Ladislaus), Bl., 1:465

Finite and Eternal Being (Stein), 2:1039

Finland, European integration, 1:441

Finnis, John, 1:83–84

Firing Line (television show), 1:158

First Amendment (U.S. Constitution), 1:55–56, 318, 328, 329, 330

First Council of Constantinople (381), 1:269, 270, 364

First Council of Nicaea (325). See Nicaea, First Council of (325)

First Crusade (1095–1099), 1:58, 277–278, 2:581, 609

First Jewish Revolt (66–70), 2:606

First Lateran Council (1123), 1:247

First Plenary Council (Baltimore, 1852), 1:103

First Provincial Council (Baltimore, 1829), 1:103, 324

First Restoration (States of the Church), 2:1035

First World War. See World War I (1914–1918)

Fiscales de iglesia, 2:573

Fischel, Marguerite, 1:463

Fischer, Francis Xavier (Father), 2:784

Fischer, G., 1:221

Fischer, H., 1:221

Fisher, John (Bp. of Rochester), 1:2, 3, 288, 2:827

Fission, nuclear, 1:77

Fiume (Croatia), d'Annunzio, Gabriele and, 1:388

Five Mile Act (1727), 1:315

Five sevens of Hugh of St. Victor, 1:217

Flacius Illyricus, Matthias, 2:683

Flag, saluting of (U.S.), 1:330–331

Flanagan, Edward (Father), 1:152–154, 153

Flavia Domitilla, St., 1:266

Flavius Clemens, 1:266

Flesch, Margaret, Bl., 1:465–466

Fleury, Claude, 1:220

Florence, Council of (1438–1445), 1:8, 21, 284, 366, 2:668

Florensky, Pavel, 1:412

Flores, City of Boerne v. (1997), 1:333

Florida, 1:92–94, 323

Flower of Carmel (magazine), 1:261

Flying buttresses, in architecture, 1:280

Fogazzaro, Antonio, 2:795

Foibe massacres, 1:146

Fontainebleau, Edict of (1685), 2:845

Fontevraud Abbey, 1:279

Forbidden excommunicates, 1:449

Ford, John C., 1:82

Foreign policy, atomic weapons and, 1:75–76, 82

Foreiro, Francisco, 1:219, 249, 250

Formal vs. material sin, 2:995–997
Formula of Concord (Lutheran text), 2:683, 687
Fortitude, as cardinal virtue, 1:206
Fortunatus, Venantius, 1:271
Foucauld, Charles Eugène de, Bl., 1:466–468, 467
Fouesnel, Leonor (Father), 1:370
Four Articles of 1682, 1:295
The Four Cardinal Virtues (Pieper), 1:205
Four Gallican Articles, 1:490, 539
Four Noble Truths, 1:160, 175
498 Martyrs of the Spanish Civil War, Bb., 1:468–479
Fourteen Points peace proposal (Wilson), 2:657, 1090–1091
Fourteenth Amendment (U.S. Constitution), 1:328–329
Fourth Council of Constantinople (869–870), 1:270, 365
Fourth Council of Toledo (663), 1:246
Fourth Crusade (1202–1204), 1:279, 282, 366
Fourth Latin American Bishops Conference (1992), 1:308
Fourth World Conference on Women (1995), 1:442
Fracasso, Theodora, Bl., 1:434–435
Fragmens philosophiques (Cavour), 1:241
Frame of Government (Pennsylvania), 1:316
France
  Action Française, 1:5–7
  American Revolution and, 1:42, 44
  Americanism in, 1:48 anti-Judaism in, 1:59
  anti-Semitism in, 1:60
  Arab-Israeli conflict and, 2:617
  L'Arche founding, 1:67
  L'Avenir (newspaper), 1:95–98
  Avignon Papacy, 1:283, 2:1032
  caesaropapism, 1:184
  Cagot persecution, 1:185–186
  catechism development, 1:220, 221, 222
  Catharism in, 1:225, 226, 281–282
  Christian democratic movements, 1:395, 396, 398, 399
  church-state relations, 1:297, 416, 418–419, 463–465, 2:1034–1036
  de Gaulle, Charles leadership, 1:390–391
  devotion to Mary, 2:761
  Dreyfus Affair, 1:416–419, 417
  early modern Church, 1:294, 295–296
  European integration, 1:441
  Finaly Affair, 1:463–465
  Jacobins and, 2:574–575
  Jansenism, 1:294
  Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:584
  Jewish history, 2:609, 612, 613, 614–615
  late modern Church, 1:297–298, 299, 300, 301, 304
  late modern monasticism, 2:810, 811
  liberalism, 2:665
  Lourdes apparitions, 1:128–130, 303
  medieval Church, 1:273, 276, 2:809
  Mexico administration, 1:39
  Modernism in, 2:793–795
  Quietism, 1:294
  rise of Islam and, 1:274
  secularism, 2:980
  seminary development, 2:983–984
  States of the Church and, 2:1034–1036
  Wars of Religion, 1:292, 2:843, 844–845
  Western Schism and, 1:284
  See also French Revolution (1789); Gallicanism
Franchi, Alessandro (Card.), 1:351
Francia, Annibale Maria di, St., 1:479–480
Francia, Francis di, 1:479
Francis de Sales, St., 1:133, 292
Francis I (king of France), 1:184
Francis of Assisi, St., 1:230, 282
Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, 1:254
Franciscan Missionary Sisters of Mary, Help of Christians, 1:181
Franciscan Rule, 1:480
Franciscan Sisters of Mary Immaculate, Congregation of, 1:155
Franciscan Sisters of the Blessed Virgin Mary of the Angels, 1:466
Franciscan Sisters of the Family of Mary, Congregation of, 1:459
Franciscan Sisters of the Holy Cross of Lebanon, 1:517
Franciscan Sisters of the Holy Family, 2:845
Franciscan Sisters of the Sacred Hearts, 2:703
Franciscan Sisters Spanish Civil War martyrs, 1:472
Franciscans, 1:282, 291, 472, 2:624–625, 984
Franciscans, Conventual, 1:282, 291, 480–482, 481
Francke, August Hermann, 2:684
Franco, Francisco, 1:454, 482–485, 483
Frankish kingdom, papacy and, 2:1030–1031
Franklin, Benjamin, 1:43
Franz Josef I (emperor of Austria), 2:1089
Frassati, Giorgio, Bl., 2:968
Frassinello, Benedetta Cambiagio, St., 1:485–486
Frassinello, Giovanni Battista, 1:485
Fraternity Jeanne Jugan, 2:673
Frazee v. Illinois Department of Employment Sec. (1989), 1:332
Frederick I (Holy Roman emperor), 1:51, 277, 279
Frederick II (Holy Roman emperor), 1:51, 282, 283
The Free Choice of the Will (Augustine), 1:403
Free speech, exercise of religion and, 1:333–334
  See also First Amendment (U.S. Constitution)
Free will, 1:126, 127, 2:938, 940, 945, 996
  See also Will Freedom, academic. See Academic freedom
Freedom, religious. See Religious freedom
Freedom (philosophy)
  Bergson, Henri Louis on, 1:125, 127
  determinism and, 1:402–403
  liberalism and, 2:665, 666, 667
  Marxism and, 1:357, 2:714
  personalism and, 2:893–894
  Sartre, Jean-Paul on, 2:978
  theology of the cross and, 1:376
Freestanding seminaries, 2:984, 985
Freinademetz, Joseph, St., 1:486–487

French Oratory, 1:132, 133
French ressourcement theology, 2:950–953
French Revolution (1789)
anti-Judaism and, 1:59
anti-Semitism and, 1:60
Gallicanism and, 1:491
Jacobins and, 2:574–575
Jewish emancipation and, 2:613
late modern Church and, 1:297–298
liberalism and, 2:665
States of the Church and, 2:1034–1035
French school of spirituality, 1:132–133
Frente Popular (Spain), 2:1022
Friars, medieval Church, 1:282
Friars Minor. See Franciscans
Friars Preacher. See Dominicans
Friends of the Constitution (Jacobins), 2:574–575
Frings, Josef (Card.), 1:11, 115, 559
Frohschammer, Jakob, 1:539, 540
From the Heart of the Church (apostolic constitution, John Paul II). See Ex corde Ecclesiae (apostolic constitution, John Paul II)
Frost, Shannon v. (1842), 1:326
FUCI (Federazione Universitaria Cattolica), 1:396
Fulda Episcopal Conference (1931), 1:454, 455
Fullness of grace, of Mary, 2:734
Fundamental Agreement (1639), 1:315
Fundamental Agreement (1993), 2:590
Fundamental Constitution of 1670, 1:314
Fundamentalism, Catholic Answers and, 1:227, 228
Funding of education
Catholic K-12 schools in the U.S., 1:432, 433 establishment clause cases, 1:336–337 higher Catholic institutions in the U.S., 1:428, 429
twenty-first century U.S., 1:338
Funeral customs, ancient, 1:15–16, 17
Fusco, Alfonso Maria, Bl., 1:487
Fusco, Tommaso Maria, Bl., 1:487–488
Fusion, nuclear, 1:77

G

Gable, Miller v. (1845), 1:326
Gaetani, Benedetto. See Boniface VIII (Pope)
Galatians, Epistle to, on Mary, 2:717–719
Galen, Clemens August Graf von, Bl., 1:489–490, 546
Galen (physician), 1:266
Galerius (emperor of Rome), 1:267
Galilei, Galileo, 1:293
Galleguillos Fuentes, Vivian, 1:556
Gallican Articles, 1:490
Gallican Liberties, 1:490–491, 539
Gallicanism, 1:184, 285, 294–295, 490–491
Gallin, Alice, 1:73
Galura, Bernhard (Bp. of Brixen), 1:220
Galvão, Anthony of Saint Anne, St., 1:492–493, 2:770
Gambaretto, Cesare (Father), 2:867
Gamelin, Émilie Tavernier, Bl., 2:1056
Gangra, Synod of (ca. 341), 1:243–244
Gannon, Thomas, 1:36
Garatenses, 1:225
Garcia Samper, Asunción, 1:378
García Zavala, María Guadalupe, Bl., 1:493
Garibaldi, Giuseppe, 1:328, 493–494
Garnier, Bernard, Benedict XIV-I (Antipope), 1:112–114
Garrigou-Lagrange, Réginald, 2:951–952
Garrone, Gabriel-Marie (Card.), 1:444
Gasparri, Pietro (Card.)
catechism development, 1:221
League of Nations and, 2:657, 658
Nazism and, 2:846–847
Pius XII and, 2:1092
World War I peace efforts, 2:1089, 1090, 1091
Zionism and, 2:878
Gasperi, Alcide de. See de Gasperi, Alcide
Gaston, William, 1:320
Gatz, Edward, 2:631
Gaudium et spes (dogmatic constitution, Vatican Council II)
Benedict XVI involvement, 1:116, 118
interpretation of, 2:716 political involvement and, 2:638
on slavery, 2:1008–1009
Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre influence, 2:1057
on war, 1:75, 80
Gaul, 1:267, 269, 271, 2:804
Gautama Siddhārtha (Buddha), 1:159–160, 161
Gayraud, Hippolyte, 2:795, 798
Gaza Strip, Arab-Israeli conflict, 2:620
Gdansk shipyard strike, 1:348
Gedda, Luigi, 1:344
Gedik Ahmet Pasha, 2:872
Geiler von Kaysersberg, Johannes, 2:983
Gelasius I (Pope), 1:270
Gelasius of Cyzicus, 1:244
Gender, Stein, Edith on, 2:1039
General vs. individual eschatology, in Christianity, 1:21
Genesis, Book of, 2:729
Genius of Christianity (Chateaubriand), 1:304
Genocide. See Holocaust (Shoah)
Gentili, Luigi, 2:962
Genus-species existence, 2:860
Geocentrism, in ancient Greece, 1:15
George II (king of England), 1:314
Georgetown University, 1:427, 2:984
Georgia Charter (1732), 1:321
Georgia (country), monasticism development, 2:819
Georgia (state), 1:314, 321, 322, 323, 324
Gerhard, Johann, 2:684
Gerhardt, Paul, 2:684
Gerlier, Pierre Marie (Card.), 1:464
Germain of Paris, 1:271
German-American priests, Americanism and, 1:46–47
Germanicum (collegium), 2:982

Germanus of Constantinople, St., 2:752
Germany
catechism development, 1:220–221, 222
Christian democratic movements, 1:395, 396, 398, 399
church-state relations, 1:10, 138–139, 360–362, 545, 547, 2:682, 683, 1092
early Church in, 1:267
European integration, 1:441
fascism in, 1:452, 454
Franco, Francisco and, 1:482–483
Jewish history, 2:609, 611, 613, 614, 615
Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification, 2:632, 633
Kulturkampf, 1:138–139
late modern Church, 1:300, 301
late modern monasticism, 2:811
League of Nations and, 2:659
liberalism, 2:665
Lutheran Church emergence, 2:682–683, 684
medieval Church, 1:273, 276
Modernism in, 2:796
Pius XII and, 1:343, 344
totalitarianism, 2:666
Western Schism and, 1:284
World War I involvement, 2:1090, 1091
See also Nazism
Gershom ben Judah (Rabbi), 2:609
Gerson, Jean, 1:218
Il Gesuita Moderno (Gioberti), 1:381
Gettysburg, Battle of, 1:39
Gézitains (Cagots), 1:185–186
Ghézitaings, 1:185–186
Gherardini, Brunero, 2:750
Ghettos, 1:58
Ghirlanda, Gianfranco (Father), 1:52
Giaccardo, Timoteo, Bl., 1:494–495
Già da qualche temp (apostolic letter, Pius XI), 1:196
Gibbons, James (Card.), 1:46, 47, 102, 102, 103, 430–431
Giberti, Gian Matteo (Bp. of Verona), 1:289, 2:983
Gibson v. Armstrong (1847), 1:327
Gibson v. Morris (1903), 1:326
Gift and Mystery (John Paul II), 1:425
Giguere, Marie-Paule, 1:69
Gil Robles, José María, 1:455
Giles of Viterbo, 1:291
Giménez Malla, Zefferino, Bl., 2:957
Ginard Martí, María de los Ángeles, Bl., 1:495–496
Gioberti, Vincenzo, 1:241, 380, 381, 539, 540
Gioventù Studentesca (GS), 1:496
Girard, René, 2:947
Giraud, Henri, 1:390
Girouard v. United States (1946), 1:329
Giussani, Luigi (Msgr.), 1:496–497
Glasnost, 1:348, 360
Gleason, Philip, 1:428
Glemp, Józef (Card.), 1:465, 2:645, 709
Globalization, 1:179, 209, 210
Le glorie di Maria (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:32
Gloriosae Dominae (papal bull, Benedict XVI), 2:751
Glorious Revolution of 1688 (England), 1:54
Glossolalia, 1:255, 256, 257, 258
Gnesio Lutherans, 2:683
Gnosticism, 1:264, 265
Gobbi, Gianna, 1:498–499
Gobitis, Minersville School District v. (1940), 1:330
God
Anselm of Canterbury proof, 1:280
communion of saints and, 1:354–355
Islamic views, 1:230, 231
theology of sin and, 2:996–997, 999–1000
theology of the cross and, 1:376
See also Holy Spirit; Jesus Christ
God and Man at Yale (Buckley), 1:158
God Is Love (encyclical, Benedict XVI). See Deus caritas est (encyclical, Benedict XVI)
God's Revolution: World Youth and Other Cologne Talks (Benedict XVI), 1:118
Gojdič, Pavol Peter (Bp.), Bl., 1:497–498, 552
The Golden Ass (Apuleius), 1:18
Golden Bull (1356), 1:283
Gómez Loza, Miguel, 1:50
Gómez Muntán, José (Father), 2:962
González, Emmanuel Gómez, Bl., 1:389, 498
Gonzague, Marie de (Mother), 2:1059, 1060
González Fernández, Fidel, 1:378
González Juan, 1:508
Good, principle of, 1:225, 226, 2:687–688
Good Friday prayer revision, 2:596, 603
Good News Club v. Milford Central School (2001), 1:333
Good Shepherd, catechesis of the (CGS), 1:498–500
Goodridge v. Dept. of Public Health (2003), 1:339
Gorazdowski, Zygmunt (Father), St., 1:500–501
Gorbachev, Mikhail, 1:144, 348, 348–349, 360
Gospel according to John. See John, Gospel according to Gospel according to Luke. See Luke, Gospel according to Gospel according to Mark. See Mark, Gospel according to Gospel according to Matthew. See Matthew, Gospel according to Gospel message, 1:23–24, 258, 410, 2:598
Gospel of James. See Protoevangelium of James
The Gospel of Life (encyclical, John Paul II). See Evangelium vitae (encyclical, John Paul II)
Gothic architecture, 1:280, 283
Government aid to schools. See Funding of education Government-church relations. See Church-state relations
Grace
Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:32
charisms and, 1:256, 257
doctrine of justification and, 2:633
Jansenism beliefs, 1:294
Lutheran perspective, 2:686–688
redemption theology and, 2:941
ressourcement theology and, 2:951, 952
theology of Mary and, 2:733, 734, 750–753
Graduation ceremonies, public prayer at, 1:335–336

Graham, Stone v. (1980), 1:335
Grannan, Charles P., 1:46
Grant, Ulysses S., 1:41, 329
Granville, Troxel v. (2000), 2:1019
Gratiae gratis datae, Mary and, 2:736
Gratian (emperor of Rome), 1:184, 269
Gratian (scholar), 1:281
Grave sin, 2:1001
Graves de communi re (encyclical, Leo XIII), 1:398, 2:797
Gravity of sins, 2:998–999, 1001
Gray Ursulines, 2:661
Great Britain. See Britain
Great Depression (1929–1939), 2:666
Great Persecution (303–313). See Diocletian Persecution (303–313)
Great Schism (1054), 1:277, 365–366, 2:1003
Great Vehicle. See Mahā na Buddhism; yā
Great Western Schism (1378–1417). See Western Schism (1378–1417)
Greece, 1:264, 441, 2:819
  See also Ancient Greece
Greek language, in the early Church, 1:263, 264
Greek Orthodox Church, 1:393
Greeley, Andrew M., 1:432, 501–502
Grégoire, Henri Baptiste, 2:1008
Gregorian calendar, 1:291, 502–504
Gregorian Reform, 1:184, 277
Gregorian University, 1:504–507
Gregorianum (journal), 1:421
Gregory I (Pope)
  on cardinal virtues, 1:206
  clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:246
  on Jews, 1:58, 2:581
  patriarch title and, 1:364–365
  reforms, 1:272, 274
Gregory II (Pope), 2:1030
Gregory III (Pope), 2:1030
Gregory VII (Pope)
  Al-Nasir letter, 1:230
  clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:247
  Henry IV and, 1:199, 200, 200–201, 277
  States of the Church and, 2:1032
Gregory IX (Pope), 1:51, 195, 284
Gregory X (Pope), 2:885
Gregory XIII (Pope), 1:62, 291, 502, 503, 504
Gregory XV (Pope), 1:555
Gregory XVI (Pope)
  Alphonsus de Liguori canonization, 1:30
  American Revolution and, 1:44
  Fernandes, Bartolomeu dei Martiri declared venerable, 1:462
  Lamennais, Hugues Félicité-Robert de and, 1:96
  on liberalism, 1:298, 299
  missionary work, 1:305
  on papal authority, 1:440
  on slavery, 1:41, 2:1008, 1014
  States of the Church and, 2:1036–1037
Gregory of Khanzta, 2:819
Gregory of Nazianzus (Abp. of Constantinople), St.
  Arianism and, 1:363–364
  clerical celibacy and, 1:244
  devotion to Mary, 2:758, 759
  on limbo, 2:668
  monasticism development, 2:803
Gregory of Nyssa, St., 1:244, 392, 2:758
Gregory of Tours, 1:271
Gregory Referendarius, 2:990
Gregory Thaumaturgus, 2:758
Gregory the Elder of Nazianzus, 1:244
Gregory the Illuminator, St., 1:244, 267
Grenoble Court of Appeals, 1:463, 464
Griffiths, Bede (Father), 2:813
Grignion de Montfort, Louis-Marie, St., 1:133, 419, 420, 2:735, 761, 767
Grisez, Germain, 1:83–84
Gromyko, Andrei, 1:346, 347
Groote, Gerard, 1:284
Der grosser Katechismus (Luther), 1:218
Group homes. See L'Arche
Group interdict sanctions, 1:561
Gruber, Augustin, 1:220
Grundsätze der Sokratischer Katechisiermethode (Galura), 1:220
GS (Gioventù Studentesca), 1:496
Guadalupan silence, 1:377
Guadalupe, Our Lady of, 1:377–379, 378, 507–509, 508
Guarino, Giacomo (Abp.), 1:479
Guatemala, apostolic delegates, 1:64
Guéranger, Prosper, 1:303
Guérin, Mother Theodore, St., 1:509–511, 2:1004, 1005
Guérin, Zélie, Bl., 2:710, 711–712, 1059
Guerrero González, Angela de la Cruz, St., 1:511–512
Guerrero Rosado, José Luis, 1:378
Guest House, 1:512, 513
Guibourg (defrocked Catholic priest), 1:140
Guide to the Documents of Pius XII (Carlen), 1:211
A Guide to the Encyclicals of the Roman Pontiffs from Leo XIII to the Present Day (Carlen), 1:211
Guidelines for Admission to the Eucharist between the Chaldean Church and the Assyrian Church of the East (Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity), 1:8
Guilt, as effect of sin, 2:1000
Guiscard, Robert, 2:1032
Guízar Valencia, Rafael (Bp. of Veracruz), St., 1:1, 512–515
Gulags, 2:1028
Gundlach, Gustav (Father), 2:847, 848
Gunpowder Plot (1605), 1:457, 458
Günther, Anton, 1:539–540
Guru Rinpoche (Padmasambhava), 1:170
Guthrie, Arts v. (1871), 1:325
Gutiérrez, Gustavo, 1:515–516
Guy (Guy Fawkes effigy), 1:459
Guyon, Jeanne Marie Bouvier de la Motte, 1:294, 538, 2:923
Gymnasium educational system, 1:427
Gypsies (Roma), 2:956–958

H

Habits, religious, 2:815
Habitual sin, defined, 2:994
Habitus, as modification of operative powers, 1:205

Haddad, Jacques Ghazir, Bl., 1:517–518
Hades, 1:16
See also Hell
Ḥadīth, 1:21
Hadrian (emperor of Rome), 1:266
Hadrian II (Pope), 1:184
Haffner, Paul, 2:750
Hagia Sophia (basilica), 1:367, 368
Hahn, Otto, 1:77
Haight, Roger, 1:117, 541
Hailandière, Celestine de la (Bp. of Vincennes, IN), 1:510, 2:1004
Half-Way Covenant, 1:315
Hamas, 2:620, 882
Handbuch fur Kirchengeschichte (Aubert), 1:87
Handmaids of St. Margaret Mary and the Poor, 1:493
Handmaids of the Immaculate Conception, Protrectress of Workers, 2:674–675
Hanover Presbytery, 1:313–314
Hansen's disease. See Leprosy
Hanshan Deqing, 1:166
Harakat al-Tahrir al-Filastiniyya (organization), 1:65
Hard determinism, 1:402
Häring, Bernard, 1:383
Harnack, Adolf von, 2:935
Harris, Sam, 2:981
Harrowing of Hell, 1:524–532, 525
Hart, Luke E., 2:648
The Harvest of Justice Is Sown in Peace (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 1:75
Hase (Hasius), Johannes, 1:219
Hasidism, 2:612–613
Haurietis aquas (encyclical, Pius XII), 2:748
Hawaii, 1:198, 370, 2:966, 1077–1078
Hay, George, 1:220
Hays, Will, 2:663
Hays Code, 2:662–663
He Leadeth Me (Ciszek), 1:340
Healing, 1:255, 256, 257, 258
Healy, Nicholas J., Jr., 1:94
Hearsay (sainthood process), 1:195
Heaven, 1:14, 19, 20, 21
See also Salvation
Hébert, Marcel, 2:795
Hecker, Isaac Thomas, 1:48, 2:796
Hefele, Carl von, 1:304
Hegel, G. W. F., 2:685, 713, 714
Hehir, J. Bryan (Rev.), 1:83
Heian period, Buddhism and, 1:167–168
Hell
ancient Greek and Roman views, 1:18
Christian views, 1:14, 21, 22–23
Indian views, 1:19
Islamic views, 1:21
Jewish views, 1:14, 20
limbo and, 2:668
Zoroastrian views, 1:19
See also Punishment in the afterlife
Hell, harrowing of, 1:524–532, 525
Hell, theology of, 1:518–524, 519
Hellenistic afterlife views, 1:16–17
Hellenized Jews, in early Church, 1:263–264
Hellwig, Monika K., 1:73
Helms, Mitchell v. (2000), 1:337
Helvidius (author), 2:719–720
Henoticon (482), 1:271, 364
Henri of Poitiers (Bp. of Troyes), 2:990
Henrietta Maria (queen of England), 1:132
Henry, Cardinal York, 1:44
Henry, Hubert, 1:416
Henry II (king of England), 1:277, 568
Henry III (Holy Roman Emperor), 1:200, 277, 2:1032
Henry IV (Holy Roman Emperor), 1:199, 200, 200–201, 277
Henry IV (king of France)
Bérulle, Pierre de and, 1:132
conversion of, 1:292
Gallicanism and, 1:491
Nantes, Edict of, 1:292, 2:843–845, 844
Henry VIII (king of England), 1:3
Act of Supremacy (1534), 1:2–3
Anglican Reformation, 1:287
as leader of Ireland, 1:568
More, Sir Thomas and, 2:825–826
response to Luther, 1:288
Herbrand, Reinaldo (Father), 1:155
Herder Publishing Company, 1:400
Heresy, history of, 1:532–542
Cathari, 1:225–227, 226, 281–282, 534, 535
early Church, 1:532–534
as excommunicable offense, 1:449
medieval Church, 1:281–282, 534–536
modern Church, 1:536–542
Hermes, Georg, 1:539, 540
Heroes, cult of, 1:16
Heroic virtue
as beatification criterion, 1:106, 107
as canonization criterion, 1:193, 194, 195, 196, 197
Herolt, Johannes, 1:218
Hertling, Georg, 1:395
Herzl, Theodor, 2:877, 878
Hesburgh, Theodore M. (Rev.), 1:72, 428
Hessels, John, 1:537
Hesychastic monasticism, 2:815–816, 817, 923–924
Hezbollah, 2:619
Hickey, James (Abp.), 1:383
Higgins, George Gilmary (Msgr.), 1:542–543
High Middle Ages. See Church, history of, medieval High priest, Jesus Christ as, 2:937, 943
Higher education. See Education, Catholic; Universities and colleges Higher Education Act of 1965, 1:72
Hildebrand, Dietrich von, 2:895
Hildebrand of Sovana (Card.). See Gregory VII (Pope)
Hildegard von Bingen, 1:279
Himmler, Heinrich, 1:88
Hīnayāna, 1:159
Hincmar of Reims, 1:276
Hindenburg, Paul von, 1:545
Hinduism
afterlife views, 1:19
Cambodia, 1:177
Catholic monasticism and, 2:813
celibacy, 1:242
Thai Buddhism and, 1:176, 177
Hippisley, John Coxe, Sir, 1:44

Hippo, Council of (393), 1:244
Hippolytus of Rome, St., 1:267, 533
Hiroshima, Japan, 1:77, 78, 2:899
Hirscher, Johann Baptist, 1:220
Histoire des troupes du Levant (de Gaulle), 1:390
Histoire du bréviaire romain (Batiffol), 1:104
Histoire et dogme (Blondel), 2:794
Historia tripartita ecclesiastica (Cassiodorus), 1:272
Historical causes (sainthood process), 1:196, 197
Historical-critical method, 1:104
Historical determinism, 1:402
Historical practices test, 1:337
Historical Section (Congregation of Sacred Rites), 1:196
Historical theology, 1:293, 304
History, sin and, 2:939–940
History of the Church. See Church, history of Hitchens, Christopher, 2:981
Hitler, Adolf, 1:543–547, 546
  Center Party and, 1:361, 455
  Franco, Francisco and, 1:483
  Galen, Clemens August Graf von and, 1:489 hostility to religion, 1:300
  Mein Kampf significance, 2:615
  Mit brennender Sorge and, 2:791, 792, 847
  Mussolini, Benito and, 2:834
  Pius XII and, 1:547, 2:791, 847, 850, 1092, 1095–1096
  Reich Concordat, 1:360–362, 454, 455, 545
Hitler-Ludendorff Munich Putsch (1923), 2:846
Hitler's Pope (Cornwell), 2:907
Ho Chi Minh, 1:359
Ho-Tong, 1:175
Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Comm'n of Florida (1987), 1:332
Hochhuth, Rolf, 2:849, 907
Höffner, Joseph (Card.), 2:651
El Hogar De Cristo (shelter), 1:555–556
Hohenlohe, Gustav von (Card.), 1:138
Holiness
  as beatification criterion, 1:107, 112
  as canonization criterion, 1:193, 194
  charismatic renewal and, 1:258
  charisms and, 1:256
  communion of saints and, 1:21, 353–356
  of Mary, 2:732–738, 742
Holland, catechism development, 1:222
Hollenbach, David, 1:75, 83
Holocaust (Shoah)
  Benedict XVI on, 2:595
  Christian involvement, 1:60
  concentration camps, 1:88–91, 89, 90, 2:591–592
  fascism and, 1:452
  Finaly Affair and, 1:463–465
  Jewish-Catholic relations and, 2:591–592
  John Paul II remembrances, 2:584, 585, 588–590
  League of Nations and, 2:659
  overview, 2:615
  papal response, 1:456
  Pius XII and, 1:89, 90, 91, 2:907–908, 1094, 1095–1096
  Roma people, 2:956
  Salkaházi, Sára and, 2:972
  Stein, Edith and, 2:1039
  Williamson, Richard and, 1:119
Holy Cross, Congregation of, 1:548–550, 2:831
Holy Cross, Congregation of the Sisters of the, 1:550–551, 2:831
Holy Face, devotion to, 1:215–216
Holy Family, devotion to, 2:696–697
Holy Family, Sons of the, 1:551–552, 2:696
Holy Land
  Benedict XVI visit, 1:119, 2:882–883
  Crusades, 1:277–279
  John Paul II visit, 1:309, 2:584, 591, 593
  See also Israel; Jerusalem; Palestine
Holy Office, 1:115
Holy Roman Empire, 1:276, 292, 2:682–683
  See also specific emperors
Holy See
  Action Française relations, 1:6, 7
  atomic weapons work, 1:81–82
  Holocaust and, 1:89, 90–91
  nuclear weapons work, 1:75
  U.S. diplomatic relations, 1:45, 308, 327–328
  See also Papacy
Holy Spirit
  cardinal virtues and, 1:206–207
  in catechism development, 1:217, 218 charismatic renewal and, 1:258
  charisms and, 1:255, 257
  charity and, 1:208
  communion of saints and, 1:354, 355
  divinization doctrine and, 1:412
Holy Spirit Missionary Sisters, 2:1042
The Holy Virgin Mary (painting), 1:229
Homo apostolicus (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33
Homosexuality, Benedict XVI on, 1:117
Honji-suijaku theory, 1:168, 169
Honorius III (Pope), 2:983
Hontheim, Johann Nikolaus von, 1:294, 539
Hooker, Thomas, 1:315
Hoover, J. Edgar, 1:236
Hope, Augustine on, 1:217
The Hope of Salvation for Infants Who Die Without Being Baptized (International Theological Commission), 1:522, 2:974–975
Hopko, Vasil', Bl., 1:552
Hormisdas (Pope), 1:271
Horthy, Nicholas, 1:454
Hosius, Stanislaus (Card.), 1:219, 292
Hospitaler Bethlehemites, 1:135
Höss, Crescentia, St., 1:553
Höss, Rudolf, 1:88
Hossius (Ossius) (Bp. of Córdoba), 1:244, 246, 267
Houben, Charles of Mount Argus, St., 1:553–554
Houses of Hospitality, 1:238
Huayan School, 1:165, 166
Hubbard, Howard (Bp.), 1:81
Hudal, Alois (Bp.), 2:1095
Hue, Simplicie (Sister), 2:1078
Huerta Gutiérrez, José Luciano Ezequiel, 1:50
Huerta Gutiérrez, Salvador, 1:50
Hügel, Friedrich von, 2:796, 797, 798
Hugh of St. Victor, 1:217
Hughes, John (Abp. of New York), 1:38, 430, 2:672

Huguenots, 1:313, 2:843–845, 844
Hull, Francis, 1:100
Human being. See Being; Existence; Personhood
Human formation, in priestly formation, 2:987, 988
Human Life in Our Day (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 1:81, 82
Humanae vitae (encyclical, Paul VI)
  on contraception, 1:307, 383, 444
  Divini illius magistri and, 1:409
  Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and, 1:461
  Pius XII citations, 1:27, 209
Humani generis (encyclical, Pius XII), 1:19, 304, 2:853, 908
Humani generis unitas (encyclical, Pius XI), 1:61, 456, 2:848
Humanism, 1:218, 2:825, 829–830
Humanitarianism, 2:666
Hume, Basil (Card.), 2:812
Humilis de Bisignano, St., 1:554–555
Humility, Benedict of Nursia on, 1:123
Hünermann, Peter, 1:401
Hungary
  Cold War and, 1:345, 347
  Communism in, 1:358
  early modern Church, 1:292
  European Union membership, 1:441
  quasi-fascism in, 1:454
Hunt v. McNair (1973), 1:336
Hupp, Robert (Msgr.), 1:154
Hurricane Katrina (2005), 1:372–373
Hurtado Cruchaga, Alberto, St., 1:555–556
Hus, John, 1:284, 535
Hussein, Saddam, 1:564–565, 566
Husserl, Edmund, 2:895, 896
Hussites, 1:535
Hutchinson, Anne, 1:315
Huvelin, Henri, 1:467
Huxley, Thomas, 1:304
Huysmans, Joris-Karl, 1:140
Hydrogen bombs, 1:77, 346
Hygrade Provision Company v. Sherman (1925), 1:329

I

IAEA (International Atomic Energy Association), 1:76
Iamblichus (philosopher), 2:1061
IARCCUM (International Anglican Roman Catholic Commission for Unity and Mission), 1:52
Ibas of Edessa, 1:364
ICCRS (International Catholic Charismatic Renewal Services), 1:259
ICE (International Communications Office), 1:259
Iconoclast Controversy (725–843), 1:365, 368
Iconographic tradition, of harrowing of Hell, 1:528–529
Idaho, legal considerations, 1:323, 324
The Idea of a University (Newman), 1:202
Identity, Catholic, Ex corde Ecclesiae on, 1:445
IFCA (International Federation of Catholic Alumnae), 2:664
I.G. Farben, 1:89
Ignatius of Antioch, St., 1:265, 266
Ignatius of Loyola, St., 1:35, 290, 504
Ignatius of Santhià, St., 1:557–558
Ignatius (Patriarch of Constantinople), St., 1:365
Ignatius Press, 1:401
Ikitsuki, Japan, martyrs from, 2:898
Illinois, school regulation, 1:323, 324, 335, 431
Illinois Department of Employment Sec., Frazee v. (1989), 1:332
Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education (1948), 1:335
Illuminism, 1:35, 36, 2:924
Imaginary antipopes, 1:113
Immaculate Conception
  Anglican views, 2:777
  Bernadette of Lourdes and, 1:130
  Catholic teachings, 2:733
  Eastern Orthodox Church view, 2:732, 776
  Protoevangelium of James on, 2:919, 920
Immensa aeterni Dei (apostolic constitution, Sixtus V), 1:195
Immigration
  Americanism and, 1:47, 49
  anti-Catholicism and, 1:56–57
  Buddhism and, 1:178
  Catholic Answers and, 1:228
  Catholic K-12 schools in the U.S. and, 1:430
Immigration Act of 1924, 1:56–57
Immigration Restriction Act of 1921, 1:56
Immolation, redemption and, 2:946 Immortality
  ancient Chinese views, 1:19
  ancient Greek and Roman views, 1:16, 17
  Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) on, 1:189
  Christian views, 1:21
  harrowing of Hell and, 1:531
  Jewish views, 1:20
  Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1045
  See also Afterlife
Impartiality vs. neutrality, papacy and, 2:1088–1089, 1092–1096
Impeded sees, 1:406
Imperfect vs. perfect virtue, 1:206
Imperialism, 2:665
Imperialist party (Council of Trent), 1:289
Imposition of hands, 1:392
Imprimaturs, 1:558–560
Impulse emotions, 1:205
In catechismus catholicus libris sex (Nausea), 1:219
In Defense of the Three Chapters (Facundus), 1:271
In plurimis (encyclical, Leo XIII), 2:1014
In Search for the Poor of Christ (Gutiérrez), 1:516
In supremo apostolatus fastigio (apostolic letter; Gregory XVI), 1:41, 2:1014
Inalienability, thesis of, 1:414–415
Incarnation, 1:287, 2:742, 937, 941–943
Inclusive pluralism expression, 1:421
Incompatibilism, 1:402
Independent congregations, property disputes, 1:326
Index of Prohibited Books, 1:104, 381, 558–559, 2:797
India
  afterlife views, 1:19
  L'Arche in, 1:67
  Buddhism in, 1:159–163, 160
  Catholic Press in, 1:261
  Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:550

early modern Church missions, 1:293

Indian Ocean Tsunami (2004), 1:372, 373

Indiana, Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323

Individual vs. general eschatology, in Christianity, 1:21

Indravarman (king of Cambodia), 1:177

Indulgences, 1:354

Indulgentarium Doctrina (apostolic constitution, Paul VI), 1:354

Industrial Revolution, 1:300–301

Infallibility
divine, 1:402–403
papal, 1:108, 138, 2:650–651, 908

Infallible? An Inquiry (Küng), 2:650

Infant baptism, 1:287, 522, 2:668–670, 688
See also Baptism

Informative Process (sainthood), 1:195

Iñiguez, Cipriano (Father), 1:493

Innitzer, Theodor (Card.), 1:455–456, 2:847

Innocent I (Pope), 1:244, 245, 246, 2:668

Innocent III (Pope) achievements of, 1:282–283
Anagni visit, 1:51
crusade against Albigenses, 1:225
Crusades and, 1:366
Donation of Constantine and, 1:415
Franciscans approval, 1:480
on limbo, 2:668
States of the Church and, 2:1032

Innocent IV (Pope), 1:283

Innocent VIII (Pope), 1:203

Innocent X (Pope), 1:291

Innocent XI (Pope), 1:295, 539, 2:1033, 1034

Innocent XII (Pope), 1:203, 490, 2:706, 923

Innocenti, Antonio (Card.), 1:423–424

Inquiry (sainthood process), 1:196, 197, 199

Inquisition, 1:35, 36, 59

Inspiration Day (Mother Teresa), 2:788, 789–790

Institute for Pastoral Theology, 1:92, 93, 94

Institute of Benedictine Sisters of Providence, 1:485

Institute of Charity, 2:960, 961, 962

Institute of Missionaries of Mary, 1:254

Institute of Sisters of Mercy of Verona, 2:911

Institute of the Handmaids of Charity of the Most Precious Blood, 1:488

Institute of the Missionary Daughters of the Holy Family of Nazareth, 2:696

Institute of the Most Holy Savior, 1:29

Institute of the Sisters of Jesus, Mary and Joseph, 2:954

Institute of the Sisters of St. Joseph of the Sacred Heart, 2:691

Institute of the Sisters of St. Marcellina, 1:137

Institute of the Sisters of the Holy Family of Bergamo, 1:253

Institutes of Consecrated Life and Societies of Apostolic Life, Congregation of, 1:69

Institutiones divinarum et saecularium lectionum (Cassiodorus), 1:272

Instruction on Certain Aspects of the "Theology of Liberation" (instruction, Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 1:541

Instruction on Infant Baptism (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 2:669

Instructions
Instruction on Certain Aspects of the "Theology of Liberation" (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 1:541
Instruction on Infant Baptism (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 2:669
Mother of the Saints (instruction, Congregation for the Causes of Saints), 1:107, 198–199
Redemptionis Sacramentum (Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments), 1:426
Sanctorum Mater (Congregation for the Causes of Saints), 1:107, 198–199

Instructions Générales en Forme de Catéchisme Où l'On Explique en Abrégé (Pouget), 1:220

Insurance, Knights of Columbus and, 2:646, 648

Integral Humanism (Maritain), 1:399

Integrated humanism, Christian education and, 1:409

Intellect, as operative power, 1:205

Intellectual disabilities, group homes for people with, 1:67–69, 68, 2:865, 1074

Intellectual formation, in priestly formation, 2:988

Intention, moral theology and, 2:914–915

Inter complures (Pius XII), 2:762

Inter gravissimas (papal bull, Gregory XIII), 1:502, 503

Inter mirifica (decree, Vatican Council II), 1:307

Inter soldalicia (apostolic letter, Benedict XV), 2:748

Intercession, 1:108, 111, 2:726–727, 937, 966

Interdict sanctions, 1:560–562

Interfaith dialogue. See Interreligious dialogue

Internal causes of sin, 2:999

International Anglican Roman Catholic Commission for Unity and Mission (IARCCUM), 1:52

International Atomic Energy Association (IAEA), 1:76

International Catechetical Congress (2002), 1:223

International Catholic Charismatic Renewal Services (ICCRS), 1:259

International Commission on English in the Liturgy, 2:783

International Communications Office (ICE), 1:259

International Conference on Charity (2005), 1:372

International Federation of Catholic Alumnae (IFCA), 2:664

International Federation of Catholic Universities, 1:72

International Federation of L'Arche Communities, 1:67, 2:1074

International Philosopical Quarterly, 1:341

International Theological Commission

(ITC), 1:562–564
on deaconesses, 1:392, 393
on Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:589
on limbo, 2:669–670
on salvation, 2:974–975
salvation for unbaptized babies and, 1:522
theology of the cross and, 1:376
International Treaty Limiting the Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, 1:64, 78–79, 81
Internuncios, 1:62
Interpretation of tongues, 1:255
Interreligious dialogue, 1:231–232, 305, 421
See also Ecumenism
Introduction to Christianity (Ratzinger), 1:116, 531
Intuition, Bergson, Henri Louis on, 1:125, 126
Investiture Controversy, 1:184, 277
Iowa, public school Bible use, 1:324
Ipso facto canonization, 1:107
Iran, 2:620, 819
Iraq War (2003–), 1:234, 564–568, 565, 2:654
Irascible emotions, 1:205
Ireland
catechism development, 1:220
early Church, 1:272
early modern Church, 1:292, 295
European integration, 1:441, 443
medieval Church, 1:273
papacy and, 1:568–571, 569
Ireland, John (Abp. of St. Paul, MN), 1:46, 47, 48–49, 430
Irenaeus (Bp. of Lyons), St., 1:265, 266, 532–533, 2:942
Irish nationalism and the papacy, 1:568–571, 569
Irish Republican Army, 1:570
Irish-Americans, 1:502
Iron oxide, on Shroud of Turin, 2:992
Irving, Edward, 2:928
Irwa, Jildo, Bl., 1:571, 2:867–868
Isagoge (Porphyry), 2:860
Isaiah, Book of, 2:721
Isidore of Seville, 1:246
Isis (Egyptian goddess), 1:18
Islam
afterlife views, 1:20–21
Benedict XVI on, 1:118
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:230–236, 235
celibacy, 1:242
Crusades and, 1:277–278
Foucauld, Charles Eugène de and, 1:467
Jewish history and, 2:608–609, 614–615
medieval Church and, 1:274
missionary work, 1:305
slavery and, 2:1012–1013
Islam in Europe Committee, 1:233
Israel
church-state relations, 1:309, 2:590–591, 880, 881
early Jewish Christians, 1:263–264, 265, 2:800–801 modern establishment of, 2:615, 616
papacy and, 2:877–883
slavery in ancient times, 2:1005–1006, 1011–1012
See also Arab-Israeli conflict; Holy Land; Jerusalem
Israel ben Eliezer (Rabbi), 2:612
Israeli War of Independence (1948–1949), 2:616
Istanbul, Turkey, archaeological activity, 1:367–368
See also Constantinople
Istria, foibe massacres, 1:146
Istruzione e pratica per un confessore (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33
Italian Communist Party, 1:344
Italian unification. See Risorgimento
Italy
Anagni, 1:51–52
battle of Adowa, 1:11
catechism development, 1:220
Catharism in, 1:225, 226–227
Catholic population, 1:311
Cavour, Gustavo Benso Di political involvement, 1:241
Christian democratic movements, 1:394, 395, 396, 398
church-state relations, 1:11, 30, 344, 381, 395, 2:835, 836–837, 864
Cold War and, 1:344
decline of, 1:291
early Church, 1:272
European integration, 1:441
fascism in, 1:452, 454–455, 456, 2:835–837
Franco, Francisco and, 1:482
Garibaldi, Giuseppe military leadership, 1:494
Jewish history, 2:609
late modern Church, 1:300, 2:810, 811
League of Nations and, 2:659, 660
Longhin, Andrew work, 2:675
medieval Church, 1:276–277
Modernism in, 2:795
monasticism development, 1:269, 2:810, 811
Nazism and, 2:847, 848
Pius XII and, 1:343
reform in, 1:289, 381
separation of church and state, 1:308
totalitarianism, 2:666
Western Schism and, 1:284
World War I involvement, 1:388
See also Mussolini, Benito; Risorgimento; States of the Church
ITC. See International Theological Commission
Itinerant preachers, colonial United States, 1:314
Izquierdo Alberto, Mariía del Pilar, Bl., 1:571–572

J

J'accuse (Zola), 1:416
Jacinto de los Ángeles and Juan Bautista, Bb., 2:573–574
Jackson, John, 2:992
Jackson, Robert H., 1:330
Jacobins, 2:574–575
Jacobites, 1:569
Jadot, Jean (Abp.), 1:231
Jaffree, Wallace v. (1985), 1:335
Jägerstätter, Franz, Bl., 2:575–576
Jainism, 1:19
Jaki, Stanley L., 2:576–578
James, Protoevangelium of, 2:755, 918–921
James, St., 1:264
James I (king of England), 1:292, 457–459, 458, 2:655, 656
James II (king of England), 1:316, 569
James of Voragine, 2:920
Jamet, Marie, 2:630, 631
Jansen, Cornelius, 1:294, 538
Jansenism
Alphonsus de Liguori and, 1:32, 34

Bérulle, Pierre de and, 1:133
heresy and, 1:538
limbo and, 2:669
overview, 1:294
on salvation, 2:973

Janssen, Arnold, St., 1:408, 486, 2:579, 1042

Japan
bombing of, 1:77, 78, 79
Buddhism in, 1:167–169, 168, 178
early modern Church missions, 1:293
Korea annexation, 1:173
League of Nations and, 2:659

Jaruzelski, Wojciech, 1:360

Jayavarman II (king of Cambodia), 1:177

Jayavarman VII (king of Cambodia), 1:177

JDDJ (Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification), 2:631–634, 632, 685

Jean I (count of Armagnac), 1:113

Jefferson, Thomas, 1:320, 334

Jehovah's Witnesses, 1:330

Jenne, Rinaldo de. See Alexander IV (Pope)

Jerome, St.
on celibacy and marriage, 1:244, 245
on Jesus' family relationships, 2:720, 920
monasticism development, 2:803
queenship doctrine, 2:773
theological development, 1:270

Jerusalem
Allenby, Edmund and, 1:25
Benedict XVI visit, 1:119
as center of Jewish history, 2:615–616
Crusades and, 1:277–279
John Paul II on, 2:590–591
as major see, 1:268, 270
patriarchate of, 2:579–580
rise of Islam and, 1:274
siege of, 2:606
See also Holy Land; Israel

Jerusalem, Latin Patriarchate of, 2:579–580

Jesuits
America (journal), 1:36–38 church reform and, 1:290–291
colonial United States, 1:317
at court of Akbar, 1:230
De auxiliis debate, 2:951, 1043
dispute with Dominicans, 2:951
early modern Church missions, 1:293
Gregorian University and, 1:504, 505
late modern Church, 1:302
Ledóchowski, Wladimir leadership, 2:662 restoration of, 1:298
Scholasticism and, 2:852
seminary development, 2:985
Spanish Civil War martyrs, 2:625 suppression of, 1:295

Jesus Christ
Bérulle, Pierre de on, 1:133
catechesis of the Good Shepherd and, 1:498–500
Catharism beliefs, 1:226
celibacy as consecration to, 1:250 as center of modern Church, 1:303
charity and, 1:208
communion of saints and, 1:354, 355
crucifixion account, 1:57–58
Divine Mercy devotions and, 1:406, 407 divinization and, 1:410, 411, 412
end times rapture, 2:928–929 family relationships, 2:719–720
Gospel according to John on, 2:725–727
Gospel according to Luke on, 2:721–725
Gospel according to Mark on, 2:719–720
Gospel according to Matthew on, 2:720–721 harrowing of Hell and, 1:524–532, 525
on Hell, 1:518
humanity of, 2:717–719, 932
luminous mysteries, 2:678–680, 679
Lutheran perspective, 2:686–688
Mary as coredemptrix, 2:739–741, 742–743, 746, 747–750
as Mediator, 2:937–938
new covenant and, 2:601
Protestant views on Mary and, 2:777
queenship of Mary and, 2:774 scholarship on, 1:304
See also Christology; Crucifixion of Jesus Christ

Jesus Christ, the Bearer of the Water of Life: A Christian Reflection on the "New Age" (Pontifical Council for Culture and the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue), 2:858

Jesus of Nazareth (Benedict XVI), 1:119–120, 531

Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:580–597, 597–605
public affirmation of Jewish covenant, 2:587, 596, 600–602
Benedict XVI efforts, 2:594–596, 595, 620–621 catechism/liturgy and, 2:587–588
early Church, 2:598–599, 607
Finaly Affair, 1:463–465
history of anti-Semitism and, 2:581–585
Israel, significance of, 2:590–591
John Paul II efforts, 1:90–91, 2:583, 584, 585–590, 592–594, 600, 620, 1086
John XXIII efforts, 2:620
as living heritage, 2:586–587 modern controversies, 2:591–592
Pius XII efforts, 1:456
Willebrands, Johannes work, 2:1086 theological dimensions of, 2:597–605

Jewish Christians (early Church), 1:263–264, 265, 2:800–801

Jewish Emancipation, 2:613–615

Jews, post-Biblical history of the, 2:605–621 contemporary history, 2:615–621
early modern period, 2:611–613 emancipation period, 2:613–615
medieval period, 2:608–611
Roman and Byzantine period, 2:606–608

Joachim, St., 2:919, 920

Joachite heresy, 1:282

Johanno-Pauline code. See Code of Canon Law (1983)

John, Gospel according to anti-Judaism in, 1:58
Crucifixion, 2:991–992
Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:599
on Mary, 2:725–727, 755, 758

John Damascene, 1:533

John I (Pope), 1:271

John III (king of Navarre), 1:147, 148

John III (Pope), 1:272

John (king of England), 1:282, 283

John of Jerusalem (Bp.), 1:270
John of Mirecourt, 2:862
John Paul I (Pope), 1:307–308
John Paul II Foundation for the Sahel, 1:371, 372
John Paul II (Pope), 1:66, 194
Alberione, James beatification, 1:24 on Alphonsus de Liguori, 1:34
American Friends of the Vatican Library approval, 1:211
Anaphora of the Apostles Addai and Mari and, 1:9
Anglican pastoral provision, 1:52
anti-Semitism repudiation, 1:90–91, 308, 348, 398, 454, 2:589–590, 600
Arafat, Yasser and, 1:65, 66, 66
arms control work, 1:75, 80–81
on Arnáiz Barón, Rafael, 1:70
Aviat, Francesca Salesia canonization, 1:97
Balicki, Jan veneration, 1:101
beatification of, 1:309
Beauraing visit, 1:111
Beltrame Quattrocchi, Luigi and Maria Corsini beatification, 1:112
Benedict XVI and, 1:116, 119
Bernard of Corleone canonization, 1:131
Bessette, André beatification, 1:134
Betancur, Pedro de San José beatification and canonization, 1:135–136
Beyzym, Jan beatification, 1:136
Bonhomme, Pierre beatification, 1:145
Bossilkov, Evgenij beatification, 1:149
Brader, María Caridad beatification, 1:155
Brando, Maria Cristina beatification, 1:156
Bütler, María Bernarda beatification, 1:181
on canonization, 1:193
Cardinal Newman Society and, 1:202
Casey, Solanus declared venerable, 1:212
Cassant, Joseph-Marie beatification, 1:213
Castro, Fidel Ruz and, 1:214, 214–215
Catanoso, Gaetano beatification, 1:215
catechism development, 1:222, 223
Catechism of the Catholic Church introduction, 1:103
Catholic Charismatic Renewal support, 1:259
on Catholic higher education, 1:73, 92, 428–429, 2:692, 693
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:231–232, 234
Centurione Bracelli, Virginia beatification and canonization, 1:252
Cerioli, Paola Elisabetta canonization, 1:253
Chappotin de Neuville, Hélène de beatification, 1:254
on charisms, 1:257
Charles of Austria beatification, 1:260
Chavara, Kuriakose (Cyriac) Elias beatification, 1:261
on Christian virtues, 1:205, 206, 207, 208
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:251
Cold War and, 1:347–349, 348
Coll y Guitart, Francisco beatification, 1:350
Comboni, Daniele beatification and canonization, 1:351, 352
Comensoli, Gertrude Caterina beatification, 1:353
on communion of saints, 1:354
Cope, Marianne declared venerable, 1:370
Cor Unum charities, 1:371
Corazón Téllez Robles, Matilde beatification, 1:374
coredemptrix term, 2:748
Cuauhtlatoatzin, Juan Diego beatification and canonization, 1:377, 378
Czartoryski, Augusto beatification, 1:384–385 da Costa, Alexandrina Maria beatification, 1:388
Denzinger references, 1:401
devotion to Mary, 2:763 diplomatic outreach, 1:64
Divine Mercy devotion, 1:406, 407
on divinization, 1:412
Djidjov, Pavel beatification, 1:413
Drexel, Katherine canonization, 1:198
Durando, Marcantonio beatification, 1:422
Ecclesia de Eucharistia (encyclical), 1:425–427
Ecclesia Dei Commission, 1:423
on ecumenism, 2:775
Emmerick, Anna Katharina beatification, 1:435
Errico, Gaetano beatification, 1:436
Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás, Josemaría canonization, 1:194, 437, 438
Euphrasia of the Sacred Heart of Jesus declared venerable, 1:439 on European integration, 1:442
on evangelization, 1:227
Fabris, Eurosia declared venerable, 1:451
Feliński, Zygmunt Szczęsny beatification, 1:459
Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and, 1:461
Fernandes, Bartolomeu dei Martiri beatification, 1:462
Findysz, Władysław beatification approval, 1:465
Foucauld, Charles Eugène de beatification approval, 1:467
Francia, Annibale Maria di beatification and canonization, 1:479–480
Frassinello, Benedetta Cambiagio beatification and canonization, 1:485
Freinademetz, Joseph canonization, 1:486
Fusco, Alfonso Maria beatification, 1:487
Fusco, Tommaso Maria beatification, 1:488
Galen, Clemens August Graf von declared venerable, 1:489
Galvão, Anthony of Saint Anne beatification, 1:492
García Zavala, María Guadalupe beatification, 1:493
Giaccardo, Timoteo beatification, 1:495
Ginard Martí, María de los Ángeles martyrdom approval, 1:495
Gojdič, Pavol Peter beatification, 1:497
Gorazdowski, Zygmunt beatification, 1:500
Guerrero González, Angela de la Cruz beatification and canonization, 1:511
Guízar Valencia, Rafael beatification, 1:514
Haddad, Jacques Ghazir declared venerable, 1:517
on Hell, 1:522, 530
Holocaust remembrances, 2:584, 585, 588–590
Holy Land visit, 1:309, 2:584, 591, 593
Hopko, Vasil' beatification, 1:552
Höss, Crescentia beatification and canonization, 1:553

Humilis de Bisignano canonization, 1:555
Ignatius of Santhià canonization, 1:557–558
Iraq War diplomacy, 1:565–566
Irwa, Jildo beatification, 1:571
Izquierdo Alberto, Mariía del Pilar beatification, 1:572
Jacinto de los Ángeles and Juan Bautista beatification, 2:573–574 Janssen, Arnold canonization, 1:408, 2:579
on Jerusalem, 2:590–591
Jewish-Catholic reconciliation efforts, 1:90–91, 2:583, 584, 585–590, 592–594, 600, 620, 1086
Jubilee Year celebrations, 1:564
Kassab, Nimatullah canonization, 2:635–636
Knights of Columbus and, 2:649
Küng, Hans and, 2:651
Ledóchowska, Urszula canonization, 2:661
on life support care, 1:28
Lluch, Juana María beatification, 2:675 on Longhin, Andrew, 2:676
Ludovica de Angelis, Maria beatification, 2:678
luminous mysteries, 2:678, 680
MacKillop, Mary Helen beatification, 2:691 on male priests, 1:116–117
Mantovani, Maria Domenica beatification, 2:695–696
Manyanet y Vives, José canonization, 2:697
Maria Candida of the Eucharist beatification, 2:700
María del Tránsito de Jesús Sacramentado beatification, 2:704
Marian catechesis, 1:426, 2:765, 768–769
Marian doctrine, 2:732, 735, 736, 738–739, 744, 751, 767–770
Mark of Aviano beatification, 2:708
on Marxism, 2:716
Mattias, Maria de canonization, 2:780
Meneguzzi, Liduina beatification, 2:784
Merz, Ivan beatification, 2:785
Missionaries of Charity Fathers approval, 2:788
Molla, Gianna Beretta beatification and canonization, 2:800
Monti, Luigi Maria beatification, 2:822
Montoya, Laura beatification, 2:823
More, Sir Thomas proclamation, 2:829 on Mother Teresa, 2:832
Neothomism and, 2:853
New Evangelization, 1:239
Okelo, Daudi beatification, 2:868
Orione, Luigi beatification and canonization, 2:870
Orozco, Alfonso de canonization, 2:871
Ortiz Real, Piedad de la Cruz beatification, 2:872 on Otranto martyrs, 2:873
on Our Lady of Guadalupe, 1:509
Palestine administration, 2:881–882
Palomino Yenes, Eusebia beatification, 2:884
papal elections, 2:885
Pelczar, Józef Sebastian beatification and canonization, 2:889
Petković, Maria of Jesus Crucified beatification, 2:901 philosophical work, 2:896–897
Picco, Eugenia beatification, 2:902–903
Pidal y Chico de Guzmán, María beatification, 2:903
pontificate of, 1:308–309
Portillo, Alvaro del and, 2:912
Poveda Castroverde, Pedro beatification and canonization, 2:913
on priestly formation, 2:987, 988
queenship of Mary, 2:774
Ravasco, Eugenia beatification, 2:930
Reggio, Tommaso beatification, 2:949
Rendu, Rosalie beatification, 2:950
ressourcement theology and, 2:952
Rodríguez Castro, Bonifacia beatification, 2:955
Rodríguez Sopeña, María beatification, 2:955 on Roma people, 2:957
Roman Curia reform, 1:203
Romero Meneses, María beatification, 2:958
Rubio y Peralta, José canonization, 2:962
sainthood process, 1:107, 108, 196, 2:967–968
on salvation, 1:4–5, 2:974
Salzano, Giulia beatification, 2:976
Schelingová, Zdenka beatification, 2:979
on sin, 2:1001–1002
on sister churches, 2:1003
on slavery, 2:1008–1009
Smaldone, Filippo beatification, 2:1016 on solidarity, 1:87, 88
Spanish Civil War martyrs beatification, 2:621
spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:757
Stein, Edith beatification and canonization, 2:1039
Sterni, Gaetana beatification, 2:1043
Suriano, Giuseppina beatification, 2:1048
Szymkowiak, Sancja beatification, 2:1048
Tadini, Arcángelo beatification, 2:1051
Talamoni, Luigi beatification, 2:1052
Tarrés I Claret, Pere beatification, 2:1055
Tavernier Gamelin, Émilie beatification, 2:1056
on Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre, 2:1058
on Thérèse of Lisieux, 2:1060
Torres Morales, Genoveva beatification and canonization, 2:1065
Trčka, Metod beatification, 2:1067
Üffing, Maria beatification, 2:1069
Valle, Giulia Nemesia beatification, 2:1072
Variara, Luigi beatification, 2:1075
Vatican Council II continuity, 1:24
Veuster, Joseph de beatification, 2:1078
Vigne, Peter beatification, 2:1079
Visintainer, Amabile Lucia beatification and canonization, 2:1080
Vitchev, Kamen beatification, 2:1081
Volpicelli, Caterina beatification, 2:1081
Waldheim, Kurt and, 2:591, 1084
Willebrands, Johannes and, 2:1086, 1087
Zatti, Artemide beatification, 2:1097–1098
Zegrí y Moreno, Juan beatification, 2:1098
John the Baptist, 2:721–722
John the Jew, 1:225

John VIII (Pope), 1:365, 2:1008
John XXII (Pope), 1:124, 282, 283
John XXIII (Antipope), 1:284
John XXIII (Pope)
  Adenauer, Konrad and, 1:10–11
  aggiornamento, 1:23
  on atomic energy and weapons, 1:74, 80 on Bufalo, Gaspare del, 1:180 canon law reformation, 1:196
  Chichkov, Josaphat and, 1:262
  Cold War and, 1:346–347
  democratic participation, 1:88
  diplomatic outreach, 1:64
  Franco, Francisco and, 1:484
  on Legion of Mary, 1:420
  on Marxism, 2:715
  on Mary, 2:751, 762
  on mercy, 1:541
  on missions, 1:306
  on Our Lady of Guadalupe, 1:509
  on peace, 1:75, 210, 306
  pontificate of, 1:305–306
  on social justice, 1:306
  Willebrands, Johannes and, 2:1086
Johnson, George, 1:431
Johnson, Lyndon B., 1:37
Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification (JDDJ), 2:631–634, 632, 685
Jones, Watson v. (1871), 1:326, 327
Jones v. Wolf (1979), 1:331
Jordan, Arab-Israeli conflict and, 2:617, 619
José Aparicio Sanz and 232 Companions, Martyrs of the Spanish Civil War, Bb., 2:621–629
Joseph, St., 2:721, 919
Joseph II (Holy Roman Emperor), 1:295
Joseph Tàpies and six companions, Bb., 2:629–630
Josephine Association, 2:954
Josephinism, 1:295, 539
Josephite Sisters, 2:691
Josephus, Flavius, 1:266
Jovinian (monk), 2:1000
Juan Bautista and Jacinto de los Ángeles, Bb., 2:573–574
Juan Carlos (king of Spain), 1:483
Juan Diego, St., 1:377–379, 378, 507–508
Jubilee Year, 1:309, 2:1005
Jucunda semper (encyclical, Leo XIII), 2:748
Judah ben Samuel ha-Levi, 2:609
Judaism
  afterlife views, 1:20, 524–527
  Birkat Ha-Mazon, 1:7, 8 covenant with God, 2:587, 596, 600–602 early Church and, 1:263–264, 265, 2:598
  Gnosticism and, 1:264
  interreligious dialogue, 1:233
  Jewish emancipation and, 2:613–614
  Orthodox and Liberal, 2:618–619
  papacy and, 2:581
  spiritual bond with Christianity, 2:586, 592–594
  Zoroastrianism and, 1:19
  See also Anti-Semitism; Jewish-Catholic relations; Jews, post-Biblical history of the Judensau portrayal, 2:582 Judgment ancient Asian views, 1:19
  ancient Greek and Roman views, 1:15, 16, 17
  Christian views, 1:21
  Islamic views, 1:20
  Jewish views, 1:20
  primitive societies' views, 1:12
  sainthood process and, 1:197
  theology of sin and, 2:999
Judicatum (Vigilius), 1:271
Jugan, Jeanne, St., 2:630–631, 673
Julia Domna (empress of Rome), 1:267
Julia Mammaea, 1:267
Julian calendar, 1:502, 503
Julian the Apostate, 1:269
Julianus (theurgist), 2:1061
Julius II (Pope), 1:2, 148, 186, 187, 286, 2:1032
Julius III (Pope), 1:289
July 26 Movement (Cuba), 1:214
July Revolution (1830) (France), 1:95
Jüngel, Eberhard, 1:376
Jungmann, Josef, 1:218
Junyer Padern, Julio (Father), Bl., 2:621
Jus exclusivae (veto power), 2:885
Just war theory, 1:74, 80, 566–567
Justice, 1:205–206, 208, 2:931, 940, 941
  See also Social justice
Justification, Joint Declaration on (JDDJ), 2:631–634, 632, 685
Justification, Lutheran perspective, 2:631–633, 686–688
Justification: The Doctrine of Karl Barth and a Catholic Reflection (Küng), 2:650
Justin I (Byzantine emperor), 1:271
Justin Martyr, St., 1:266, 267, 520, 532–533
Justinian code, 1:271
Justinian I (Byzantine emperor)
  caesaropapism and, 1:183, 184
  on celibacy and marriage, 1:245
  Constantinople and, 1:364–365, 367
  Eastern monasticism and, 2:814, 815
  policies of, 1:271
Justinus Febronius, 1:294, 539
Justo de Oliveira, Lindalva, Bl., 2:634

K

Kaas, Ludwig (Msgr.), 1:361
Kadampa Order, 1:171
Kagyupa Order, 1:171
Kahal (administrative body), 2:611
Kaiser, Wolfram, 1:398
Kalinowski, Raphael (Joseph), St., 1:384
Kalyvas, Stathis, 1:398
Kamakura period, Buddhism and, 1:168–169
Kamalaśīla (Buddhist disciple), 1:170
Kamenev, Lev, 1:144, 2:1027
Kansas, legal considerations, 1:323, 324
Kant, Immanuel, 2:685, 897
Kaplan, Jacob (Rabbi), 1:464, 465
Karaites, 2:608
Karlsbad Protocol, 1:345
Karma, 1:159, 164
Kasper, Walter (Card.), 1:9, 401, 2:583, 595
Kass, Ludwig, 1:396
Kassab, Nimatullah al-Hardini Youssef, St., 2:635–636

Katechetik (Hirscher), 1:220
Katholischer Erwachsenen-Katechismus (catechism), 1:222
Katholischer Katechismus der Bistümer Deutschlands (catechism), 1:221
Katzer, Frederick (Abp. of Milwaukee, WI), 1:430
Kautsky, Karl, 1:357
Kazimierczyk, Stanisław Yousef, St., 2:636
Keane, John Joseph (Bp. of Richmond, VA), 1:46, 47–48
Keating, Karl, 1:227
Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral (1952), 1:331
Keller, Moïse, 1:464
Kelly, George A. (Msgr.), 1:461
Kelly, J., 1:221
Kendall, Daniel, 1:421
Kennan, George, 1:344
Kennedy, Anthony, 1:335
Kennedy, Edward M., 2:642, 643
Kennedy, Eunice, 2:643
Kennedy, Jacqueline, 2:643
Kennedy, Jean, 2:643
Kennedy, John F., 1:57, 2:636–639, 637, 641–642
Kennedy, John F., Jr., 2:642
Kennedy, Joseph P., 2:636, 639–641, 640
Kennedy, Joseph P., Jr., 2:642
Kennedy, Kathleen, 2:642
Kennedy, Patricia, 2:643
Kennedy, Robert F., 2:642
Kennedy, Rose, 2:636, 639–641, 640
Kennedy, Rosemary, 2:641
Kennedy Family, 2:639–643, 640
Kenny, Anthony, 1:83
Kentucky, legal considerations, 1:323, 324
Kerry, John, 1:380
Kertzer, David, 1:60
Kerygma, 1:263, 264
Ketteler, Wilhelm Emmanuel von (Bp. of Mainz), 1:87, 301, 398
Khattan, Martha, 1:517
Khri srong Ide btsan (king of Tibet), 1:170
Khrushchev, Nikita, 1:143, 347, 358
Khrushchev, Rada, 1:347
Kibe Kasui, Peter (Father), 2:898
Kilmartin, Edward J., 2:643–645
Kim Il-Sung, 1:358
Kim Jong-Il, 1:358
Kinesha Conference (1968), 1:444
King, Clifford, 1:408
King, Rufus (general), 1:40, 41
King, Rufus (senator), 1:45
King-priests, 1:183–184
Kingdom of God, 1:518, 521, 2:678, 680
Kirk, Russell, 1:158
Klein, Félix (abbot), 1:48
Der kleine Katechismus (Luther), 1:218
Kłopotowski, Ignatius, Bl., 2:645–646
Knecht, Friedrich Justus, 1:220
Knight, Death and The Devil (painting), 1:404
Knights Hospitaller, 1:278
Knights of Columbus, 2:646–649, 647
Knights Templar, 1:278, 279, 2:990
Know-Nothings, 1:55, 56, 2:671, 672
Knowledge, 1:255, 2:738–739, 893–894, 909–910
Kokhba, Bar, 2:606
Kolbe, Maximilian, St., 1:91
Kolde, Dietrich, 1:218
Kolodiejchuk, Brian, 2:789
Kolping, Adolf, 1:301
Koob, Barbara, Bl., 1:369–370
Korea, 1:172–174, 358–359
Koryŏ period, Buddhism and, 1:173
Kosher laws, 1:329
Kowalska, Maria Faustina (Sister), St., 1:406–407, 2:1021
Krason, Stephen M., 2:1018
Krause, Christian (Bp.), 2:632
Krol, John (Card.), 1:82
Krupp Industries, 1:89
Ku Klux Klan, 1:37, 56
Kubowicz, Stanislaus, 1:384
Kulturkampf, 1:138–139, 299, 539
Kūkai (Buddhist thinker), 1:167–168
Kumamoto, Japan, martyrs from, 2:899
Küng, Hans, 1:541, 2:649–651, 650
Kunjachan, Bl., 2:1062–1063
Kurtzman, Lemon v. (1971), 1:336, 337, 432
Küng, Hans, 1:54, 115
KVP (Catholic People's Party) (Netherlands), 1:399
Kyoto, Japan, martyrs from, 2:899

L

La Farge, John, 1:36, 456, 2:848, 1092
La Fontaine, Jean S., 1:140
La Voisin, Catherine, 1:140
Là-bas (Huysmans), 1:140
Laberthonnière, Lucien, 2:795, 797, 798
Labor reform
  America on, 1:37
  Catholic Worker Movement, 1:236–238, 237
  Higgins, George Gilmary involvement, 1:542, 543
  John Paul II on, 1:308, 2:716
Laborem exercens (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:308, 2:716
Labourdette, Marie-Michel, 2:951
Labouré, Catherine, St., 1:303
Lach, Josip, 1:346
Lacunza y Díaz, Manuel de, 2:928–929
Laetamur magnopere (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 1:222
Laghi, Pio (Card.), 1:348, 566, 567, 2:653–655, 654
Lagrange, Marie Joseph, 1:104
Laity
  Buddhism, 1:161
  canonical missions, 2:692
  at Gregorian University, 1:506
  High Middle Ages tension with clergy, 1:277 higher education and, 1:428, 429, 433, 444 Legion of Mary involvement, 1:419
  modern Church, 1:286, 303, 307, 2:813
  in Opus Dei, 2:868–869
  as trustees of church property, 1:324

Lambertini, Prospero (Card.). See Benedict XIV (Pope)

Lambeth, Council of (1281), 1:216–217

Lambeth Articles, 2:655–656

Lamb's Chapel v. Center Moriches Union Free School District (1993), 1:333

Lamennais, Hugues Félicité-Robert de, 1:95–97, 298–299, 398, 539, 540

Lamp for the Path to Enlightenment (Atiśa), 1:171

Land O'Lakes Statement (1967), 1:202, 428, 444, 2:693

Laneau, Louis, 1:411

Langdarma (king of Tibet), 1:171

Langford, Joseph (Father), 2:787–790

Langlade, Jean, Benedict XVI (Antipope), 1:113

Lannoy, Theophile (Mother), 1:109

Large Catechism (Luther), 2:683

Las Casas, Bartolomé de, 1:516, 2:1013

Lascaris, Adele, 1:241

Lassalle, Ferdinand, 1:398

The Last Judgement (triptych panel), 1:519

Last judgment. See Judgment

Last resort principle, 1:80

Last Supper, 1:9

Latae sententiae censures, 1:449, 561

Late Middle Ages. See Church, history of, medieval Late modern church history. See Church, history of, late modern (1800–present)

Lateran Councils
- First (1123), 1:247
- Second (1139), 1:247
- Third (1179), 2:983
- Fourth (1215)
  - achievements of, 1:282
  - anti-Judaism, 1:58–59
  - Catharism and, 1:282
  - clerical training, 2:983
  - Eastern sees, 1:270
- Fifth (1514)
  - Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) and, 1:186, 187
  - immortality of the soul, 1:21

Lateran Pacts (1929), 1:301, 455, 2:836

Lateran Treaty, 2:659

Latin America, 1:396–397, 2:685–686
- See also South America; specific countries

Latin American Bishops Conference (1992), 1:308

Latin Mass, Tridentine, 1:423, 424, 2:596

Latin Rite, Anglican adaptations of, 1:52–53

Latin Vulgate, 1:188

Latini, Filippo (Bernard of Corleone), St., 1:131–132

Łatko, Anthony, 2:645

Latomus, Jacobus, 1:288

Latopié, Louis, 2:1089

Latvia, European Union membership, 1:441

Laurentin, René, 2:750

Laurentius (Antipope), 1:271

Lausiac History (Palladius), 1:269

Lavaur, Council of (1368), 1:217

LaVey, Anton Szandor, 1:140

Lavigerie, Charles (Card.), 1:418, 2:1008

Law. See Divine law; Legislation; Natural law

Law of nations, Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1045

Law of prayer, 1:118

Law of Separation (1905) (France), 1:418

Lawford, Peter, 2:643

Lawrence v. Texas (2003), 1:338

Laxism, 1:538

Lay trustees, of church property, 1:324

Le Jay, Claude, 2:982

Le Pailleur, Augusto (Father), 2:630, 631

Le Saux, Henri, 2:813

Le Van Giang, 1:175

League of Nations and the papacy, 1:440, 2:656, 656–660, 1091

Leander of Seville, 1:272

Leap year calculation, 1:502, 503

Lebanon, 1:65, 2:617, 619, 819

Lebon, Joseph, 2:752

Ledóchowska, Maria Teresa, Bl., 2:660–661, 791

Ledóchowska, Urszula, St., 2:661–662

Ledóchowski, Wladimir, 2:662, 848

Lee, Robert E., 1:41

Lee v. Weisman (1992), 1:335

Lefebvre, Marcel (Abp.), 1:7, 117, 119, 423, 424, 2:596

Left Behind literature, 2:929

Lega democratica nazionale (Murri), 2:795

Legal vs. equitable ownership, of church property, 1:325

Legates, as papal agents, 1:62

Legenda s. Silvestri (apocryphal work), 1:413–414, 415

Legion of Decency, 2:662–665, 663

Legion of Mary, 1:419–420

Legislation
- colonial United States, 1:313–317, 2:1063–1064
- disestablishment period, 1:317–321
- Germany, 1:138–139
- nineteenth century U.S., 1:321–328
- on slavery, 2:1005, 1009, 1011
- twentieth century U.S., 1:328–338
- twenty-first century U.S., 1:338–339
- See also specific laws

Legislative bodies, prayer at, 1:337

Lehrbegriff (Deharbe), 1:221

Leiber, Robert (Father), 1:10, 2:792

Leibniz, Gottfried Wilhelm, 2:685

Leibrecht, John (Bp. of Springfield-Cape Girardeau, MO), 1:446

Leisler, Jacob, 1:54

Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971), 1:336, 337, 432

Lemures (spirits), 1:17

Lenin, Vladimir, 1:142, 143, 357, 2:1027

Leninism, 1:143

Lentner, L., 1:221

Leo I (Byzantine emperor), 1:270

Leo I (Pope), 1:245, 246, 270, 355

Leo III (Pope), 1:276

Leo IX (Pope), 1:247, 277, 366, 2:1031, 1032

Leo X (Pope)
Cagots indulgence, 1:186
Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) and, 1:187
Concordat of Bologna, 1:184
Luther, Martin and, 2:681–682 murder attempt on, 1:286
response to Luther, 1:288

Leo XII (Pope), 1:44, 96

Leo XIII (Pope), 1:46, 139
Americanism and, 1:46, 48, 49
on Anglican ordination, 1:53
anti-Semitism and, 1:60
apostolic delegates, 1:63, 64
Bismarck, Otto von and, 1:139
Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) and, 1:188
Catholic K-12 schools in the U.S. and, 1:431
Christian democratic movements and, 1:395, 398
Comensoli, Gertrude Caterina and, 1:352
on communion of saints, 1:353
Communism and, 1:300, 360
Czartoryski, Augusto and, 1:384 on d'Annunzio, Gabriele, 1:387
Divini illius magistri and, 1:409
on ecumenism, 2:775
Errico, Gaetano declared venerable, 1:436
Feliński, Zygmunt Szczęsny and, 1:459
Felix of Nicosia beatification, 1:460 international diplomacy and, 2:656
on labor, 1:37, 87, 301, 454, 2:667, 715
late modern monasticism, 2:810, 811
on Mary, 2:748, 749, 751
Menelik II and, 1:11
Modernism and, 2:797
More, Sir Thomas beatification, 2:828
Neothomism and, 2:852
non licet policy, 2:864
on philosophy, 2:950
Ralliement, 1:416, 419
on scholasticism, 1:304, 505
on slavery, 2:1008, 1014
spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:754
Taparelli d'Azeglio, Luigi influence, 2:1053–1054
Thérèse of Lisieux and, 2:1059
Zionism and, 2:877

Leonides, St., 1:267

Leonine edition of Thomas Aquinas, 2:852

Leopold II (Holy Roman Emperor), 1:295

Leprosy
Beyzym, Jan work, 1:136
Cope, Marianne work, 1:370
Variara, Luigi work, 2:1075
Veuster, Joseph de work, 1:198, 370, 2:966, 1077–1078

Letter to Diognetus (Apologists), 1:266

Letter to the Bishops of the Catholic Church on Some Aspects of the Church Understood as Communion (Benedict XVI), 1:116

Lettera ad un religioso amico ove si tratta del modo di predicare (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:31

Lettre sur les exigences de la pensée contemporaine en matière d'apologétique (Blondel), 2:794

Levada, William (Card.), 1:424, 563

Levantamiento (July 17, 1936) (Spain), 2:1023

Levati, Maria Biffi, 2:1052

Levi, covenant with God, 2:729

Lewis, C. S., 1:412

Lex orandi, lex credendi axiom, 2:644

Lex orandi (law of prayer), 1:118

Lha Tho tho ri gnyan btsan (king of Tibet), 1:170

Liber de duobus principiis (Catharist text), 1:226

Liber discipuli de eruditione Christi fidelium (Herolt), 1:218

Liber Gomorrhianus (Peter Damian), 1:247

Liber Jesu Christi pro simplicibus (catechism), 1:218

Liber regulae pastoralis (Gregory I), 1:272

Liberal Judaism, 2:618–619

Liberalism, 1:95, 96, 298–299, 394, 397–398, 2:665–667

Liberation theology, 1:116, 213, 215, 515–516, 2:716

Liberatore, Matteo, 1:381, 2:1053

Libertarianism vs. determinism, 1:402

The Liberties of the Gallican Church (Pithou), 1:490, 491

Libri sententiarum (Peter Lombard), 1:521

An liceat sacerdotibus inire matrimonium (Ulric), 1:247

Licet de vitanda discordia (apostolic constitution, Alexander III), 2:885

Lichten, Joseph L. (Rabbi), 2:792

Liebenfels, Lanz von, 1:544

Life after death. See Afterlife; Immortality

Life of Anthony the Hermit (Athanasius), 1:269, 2:801

The Life of Father Hecker (Elliott), 1:48

Life support care, John Paul II on, 1:28

Lilius, Aloysius, 1:503

Limbo, 1:19, 2:668–670

Lincoln, Abraham, 1:38, 40, 41, 2:670–672, 671, 1015

Linden, Josef, 1:221

Lingard, John, 1:220

Link, Wenzeslaus, 1:248

Lithuania, European Union membership, 1:441–442

Lithuanian Benefit Society of St. Anthony, Dochkus v. (1903), 1:327

Little Apostles of Charity, 2:823–824

Little Boy (bomb), 1:77, 78

Little Brothers of Jesus (LBJ), 1:467, 2:672

Little Missionary Sisters of Charity, 2:672–673

Little Sisters of Jesus, 1:467

Little Sisters of the Abandoned Elderly Spanish Civil War martyrs, 2:628

Little Sisters of the Holy Family, 2:695

Little Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, Congregation of, 2:1080

Little Sisters of the Poor, 1:302, 2:630–631, 673–674

Little Way (Thérèse of Lisieux), 2:1059–1060

Little Work of Divine Providence, Congregation of, 2:869

Liturgia Horarum, 1:156, 157

Liturgical movement, 1:303

Liturgy
Benedict XVI on, 1:118
devotion to Mary, 2:760, 768
Ecclesia Dei on, 1:423, 424
Eucharistic prayer, history of, 1:7–9
harrowing of Hell and, 1:529–530

Kilmartin, Edward J. on, 2:644
Mary as mediatrix and, 2:751–752
McManus, Frederick work, 2:782–783
Society for Catholic Liturgy work, 2:1017–1018 veneration of saints and blesseds, 2:966, 967

Liviero, Carlo (Bp. of Città di Castello), Bl., 2:674

Living the Gospel of Life (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 2:638

Livre de a Foi (catechism), 1:222

Llabrés Cerdá, Antoni, 2:913

Lluch, Juana María Condesa, Bl., 2:674–675

Lobera y Valtierra, Julián, 1:112

Lobo, Manuel, 1:135

Locke, John, 1:314, 2:665

Locke v. Davey (2004), 1:338

Loewenich, Walther von, 1:376

The Logic of Deterrence (Kenny), 1:83

Logical determinism, 1:402

Löhe, Wilhelm, 2:685

Loisy, Alfred, 1:48–49, 2:793, 794, 797, 798

Lombard, Peter, 1:281, 521

Lombard kingdom, papacy and, 2:1030–1031, 1032

London, Treaty of (1915), 2:1089

Longhin, Andrew Hyacinth (Bp. of Treviso), Bl., 2:675–676

Longo, Bartolo, Bl., 2:1081

Looram, Mary, 2:664

López de Maturana, Margarita María, Bl., 2:676–677

Lord, Daniel (Father), 2:663

Lord's Prayer, 1:216, 217, 218, 219, 335, 405

Lord's Supper. See Eucharist

Los-von-Rom Movement, 1:304

Lossky, Vladimir, 1:412

Lotus Sutra, 1:168, 169

Loubet, Émile, 1:416

Louis I (duke of Savoy), 2:991

Louis VII (king of France), 1:279

Louis IX (king of France), 1:279

Louis XII (king of France), 1:147, 148

Louis XIII (king of France), 1:132, 2:844

Louis XIV (king of France)
Gallicanism and, 1:295, 490, 491
Huguenots and, 2:845
Innocent XI and, 1:539
States of the Church and, 2:1033–1034

Louis XVI (king of France), 1:42

Louis the Pious (emperor), 1:123, 276

Louisiana, 1:323, 324, 329, 336

Louisiana State Board of Education, Cochran v. (1930), 1:329

Louis-Philippe (king of France), 1:95

Lourdes (France), apparitions of Mary, 1:128–130, 303

Louvain, University of, 1:288

Love
Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:31
Benedict XVI on, 1:117, 310
Nouwen, Henri on, 2:865
Paul on, 1:255
redemption theology and, 2:931, 936

Lovejoy, Owen, 2:671

Lozano Garrido, Manuel, Bl., 2:677

Lublin Lectures (John Paul II), 2:897

Lucian (satirist), 1:267

Luciani, Albino (Card.). See John Paul I (Pope)

Lucifer, as Devil synonym, 1:404

Ludendorff, Erich, 2:846

Ludovica de Angelis, Maria, Bl., 2:677–678

Luke, Gospel according to
Crucifixion, 2:991–992
Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:599
on Mary, 2:721–725, 730, 755, 758

Luking, Marie Gratia (Sister), 2:1004

Lumen gentium (dogmatic constitution, Vatican Council II)
Benedict XVI involvement, 1:115, 116, 307, 353–354
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:231
on charisms, 1:256–257
devotion to Mary, 2:763
on dioceses, 1:405
Jewish-Catholic relations and, 2:587
Marian doctrine ecumenism, 2:774–775
on salvation, 2:974
spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:756
theology of Hell and, 1:521
theology of Mary and, 2:741, 743, 753, 765–766

Luminous mysteries of the Rosary, 2:678–680, 679, 769

Lusk, Edward, 2:672

Luther, Martin, 2:681, 682
anti-Judaism, 1:59
Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) and, 1:187, 188
catechisms, 1:218
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:248
on justification, 2:686, 687
Lutheran Reformation, 1:287, 2:680–682
on Mary, 2:777
on redemption, 2:944
theology of the cross, 1:374, 376

Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, 2:683

Lutheran Reformation, 1:287, 2:680–682
See also Reformation

Lutheran World Federation (LWF)
Book of Concord and, 2:683 formation of, 2:685–686
Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification, 2:631, 632–633, 685

Lutheranism, 2:680–689, 681, 682
Benedictine communities, 2:812–813
colonial United States, 1:313, 317
doctrinal perspective, 2:686–689 doctrine of justification, 2:631–633, 686–688 ecumenical dialogue on Mary, 2:777
heresy and, 1:536–537
history of, 2:680–686
theology of the cross and, 1:374, 376

Luxembourg, 1:399, 441

LWF. See Lutheran World Federation

Lý dynasty, Buddhism and, 1:175

Lynch, Patrick (Bp. of Charleston), 1:40

Lynch v. Donnelly (1984), 1:337

Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association (1988), 1:332

Lyon, Council of (1245), 1:283

Lyon, Council of (1274), 1:366

M

Maastricht, Treaty of (1993), 1:441, 442, 443

Macarius the Egyptian, St., 2:802, 818

Maccabees, Books of, on afterlife, 1:20

Macedonia, European Union candidacy, 1:442

Machiavelli, Niccolo, 1:147, 148

Macintosh, United States v. (1931), 1:329

MacKillop, Mary Helen, St., 2:691–692

MAD (mutually assured destruction) doctrine, 1:75

Mādhyamika, 1:161–162

Madison, James, 1:320

Madonna with the Serpent (painting), 2:740

Magaña Servín, Luis, 1:50

Magi, story of, 2:721

Magic Circle (organization), 1:140

Magisterial documents, 1:4–5, 400, 401
See also specific documents

Maglione, Luigi (Card.), 1:344, 2:879, 1095

Magnificat, 2:722, 723–724

Maha Bodhi Society, 1:178

Mahānikaya School, 1:176

Mahātissa (monk), 1:163

Mahāvaṃsa (ancient text), 1:163

Mahāvihāra (monastery), 1:163

Mahāyāna Buddhism
Cambodia, 1:177
China, 1:19
history, 1:159, 161–162
Myanmar (Burma), 1:175
Sri Lanka, 1:163–164
Thailand, 1:176
Tibet, 1:172
Vietnam, 1:174, 175

Mahesh Yogi, Maharishi, 2:856

Mahinda (prince), 1:163

Maida, Adam (Card.), 2:911

Maignen, Charles (Abbot), 1:48

Maimonides, 1:20, 2:609, 610

Maine, legal considerations, 1:55, 324

Maior catechismus (Canisius), 1:218

Maistre, Joseph de, 1:304

Makemie, Francis, 1:314, 316

Male religious. See Religious orders of men

Malet, André (Abbot), 1:213

Malines Conversations (1921–1926), 1:305

Mallersdorf Sisters, 2:845

Malta, European Union membership, 1:442

Mamberti, Dominique (Abp.), 1:76

A Man for All Seasons (play), 2:830

Mandatum, academic, 1:429, 446, 2:692–694

Mane nobiscum domine (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 1:426

Di Manes (spirits), 1:17

Mangan, Joseph, 2:914

Manganiello, Teresa, Bl., 2:694–695

Manhattan Project, 1:78

Mann, Ambrose D., 1:40

Mann, Horace, 1:430

The Manner is Ordinary (LaFarge), 1:36

Mannion, M. Francis (Msgr.), 2:1017

Mannix v. Purcell (1888), 1:325

Mantovani, Maria Domenica, Bl., 2:695–696

Manuel II Paleologos (Byzantine emperor), 1:235

Manyanet y Vives, José, St., 1:551, 2:696–697

Mao Zedong, 1:358

Mapuche people, 2:842, 843

Mar Dinkha IV (Patriarch), 2:775–776

Marcel, Gabriel, 2:895–896

Marcellina Sisters, 1:137

Marcellus II (Pope), 1:289

Marcian (Byzantine emperor), 1:270

Marcion (theologian), 1:265

Marconi, Guglielmo, 2:697–698

Marcus Aurelius (emperor of Rome), 1:266, 267

Marello, Giuseppe (Bp. of Asti), St., 2:699

Margolies, Charlotte, 1:237

Maria Candida of the Eucharist, Bl., 2:699–700

María del Carmen of the Child Jesus, Bl., 2:703–704

María del Tránsito de Jesús Sacramentado, Bl., 2:704–705

Maria Giuseppina of Jesus Crucified, Bl., 2:700–701

Maria Maddalena della Passion, Bl., 2:701–702

Maria of the Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ, Bl., 2:705

Maria Teresa of Jesus, Bl., 2:702

Maria Teresa of St. Joseph, Bl., 2:702–703

Maria Theresa of Austria (empress), 1:102, 221

Marialis cultus (apostolic exhortation, Paul VI), 2:738, 744, 756, 763, 766–767, 775

Marian Fathers, 2:705–706, 886

Marian Year (1987–1988), 2:768

Marianites of Holy Cross, 2:706–707, 831

Mariano de la Mata Aparicio, Bl., 2:707

Marie-Céline de la Présentation, Bl., 2:707–708

Marie de Médicis (queen of France), 1:132

Marie Eugénie de Jésus (Mother), St., 1:73, 2:786–787

Marin-Sola, Francisco, 1:32

Marinelli, Paul J., 1:93, 94

Mariology, 1:426, 2:743–744, 762–763, 765–767

Marist Brothers martyrs, 1:473–474, 478

Maritain, Jacques, 1:6, 32, 236, 399, 2:896

Mark, Gospel according to, 2:599, 719–720, 991–992

Mark, St., 1:267

Mark (Catharist Bp.), 1:225

Mark of Aviano, Bl., 2:708–709

Markiewicz, Bronisław, Bl., 2:709

Marmion, Joseph Columba, 1:412

Maronite Church, 1:246, 2:819

Marr, Wilhelm, 1:57, 60, 2:620

Marranos, 1:59, 2:610, 611–612

Marriage

Biblical views, 1:243
conjugal relations, 1:27–28, 245
Knights of Columbus activism, 2:649 legal questions, 1:339
medieval Church, 1:276
Pius XII on, 1:27, 28
polygamy, 1:323
remarriage, 1:117, 245
same-sex marriage, 1:339
See also Married clergy

Married clergy
early church, 1:243–245
former Anglican priests, 1:52, 53
medieval church, 1:246–248
modern church, 1:248–251
New Testament views, 1:243

Marsh v. Chambers (1983), 1:337

Marshall, George C., 1:344

Marshall, John A. (Bp. of Burlington, VT), 2:988

Marshall Plan, 1:344, 441

Marsilius of Padua, 1:283

Martillo Morán, Narcisa de Jesús, St., 2:709–710

Martin, Céline, 2:710, 711, 712, 1059

Martin, Jacob, 1:327

Martin, Léonie, 2:710, 711, 712

Martin, Louis, Bl., 2:710–711, 712, 1059

Martin, Marie, 2:710, 711, 712, 1059, 1060

Martin, Marie-Zélie Guérin, Bl., 2:710, 711–712, 1059

Martin, Pauline, 2:710, 711, 1059, 1060

Martin, Ralph, 1:258–259

Martin I (Pope), 1:355, 365

Martin V (Pope), 1:113, 284

Martin of Tours, St., 1:269

Martin v. City of Struthers (1943), 1:330

Martinelli, Ignatius (Father), 2:1076

Martino, Renato (Abp.), 1:81

Martins, José Saraiva (Card.). See Saraiva Martins, José (Card.)

Martret Moles, Pere, Bl., 2:629

Martyrdom
as beatification criterion, 1:106, 108
cult of, 2:966
in early Church, 1:267
as sainthood criterion, 1:193, 195, 196, 197
See also specific martyrs

Marvelli, Alberto, Bl., 2:712–713

Marx, Karl, 1:356–357, 2:713–715

Marxism, 1:356–357, 2:713–717
anti-Catholicism and, 1:397–398
Bolshevism and, 1:142
Castro, Fidel Ruz and, 1:214
Chile, 1:26, 27
Communism and, 1:356–357, 2:714–717
Sartre, Jean-Paul involvement, 2:976

Marxism-Leninism, 1:357

Mary, Blessed Virgin
Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:32
Bérulle, Pierre de on, 1:133
Beauraing apparitions, 1:108–111
Cuauhtlatoatzin, Juan Diego apparitions, 1:377
Eucharist and, 1:426
Fátima apparitions, 1:303, 342
Galvão, Anthony of Saint Anne devotion, 1:492
Legion of Mary, 1:419–420
Lourdes apparitions, 1:128–130
luminous mysteries, 2:678–680, 679
Our Lady of All Nations apparitions, 2:873–874
Our Lady of Guadalupe and, 1:377–379, 378, 507–509, 508

Mary, Blessed Virgin, and ecumenical dialogue, 2:774–778

Mary, Blessed Virgin, devotion to, 1:303, 2:758–765, 759, 766–767

Mary, Blessed Virgin, in the Bible, 2:717–732, 718, 730*t*
Gospel according to John on, 2:725–727
Old Testament interpretation and, 2:722, 724, 725, 727, 728–729
Paul on, 2:717–719
Revelation on, 2:727–728
synoptic Gospels on, 2:719–725, 729–730

Mary, Blessed Virgin, in theology, 2:732–758, 740, 746
holiness of, 2:732–738 knowledge and faith of, 2:738–739 as Mediatrix of all Graces, 2:746, 746–754, 768, 770–771
Our Lady of All Nations apparitions and, 2:874
Protoevangelium of James on, 2:755, 918–921
relationship with the Church, 2:739–746 spiritual maternity of, 2:754–758, 762, 765–766

Mary, Blessed Virgin, papal Magisterium since Vatican II, 2:765–772

Mary, Blessed Virgin, queenship of, 2:772–774

Mary, Blessed Virgin, virginity of Biblical references, 2:721, 722, 723, 725, 730
Protoevangelium of James on, 2:918, 919, 920
theology of Mary and, 2:732, 741–742

Mary II (queen of England), 1:316, 317

Mary Magdalene of the Incarnation, Bl., 2:778–779

Mary of the Passion, 1:253–254

Mary Stuart (queen of Scotland), 1:457

Mary Tudor (queen of England), 1:3, 287

Marygrove College (Detroit, MI), 1:211

Maryland
colonial period, 1:54, 55, 317
disestablishment period, 1:320
public office religious tests repeal, 1:322
Toleration Acts of 1639 and 1649, 1:317, 2:1063–1064

Mason, George, 1:320

Mass, celebration of, 1:423, 424, 2:596, 688

Massachusetts
colonial period, 1:54, 56, 314–315
disestablishment period, 1:319
proselytizing and child labor laws, 1:330 public school Bible use, 1:324

Massachusetts, Prince v. (1944), 1:330

Massachusetts Bay Company Charter, 1:314

Massaia, Guglielmo (Card.), 1:11

Massignon, Louis, 1:230

Mastena, Maria Pia, Bl., 2:779–780

Master-servant relationships, slavery and, 2:1007–1008, 1009–1010

Mater Ecclesia (symbol), 1:275

Mater et magistra (encyclical, John XXIII), 1:74, 88, 306, 2:715

Material vs. formal sin, 2:995–997

Materialism, 1:125, 2:713–714, 894

Matilda of Tuscany, 1:201
Matter and Memory (Bergson), 1:126
Matthew, Gospel according to, 1:57–58, 2:599, 720–721, 991–992
Mattias, Maria de, St., 2:780–781, 916
Maurin, Peter, 1:236, 238
Maurras, Charles, 1:5–6, 7
Maximilian (emperor of Mexico), 1:39
Maximinus I Thrax (emperor of Rome), 1:267
Maxims of Christian Perfection (Rosmini-Serbati), 2:960, 962
Maximum illud (apostolic letter, Benedict XV), 1:306
Maximus the Confessor, St., 1:365, 2:1061–1062
May Laws (Germany) (1873), 1:138, 139
Mayer, Augustin (Card.), 1:423, 2:812
Mayflower Compact, 1:315
Maynooth, Synod of (1875), 1:220
Mazzini, Giuseppe, 1:96, 2:781–782, 1037
McAuley, Catherine (Mother), 1:302
McBrien, Richard (Father), 1:379, 2:694
McCaffrey, Edward T., 2:664
McCaffrey, John Henry, 1:220
McCarthy, Joseph, 1:239
McClafferty, John (Father), 2:664
McCloskey, John (Abp. of New York), 1:103
McCollum v. Board of Education, Illinois ex rel. (1948), 1:335
McCord, Philip, 1:510
McCormick, Vincentia (Sister), 1:370
McCreary County v. ACLU of Kentucky (2005), 1:338
McDevitt, John K., 2:648
McDonald, James G., 2:659
McGivney, Michael J. (Father), Ven., 2:646, 649
McGloin, Richard D. (Father), 2:631
McHale, John (Abp.), 1:220
McManus, Frederick R. (Msgr.), 2:782–783
McNair, Hunt v. (1973), 1:336
McNicholas, John T. (Abp.), 2:663
McQuaid, Bernard John (Bp. of Rochester, NY), 1:46, 430
McSweeney, Edward, 2:647
Mechanism, Bergson, Henri Louis on, 1:125, 126
Mecherzynski-Wiktor, Andrew, 1:263
Mediator, Jesus Christ as, 2:937–938
Mediator Dei (encyclical, Pius XII), 2:762, 908
Mediatrix of all Graces, Mary as, 2:746, 746–754, 768, 770–771
Medicinal penalties, excommunication and, 1:448–449
Medieval church history. See Church, history of, medieval Medina Estévez, Jorge (Card.), 1:393
Meditation, Hesychastic method, 2:816
Medulla theologiae moralis (Busenbaum), 1:33
Meek v. Pittenger (1975), 1:337
Meese, Edwin, III, 2:1084
Meiji period, Buddhism and, 1:169
Mein Kampf (Hitler), 2:615
Meir, Golda, 2:619
Meitner, Lise, 1:77
Melanchthon, Philip, 2:683, 686
Melchisedech (Biblical figure), 1:183
Melioramentum (Catharism), 1:226
Melkite Church, 1:246
Mémoires de guerre (de Gaulle), 1:391
Memorandum (d'Arcis), 2:991
Memores Domini, 1:496
Memorie utili di una vita disutile (Curci), 1:381
Memory and Reconciliation: The Church and the Faults of the Past (International Theological Commission), 1:308, 564
Men religious. See Religious orders of men
Menachery, John (Bp.), 1:439
Mendelssohn, Moses, 2:613
Meneguzzi, Liduina, Bl., 2:784
Menelik II (Emperor of Ethiopia), 1:11
Mengele, Josef, 1:88
Mennonites, 1:320
Mense maio (encyclical, Paul VI), 2:766
Menshevism, 1:142, 2:1027
Mental disabilities, group homes for people with, 1:67–69, 68, 2:865, 1074
Mental prayer, 1:32, 36
  See also Prayer
Mercedarian Missionaries of Berriz, 2:676
Mercier, Désiré Joseph (Card.), 2:752
Merciful Sisters of St. Gerard, Congregation of, 2:1052 Mercy, Divine, devotion to, 1:406–407
Mercy, redemption theology and, 2:931, 936
Mercy Sisters, 1:302
Mergens, Board of Education v. (1990), 1:333
Merici, Angela, St., 1:289
Merit, in redemption theology, 2:933
Merkert, Maria Luisa, Bl., 2:784–785
Merlo, Teresa, 1:24
Merovingian kingdoms, 1:273, 274–275
Merton, Thomas, 1:75
Merz, Ivan, Bl., 2:785–786
Mesarites, Nikolaos, 1:367
Mesopotamia, 1:18, 267, 2:607
Mesopotamian Church of the East, 1:8
Messalianism, 2:803, 804, 923
Messianic Age, 1:20
Messianism, 2:597, 603, 728–729, 937, 943
Messner, Reinhard, 1:541
Messori, Vittorio, 1:116
Metamorphoses (Apuleius), 1:18
Metaphysical Disputations (Súarez), 2:1044–1045
Metaphysics
  Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) on, 1:188–189
  Clarke, W. Norris work, 1:341–342
  personalism and, 2:896, 897
  Stein, Edith work, 2:1039–1040
  Súarez, Francisco work, 2:1044–1045

Metempsychosis, doctrine of, 1:16, 19
Methodists, 1:314, 319
Methodus confessionis seu verius doctrinae pietatisque christianae praecipuorum capitum epitome (Soto), 1:219
Metternich, Klemens Wenzel von, 1:298
Metzger, Yona (Rabbi), 2:595
The Mexican Empire and the Vatican (Blumberg), 1:39
Mexico
  apostolic delegates, 1:64
  Christian democratic movements, 1:397
  church-state relations, 1:39
  martyrs from, 1:1, 49–51, 2:927, 1019
  Our Lady of Guadalupe, 1:377–379, 378, 507–509, 508
  rising Catholic population, 1:311
Mey, Gustav, 1:220
Michael Cerularius (Patriarch), 1:366
Michael III (Byzantine emperor), 1:365
Michele Unia Youth Hostel, 2:1075
Michigan, 1:92–94, 323, 324
Middle Ages. See Church, history of, medieval Miglioli, Guido, 1:395
Miguel de Medina, 1:249
Milarepa (Indian god), 1:160
Milford Central School, Good News Club v. (2001), 1:333
Miller, Kerby A., 1:40
Miller v. Gable (1845), 1:326
Milleret, Marie Eugenie of Jesus, St., 1:73, 2:786–787
Milvian Bridge, Battle of (313), 1:267, 268
Mindon Min (king of Myanmar), 1:175
Mindszenty, József (Card.), 1:345
Minersville School District v. Gobitis (1940), 1:330
Ming dynasty, Buddhism and, 1:166
Mini-RFRAs, 1:333
Minimus catechismus (Canisius), 1:218
Ministry, 1:392, 393, 2:688–689, 865, 957
Minnesota, legal considerations, 1:323, 324
Minor catechismus (Canisius), 1:218
Minor habits, 2:815
The Miracle (film), 2:664
Miracles
  as beatification criterion, 1:106, 108, 196
  as canonization criterion, 1:196, 197–198
  as charism, 1:255, 256
Mirae caritatis (encyclical, Leo XIII), 1:353
Miranda prorsus (encyclical, Pius XII), 2:664
Mirari vos (encyclical, Gregory XVI), 1:96, 298, 299, 398, 440
Mission aid societies, 1:303
Mission of the Church, 1:232, 445
Missionaries of Charity, 2:787, 832
Missionaries of Charity Fathers, 2:787–791
Missionaries of Mary Immaculate and St. Catherine of Siena, 2:823
Missionaries of the Holy Face, 1:215
Missionaries of the Precious Blood, 1:180
Missionaries of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, 1:436, 472
Missionary Daughters of the Holy Family of Nazareth, 2:696
Missionary Order of Jesus and Mary, 1:572
Missionary Sisters of St. Peter Claver, 2:660–661, 791
Missionary Sisters of the Immaculate, Queen of Peace, 2:902
Missionary Sisters of Verona, founding, 1:351
Missionary Society of St. James, 1:302
Missionary work
  Alphonsus de Liguori, 1:31
  Comboni, Daniele, 1:351, 352
  early Church, 1:263–264, 267
  early modern Church, 1:292–293
  Guízar Valencia, Rafael, 1:513–514
  Janssen, Arnold, 2:579
  John Paul II support, 1:308
  John XXIII support, 1:306
  late modern Church, 1:304–305, 2:810, 811, 813
  medieval Britain, 1:273–274
  mission aid societies, 1:303
  Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, 2:965–966 salvation with the Church and, 2:973
  Society of the Divine Word, 1:408
  See also Evangelization
Mississippi, legal considerations, 1:322, 323
Missouri, legal considerations, 1:323
Missouri, University of, at Kansas City, 1:333
Mit brennender Sorge (encyclical, Pius XI), 2:791–793 nationalism and, 1:440
  Nazi response, 1:545, 2:791–792, 847
  vs. Pius XII diplomacy, 2:1095
  Reich Concordat and, 1:362, 455, 2:791
Mitchell v. Helms (2000), 1:337
Mitterand, François, 1:391
Mixed seminaries, 2:984
Moderator of the curia position, 1:406
Modern church history. See Church, history of, early modern (1500–1799); Church, history of, late modern (1800–present)
The Modern Disagreement between the Church and Italy (Curci), 1:381
The Modern Jesuit (Gioberti), 1:381
Modernism, 2:793–799, 794
  Americanism and, 1:49
  Gregory XVI and, 1:96
  as heresy, 1:540
  Neoscholasticism and, 2:852
  Pius X on, 1:401, 2:793, 795
Il Moderno Dissidio tra la Chiesa e l'Italia (Curci), 1:381
Modo di conversare continuamente ed alla familiare con Dio (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:32
Möhler, Johann Adam
  clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:250
  on communion of saints, 1:356
  scholarship of, 1:304
Molina, Luis de, 1:403, 2:1043
Molinos, Miguel de, 1:294, 538, 2:923, 924–925
Molla, Gianna Beretta, St., 2:799–800
Moltmann, Jürgen, 1:376
Moment-of-silence laws, 1:335
Monaghan, Thomas S., 1:92, 93, 94

Monastic breviaries, 1:156, 157

Monastic rule
- Augustinian rule, 1:279
- Basil's Rule, 1:269
- Buddhism, 1:160–161
- Franciscan rule, 1:480
- history, 1:269–270
- See also Benedictine Rule

Monastic schools, 1:280

Monasticism, 2:800–821
- Benedict of Nursia influence, 1:122–124
- Constantinople, 1:366–367
- early Church, 1:269–270, 2:800–806
- Eastern Church, 2:814–821
- Gregory I and, 1:272
- medieval Church, 1:274, 276, 279, 2:806–808
- modern Church, 1:302, 2:808–813
- Olivetan Benedictines, 1:124

Mondale, Walter, 1:379

Mongol period, Tibetan Buddhism, 1:171

Monita salutaria (Widenfeldt), 2:761

Monk, Maria, 1:56

Monks, Buddhist
- Cambodia, 1:177, 178
- China, 1:165
- India, 1:160–161
- Korea, 1:173
- Myanmar (Burma), 1:176
- Sri Lanka, 1:163, 164
- Thailand, 1:176–177
- Tibet, 1:170, 171–172
- Vietnam, 1:174

Monks vs. friars, 1:282

Monnet, Jean, 1:441

Mönnichs, Theodor, 1:221

Monogamy, early church, 1:244–245

Monophysitism, 1:270–271, 364, 2:814

Monothelitism, 1:365

Monroe Doctrine (1823), 1:44

Montaigne, Claude-Louis de, 1:32

Montana, Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323

Montenegro, European Union candidacy, 1:442

Montessori education, catechesis of the Good Shepherd, 1:499

Montfort, Louis-Marie Grignion de, St. See Grignion de Montfort, Louis-Marie, St.

Monti, Luigi Maria, Bl., 2:821–822

Montini, Giorgio, 1:371

Montini, Giovannai Battista (Card.). See Paul VI (Pope)

Montoya, Laura, Bl., 2:822–823

Montpellier, University of, 1:281

Montreal (Canada), Diocese of, 1:149, 150

Montségur Castle (France), 1:226

Montúfar, Alonso de (Abp. of Mexico), 1:508, 509

Monza, Luigi, Bl., 2:823–824

Mooney, Edward (Card.), 1:512

Moral causality of grace, 2:751

Moral Clarity in the Nuclear Age (Novak), 1:83

Moral judgment. See Judgment

Moral relativism, 1:339

Moral species of sin, 2:997–998

Moral theology, 1:33–34, 82–84, 2:914–915
- See also Cardinal virtues

Moral virtues. See Cardinal virtues

La Morale de Saint Thomas d'Aquin (Sertillanges), 1:34

Moralia (Gregory I), 1:206, 272

Morality
- atomic energy and weapons, 1:74–76, 79–84
- Bergson, Henri Louis on, 1:125, 126, 127
- Christian virtues and, 1:205, 206
- Denzinger documents on, 1:400
- redemption theology and, 2:941, 942–943
- sexual, 1:117, 338

Morality and Modern War (Murray), 1:84

Morals legislation, 1:338

More, Gertrude, 1:100

More, Sir Thomas, St., 2:824–831, 828, 829
- Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith on, 1:339
- Henry VIII and, 1:2, 3, 3, 2:825–830
- response to Luther, 1:288

Moreau, Basil Anthony, Bl., 2:831–832
- Holy Cross founding, 1:548, 550, 551, 2:831
- Marianites of Holy Cross, 2:706

Mormon Church, 1:323–324

Morocco, Jewish history, 2:615

Morone, Giovanni, 1:289

Morris, Gibson v. (1903), 1:326

Morrison v. Sadler (2003), 2:1019

Morse, Samuel F. B., 1:56

Mortal sins, 2:994, 996–997, 998, 1000–1001

Mortara, Edgardo, 2:592

Morton, John (Card.), 2:824

Mosaic Law, 2:606, 717

Moses Ben Maimon. See Maimonides

Mother Church (symbol), 1:275

The Mother of the Little Flower (Martin), 2:712

Mother of the Saints (instruction, Congregation for the Causes of Saints), 1:107, 198–199

Mother Teresa of Calcutta, Bl., 2:787–790, 832–833, 833

Motion Picture Production Code, 2:663

Motion pictures, regulation of, 2:662–665

Motive, in sin, 2:998

Motu proprios
- Ecclesia Dei (John Paul II), 1:423
- Ecclesiae unitatem (Benedict XVI), 1:119, 424
- Postquam apostolicis litteris (Pius XII), 2:817
- Sanctitas clarior (Paul VI), 1:196, 197
- Summorum pontificum (Benedict XVI), 1:118, 424

Moulin, Jean, 1:398

Mounier, Emmanuel, 1:236, 399, 2:895

Mount Athos monasteries, 2:815, 816, 817

Mount Saint Mary's College (Emmitsburg, MD), 2:984

Mouvement Républicain Populaire (France), 1:300

Moynihan, Daniel Patrick, 1:432

MRP (Popular Republican Movement) (France), 1:399

Mueller v. Allen (1983), 1:337

Mug, Mary Theodosia (Sister), 1:510

Muhlenberg, Henry Melchoir, 2:684

Mulieris dignitatem (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 2:727, 735, 736, 744, 768
Mummification, 1:18
Munificentissimus Deus (apostolic constitution, Pius XII), 2:908
Muñoz, Juan Bautista (Father), 1:377
Muraturion canon, 1:265
Murdock v. Pennsylvania (1943), 1:330
Murray, John Courtney, 1:83, 84
Murri, Romolo, 2:795, 797, 798
Music, Benedict XVI on, 1:118
Muslims. See Islam
Musnier, François, 2:997
Mussolini, Benito, 2:834, 834–838
  conquest of Ethiopia, 1:11, 2:659
  d'Annunzio, Gabriele and, 1:388
  fascism and, 1:300, 396, 455, 456, 2:835–837
  Partito Popolare Italiano and, 1:398
  Pius XII and, 2:837, 850, 1092, 1093
Muttathupandathu, Alphonsa, St., 2:838–839
Mutual interchange, in communion of saints, 1:353–354
Mutually assured destruction doctrine, 1:75
Myanmar (Burma), Buddhism in, 1:175–176
Mystagogic catechisms, 1:216
Mysterium Ecclesiae (declaration, Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 2:651
Mystery religions, 1:17
Mystici Corporis Christi (encyclical, Pius XII), 1:412, 2:756, 908, 1095 Mysticism
  charisms and, 2:789–790
  divinization doctrine and, 1:411, 412
  Emmerick, Anna Katharina, 1:435
  New Age movement and, 2:855, 857, 858
  Nouwen, Henri on, 2:865
  pseudo-mysticism, 1:35–36
  quietism and, 2:924
  rapture and, 2:928
  theology of the cross and, 1:376
Myth of the Twentieth Century (Rosenberg), 1:455

N

Nacional Defensora de la Libertad Religiosa, 1:50
NADEO (National Association of Diocesan Ecumenical Officers), 1:234
Nāgājuna, 1:161
Nagasaki, Japan, atomic bombing, 1:77, 78, 79
The Naked Public Square: Religion and Democracy in America (Neuhaus), 2:981
Namuncurá, Zepherin, Bl., 2:842–843
Nantes, Edict of (1598), 1:292, 2:843–845, 844
Naples, Italy, church-state relations, 1:30
Napoléon I (emperor of France), 1:102, 221, 297, 2:1035–1036, 1037
Napoléon III (emperor of France), 1:39
Nara period, Buddhism and, 1:167
Nardini, Paul Josef, Bl., 2:845–846
Nascimbeni, Giuseppe (Father), Bl., 2:695
Nasir, al-Malik an- (Algerian leader), 1:230
Nasrallah, Hasan (Sheik), 2:619
Nasser, Gamal Abdel, 1:65, 2:617
National Advisory Council, 1:191
National Association of Diocesan Ecumenical Officers (NADEO), 1:234
National Catholic Educational Association (NCEA), 1:72, 427, 431, 2:986
National Catholic Office for Motion Pictures (NCOMP), 2:664
National Catholic Reporter, 1:258
National Catholic Welfare Conference, 1:303
National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect, 1:140
National Conference of Catholic Bishops (NCCB), 1:191, 446, 2:744, 986–987
National Council of Catholic Youth, 1:239
National Cursillo Convention (1966), 1:258
National CYO Foundation, 1:239
National Federation for Catholic Youth Ministry, 1:239
National League for the Defense of Religious Freedom (Mexico), 1:50
National Pastoral Councils, 1:191–192
National Review (journal), 1:158
National Socialism (Germany). See Nazism Nationalism
  Action Française, 1:5, 6
  European integration and, 1:440, 441
  fascism and, 1:452–454
  liberalism and, 2:665
  U.S., 1:56
Native Americans, 1:242, 332–333, 2:1046
Nativism, anti-Catholicism and, 1:56, 57
Nativity, 2:724, 918, 919
NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization), 1:344, 399, 2:841–842
Natural law, 2:853–854, 1045, 1053
Natural theology, 1:376
Nature, 1:165, 166, 294, 2:939–940, 943
The Nature of the Contemporary Catholic University (Hesburgh), 1:72
Nausea, Friedrich (Bp.), 1:219, 288
Nazarene Sisters, 1:422
Nazism
  Anschluss, 2:847–848
  Benedict XVI and, 1:114
  Christian democratic movements and, 1:396
  fascism and, 1:452, 454, 455–456
  Galen, Clemens August Graf von and, 1:489
  League of Nations and, 2:659–660
  Mit brennender Sorge and, 2:791, 792
  Mussolini, Benito and, 2:834, 837
  Pius XII and, 1:343, 2:907–908, 1092, 1093, 1094, 1095–1096
  Reich Concordat, 1:360–362, 454, 455, 545
  Roma persecution, 2:956
  Stalin, Josef and, 2:1028
  Stein, Edith and, 2:1039
  Waldheim, Kurt and, 2:591, 1083
  See also Hitler, Adolf; Holocaust (Shoah)

Nazism, papal response to, 2:846–851

NCCB. See National Conference of Catholic Bishops

NCEA. See National Catholic Educational Association

NCOMP (National Catholic Office for Motion Pictures), 2:664

Nearer My God: An Autobiography of Faith (Buckley), 1:158

Nebraska, 1:152–154, 153, 323, 324

Necessary self-defense principle, 1:80

Nelson, Smith v. (1846), 1:326

Nelson v. Benson (1873), 1:326

Neo-atheism, 2:981

Neocaesarea, Synod of (ca. 314), 1:243

Neoplatonism, 1:17, 2:1061

Neo-Pythagoreanism, 1:17

Neoscholasticism and Neothomism, 2:851–855

Nepotism, early modern Church, 1:291

Nergal (Mesopotamian netherworld), 1:18

Nero (emperor of Rome), 1:264, 266

Nestorius of Constantinople (Patriarch), 1:270

Netanyahu, Benjamin, 2:882, 883

Netherlands
- Belgian independence, 1:95
- Christian democratic movements, 1:394, 395, 396, 399
- early modern Church, 1:295
- European integration, 1:441
- Marranos immigration, 2:612
- Our Lady of All Nations apparitions, 1:69, 2:873–874
- Spanish Netherlands revolt, 1:292

Neueste Theologie de Christentums (Galura), 1:220

Neuhaus, Richard John, 2:981

Neuner, Josef, 1:401, 421

Neutral principles of law, 1:331

Neutrality vs. impartiality, papacy and, 2:1088–1089, 1092–1096

Nevada, Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323

Nevado, Manuel, 1:438

New Act of Settlement (1696), 1:316

New Age movement, the Catholic Church and, 2:855–859, 856

The New Anti-Catholicism: The Last Acceptable Predjudice (Jenkins), 1:57

New Catholic Encyclopedia, Claudia Carlen work, 1:211

New Deal reforms, 1:37

New England, 1:54–57, 314–316, 318–319, 2:1013
- See also specific states

New Evangelization (Catholic Youth Organization), 1:239, 240

New Eve. See Eve, Mary as new

New Hampshire
- anti-Catholicism, 1:55
- Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323
- colonial period, 1:315–316
- disestablishment period, 1:319
- public office religious tests repeal, 1:322

New Hampshire Toleration Act (1819), 1:319

The New Italy and the Old Zealots (Curci), 1:381

New Jersey, 1:55, 316, 319, 322

New Laws for the Causes of Saints (Congregation for the Causes of Saints), 1:107

New Left (1960s), liberalism and, 2:667

New Mexico, legal considerations, 1:323, 324

New Religions (Japan), 1:169

New Rochelle, NY, Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:549, 550

New Testament
- afterlife views, 1:14, 21, 22, 527
- canon formation, 1:265
- Catharism and, 1:226
- celibacy, 1:243
- charism references, 1:254–255
- communion of saints and, 1:354
- deaconess references, 1:392
- Devil references, 1:403–404
- divinization doctrine and, 1:410
- on excommunication, 1:447–448
- on Hell, 1:518, 520
- on heresy, 1:532
- Jewish-Catholic relations and, 2:580, 598–599, 601
- Lutheran perspective, 2:686, 687
- on Mary, 2:758, 773, 774
- on new covenant, 2:601
- on redemption, 2:931–932
- on slavery, 2:1006, 1007, 1011

New theology movement, 2:951–952

New York Act of Establishment (1683), 1:319

New York State
- anti-Catholicism, 1:54, 56
- Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323
- church property dispute, 1:331
- colonial period, 1:316
- disestablishment period, 1:319
- kosher laws, 1:329
- public school religious practices, 1:324

The New York Times, 2:792

Newdow, Elk Grove Unified School District v. (2004), 1:338

Newman, John Henry (Card.), 1:202, 304

The Newman Guide to Choosing a Catholic College (Cardinal Newman Society), 1:202

Nicaea, First Council of (325), 1:244, 268, 363, 392

Nican Mopohua (text), 1:377

Nicaragua, Ave Maria University, 1:92

Nicene Creed, redemption theology and, 2:933

Nicetas (Catharist Bp.), 1:225

Nichiren School, 1:168, 169

Nicholas I (Pope), 1:365

Nicholas of Cusa, 1:415

Nichols, Vincent Gerard (Abp. of Westminster), 1:52

Nicoli, Giuseppina, Bl., 2:859

De Nieuwe Katechismus (Holland), 1:222

Nihil obstat declarations, 1:199, 558, 2:692

Nikāya (Buddhism), 1:164

Nilus Sorsky, St., 2:759–760, 820

1960s culture, Catholic education and, 1:428

Nirmāṇakāya (Buddhism), 1:162

Nirvāṇa, 1:19, 161, 162

Nitria (monastic community), 2:802

Noah, covenant with God, 2:601–602, 729

Nobili, Roberto de, 1:293

Nobunaga, Oda, 1:169

Nogaret, Guillaume de, 1:51

Nominalism, 2:859–863

Non abbiamo bisogno (encyclical, Pius XI), 1:455, 2:836

Non debet reprehensible (apostolic constitution, Innocent VIII), 1:203

Non expedit policy, 1:381, 394, 455, 2:864

Non licet, 1:381, 2:864

Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), 1:64, 78–79, 81

Noncombatant immunity principle, 1:75, 81, 82, 83, 84

Non-violence, Catholic Worker Movement and, 1:238

Norbert of Xanten, St., 1:279

Noris, Henry, 1:32

Normae servandae in Inquisitionibus ab Episcopis faciendis in Causis Sanctorum (Congregation for the Causes of Saints), 1:196

Norman architecture, 1:279–280

Norms to be observed in constructing the ordinary processes in historical causes (Pius XI), 1:196

North Africa, 1:267, 274

North America, 1:293, 2:810, 1012–1013
See also Canada; United States (U.S.)

North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), 1:344, 399, 2:841–842

North Carolina, 1:55, 314, 320, 322

North Dakota, Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323

North Korea, Communism in, 1:358–359

Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association, Lyng v. (1988), 1:332

Norway, European integration, 1:441

Nosiglia, Cesare (Abp.), 1:451

Nostis et nobiscum (encyclical, Pius IX), 1:360

Nostra aetate (declaration, Vatican Council II)
anti-Semitism repudiation, 1:59, 61, 307, 2:582–584
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:230–231, 232, 233

La Nostra Famiglia, 2:823

A Note on Ambiguities Contained in 'Reflections on Covenant and Mission' (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 2:596

Note on the Expression "Sister Churches" (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 2:1002–1003

Notes on Pastoral Theology (Alberione), 1:24

Notes on the Correct Way to Present the Jews and Judaism in Preaching and Catechesis in the Roman Catholic Church (Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews), 2:584, 594

Nothing Sacred (television show), 1:229

Nothingness, Sartre, Jean-Paul on, 2:977–978

Notification on women as ordained deacons (joint document), 1:393

Notre Dame, IN, Congregation of Holy Cross, 1:549, 550

Notre-Dame (Paris), 1:280

Notre Dame University, 1:258, 379–380, 446

Nouvelle théologie, 2:852–853

Nouwen, Henri Josef Machiel, 2:864–866

Novak, Michael, 1:75, 83, 566

Novatian (Antipope), 1:267

Novo millennio ineunte (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 1:425

NPT (Non-Proliferation Treaty), 1:64, 78–79, 81

Nuclear chain reactions, 1:77, 78

Nuclear deterrence, 1:75–76, 81–82, 83–84

Nuclear Deterrence, Morality and Realism (Finnis, Boyle and Grisez), 1:84

Nuclear fission and fusion, 1:77

Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), 1:64, 78–79, 81

Nuclear weapons. See Atomic weapons

Nulla celebrior (apostolic letter, Pius IX), 2:580

Numerical distinction of sins, 2:997, 998

Nuncios, 1:62, 63

Nuns, 1:163, 171–172, 279, 324

La Nuova Italia ed I vecchi Zelanti (Curci), 1:381

Nyingma School, 1:171

Nyquist, Committee for Public Education v. (1973), 1:337

O

Obama, Barack, 1:446, 2:883

Obedience, as theme of redemption theology, 2:932

Objective responsibility for sin, 2:995–996

Oblate Sisters of St. Francis de Sales, 1:97

Oblates of St. Joseph, 2:699, 867

Oblation Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, 1:155–156

O'Brien, Edwin (Abp.), 1:82, 2:988

Observants (Franciscans), 1:282, 291

Ochino, Bernadino, 1:291

O'Collins, Gerald, 1:421

O'Connell, Daniel, 1:299, 569, 569–570

O'Connell, Denis Joseph (Rector), 1:46, 47, 48

O'Connor, John (Card.), 1:379

O'Connor, Sandra Day, 1:337

Octobri mense (papal bull, Leo XIII), 2:751

Octogesima adveniens (apostolic letter, Paul VI), 1:209

ODCA (Christian Democratic Organization of America), 1:396–397

OEEC (Organization for European Economic Co-operation), 1:441

Office of Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 1:233, 234

Official candidates, European Union, 1:442

Ofili, Chris, 1:229

Oglethorpe, James, 1:321

Ohio, public school Bible use, 1:324

Okelo, Daudi, Bl., 1:571, 2:867–868

Oklahoma, legal considerations, 1:323, 324

Old Bolsheviks, 1:143

Old Catholics, 1:304, 539

Old Testament
afterlife views, 1:14, 524–527
canon formation, 1:265
on cardinal virtues, 1:206
Catharism and, 1:225, 226
Devil references, 1:404
divinization doctrine and, 1:410

queen mother role, 2:772–773
redemption theology and, 2:931
on slavery, 2:1005–1006, 1007, 1011
on virginity, 1:243, 248, 2:741

Olier, Jean Jacques, 1:292, 2:983

Oliveira Paixão, Maria José de, 1:351

Olivetan Benedictines, 1:124–125, 2:1064

O'Malley, Sean (Card.), 1:229

Omission, sins of, 2:996

On Atheistic Communism (encyclical, Pius XI). See Divini Redemptoris (encyclical, Pius XI)

On Capital and Labor (encyclical, Leo XIII). See Rerum novarum (encyclical, Leo XIII)

On Certain Questions Regarding Eschatology (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 1:522

On Christian Education (encyclical, Pius XI). See Divini illius magistri (encyclical, Pius XI)

On Establishing Universal Peace in Truth, Justice, Charity and Liberty (encyclical, John XXIII). See Pacem in terris (encyclical, John XXIII)

On Human Work (encyclical, John Paul II). See Laborem exercens (encyclical, John Paul II)

On Liberalism and Religious Indifferentism (encyclical, Gregory XVI). See Mirari vos (encyclical, Gregory XVI)

On Peace and Christian Reconciliation (encyclical, Benedict XV), 2:658

On Promoting Biblical Studies (encyclical, Pius XII). See Divino afflante spiritu (encyclical, Pius XII)

On Reconstruction of the Social Order (encyclical, Pius XI). See Quadragesimo anno (encyclical, Pius XI)

On the Beatification of the Servants of God and the Canonization of the Blessed (Lambertini), 1:107, 195

On the Celibacy of Priests (encyclical, Paul VI), 1:307

On the Church in the Pontifical States (encyclical, Pius IX), 1:360

On the Development of Peoples (encyclical, Paul VI). See Populorum progressio (encyclical, Paul VI)

On the Errors of Lamennais (encyclical, Gregory XVI). See Singulari nos (encyclical, Gregory XVI)

On the Eucharist in Its Relationship to the Church (encyclical, John Paul II). See Ecclesia de Eucharistia (encyclical, John Paul II)

On the Jews and Their Lies (Luther), 1:59

On the Missions, Native Clergy, and Lay Participation (encyclical, John XXIII), 1:306

On the Moral and Civil Primacy of the Italians (Gioberti), 1:380

On the Regulation of Birth (encyclical, Paul VI). See Humanae vitae (encyclical, Paul VI)

On the Restoration of Christian Philosophy (encyclical, Leo XIII). See Aeterni patris (encyclical, Leo XIII)

On the Soul (Súarez), 2:1045

On the Unity of Human Society (encyclical, Pius XII). See Summi pontificatus (encyclical, Pius XII)

Onassis, Jacqueline, 2:643

Ontological personalism, 2:895–896

Opera dei Congressi (Italy), 1:394, 395, 398

Opera dommatica contro gli eretici pretesi riformati (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33

Operation Cast Lead (2008–2009), 2:620

Operation Peace for Galilee (1982), 2:619

Operative powers, virtues and, 1:205

Opere et caritate (Pius XII), 2:792

Oppenheimer, Robert, 1:78

Optatam totius (decree, Vatican Council II), 2:986

Opus catechisticum (Busaeus), 1:219

Opus Dei, 1:437, 484, 2:868–869, 912

Opus tripertitum (Gerson), 1:218

Orange, Council of (441), 1:246

Oratory (Ave Maria University), 1:93, 94

Oratory of Divine Love, 1:289

Oratory of Jesus (Paris, France), 1:132, 133

Orcus (world of the dead), 1:17

Order of the Holy Trinity martyrs, 1:474–475

Order of the Immaculate Conception, 1:492

Order of the Knights Hospitaller, 1:278

Order of the Knights Templar, 1:278, 279, 2:990

Order of the Star-Spangled Banner, 1:56

Order of United Americans, 1:56

Orders, religious. See Religious communities

Ordinals (books), 1:156

Ordinances of Saint-Cloud (France), 1:95

Ordinaries, Anglicanorum coetibus and, 1:53

Ordinary Process (sainthood), 1:195, 196

Ordinatio sacerdolatis (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 1:116–117

Ordination, of deaconesses, 1:392, 393

Oregon, 1:37, 323, 333, 431

Organization for European Economic Co-operation (OEEC), 1:441

Oriental Churches, Congregation of, 1:64

Orientalium ecclesiarum (decree, Vatican Council II), 1:307

Origen Adamantius
on celibacy, 1:244
devotion to Mary, 2:759
on divinization, 1:411, 412
on Hell, 1:520, 521
monasticism development, 2:801
queenship doctrine, 2:773

Original sin
Augustine on, 2:973
defined, 2:994
limbo and, 2:668, 669
Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio on, 2:960
Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre on, 2:1056–1057
theology of Mary and, 2:732

Orione, Luigi, St., 2:869–870, 1020

Orléans, Council of (537), 1:246

Orozco, Alfonso de, St., 2:870–871

Orphism, afterlife views, 1:16

Orthodox Church in Greece, 1:393

Orthodox Judaism, 2:618–619

Orthodoxy, Lutheran, 2:684

Ortiz Real, Piedad de la Cruz, Bl., 2:871–872

Osiris (Egyptian god), 1:18

Oslo Accords (1993), 1:65, 2:881

L'Osservatore Romano (Vatican newspaper)
Action Française and, 1:6
American Civil War, 1:41
anti-Semitism in, 1:60
battle of Adowa, 1:11
establishment, 1:5
on Küng, Hans, 1:54
on League of Nations, 2:658–659
on World War I, 2:1091

Ossius. See Hossius (Ossius) (Bp. of Córdoba)

Ostpolitik, 1:347

Otranto, Italy, martyrs of, 2:872–873

Otto III (Holy Roman emperor), 1:414, 2:1031

Otto of Constance, 1:247

Ottoman Empire, 1:279, 2:611–612, 659, 877

Ouellette, Marc (Card.), 1:69

Our Family Association, 2:823, 824

Our Father (prayer). See Lord's Prayer

Our Lady of All Nations, 1:69, 2:873–874

Our Lady of Beauraing (Belgium), 1:108–111

Our Lady of Calvary, Congregation of the Sisters of, 1:145

Our Lady of Guadalupe. See Guadalupe, Our Lady of

Our Lady of Zion (France), 1:464, 465

Our Sunday Visitor's 2010 Catholic Almanac, 1:311

Outrage at Anagni (1303), 1:51

Overberg, Bernard von, 1:220

Owens, Joseph, 2:874–876

Oxford University, 1:281

Ozanam, Antoine Frédéric, 1:303

P

Pace, Edward Aloysius, 1:46

Pacelli, Eugenio (Card.). See Pius XII (Pope)

Pacem, Dei munus pulcherrimum (encyclical, Benedict XV), 2:658

Pacem in terris (encyclical, John XXIII), 1:75, 80, 210, 306, 2:715

Pachomius, St., 1:269, 2:801–802

Packwood, Robert, 1:432

Pactum Anagninum, 1:51

Padberg, Rudolf, 1:218

Padilla Gómez, José Dionisio Luis, 1:50

Padmasambhava (Guru Rinpoche), 1:170

Paganism, early Church and, 1:269

País, Frank, 1:214

Palamas, Gregory, St., 1:411, 2:816

Palestine, 2:877–883, 882
early Church, 1:263
Israel establishment and, 2:615, 616, 877–879
Jewish immigration, 2:614
monasticism development, 2:803, 814, 818
See also Arab-Israeli conflict

Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), 1:65, 66, 2:616, 617, 881, 882

Palestine National Council (PNC), 1:65

Pali Canon (Buddhism), 1:161, 163–164

Palladius, St., 1:272

Palmentieri, Ludovico da Casoria, Bl., 2:1081

Palomino Yenes, Eusebia, Bl., 2:883–884

Pamphili, Giuseppe Maria Doria, 1:42

PAN (Partido Acción Nacional), 1:397

Panis Caritatis project, 1:371–372

Papacy
allocutions, 1:27–28
American Civil War stance, 1:38–41, 39
anti-Judaism and, 1:58–59
anti-Semitism and, 1:60–61
Avignon Papacy, 1:283, 2:1032
Bismarck, Otto von and, 1:138–139
caesaropapism, 1:183–185
canonization and, 1:194–195, 196, 197, 199
Charlemagne and, 1:275–276
Christian democratic movements and, 1:394–397
La Civiltà Cattolica and, 1:381
Cold War and, 1:342–349
Communism and, 1:342–349, 454, 2:841–842
crowning of emperors and, 1:276
Curci, Carlo Maria and, 1:380–382
diplomatic traditions, 1:62–64
Donation of Constantine and, 1:275, 413–416, 414
early modern Church, 1:286, 288, 290, 291–292, 294–295
European Union and, 1:440, 440–444
fascism and, 1:454, 455–457
Franco, Francisco and, 1:483–484
Frankish kingdom and, 2:1030–1031
Gallicanism and, 1:490–491
Gregorian University and, 1:506, 507
history, 1:267
Irish nationalism and, 1:568–571, 569
Jesuits and, 1:290
Judaism and, 2:581
Knights of Columbus and, 2:649
Küng, Hans and, 2:650, 651
late modern Church, 1:297, 298, 301
League of Nations and, 1:440, 2:656, 656–660 medieval role, 1:273, 276–277, 282–285
NATO and, 2:841–842
physical attack, as excommunicable offense, 1:449
Reich Concordat, 1:360–362, 454, 455, 545
Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio and, 2:960
sainthood process, 1:108, 197, 199
on slavery, 2:1013, 1014
Spanish religious persecution and, 2:1022, 1023, 1024
Stalin, Josef and, 2:1028–1029
States of the Church and, 1:298, 2:1030–1039
U.S. relations, 1:42, 45
Vatican Radio, 2:697–698
World War I and, 2:656–657, 1087–1092, 1088
Zionism and, 2:877–879
See also Holy See; specific popes

The Papacy, the Jews, and the Holocaust (Coppa), 1:60

Papal allocution, 1:27–28

Papal briefs, Cum alias ad apostolatus (Innocent XII), 2:923

Papal bulls
Apostolicae curae (Leo XIII), 1:53
Auctorem Fidei (Pius VI), 2:669
Cum postquam (Leo X), 2:681
Exsurge, Domine (Leo X), 1:288, 2:682

Gloriosae Dominae (Benedict XVI), 2:751
Inter gravissimas (Gregory XIII), 1:502, 503
Octobri mense (Leo XIII), 2:751
Post diuturnas (Pius VII), 2:1035
Super specula (Honorius III), 2:983
Ubi majus periculum (Gregory X), 2:885
Unam Sanctam (Boniface VIII), 1:51, 283

Papal Concert to Commemorate the Holocaust (1994), 1:91

Papal elections, 2:884–886

Papal Encyclicals (Carlen), 1:211

Papal infallibility. See Infallibility, papal

Papal nuncios, 1:62, 63

Papal representatives. See Apostolic delegates

Papal States. See States of the Church

Papczyński, Stanislaus of Jesus and Mary, Bl., 2:705, 886

Papen, Franz von, 1:361

Paphnutius the Bishop, St., 1:244

Papo-caesaria, 1:183

Pappalardo, Salvatore (Card.), 2:1025

Paquay, Valentin, Bl., 2:887

Paradise. See Heaven

Paraguay, early modern Church missions, 1:293

Paramārtha (translator), 1:165

Di Parentes (spirits), 1:17

Paris, Treaty of (1951), 1:441

Paris, University of, 1:281, 282

Paris Peace Conference (1919), 1:440, 2:1091

Parish schools, 1:427, 430

Parishes, diocesan groups, 1:405

Parliamentary Gallicanism, 1:491

Parochial schools absorption into public schools, 1:324
Bennett Law effects, 1:431
Blaine Amendment and, 1:322–323, 329
parish schools, 1:427, 430
public funding, 1:334, 336–337

Paroles d'un croyant (Lamennais), 1:96, 398

Parousia, 1:21, 243, 520, 521

Parsimony, nominalism and, 2:861–862

Participation, divinization doctrine and, 1:410, 411, 412

Particulars, nominalism and, 2:859–860, 861

Partido Acción Nacional (PAN), 1:397

Partido Demócrata Cristiano (PDC), 1:397

Partido Popular Cristiano (PPC), 1:397

Partido Revolucionario Institucional (PRI), 1:397

Parties, Christian Democratic. See Democratic parties, Christian

Partito Popolare Italiano (PPI), 1:395–396, 398, 454, 455, 2:835

Parvus catechismus (Canisius), 1:218

Pascendi dominici gregis (encyclical, Pius X)
on Modernism, 1:401, 505, 2:793, 795, 797–798
Neoscholasticism and, 2:853

Paschal catechisms, 1:216

Paschal Supper, 1:9

Pasquale, Umberto (Father), 1:388

The Passion of the Christ (film), 1:229

Pastor bonus (apostolic constitution, John Paul II), 1:203

Pastoral Blatt (periodical), 1:103

Pastoral councils, diocesan, 1:406

Pastoral formation, in priestly formation, 2:988

Pastoral Liturgy (Jungmann), 1:218

Pastoral provision of 1980 (John Paul II), 1:52, 53

Pastoral theology, 2:865

Pastorelle Sisters, 1:24

Pastores dabo vobis (apostolic exhortation, John Paul II), 2:987

Pastors, Lutheran, 2:689

Pater (prayer). See Lord's Prayer

Patriarchal school (Constantinople), 1:367

Patriarchate of Jerusalem, 2:579–580

Patriarch(s), 1:270, 364–365, 365–366
See also specific patriarchs

Patrici, Patricio, 1:124

Patrick, St., 1:272

Patristic period
catechism development, 1:216
communion of saints, 1:354–355
excommunication, 1:448
Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:581
queenship doctrine, 2:773
theological development, 1:270, 2:935

Patrologie et histoire de la théologie (Cayré), 1:32

Patuzzi, Giovanni Vincenzo, 1:33, 34

Paul, St.
Benedict XVI commemoration, 1:310
on celibacy and marriage, 1:243, 244, 245, 246
on charisms, 1:255
on Christian virtues, 1:206, 207
deaconess references, 1:392
on divinization, 1:410
evangelization work, 1:263–264
on Jews, 1:58, 2:583, 598–599
martyrdom, 1:264
on Mary, 2:717–719, 753
on rapture, 2:928, 929
on sin, 2:938
on slavery, 2:1006, 1007, 1011
Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre influence, 2:1058

Paul III (Pope), 1:288, 289, 290, 291, 2:683

Paul IV (Pope), 1:51, 289, 2:933

Paul V (Pope), 1:132, 291, 2:1043

Paul VI (Pope), 2:1003
aggiornamento, 1:23
Alberione, James and, 1:24
allocutions, 1:27
arms control work, 1:75, 80
on Benedict of Nursia, 1:124
Benedict XVI and, 1:116
Catholic Charismatic Renewal support, 1:259
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:230, 232
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:250
Cold War and, 1:347
Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith establishment, 1:115
on contraception, 1:307, 383
Cor Unum founding, 1:371
democratic participation, 1:88, 307
on development, 1:208–209
on the Devil, 1:404
devotion to Mary, 2:763
Divini illius magistri and, 1:409
on economics, 2:716
on ecumenism, 2:775

on ethics, 1:209
feast of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, 1:111
Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and, 1:461
Franco, Francisco and, 1:484
on Hell, 1:522
Ignatius of Santhià beatification, 1:557
on indulgences, 1:354
International Theological Commission establishment, 1:562
Janssen, Arnold beatification, 2:579
Marian doctrine, 2:766–767
on Mary, 2:735, 736, 738, 744
Palestine administration, 2:881
papal elections, 2:885
Pius XII citations, 1:27
pontificate of, 1:306–307
Roman Curia reform, 1:203
Sacred Congregation of Rites division, 1:107
sainthood process, 1:196, 197
on sister churches, 2:1003
Spanish Civil War martyrs beatification, 2:1024
spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:756–757
Willebrands, Johannes and, 2:1086

Pauline Family, 1:24, 495

Pauline Fathers and Brothers, 2:887

Paulines (Society of St. Paul), 1:24, 494–495

Paulists, 1:48

Paulus Silentiarius, 1:367

Pavoni, Lodovico, Bl., 2:888

Payne, Stanley G., 2:1022

Le Pays et le Gouvernement (Lamennais), 1:97

Pázmány, Peter (Card.), 1:292

PCA (Production Code Administration), 2:664

PCID (Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue), 1:231, 2:858

PDC (Partido Demócrata Cristiano), 1:397

Peace, John XXIII on, 1:306

Peace of Augsburg (1555), 2:682, 683

Peace of Cambrai (1529), 2:826

Peace of Westphalia (1648), 1:292

Pechersky Laura (monastery), 2:819–820

Pecorari, Cesare (Msgr.), 1:4

Pedro de Betancourt, St., 1:135–136

Peerdeman, Ida, 2:873–874

Pegis, Anton, 1:341

Peixoto, Augusto da Silva, 2:634

Pelagius I (Pope), 1:271

Pelagius II (Pope), 1:272

Pelczar, Józef Sebastian, St., 2:888–889

Peletier, Jean, 1:249

Pella, Giuseppe, 1:399

Pellesi, Maria Rosa, Bl., 2:889–890

Penacca, Pierino, 2:870

Penal substitution theory, 2:943–944

Penance, sacramental, 1:448

Pendinelli, Stefano (Abp. of Otranto), 2:872

Penn, William, 1:316, 319

Pennsylvania
anti-Catholicism, 1:55
battle of Gettysburg, 1:39
Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323
disestablishment period, 1:318, 319–320 display of religion cases, 1:337 flag saluting case, 1:330
public office religious tests repeal, 1:322
public school religious practices, 1:324
Three Mile Island nuclear accident, 1:74

Pennsylvania, Murdock v. (1943), 1:330

Pennsylvania Charter of Liberties and Privileges (1701), 1:319

Pentecost, 1:263

Pentecostal movement, 1:258, 259

Pepin (king of the Franks), 1:275, 414, 2:1030–1031

Peregrinatio ad Loca sancta (Aetheria), 1:269

Pereira, Nuno de Santa Maria Álvares, St., 2:890–891

Perestroika, 1:348–349, 360

Pérez, Leonardo, Bl., 2:891, 927

Pérez Jiménez, Marcos, 1:397

Perfect (Catharism), 1:226

Perfect vs. imperfect virtue, 1:206

Périès, Georges (abbot), 1:46

Perl, Camille (Msgr.), 1:423

Perón, Eva, 2:892, 893

Perón, Juan Domingo, 2:891–893

Perot Juanmarti, Josep Joan, Bl., 2:629–630

Perpendicular architecture, 1:283

Perpetua, Vibia, St., 1:267

Perpetual Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament, Nuns of the, 2:779, 893

Perry, Van Orden v. (2005), 1:338

Persecution. See Religious persecution

Persia, 1:19, 267

Persistent vegetative state, life support care, 1:28

Person, as term, 2:894

Person interpretation, communion of saints, 1:355

Personal knowledge (philosophy), 2:909–910

Personal Ordinariates, 1:52–53

Personal Prelatures, 1:52

Personalism, 1:236, 341, 376, 399, 2:893–897

Personhood
ancient Greek and Roman views, 1:15
Benedict XVI on, 1:209–210
sin and, 2:938–940, 943, 999–1000

Peru, Christian democratic movements, 1:397

Peter, St., 1:263, 264, 2:884

Peter, Valentine (Father), 1:154

Peter 1, Epistle of, on charisms, 1:255

Peter Damian, 1:247

Peter de Buys, 1:219

Peter Kibe Kasui and 187 Companions, Martyrs of Nagasaki, Japan, Bb., 2:898–901

Peter Lombard, 1:281, 521

Peter of St. Joseph Betancur, St., 1:135–136

Le Petit Journal, 1:417

Petitioners (sainthood process), 1:107–108

Petković, Maria of Jesus Crucified, Bl., 2:901

Petrarch (humanist), 1:284

Petre, Benjamin (Bp.), 1:42

Phag mo dru Order, 1:171

Pharisees, 1:58, 2:598

Phenomenology, 2:895, 896–897, 1039, 1040

Philadelphia (PA), anti-Catholicism, 1:56

Philibert, Emmanuel (duke of Savoy), 2:991

Philip II (king of France), 1:279, 281, 282

Philip II (king of Spain), 1:51

Philip IV (king of France), 1:51, 283

Philippe, Thomas, 2:1073, 1074

Philippines, 1:222, 240, 293, 311

Philippist Lutherans, 2:683

Philosophical sins, 2:997

Philosophy
- of Bergson, Henri Louis, 1:125–126, 127
- Clarke, W. Norris work, 1:341–342
- John Paul II on, 1:309
- late modern Church and, 1:304
- Owens, Joseph work, 2:875
- praeter intentionem, 2:914–915
- Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio work, 2:959, 960, 961
- Sartre, Jean-Paul work, 2:976–978
- slavery distinctions, 2:1007, 1011–1012

Photian Schism (863–867), 1:365

Photius (Patriarch), 1:365, 367

Physical determinism, 1:402

Physical-instrumental causality of grace, 2:751

Pia desideria (Spener), 2:684

Il piacere (d'Annunzio), 1:387

Pianzola, Francesco, Bl., 2:901–902

Pianzoline Sisters, 2:902

Piccarreta, Luisa, 1:479

Picco, Eugenia, Bl., 2:902–903

Piccola Opera della Divina Provvidenza, 2:869

Piccolomini, Ambrogio, 1:124

Pickering, Timothy, 1:44

Picquart, Georges, 1:416

Pidal y Chico de Guzmán, María Maravillas de Jesús Battista, St., 2:903–904

Pie Madri della Nigrizia, founding, 1:351

Pieper, Josef, 1:205

Pierce v. Society of Sisters (1925), 1:329, 431

Pietism, 2:684

Piferer Bordas, Xavier, Bl., 2:621

Pignedoli, Sergio (Card.), 1:231

Pilsudski, Jozef, 2:904–905

Pinckaers, Servais, 1:205

Pinckney, Charles, 1:322

Pinette, Capitol Square Review & Advisory Board v. (1995), 1:333

Pinochet, Augusto, 1:26, 27, 397

Piou, Jacques, 1:395

Pious Disciples of the Divine Master, 1:24

Pious Society of St. Paul, 1:24, 494–495

Pippin the Short (king of the Franks), 1:275, 414, 2:1030–1031

Pirozzo, Lucia Antonio, St., 1:554–555

Pisa, Council of (1409), 1:187, 284

Pistoia, Synod of (1786), 2:669

Pithou, Pierre, 1:490, 491

Pittenger, Meek v. (1975), 1:337

Pius V (Pope), 1:188, 288, 291

Pius VI (Pope)
- Alphonsus de Liguori resignation, 1:30
- American Revolution and, 1:42, 44
- apostolic delegates, 1:62
- French Revolution and, 1:297
- Josephinism and, 1:295
- on limbo, 2:669
- secretary of state role and, 1:204
- States of the Church and, 2:1035

Pius VII (Pope), 1:30, 203, 297–298, 2:1035–1036

Pius VIII (Pope), 1:44, 180

Pius IX (Pope)
- allocutions, 1:27
- Alphonsus de Liguori and, 1:30
- American Civil War stance, 1:38, 40–41
- Antonelli, Giacomo and, 1:203
- apostolic delegates, 1:63
- Biraghi, Luigi and, 1:137
- Bismarck, Otto von and, 1:138, 139
- Christian democratic movements and, 1:394
- La Civiltà Cattolica founding, 2:1053
- Comboni, Daniele and, 1:351
- on Communism, 1:360
- Curci, Carlo Maria and, 1:380, 381
- excommunication and, 1:449
- Feliński, Zygmunt Szczęsny and, 1:459
- France relations, 1:418
- industrialization and, 1:300, 301
- Institute of Missionaries of Mary approval, 1:254
- Ireland relations, 1:570
- Jewish-Catholic relations and, 2:592
- on liberalism, 2:667
- liberalism and, 1:298, 301
- Mary as coredemptrix, 2:749
- Mexico relations, 1:39
- Missionaries of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary approval, 1:436
- on papal authority, 1:440
- Risorgimento and, 2:834, 864
- on salvation, 2:973–974
- States of the Church and, 2:1037
- U.S. relations, 1:45, 327

Pius X (Pope)
- Acta Apostolicae Sedis establishment, 1:4
- Action Française relations, 1:6
- anti-Semitism and, 1:60
- Bufalo, Gaspare del beatification, 1:180
- catechism development, 1:221
- Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs changes, 1:203
- devotion to Mary, 2:762
- Divini illius magistri and, 1:409
- France relations, 1:418
- Marian Fathers approval, 2:706
- on Mary, 2:738, 741, 754–755
- on Modernism, 1:401, 505, 2:793, 794, 795, 797
- Neothomism and, 2:853
- Oblate Sisters of St. Francis de Sales approval, 1:97
- World War I and, 2:656, 1087
- Zionism and, 2:877–878

Pius III (Pope), 1:148

Pius IV (Pope), 1:51, 248, 289, 462, 559, 2:1032

Pius XI (Pope)
- Action Française relations, 1:6, 7
- allocutions, 1:27
- anti-Semitism and, 1:61
- apostolic delegates, 1:64
- Bernadette of Lourdes canonization, 1:131
- catechism development, 1:221
- on Catholic education, 1:408–410, 431, 455, 2:692

on Catholic teachings, 1:87
Christian democratic movements and, 1:398
Communism and, 1:360, 454, 2:715, 841
concordats, 1:396
devotion to Mary, 2:762
fascism and, 1:453, 455–456
Filippini, Lucy beatification and canonization, 1:463
Hitler, Adolf and, 2:791–792
League of Nations and, 2:658–660
Legion of Mary, 1:419
Marian Fathers approval, 2:706
missionary work, 1:305
More, Sir Thomas canonization, 2:828–829
Mussolini, Benito and, 2:835, 836, 837
on nationalism, 1:440
Nazism and, 2:846, 847, 848
on papal authority, 1:62
Pius XII and, 2:905–906
Reich Concordat, 1:360–361, 362, 545
Sacred Heart devotion, 1:303
sainthood process, 1:107, 196, 197
Soviet Union and, 1:342
Spanish religious persecution and, 2:1022, 1024
spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:755
Stalin, Josef and, 2:1029
on Talamoni, Luigi, 2:1052
Taparelli d'Azeglio, Luigi influence, 2:1053
on Thérèse of Lisieux, 2:1059
Vatican Radio, 2:697–698
World War II and, 1:343, 2:1092
Zionism and, 2:878–879

Pius XII (Pope), 2:905–909, 906
Action Française relations, 1:7
Adenauer, Konrad and, 1:10
allocutions, 1:27
Alphonsus de Liguori and, 1:30
America congratulations, 1:37
anti-Semitism and, 1:61, 229
on baptism, 2:669
on the Bible, 1:19, 303
Bufalo, Gaspare del canonization, 1:180 canon law reorganization, 1:196
Cerioli, Paola Elisabetta heroic virtue confirmation, 1:253
Christian democratic movements and, 1:399
Cold War and, 1:342–346
Communism and, 1:454, 2:841–842, 1028, 1029
democratic participation, 1:88
on divinization, 1:412
on doctrine, 1:304
on Fabris, Eurosia, 1:451
fascism and, 1:455, 456–457
Finaly Affair, 1:464
Gojdič, Pavol Peter telegram, 1:497
Hitler, Adolf and, 1:547, 2:791, 847, 850
Holocaust and, 1:89, 90, 91, 2:907–908, 1094, 1095–1096
Jewish-Catholic relations and, 2:592
Kennedy family and, 2:640
League of Nations and, 2:660
on Mary, 2:732, 738, 749, 755, 756, 762, 773–774
on media, 2:664
Mussolini, Benito and, 2:837, 850
Nazism and, 2:846, 847, 848–850
Neothomism and, 2:853
on nuclear weapons, 1:80
Our Lady of Beauraing feast day, 1:111
on Our Lady of Guadalupe, 1:509
Postquam apostolicis litteris (Pius XII), 2:817
Reich Concordat, 1:361, 362, 545
Roosevelt, Franklin D. and, 1:64
on slavery, 2:1008
Stalin, Josef and, 1:343, 344, 345, 346, 2:1029
on state authority, 1:440
Vatican Radio, 2:697–698
World War I and, 2:1089, 1090
World War II and, 1:343–344, 440–441, 2:906–908, 1092–1096
Zionism and, 2:879–880

Pizzardo, Giuseppe (Msgr.), 2:659

Pla y Deniel, Enrique (Card.), 1:464

Plato (monk), 2:815

Plato (philosopher), 1:16

Platonism, 1:411, 2:859, 860

A Plea for the West (Beecher), 1:56

Pleasure (d'Annunzio), 1:387

Pledge of Allegiance disputes, 1:338

Plekhanov, Georgi, 1:357

Pliny the Younger, 1:266, 392

PLO. See Palestine Liberation Organization

Plotinus (philosopher), 2:1061

Pluralism, religious, 1:421

Plutarch, 1:18

Plutonium, in atomic weapons, 1:77

PNC (Palestine National Council), 1:65

Podgorny, Nikolai, 1:347

Poitiers, Council of (1000), 1:247

Poland
Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp, 1:88–92, 89, 90, 348, 2:591–592
church-state relations, 1:348, 349, 2:905
Cold War and, 1:347–348, 349
Communism in, 1:358
early modern Church, 1:292
European Union membership, 1:442
Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:584–585
Jewish history, 2:611, 612, 614, 615
John Paul II visit, 1:308, 347–348
Pilsudski, Jozef leadership, 2:904–905

Polanyi, Michael, 2:909–910

Pole, Reginald (Card.), 2:982

Polish National Catholic Church, 1:304

Political Catholicism in Europe (Kaiser and Wohnout), 1:398

Political offices, religious tests for, 1:318, 319–320, 321–322, 335

Political parties, Christian Democratic. See Democratic parties, Christian

Politics abortion issue, 1:379–380
Action Française, 1:5–7
Benedict XVI on, 1:117, 442
Bolshevism, 1:142–145, 144
Christian democratic movements, 1:394–400
Cuomo, Mario and, 1:379–380
Kennedy, John F. and, 2:637–639, 641–642
late modern period, 1:299–300 pro-life issues and, 1:117, 379–380
secularism and, 2:979–981
See also Church-state relations; specific groups; specific ideologies

Polk, James K., 1:327

Polo, Carmen, 1:482

Poloni, Vincenza Maria, Bl., 2:910–911

Polycarp of Smyrna, 1:266

Polycrates of Ephesus, 1:266

Polygamy, 1:323

Pompidou, Georges, 1:391

Pontifex maximus, as title, 1:184

Pontifical Academy of Sciences, 1:80

Pontifical Council for Culture, 2:858

Pontifical Council for Human and Christian Development. See Cor Unum

Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue (PCID), 1:231, 2:858

Pontifical Council for Pastoral Care of Migrants and Itinerant People, 2:957

Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, 1:9, 2:1086, 1087

Pontifical Council for the Laity, 1:67

Pontifical Councils, 1:4, 284–285
See also specific councils

Pontifical Ecclesiastical Academy, 1:63

Pontifical Institute of the Religious Teachers Filippini, 1:463

Pontifical Relief Commission, 2:1094

Le Pontificat de Pie X (Aubert), 1:86

Poole, Stafford, 1:378

Poor Sisters of Saint Gaetan, Congregation of, 1:141

Pope John Paull II Cultural Center, 2:594, 620, 911–912

Pope-king quarrel. See Caesaropapism

The Popes Against the Jews (Kertzer), 1:60

Popular Republican Movement (MRP) (France), 1:399

Populorum progressio (encyclical, Paul VI), 1:88, 208–209, 307, 371, 2:716

Populorum Progressio Foundation, 1:371, 372

Porphyry (philosopher), 2:860, 1061, 1062

Portillo, Alvaro del, 2:912–913

Portugal
- caesaropapism, 1:184
- church-state relations, 2:971
- early modern Church missions, 1:293
- European integration, 1:441
- Salazar, António de Oliveira leadership, 2:969–971
- slave trade, 2:1008, 1012–1013

Posidonius (philosopher), 1:16

Positio, in sainthood process, 1:196, 197

Positive elements of sin, 2:997

Positive theology, 1:293, 304

Post diuturnas (papal bull, Pius VII), 2:1035

Post-Synodal Apostolic Exhortation: Pastores dabo vobis (apostolic exhortation, John Paul II), 2:987

Postconciliar Central Commission, 1:307

Postquam apostolicis litteris (Pius XII), 2:817

Postulators (sainthood process), 1:107, 197, 199

Potential candidates, European Union, 1:442

Pouget, François, 1:220

Pourquoi Rome a parlé (Maritain et al), 1:6

Poveda Castroverde, Pedro, St., 2:913–914

Poverty, 1:238, 282, 515–516, 534–535

Powell, Lewis, 1:331

Pozzo, Guido (Msgr.), 1:424

PPC (Partido Popular Cristiano), 1:397

PPI. See Partito Popolare Italiano

Praemunire, 1:2, 3

Praeter intentionem, 2:914–915

Pratica del confessore per ben esercitare il suo ministero (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33

Pratica di amar Gesù Cristo (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:31

Pravda (newspaper), 1:347

Prayer
- Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:32
- communal, 1:481
- establishment clause cases, 1:335
- Jewish-Catholic relations and, 2:603
- legislative body chaplains, 1:337
- Our Lady of Beauraing and, 1:110, 111
- See also Mental prayer

Prayer wheels (Buddhism), 1:162

Pre, Richard du, 1:249

Preaching, itinerant preachers, 1:314

Preca, George, St., 2:678, 915–916

Precious Blood, devotion to, 1:303

Precious Blood Sisters, 1:180, 2:916–918

Preemptive war theory, 1:565, 567

Premonstratensians, 1:279

Pres. Church of John's Island, Wilson v. (1836), 1:326

Presbyteral councils, 1:406

Presbyterians, 1:316, 320, 327

Presbyterissae, 1:246

Presbyterorum ordinis (decree, Vatican Council II), 1:242, 2:986

PRI (Partido Revolucionario Institucional), 1:397

Pride, Devil's fall and, 1:404

Priest-kings, 1:183–184

Priestly Society of the Catholic Apostolate, 1:488

Priestly Society of the Holy Cross, 1:437, 2:869

Priests
- alcoholism treatment, 1:512
- Christian democratic movements and, 1:395
- Eucharist and, 1:426
- Greeley, Andrew M. research, 1:502–503
- Jesus Christ as, 2:937, 943, 945–947
- John Paul II on, 1:116–117
- Kilmartin, Edward J. on, 2:644
- Lutheran perspective, 2:689
- married, 1:244, 245, 246, 247, 248–250
- ordination of former Anglicans, 1:52, 53
- seminary education, 1:289, 2:981–989

Priests of Holy Cross, 1:548

Priest-victim, Jesus Christ as, 2:945–947

Primaldo, Antonio, 2:872, 873

Primitive societies, afterlife views, 1:12–13

Prince, Sarah, 1:330

Prince v. Massachusetts (1944), 1:330

Princeps pastorum (encyclical, John XXIII), 1:306

Privative elements of sin, 2:997, 998

Proclus (philospher), 2:1061

Procopius of Caesarea, 1:367

Production Code Administration (PCA), 2:664

The Program of Priestly Formation (National Conference of Catholic Bishops), 2:986–988

Progrès de la Révolution et de la guerre contre l'Eglise (Lamennais), 1:96

Pro-life issues abortion, 1:4–5, 118, 308, 379–380, 449, 522, 2:668–669, 670
euthanasia, 1:117, 308, 545–546
Knights of Columbus activism, 2:649
life support care, 1:28 reproductive technology, 1:338

Promoter of Justice, in sainthood process, 1:197

Promulgandi (apostolic constitution, Pius X), 1:4

Prontuarii (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:32

Pronuncios, 1:63

Propagation of the Faith, Congregation of, 1:293, 305

Property, church, in the United States, 1:324–327

Prophecy, as charism, 1:255, 256, 257, 258

Prophet-teacher, Jesus Christ as, 2:937

Propitiation, sacrifice of, 2:946

Proportion, cardinal virtues and, 1:206

Proportionality, as military moral test, 1:75

Proselytizing. See Evangelization

Protestant Reformation. See Reformation

Protestantism in Cuba, 1:214
disestablishment period, 1:319, 320
ecumenical dialogue on Mary, 2:777
Eucharist and, 1:426
Gregorian calendar adoption, 1:503
harrowing of Hell and, 1:529
heresy and, 1:536–537
missionary work, 1:305
public school teaching of, 1:324 services in Vatican, 1:328
See also Reformation; specific denominations

Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State, 1:37

Protoevangelium of James, 2:755, 918–921

Proudhon, Pierre, 1:300

Providence Catechist Society, 2:1004

Providentissimus Deus (encyclical, Leo XIII), 2:797

Prudence, 1:205, 2:998

Prussia, Christian democratic movements, 1:394

Psalters, in breviaries, 1:157

Psellus, Michael, 2:1062

Pseudo-cardinals, 1:112–113

Pseudo-mysticism, 1:35–36

Psychological determinism, 1:402

Public display of religion, 1:333, 337, 338

Public juridic personality, 1:53

Public office, religious tests for. See Political offices, religious tests for Public reason theory, 2:980

Public schools, 1:324, 333, 334–338, 431

Public transportation, establishment clause cases, 1:334

Pujo, Maurice, 1:6

Pulcheria, Aelia, St., 1:270

Punishment in the afterlife, 1:18, 22, 2:944
See also Hell; Retribution doctrine

Punt, Josef M. (Bp. of Haarlem-Amsterdam), 1:69, 2:874

Purcell, Mannix v. (1888), 1:325

Pure Land School, 1:165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 172–173

Purgatorio (The Divine Comedy) (Dante Alighieri), 1:22

Purgatory, views on, 1:14, 21, 22, 118

Puritans, 1:288, 313, 315, 2:655–656

Purity laws, Roma, 2:957

Pusey, Edward, 1:412

Pythagoreanism, afterlife views, 1:16

Q

Qing dynasty, Buddhism and, 1:166

Quadragesimo anno (encyclical, Pius XI), 1:87, 360, 398, 2:715, 1053

Quakers
colonial United States, 1:313, 314, 315, 316–317
disestablishment period, 1:319, 320

Quanta cura (encyclical, Pius IX)
Bismarck, Otto von and, 1:138
on Communism, 1:360
European integration and, 1:394
liberalism and, 1:298, 301
papal authority and, 1:440
Risorgimento and, 2:1037

Quas primas (encyclical, Pius XI), 1:62

Queen of the Apostles Institute, 1:24

Quesnel, Pasquier, 1:294

Question-answer method, in catechism, 1:218, 223

Quietism, 1:294, 538, 2:923–925

Quigley, Martin, 2:663, 664

Quine, W. V. O., 2:863

Quinet, Camille, 1:221

Quinisext, Council of (692), 1:245, 365

Quod nunquam (encyclical, Pius IX), 1:139

Qur'ān, afterlife views, 1:21

R

R (Apostles' Creed), 1:354–355

Rab (Jewish scholar), 2:607

Racial considerations
anti-Judaism, 1:57, 2:582, 589, 600
Knights of Columbus activism, 2:647–648
slavery, 2:1012

Radical Reformation, 1:287

Radical right movements, 1:454

Radicalism, 1:537

Radio communications, 2:697–698

Rahner, Karl, 1:115, 401

Ral pa can (king of Tibet), 1:171

Ralliement (France), 1:416, 418, 419

Rama I (king of Thailand), 1:176

Rama IV (king of Thailand), 1:176

Rama Kamheng (king of Thailand), 1:176

Rama Thibodi (king of Thailand), 1:176

Rama VII (king of Thailand), 1:176

Rampolla del Tindaro, Mariano (Card.), 1:60

Ramsey, Paul, 1:83

Rangel Montaño, José Trinidad (Father), Bl., 2:891, 927–928

Rapture, 2:928–930

Rashi (Rabbi), 2:609

Ratio fundamentalis (Congregation for Catholic Education), 2:986, 987

Ratti, Ambrogio Achille (Card.). See Pius XI (Pope)

Ratzinger, Joseph (Card.). See Benedict XVI (Pope)

The Ratzinger Report (Messori), 1:116, 2:716

Rausch, James S. (Card.), 1:191

Rauscher, Joseph Othmar von (Abp. of Vienna), 1:394

Ravasco, Eugenia, Bl., 2:930

Rawls, John, 2:980

Reagan, Ronald, 1:65, 308, 348, 379, 432

Real interpretation, communion of saints, 1:355

Realism vs. nominalism, 2:859–860

Reality, views on, 1:125–126, 166, 264

Reason, 1:304, 452

Reccared (Visigoth king), 1:272

Receptivity theory, 2:747

Recolhimento de Nossa Senhora da Luz, 1:492

Recollects of Our Lady of Light, 1:492

Reconciliatio et penitentia (apostolic exhortation, John Paul II), 2:1001

Reconnaissance au Maroc, 1883–1884 (Foucauld), 1:466–467

Record of deeds, Islamic views, 1:20

Rectors and Visitors of the University of Virginia, Rosenberger v. (1995), 1:333–334

Recueil des libertés de l'Église gallicane (Pithou), 1:490, 491

Redeemer, Jesus Christ as, 2:937, 943–945

The Redeemer of Man (encyclical, John Paul II). See Redemptor hominis (encyclical, John Paul II)

Redemption, theology of, 2:930–949, 934
- church Fathers on, 2:935–936
- doctrinal context, 2:936–941
- dogmatic formulations, 2:933–935
- overview, 2:931–932
- scriptural themes, 2:931–933
- theories of, 2:941–947
- See also Coredemptrix, Mary as

Redemptionis Sacramentum (instruction, Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments), 1:426

Redemptor hominis (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:232, 308, 2:767

Redemptoris mater (encyclical, John Paul II)
- ecumenism and, 2:775
- knowledge of Mary and, 2:738–739
- Mary as coredemptrix, 2:768
- queenship of Mary, 2:774
- spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:744, 757, 763

Redemptoris missio (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:232, 2:974

Redemptorists, 1:34, 2:1067

Reed, Stanley, 1:331, 335

Reese, Thomas J., 1:37

Reflections and Suggestions Concerning Ecumenical Dialogue (Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity), 2:775

Reflections on Covenant and Mission (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 2:596

Reform Judaism, 2:618–619

Reformatio Angliae (Pole), 2:982

Reformation
- Anglicanism and, 1:287–288
- caesaropapism and, 1:184
- Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) and, 1:188
- Calvinism and, 1:287
- clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:248
- Council of Trent and, 1:288–289
- devotion to Mary and, 2:761
- divinization doctrine and, 1:411
- eve of, 1:286–287
- Jewish history and, 2:611
- Lutheranism and, 1:287
- overview, 1:286–291
- Radicalism and, 1:287
- See also English Reformation

Reformed Churches, heresy and, 1:537
- See also Calvinism

Reformkatholizismus, 2:796

Regalia (France), 1:490–491

Regensburg address (Benedict XVI), 1:235, 440, 443

Reggio, Tommaso, Bl., 2:949

Regimini Ecclesiae Universae (apostolic constitution, Paul VI), 1:203

Regional Conference of North Africa (CERNA), 1:233

Regional Episcopal Conference of West Africa (CERAO), 1:233

Reich Concordat (1933). See Concordat with Germany (1933)

Reichstag address (1933), 1:361

Reign of Terror (1793–1794) (France), 2:574, 575

Reilly, Patrick J., 1:202

Reims, Council of (1049), 1:277

Reincarnation, 1:12

Reincarnation, views on, 1:19, 159

Relators (sainthood process), 1:197

Released time, legal cases, 1:335

Relics of saints, 1:274

Religious clothing, 1:324, 2:815

Religious communities
- alcoholism treatment, 1:512, 513
- Counter-Reformation and, 1:291
- devotion to Mary, 2:762
- early modern Church, 1:286
- higher Catholic education in the U.S. and, 1:427
- late modern Church, 1:302
- medieval period, 1:273, 283–284
- seminary development, 2:985
- sponsorship of schools, 1:433
- See also Monasticism; specific groups

Religious freedom
- L'Avenir on, 1:95, 96
- Bolshevism and, 1:143, 144–145
- Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights work, 1:228–230
- colonial United States, 1:313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 2:1063–1064
- disestablishment period, 1:318–319, 320, 321
- Lincoln, Abraham and, 2:671
- Nantes, Edict of (1598), 1:292, 2:843–845, 844
- nineteenth century U.S., 1:322, 328–329
- twentieth century U.S., 1:330–334
- Vatican Council II on, 1:87
- See also Religious persecution

Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) (1993), 1:333

Religious indifferentism, 2:973

Religious instruction, in public schools, 1:335

Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (2000), 1:333, 338

Religious of Pious Schools martyrs, 2:628

Religious of the Assumption, 1:73–74, 2:786

Religious orders. See Religious communities

Religious orders of men, 1:302, 427, 2:811–812
See also Monasticism; specific orders

Religious orders of women
Catholic K-12 schools in the U.S. and, 1:431–432
deaconesses and, 1:392–394
higher Catholic education in the U.S. and, 1:427
late modern Church, 1:302
medieval Church, 1:279
See also specific orders

Religious persecution against Cagots, 1:185–186
Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights work, 1:228–230
Chinese Buddhism, 1:166
colonial United States, 1:313, 314, 315, 316, 317
Cuba, 1:214
against early Church, 1:266, 267
Knights of Columbus activism, 2:646
Korean Buddhism, 1:173
Soviet Union, 2:1028, 1029
Spanish Republic, 2:1021–1024
See also Anti-Catholicism; Religious freedom

Religious pluralism, 1:421

Religious publications, taxes on, 1:330

Religious Teachers Filippini, Pontifical Institute of, 1:463

Religious tests for public office. See Political offices, religious tests for

The Religous Sense (Giussani), 1:496–497

Remarriage, 1:117, 245

Remigius of Reims, 1:271

Renan, Joseph Ernest, 1:304

Rendu, Rosalie, Bl., 2:950

Representative physical satisfaction theory, 2:945

Reproductive technology, 1:338

Republican Party (U.S.), 1:47, 318

Rerum novarum (encyclical, Leo XIII)
on Communism, 1:360, 2:715
fascism and, 1:454
as inspiration for America, 1:37
on labor, 1:301, 2:667
social teachings and, 1:87, 306, 398
Thomism and, 2:852

Rescription seu epistola de continentia clericorum (Ulric), 1:247

Research Highlights (bulletin), 1:68

Responsa ad dubia de communismo (decree, Congregation of the Holy Office), 1:345–346

Responses to Certain Questions of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops Concerning Artificial Nutrition and Hydration (Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith), 1:28

Ressourcement theology, 2:950–953

Restoration period, 1:298

Resurrection
Christian views, 1:14, 21
harrowing of Hell and, 1:527, 528–529
Islamic views, 1:20, 21
Jewish views, 1:14, 20
Mary's role, 2:727–728, 742
redemption theology and, 2:931, 932, 936–937, 946–947
Zoroastrian views, 1:19

The Resurrection (Durrwell), 2:942

Resurrectionist Sisters, 1:262–263

Retribution doctrine, 1:14, 18, 21, 518–520, 521

Return of Jesus Christ. See Parousia

Reunion in grace, redemption and, 2:941

Revelation, Book of, 1:266, 2:727–728, 773

Revelation: The Birth of a New Age (Spangler), 2:855

Revelation, theology of Hell and, 1:521

Revelation and Tradition (Rahner and Benedict XVI), 1:115

Review Board, Thomas v. (1981), 1:332

Revolution of 1688 (England), 1:54

Revolutionary War (U.S.) (1775–1783), 1:42–46, 43, 55–56

Revue biblique (journal), 1:104

Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique (University of Louvain), 1:86

Reyes, Gaspar de los (Father), 2:573

Reynaud, Paul, 1:390

Reynolds v. United States (1878), 1:323, 330

RFRA (Religious Freedom Restoration Act) (1993), 1:333

Rhode Island, 1:55, 318, 319

Ribbentrop, Joachim von, 2:1093

Ribière, Germaine, 1:464

Ricci, Matteo, 1:293

Ricci, Scipione de (Bp.), 1:295

Rich in Mercy (encyclical, John Paul II). See Dives in misericordia (encyclical, John Paul II)

Richard I (king of England), 1:279

Richard III (king of England), 2:830

Richardson, Tilton v. (1971), 1:336

Righteousness, Luther on, 2:687

Rights, personalism and, 2:894

The Rights and Liberties of the Gallican Church (Dupuy and Dupuy), 1:490

Rigorism, 1:34

Rinnovamento (review), 2:795

Rinpoche, Guru (Padmasambhava), 1:170

Ripalda, Jerónimo Martinez de, 1:219

Ripley, Austin, 1:512

The Rise of Christian Democracy in Europe (Kalyvas), 1:398

Risorgimento conflict over Rome, 2:834
Curci, Carlo Maria and, 1:380, 381
Mazzini, Giuseppe involvement, 1:96, 2:781–782
non licet policy, 1:381, 2:864
States of the Church and, 2:1036, 1037
Taparelli d'Azeglio, Massimo and, 2:1054–1055

Rita Amada de Jesus, Bl., 2:954

Rites Controversy, 1:293

Ritschl, Albrecht, 2:935

Ritual abuse scare (1980s), 1:140

Rivière, Jean, 2:935–936

Robert de Clari, 2:990

Robert of Arbrissel, 1:281

Roberts, Owen, 1:330

Robespierre, Maximilien, 2:574, 575

Rocha, Àtico Eusébio da (Bp.), 1:389
Rochester Treatment Center (Rochester, MN), 1:512, 513
Rodríguez Castro, Bonifacia, Bl., 2:954–955
Rodríguez Sopeña, María Dolores, Bl., 2:955–956
Roemer v. Board of Public Works (1976), 1:336
Rogate ergo expression, 1:479
Rogationist Fathers of the Heart of Jesus, 1:479
Roma (Gypsies), 2:956–958
Romagna, Italy, as part of States of the Church, 2:1032, 1037
Roman and Universal Inquisition, Congregation of, 1:291
Roman Catechism, 1:102, 219
Roman Curia. See Curia, Roman
Roman Empire, 2:606–607, 1009–1011, 1010
  See also Church, history of, early Roman Missal (1962), 1:118, 423, 424
Roman Office, breviary use, 1:156, 157
Roman phase (sainthood process), 1:107, 197
Roman Question, 1:418–419, 2:834, 836
Roman Republic (1849), 1:45, 2:781, 782, 1037
Roman tribunals, 1:4
Romanesque architecture, 1:279–280
Romania, 1:442, 454, 2:819
Romano pontefici eligendo (apostolic constitution, Paul VI), 2:885
Romans, Epistle to, 1:254, 255, 392
Rome
  afterlife views, 1:15, 17–18
  celibacy, 1:242–243
  Constantinople relations, 1:364, 365
  Donation of Constantine and, 1:275, 413–416, 414
  early Church, 1:264
  Knights of Columbus activism, 2:648
  as major see, 1:268
  monasticism development, 2:804
  Pius XII and, 2:906–907
  Risorgimento and, 2:834
  States of the Church and, 2:1031, 1033, 1034, 1036
Rome, Council of (869), 1:365
Rome Conferences (1969 and 1972), 1:444
Rome Treaties (1957), 1:441, 443
Romero Meneses, María, Bl., 2:958
Roncalli, Angelo (Msgr.). See John XXIII (Pope)
Roney, Paul, 1:94
Ronge, Johann, 1:304
Rooney, Mickey, 1:154
Roosevelt, Franklin D.
  America on, 1:37
  apostolic delegates and, 1:64
  atomic bomb development, 1:77–78
  Casablanca Conference, 2:1094
  Holocaust and, 1:89
  Kennedy, Joseph P. and, 2:640
  Pius XII and, 1:343, 2:660, 1093
Rorty, Richard, 2:980
Rosal Vásquez, María Vicenta, Bl., 2:958–959
Rosarium Virginis Mariae (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 1:426, 2:678, 736, 763, 769
Rosary, luminous mysteries, 2:678–680, 679, 769
Roscelin of Compiègne, 2:860, 861
Rose, Robert (Bp.), 1:211
Rosenberg, Alfred, 1:455
Rosenberger v. Rectors and Visitors of the University of Virginia (1995), 1:333–334
Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio, Bl., 1:241, 540, 2:959, 959–962
Rosminians, 2:960, 961, 962
Rosner, Hedwig, 1:463–464
Rosner, Moshe, 1:463–464
Roso, Hedwig (Sister), 2:1075
Rossi, Pellegrino, 2:1037
Rossi, Peter, 1:432
Rota, Michelina (Sister), 1:253
Roy, Bowen v. (1986), 1:332
Royal Charter of 1624 (England), 1:313
Royal Gallicanism, 1:491
Royal Supremacy Act (1534) (England), 1:2–4
RSDLP (Russian Social Democratic Labor Party), 1:142
Rubin, James (Rabbi), 2:585
Rubio y Peralta, José María, St., 2:962–963
Ruch, Charles Joseph (Bp. of Strasbourg), 1:6
Rudolph of Swabia, 1:201
Rufinus of Aquileia, 1:270
Ruiz, Pedro, 1:35
Ruiz García, Samuel (Bp.), 1:393
Rule of Basil, 1:269
Rule of Benedict. See Benedictine Rule
Rule of faith, 1:265
Rule of Francis, 1:480
Rule of the Knights Templar, 1:279
Rural Land Stewardship Area program (FL), 1:94
Russia
  Bolshevism, 1:142–145, 144
  Jewish history, 2:614
  monasticism development, 2:819–820
  Poland and, 2:904, 905
  See also Soviet Union
Russian Civil War (1918–1921), 1:142
Russian Orthodox Church, 1:245, 412, 2:1028
Russian Revolution (1905), 1:142
Russian Revolution (1917–1921), 1:142, 2:1027
Russian Social Democratic Labor Party (RSDLP), 1:142
Rusticus of Narbonne (Bp.), 1:246
Ruthenians, 1:292
Rutledge, Wiley, 1:334
Ryan, Mary Perkins, 1:432
Rykov, Alexei, 1:144

S

Sa'adia ben Joseph, 2:608
Saar region (Germany), 2:659
Sabatier, Louis Auguste, 2:935
Sabbath observances, case law, 1:331–332
Sabbatier, Arnault, 2:990
SACBC (Southern African Catholic Bishops' Conference), 1:233
Sacchetti, Giuseppe, 1:395
Sacerdotalis caelibatus (encyclical, Paul VI), 1:307

Sacra Rituum Congregatio (apostolic constitution; Paul VI), 1:107, 196

Sacramental penance, 1:448

Sacramentine Sisters of Bergamo, 1:352–353, 2:965

Sacraments
- Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:31–32, 34
- catechism development and, 1:219
- Catharism and, 1:225, 226
- communion of saints and, 1:355
- excommunication and, 1:447, 449
- Kilmartin, Edward J. on, 2:644
- Lutheran perspective, 1:287, 2:688
- marriage as, 1:276
- Mary's reception of, 2:735–736
- See also Eucharist

Sacramentum caritatis (apostolic exhortation, Benedict XVI), 1:118, 354

Sacred College of Cardinals, 1:277, 2:884

Sacred Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, 1:203

Sacred Congregation for the Clergy. See Congregation for the Clergy

Sacred Congregation for the Oriental Churches, 1:64

Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith, 1:293, 305

Sacred Congregation of Rites, 1:107, 195, 196

Sacred Heart, devotion to, 1:303, 407

Sacred Heart of Jesus and the Holy Angels, Congregation of, 2:1065

Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, Congregation of the, 2:965–966

Sacred Meditations (Gerhard), 2:684

Sacred Rites, Congregation of, 1:107, 195, 196

Sacred Scripture. See Bible

Sacred species, violation of, 1:449

Sacrifice
- Eucharist and, 1:425, 426
- Mary's role, 2:750
- Our Lady of Beauraing and, 1:108, 111
- redemption theology and, 2:932, 933–934, 945–947

Sacrosanctum concilium (dogmatic constitution, Vatican Council II), 1:306–307, 423

Sadat, Anwar el-, 2:619

Sadducees, 1:58

Sadler, Morrison v. (2003), 2:1019

Saffi, Aurelio, 2:1037

Saggio Teoretico di Dritto Naturale Appogiatto sul Fatto (Taparelli), 2:1053

Sahagún, Bernardino de (Brother), 1:508

Saichō (Buddhist thinker), 1:167

Sailer, Johann Michael, 1:220

St. Clement (Rome), iconography of, 1:528

St.-Denis church, 1:280

St. German, Christopher, 2:827

St. Irene Church (Constantinople), 1:367

St. John the Baptist, Sisters of, 1:487, 2:1026

St. Joseph, Madeleine de, 1:133

St. Joseph's Oratory (Montréal, Canada), 1:134

St. Mary's College (IN), 1:427, 551

St. Mary's College (MI), 1:92

St. Mary's Seminary (Baltimore, MD), 2:984

St. Nicholas Cathedral, Kedroff v. (1952), 1:331

Saint of Perfumes (Marie-Céline de la Présentation), 2:707–708

St. Peter's Basilica (Vatican City), 1:107, 114

St. Prassede (Rome), iconography of, 1:528

Sts. Sergius and Bacchus Church (Constantinople), 1:367

Sainte-Chapelle (chapel), 1:280

Sainthood
- beatification process, 1:106–108, 107, 111–112, 198–199, 2:967, 968
- canonization process, 1:107, 193–199, 194, 2:967–969
- cult of, 1:193, 195, 274

Saints and Blesseds, 2:966–969, 968
- See also specific saints

Saint-Simon, Claude Henri de, 1:300

Sakyapa Order, 1:171

Saladin (sultan), 1:279

Salazar, António de Oliveira, 2:969, 969–971

Salem Witchcraft Trials, 1:315

Salerno, University of, 1:281

Salesian Sisters, 2:871, 1016

Salesians, founding, 1:302

Salesians of Don Bosco Spanish Civil War martyrs, 1:477–478, 2:625–626

La Salette, France, apparitions of Mary, 1:303

Salkaházi, Sára, Bl., 2:971–972

Saluting of the flag (U.S.), 1:330–331

Salvation
- ancient Greek and Roman views, 1:17
- Benedict XVI on, 1:117–118, 310
- Catholic-Muslim dialogue on, 1:234
- divinization doctrine and, 1:410
- Indian views, 1:161, 162
- Lambeth Articles on, 2:655
- limbo and, 2:668, 669–670
- Luther, Martin on, 1:287
- Lutheran perspective, 2:686–688
- Mary as coredemptrix, 2:765
- Mary-Church parallelism, 2:739–741, 742–743
- theology of Hell and, 1:521–522
- unbaptized babies and, 1:522, 2:668–670

Salvation, necessity of the Church for, 2:972–975

Salvation history, 2:931–932

Salvifici doloris (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 2:767–768

Salzano, Giulia, St., 2:975–976

Saṃbhogakāya (Buddhism), 1:162

Same-sex marriage, 1:339

Samsāra, 1:159, 160

Samuel, Herbert, 2:878

Samuel (Jewish scholar), 2:607

Sánchez del Río, José, 1:50

Sanctitas clarior (apostolic letter, Paul VI), 1:196, 197

Sanctity. See Holiness

Sanctorale, in breviaries, 1:157

Sanctorum communionem phrase, 1:353, 355

Sanctorum Mater (instruction, Congregation for the Causes of Saints), 1:107, 198–199

Sanghamittā (princess), 1:163

Sanguinary vows, 2:761
Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe (2000), 1:336
Santa Maria Antiqua (Rome), iconography of, 1:528
Sāntarakṣita (Buddhist sage), 1:170
Santo Domingo (Dominican Republic), 1:293, 308
Il Santo (Fogazzaro), 2:795
Sapientia Christiana (apostolic constitution, John Paul II), 1:444, 2:692
Sapor I (king of Persia), 1:267
Sarah, St., 2:957
Saraiva Martins, José (Card.)
  Ascensión del Corazón de Jesús beatification, 1:71
  on Balicki, Jan, 1:101
  Batthyány-Strattmann, László beatification, 1:105
  Beltrame Quattrocchi, Luigi and Maria Corsini beatification, 1:112
  Berkenbrock, Albertina beatification, 1:128
  Candelaria of St. Joseph beatification, 1:192
  Celestina of the Mother of God beatification, 1:242
  Chludzińska, Celina beatification, 1:263
  Cope, Marianne beatification, 1:370
  Daronch, Adílio beatification, 1:389
  Fabris, Eurosia beatification, 1:451
  Galen, Clemens August Graf von beatification, 1:489
  Ginard Martí, María de los Ángeles beatification, 1:495
  Gonzaáez, Emmanuel Gómez beatification, 1:498
  Haddad, Jacques Ghazir venerable beatification, 1:517
  Jägerstätter, Franz beatification, 2:576
  Justo de Oliveira, Lindalva beatification, 2:634
  Liviero, Carlo beatification, 2:674
  López de Maturana, Margarita María beatification, 2:676
  María del Carmen of the Child Jesus beatification, 2:704
  Maria Giuseppina of Jesus Crucified beatification, 2:701
  Maria Maddalena della Passion beatification, 2:701
  Maria of the Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ beatification, 2:705
  Maria Teresa of Jesus beatification, 2:702
  Mariano de la Mata Aparicio beatification, 2:707
  Marie-Céline de la Présentation beatification, 2:708
  Mary Magdalene of the Incarnation beatification, 2:779
  Mexican martyrs beatification, 1:1, 49
  Nicoli, Giuseppina beatification, 2:859
  Pellesi, Maria Rosa beatification, 2:889
  Pérez, Leonardo beatification, 2:891
  Peter Kibe Kasui and 187 Companions beatification, 2:898
  Pianzola, Francesco beatification, 2:902
  Rita Amada de Jesus beatification, 2:954
  Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio beatification, 2:961
  Solà y Molist, Andrés beatification, 2:1019–1020
  Spanish Civil War martyrs beatification, 1:468, 2:630
  Tovini, Moses beatification, 2:1066
  Van Lieshout, Eustáquio beatification, 2:1073
Sartori, Giovanni Battista, 1:44
Sartre, Jean-Paul, 2:976–979, 977
Satan, as Devil synonym, 1:404
Satanism, 1:140–141
Satisfaction of sins, in redemption theology, 2:933
Satolli, Francesco (Abp.), 1:47, 64
Saved by Hope (encyclical, Benedict XVI). See Spe salvi (encyclical, Benedict XVI)
Savio, Carlo (Bp.), 2:699
Savior, Jesus Christ as, 2:937
Savoy (historical country), 1:184, 2:991
Saybrook Platform (1708), 1:315
Scalabrini, Giovanni Battista (Bp. of Piacenza), 2:864
Scalia, Antonin, 1:333
Scandinavia, 1:276, 295, 2:684
  See also specific countries
Scete (monastic community), 2:802
Schall von Bell, J. Adam, 1:293
Scheeben, Matthias, 1:412
Scheler, Max, 2:895, 896, 897
Schelingová, Zdenka Cecilia, Bl., 2:979
Schema constitutionis de parvo catechismo (Vatican Council I), 1:221
Schempp, Abington School District v. (1963), 1:335, 336
Schengen Agreement (1985), 1:443
Schiaffo di Anagni (Anagni's Slap), 1:51
Schillebeeckx, Edward, 1:115, 117, 541
Schioppa, Lorenzo, 2:1090
Schisms, 1:325–327, 423
  See also Great Schism (1054); Western Schism (1378–1417)
Schleiermacher, Friedrich, 1:376
Schmid, Christoph von, 1:220
Schmidt, Wilhelm, 1:408
Scholarship
  Conventual Franciscans, 1:481
  Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and, 1:461–462
  Gregorian University, 1:504–507
  late modern Church, 1:303–304
  on nuclear weapons, 1:75–76
  Society of Catholic Social Scientists, 2:1018–1019
Scholastica, St., 1:122, 123
Scholasticism
  harrowing of Hell and, 1:528
  Neoscholasticism, 2:851–855 origination of, 1:281
  renewal of, 1:304
  Taparelli d'Azeglio, Luigi work, 2:1053
Schönmetzer, Adolf, 1:401
School funding. See Funding of education
School of the Middle Path, 1:161–162
School Sisters of Notre Dame, 1:302
Schools
  Blaine Amendment and, 1:322–323, 329 compulsory schooling case, 1:332
  Ireland, John and, 1:47
  Jansenist, 1:294
  monastic, 1:280
  religious freedom and, 1:329
  See also Parochial schools; Public schools; Universities and colleges
Schreibmayr, F, 1:221
Schroeder, Peter Joseph (Msgr.), 1:46, 48

Schulenburg Prado, Guillermo (Msgr.), 1:378
Schuman, Robert, 1:399, 440–441
Schuster, Ignatius, 1:220
Schwartz, Anni, 1:463
Science and Creation (Jaki), 2:577
Science and religion, 1:303–304, 2:576–577
Science of discourse, 2:861
Scofield, Cyrus Ingerson, 2:929
The Scofield Reference Bible, 2:929
Scopes, John, 1:336
Scotism, 1:188, 2:997
Scotland, 1:273, 284, 292
Scotus, John Duns, 2:1001
Scouting for Boys (Baden-Powell), 1:151
Scripture. See Bible
SCSS (Society of Catholic Social Scientists), 2:1018–1019
Le Second Catéchisme (Bossuet), 1:220
Second Coming of Jesus Christ. See Parousia
Second Council of Constantinople. See Constantinople, Second Council of (553)
Second Crusade (1147–1149), 1:279, 2:609
Second Jewish Revolt (132–135), 2:606–607
Second Lateran Council (1139), 1:247
Second Plenary Council (Baltimore, 1866), 1:103
Second Restoration (States of the Church), 2:1036
Second Revolution (1928–1932) (Russia), 2:1027–1028
Second Vatican Council (1962–1965). See Vatican Council II (1962–1965)
Second World War. See World War II (1939–1945)
Secondhand testimony (sainthood process), 1:195
Secretaria Apostolica establishment, 1:203
Secretariat for Non-Christians, 1:231
Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity, 1:306
Secretarius apostolica office, 1:203
Secretarius intimus office, 1:203
Secretary of State, Cardinal, 1:203–204, 204
Section for General Affairs (Secretariat of State), 1:203–204
Section for Relations with States (Secretariat of State), 1:203, 204
Secularism, 2:979–981
Secularization, 1:23, 202, 228, 397–398, 409
Sedation, terminal, vs. euthanasia, 2:914
Seeger, United States v. (1965), 1:329
Seipel, Ignaz, 1:395
Selective Service and Training Act (1940), 1:329
Self, continuity of, 1:12
Self-defense, atomic weapons and, 1:75, 80
Selva di materie predicablili (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:31
Semenenko, Peter (Father), 1:262
Seminary education, 2:981–989
  history, 1:289, 2:981–984
  United States, 2:984–989
Semiquietism, 1:538, 2:923
Sendai, Japan, martyrs from, 2:898
Sense appetites, 1:205
Separation of church and state
  Americanism and, 1:47, 49
  L'Avenir on, 1:95, 96
  caesaropapism, 1:183–185
  Catholic schools and, 1:37, 324, 430–432 colonial Rhode Island, 1:316
  disestablishment period, 1:318
  Italy, 1:308
  secularism and, 2:979–981
  wall of separation standard, 1:334–335, 336–337
Seper, Franjo (Card.), 1:563
Sephardic Jewish history, 2:611–612
September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, 1:234
Septuagint, 1:265
Sepúlveda, Juan Ginés de, 2:1013
Serbia, European Union candidacy, 1:442
  See also Yugoslavia
Serfs, 2:1012
Sergius I (Pope), 1:365
Sergius of Radonezh, St., 2:820
Seripando, Girolamo, 1:291
Sermoni compendiati per tutte le domeniche del anno (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:31
Sertillanges, A. G., 1:34
Servant of God, as title, 1:108
Servants of St. Joseph, 2:954
Servants of the Sacred Heart, Congregation of the, 2:1081
Seth (Egyptian god), 1:18
Seton, Ernest Thompson, 1:151
Seven, significance of, 1:217
Severian of Gabala, 2:759
Severus, Lucius Septimius, 1:267
Severus Alexander (emperor of Rome), 1:267
Seward, William H., 1:38, 40
Sexual abuse crisis, 1:229
Sexual morality, 1:117, 338
Seymour, William J., 1:258
Shabbatai Ṣevi of Smyrna, 2:612
Shannon, Thomas A., 1:75
Shannon v. Frost (1842), 1:326
Sharon, Ariel, 2:619, 620
Sheen, Fulton (Bp.), 1:345
Sheil, Bernard J. (Bp.), 1:239
Sheol, 1:13, 14, 526
Shepherd of Hermas (theological work), 1:265
Sheptytsky, Andrei, 1:340
Sherbert, Adell, 1:331, 332
Sherbert v. Verner (1963), 1:331–332, 333
Sherman, Hygrade Provision Company v. (1925), 1:329
Sherrill, John, 1:258
Shi Xie (governor), 1:174
Shields, Marija (Mother), 1:340
Shields, Thomas Edward, 1:431
Shinto traditions, Buddhism and, 1:168, 169
Shoah. See Holocaust (Shoah)
Shōtoku (Japanese prince), 1:167
Shriver, Eunice Kennedy, 2:643
Shroud of Turin, 2:989–993, 990
Shroud of Turin Research Project (STURP), 2:992

Shugendō tradition, 1:168–169
Shuqeiri, Ahmad, 1:65
Si Nhiep (governor), 1:174
Sibylline Oracles, 1:266
Sic et Non (Abelard), 1:280–281
Siddhārtha Gautama (Buddha), 1:159–160, 161
Siege of Jerusalem (70), 2:606
Siete Partidas (laws), 2:1012
Sigismund (Holy Roman Emperor), 1:284
Signum magnum (apostolic exhortation, Paul VI), 2:756
Sikhism, 1:19
Silla period, Buddhism and, 1:172–173
Le Sillon (French movement), 2:795
Silva Henríquez, Raúl (Card.), 1:27
Silverius (Pope), 1:364
Silvestrini, Achille (Abp.), 1:348
Simmons, William J., 1:56
Simmons-Harris, Zelman v. (2002), 1:337
Simon, Richard, 1:293
Simon of Montfort, 1:225
Simon (Szymon) of Lipnica, St., 2:993–994
Sin, 2:994–1002, 995
  defined, 2:994
  distinction among sins, 2:994, 997–1001
  Lutheran perspective, 2:686–688
  Mary's freedom from, 2:733 material vs. formal sin, 2:995–997 modern teachings, 2:1001–1002
  redemption theology and, 2:931, 932, 933, 938–941
  Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio on, 2:960
  slavery and, 2:1007, 1012
  theology of the cross and, 1:374, 376
  See also Original sin
Sinai Covenant, 2:600
Sinai Peninsula, Eastern monasticism, 2:818
Singer, Peter, 2:980–981
Singulari nos (encyclical, Gregory XVI), 1:96, 299, 398
Sinhala Buddhism, 1:163, 164–165
Sinn Fein Party, 1:570, 2:643
Sir Thomas More (play), 2:830
Siricius (Pope), 1:246, 2:668
Sister churches, 2:1002–1004, 1003
Sister Disciples of the Divine Master, 1:495
Sister Formation Conference, 1:432
Sister Oblates of St. Francis de Sales, 1:97
Sister of the Divine Will, 2:1042–1043
Sisters, Expiatory Victims of Jesus, Congregation of, 1:155–156
Sisters Adorers of the Precious Blood, 2:780
Sisters College (Catholic University of America), 1:431
Sisters of Charity, 1:130
Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Mercy, Congregation of, 2:1098
Sisters of Christ the King, 1:141
Sisters of Jesus the Good Shepherd, 1:24
Sisters of Providence of Montreal, 2:1056
Sisters of Providence of St. Mary-of-the-Woods, 1:510, 2:1004–1005
Sisters of St. John the Baptist, 1:487, 2:1026
Sisters of St. Joseph, Congregation of, 1:500
Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, Congregation of, 2:1079
Sisters of the Cross, 1:511
Sisters of the Good Shepherd, 2:831
Sisters of the Holy Cross, Congregation of, 1:550–551, 2:831
Sisters of the Holy Face, 2:779
Sisters of the Merciful Jesus, Congregation of, 2:1021
Sisters of the Most Precious Blood, 2:917
Sisters of the Poor of Altagracia de Orituco, 1:192
Sisters of the Precious Blood, 1:180, 2:916–918, 917–918
Sites, John E., 1:94
Six Days' War (1967), 2:617–618, 618
Six epochs (Augustine), 1:217
Six Schools of Nara Buddhism, 1:167
Sixtus III (Pope), 2:759
Sixtus IV (Pope), 2:754
Sixtus V (Pope), 1:107, 195, 291, 2:668–669
Skylstad, William S. (Bp.), 1:81
Slattery, John R., 1:49
Slave trade, 2:1008–1009, 1012–1014
Slavery, 2:1005–1016, 1010, 1014, 1015
  abolition of, 2:670
  Bible on, 2:1005–1006, 1007
  Church and, 2:1007–1009
  defined, 2:1009
  history of, 2:1009–1016
  papacy and, 1:40–41
Slavorum apostoli (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:308
Slipyj, Josyf, 1:347
Sloughter, Henry, 1:54
Slovakia, 1:442, 454, 2:1094
  See also Czechoslovakia
Slovenia, European Union membership, 1:442
Smalcald Articles (Lutheran text), 2:683
Smaldone, Filippo Mariano, St., 2:1016–1017
Small Catechism (Luther), 2:683
Smith, Alfred E., 1:57
Smith, Employment Division v. (1990), 1:332–333
Smith, Jean Kennedy, 2:643
Smith v. Nelson (1846), 1:326
Sobrino, Jon, 1:541, 2:947
Social justice, 1:87, 300–301, 306, 310, 2:666
Social Security number assignment, religious exercise and, 1:332
Social sin, 2:1001
Social teachings. See Catholic teachings
Socialism, 1:26, 300, 356, 2:715, 1022
Society, sin and, 2:939
Society for Catholic Liturgy, 2:1017–1018
Society for Christian Doctrine, 2:915, 916
Society of Catholic Social Scientists (SCSS), 2:1018–1019
Society of Jesus. See Jesuits

Society of Sisters, Pierce v. (1925), 1:329, 431
Society of St. Paul, 1:24, 494–495
Society of St. Pius X, 1:7, 119, 424, 2:596
Society of St. Vincent de Paul, 1:303
Society of the Catholic Apostolate, 1:488
Society of the Divine Word, 1:408, 2:579, 1042
Society of the Precious Blood, 1:180
Society of the Sacred Heart, 1:302
Socrates Scholasticus, 1:244
Söderblom, Nathan, 2:685
Sodomy law, Texas, 1:338
Soft determinism, 1:402
Solà y Molist, Andrés (Father), Bl., 2:891, 927, 1019–1020
Solanus Casey Center, 1:212
Solaro della Margarita, Clemente, 1:241
Solesmes Congregation, 2:810
Solidarity (Catholic social teaching), 1:76, 87, 210
Solidarity (Polish labor organization), 1:348, 349, 360
Solisius, Antonius, 1:249
Sollicitudo Rei Socialis (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:87, 88, 2:716
Solomon (king of Israel), 2:773
Somalia, League of Nations and, 2:659
Somascan Fathers, 1:289
Sönam Gyatso, 1:171
Song dynasty, Buddhism and, 1:166
Songtsen Gampo (king of Tibet), 1:170
Sons of Divine Providence, 2:1020
Sons of Mary Immaculate, Congregation of, 2:888
Sons of the Holy Family, 1:551–552, 2:696
Sons of the Immaculate Conception, Congregation of, 2:822
Sŏn School. See Chan School
Sopeña Lay Movement, 2:955
Sopoćko, Michał (Father), Bl., 1:407, 2:1020–1021
Sorbonne, University of Paris at, 1:288
Sorin, Edward (Father), 1:550, 551
Sorsky, Nilus, St., 2:820
Sosa, Sixto (Bp.), 1:192
Soto, Pedro de, 1:219
Soubirous, Marie-Bernarde (Bernadette), St., 1:128–131, 129, 303 Soul
  ancient Egyptian views, 1:18
  ancient Greek and Roman views, 1:15, 16–17
  Bergson, Henri Louis on, 1:127
  Biblical views, 1:14, 526, 531
  Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) on, 1:189
  Christian views, 1:21
  Gnosticism on, 1:264
  Indian views, 1:19
  Jewish views, 1:20, 526
  primitive societies' views, 1:13
  Protestant views, 1:529
  Quietism beliefs, 1:294
  Stein, Edith on, 2:1039, 1040
  Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1045
  transmigration of, 1:16, 19
Sources chrétiennes (collection), 2:951
Sources of Renewal: The Implementation of Vatican II (John Paul II), 1:24
South America, 1:63, 293, 311, 2:1012–1013
  See also Latin America; specific countries
South Carolina, 1:314, 320–321, 323, 331–332
South Dakota, Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323
South Korea. See Korea
Southern African Catholic Bishops' Conference (SACBC), 1:233
Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, 1:93
Southern United States, 1:320–321, 2:1013–1014
  See also specific states
Sovereignty of nations, 1:75–76, 440, 441, 2:1046
Soviet Union
  atomic weapons and, 1:78, 79, 84
  church-state relations, 1:343–344, 345, 346–347, 348–349, 2:1028–1029
  Ciszek, Walter J. work, 1:340
  Cold War and, 1:342–349
  Communism in, 1:143, 144, 357–358, 2:1026–1029
  dissolution of, 1:144, 308
  European Union and, 1:440–441
  Jewish history, 2:615
  John XXIII and, 1:306, 2:842
  Pius XII and, 2:841, 842, 1094–1095
  Stalin, Josef leadership, 1:143, 358, 2:1026–1029
  totalitarianism, 2:666
  See also Russia
Sozomen (historian), 1:244
Spain, 2:1021–1025
  Alumbrados, 1:35–36
  Anglo-Spanish War, 1:457
  caesaropapism, 1:184
  Cagot persecution, 1:185–186
  catechism development, 1:222
  early modern Church missions, 1:293
  European integration, 1:441
  fascism in, 1:454, 455
  Franco, Francisco leadership, 1:454, 482–485, 483
  Jewish history, 2:608–609, 610
  martyrs from, 1:468–479, 495, 2:621–630, 1023–1024
  monasticism development, 2:804 reform in, 1:289
  rise of Islam and, 1:274
  slave trade, 2:1008, 1012–1013
  Spanish Netherlands revolt, 1:292
  Western Schism and, 1:284
Spalding, John Lancaster (Bp. of Peoria, IL), 1:46, 47, 48–49, 103, 221
Spangler, David, 2:855
Spanish Civil War (1936–1939)
  Franco, Francisco leadership, 1:482
  Italian involvement, 2:836
  League of Nations and, 2:660 martyrs of, 1:468–479, 495, 2:621–630, 1023–1024
Spanish Confederation of the Autonomous Right (CEDA), 1:455
Spanish Inquisition, 1:35, 36
Spanish Netherlands, revolt of, 1:292
Spe salvi (encyclical, Benedict XVI), 1:117–118, 310, 2:716, 770–771
Speaking in tongues. See Glossolalia
Species-genus existence, 2:860
Species of sin, 2:997
Specific trusts, for church property, 1:326
Speculative theology, 1:293
Speed, Joshua, 2:671
Spener, Philipp Jacob, 2:684

Spinelli, Francesco (Father), 1:352, 353
Spirits, ancient views, 1:17
See also Soul
Spiritual direction, 1:100
Spiritual formation, in priestly formation, 2:988
Spiritual Guide (Molinos), 1:294
Spirituali militum cura (apostolic constitution, John Paul II), 1:52
Spirituals (Franciscans), 1:282, 291
Spiritus Domini (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 1:34
The Splendor of Truth (encyclical, John Paul II). See Veritatis splendor (encyclical, John Paul II)
Spoto, Francesco, Bl., 2:1025–1026
Sri Lanka, Buddhism in, 1:163–165
Srong btsan sgam po (king of Tibet), 1:170
Stahel, Oskar, 1:400
Stahel, Rainer, 2:1095
Stahl, Ignaz, 1:400
Stained glass, in medieval architecture, 1:280
Stalin, Josef, 1:144, 2:1026, 1026–1030
Bolshevism and, 1:143
Communism and, 1:358, 2:1026–1029
de Gaulle, Charles and, 1:390
Pius XII and, 1:343, 344, 345, 346, 2:1029
State sovereignty. See Sovereignty of nations
State vs. federal governments (U.S.), 1:318
States of the Church, 2:1030, 1030–1039
Borgia, Cesare and, 1:147
medieval Church, 2:1030–1032
modern church, 2:1033–1038
seizure and return, 1:298
Stations of the Cross, 1:388
Stauffenberg, Klaus von, 1:547
Steeb, Charles (Father), 2:911
Stein, Edith, Teresa Benedicta of the Cross, St., 2:1039, 1039–1041 controversy over, 1:91, 2:591, 592
personalism and, 2:896
Der Stellvertreter (play), 2:907
Stenmanns, Josepha Hendrina, Bl., 2:1041–1042
Stephen I (Pope), 1:267
Stephen II (Pope), 1:275, 414, 415, 2:1030–1031
Stepinac, Alojzije (Card.), 1:306, 345, 347
Sterni, Gaetana, Bl., 2:1042–1043
Stewart, Potter, 1:331–332
Sthaviravāda, 1:159
Stigmatization, 1:435
Stillwater Plan, 1:47
Stoicism, slavery and, 2:1011
Stollenwerk, Helena, Bl., 2:1042
Stone, Harlan Fiske, 1:330
Stone carvings, in medieval architecture, 1:280
Stone v. Graham (1980), 1:335
Strassmann, Fritz, 1:77
Strauss, David, 1:304
Stuart, Henry Benedict, 1:44
Studies in Americanism, Is Father Hecker a Saint? (Maignen), 1:48
Studite monasticism, 2:815, 817, 820
STURP (Shroud of Turin Research Project), 2:992
Sturzo, Luigi, 1:395, 398, 454
Súarez, Francisco, 1:404, 2:668, 734, 1043–1047
Subdeacons, 1:245, 246, 247
Subiaco Congregation, 2:810
Subjective responsibility for sin, 2:995–996, 997
Subsidiarity, 1:210, 2:1053
Substance, 1:188
Substitutional expiation theory, 2:943–944
Suenens, Léon Joseph (Card.), 1:259
Suetonius, 1:264
Suffering, 1:374, 376, 520, 2:865, 932, 945
Sullivan, William, 1:49
Sulpicians, seminary development, 2:984
Summa theologica (Alexander of Hale), 1:355
Summa theologica (Thomas Aquinas)
Aristotle influence on, 1:281
Cajetan's commentary on, 1:188, 189
on Christian virtues, 1:205
on communion of saints, 1:356
on Hell, 1:521
Súarez, Francisco treatises, 2:1043–1044
theological determinism and, 1:403
Summi pontificatus (encyclical, Pius XII), 1:343, 440, 456, 2:908
Summorum pontificum (motu proprio, Benedict XVI), 1:118, 424
Sunday, Divine Mercy, 1:407
Sunday closing laws, 1:331
Sūnyatā (Buddhism), 1:162
Super specula (papal bull, Honorius III), 2:983
Superactual values, personalism and, 2:895
Supernatural, charisms as, 1:256
Superstitions, in ancient Greece and Rome, 1:15
Suriano, Giuseppina, Bl., 2:1047–1048
Sweden, 1:441, 503, 2:684
Switzerland, European integration, 1:441
Syllabus of Errors, 1:138, 298, 394, 440, 2:667
Sylvester I (Pope), 1:414, 414, 415
Symeon the New Theologian, St., 1:411, 2:815–816
Symmachus, Quintus (pagan), 1:269
Symmachus (Pope), 1:271
Synesius of Cyrene, 1:244
Synod of Constantinople (1923), 1:503
Synod of European Bishops, 1:442
Synod of Trullan (692), 1:245, 365
Synods, 1:266
See also specific synods
Synods, diocesan, 1:406
Syria
Arab-Israeli conflict and, 2:617, 619
early Church, 1:264, 267
monasticism development, 1:269, 2:803, 818–819
Syrian Catholic Church, 1:246
Syro-Malabar Church, 1:245
System of Virtue (Buddhism), 1:171
Systematic theology, 1:521
Szilárd, Leó, 1:77, 78
Szymkowiak, Sancja, Bl.,

2:1048–1049

T

T (Apostles' Creed), 1:354–355
Tacitus, 1:264, 266
Tadini, Arcángelo, St., 2:1051–1052
T'aejo (Koryŏ founder), 1:173
Taizé monasticism, 2:813
Talamoni, Luigi, Bl., 2:1052–1053
Talavera y Mendoza, Hernando de (Abp. of Granada), 1:289
Talleyrand-Périgord, Charles-Maurice de, 1:43–44
Talmud, 1:20, 2:607
Tang dynasty, Buddhism and, 1:165, 166
Tantric practices, 1:172, 175
Taoism. See Daoism
Taparelli d'Azeglio, Luigi, 1:381, 2:1053–1054
Taparelli d'Azeglio, Massimo, 2:1054–1055
Tàpies Sirvant, Josep, Bl., 2:629
Tardini, Domenico (Msgr.), 1:344
Tarrés I Claret, Pere, Bl., 2:1055
Tartarus, as afterlife punishment, 1:16
Tatian (theologian), 1:267
Tavernier Gamelin, Émilie, Bl., 2:1056
Tax Commission, Walz v. (1970), 1:336
Taxes, religious publications, 1:330
Taylor, Myron
  Auschwitz-Birkenau information, 1:89
  Cold War and, 1:343, 344–345
  Mussolini, Benito regime and, 2:850, 1093, 1095
  NATO and, 2:842
  Pius XII and, 2:837
Taysir al Tamimi (Sheik), 2:883
Technology, Benedict XVI on, 1:210
Teenagers, Black Mass practice, 1:140–141
Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre, 1:96, 2:1056–1058, 1057
Tejeda, Adalberto, 1:1, 514
Téllez Robles, Matilde, Bl., 1:374
Telos (end), 1:206
Temperance, as cardinal virtue, 1:206
Temporal power, Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1046
Temporale, in breviaries, 1:157
Ten Commandments, 1:217, 218, 219, 335, 338, 2:1045
Ten Years' War (1868–1878) (Cuba), 2:1071
Tendai School, 1:167–168
Tennessee, public office religious tests, 1:322
Teresa Bojaxhiu of Calcutta (Mother), Bl., 2:787–790, 832–833, 833
Teresa of Ávila, 1:291
Teresian Association, 2:1058
Terminal sedation vs. euthanasia, 2:914
Terrier, Léon-Albert (Bp.), 1:464
Tertio millennio adveniente (apostolic letter, John Paul II), 1:24
Tertullian, 1:244, 266, 267
Testem benevolentiae nostrae (apostolic letter, Leo XIII), 1:46, 48, 49
Tettamanzi, Dionigi (Card.), 2:823
Texas, 1:322, 323, 324, 338
Texas, Lawrence v. (2003), 1:338
Texas Monthly v. Bullock (1989), 1:330
Thailand, Buddhism in, 1:176–177
Theatines, 1:289
Theocracy, 1:314, 315
Theodora (Byzantine empress), 1:271
Theodore Ascidas, 1:271
Theodore of Mopsuestia, 1:364
Theodore the Studite, St., 2:815
Theodoret of Cyrus, 1:245, 364, 533
Theodoric the Great (Ostrogoth king), 1:271
Theodosius, St., 2:819
Theodosius I (emperor of Rome), 1:269, 364
Theodosius II (emperor of Rome), 1:245
Theologia moralis (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33
Theological and Pastoral Guidelines on the Catholic Charismatic Renewal (Suenens), 1:259
Theological determinism, 1:402–403
Theological Gallicanism, 1:491
Theological species of sin, 2:997–998
Theological virtues, 2:735, 967
Theology
  Alphonsus de Liguori on, 1:31–33
  on charisms, 1:256
  of the cross, 1:374–377, 375
  divinization doctrine and, 1:410–412
  early Church, 1:270
  early modern Church, 1:286–287, 293–294
  of Hell, 1:518–524, 519, 530–531
  Kilmartin, Edward J. on, 2:644
  Küng, Hans work, 2:650–651
  Lutheran, 2:684
  Neoscholasticism and, 2:852–853
  Neothomism and, 2:853
  ressourcement, 2:950–953
  Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio work, 2:960 of sin, 2:994–1002, 995
  See also specific types
A Theology of Liberation (Gutiérrez), 1:515
Theophany, 2:788, 789–790
Theophilus of Alexandria (Patriarch), 1:270
Theoretical Treatise on Natural Law Based on Fact (Taparelli), 2:1053 Theosis, Doctrine of, 1:410–413
Theravāda
  Cambodia, 1:177
  India, 1:159, 161
  Myanmar (Burma), 1:175
  Sri Lanka, 1:163
  Thailand, 1:176
  Vietnam, 1:174, 175
Theresa of Ávila, 1:291
Thérèse of Lisieux, St., 1:309, 382, 2:710, 711, 712, 1059–1061
Thermonuclear weapons, 1:77
Theses on Feurbach (Marx), 2:714
Thesis of inalienability, 1:414–415
Thessalonians, First Epistle to, on rapture, 2:928, 929
Theurgy, doctrine of, 2:1061–1062
Thevarparampil, Augustino, Bl., 2:1062–1063
They Speak with Other Tongues (Sherrill), 1:258
Thijssen, Frans, 2:1086
Third Council of Constantinople (680), 1:365

Third Crusade (1189–1192), 1:279, 2:609–610

Third hour, as spiritual time, 1:407

Third International (Comintern), 1:357, 358

Third Plenary Council (Baltimore, 1884). See Baltimore, Councils of, plenary

Thirty-Nine Articles of Religion (Anglican text), 1:288, 2:776

Thirty Years' War (1618–1648), 1:292

Thomas Aquinas, St.
- catechism development, 1:218
- on Christian virtues, 1:205, 206, 207
- on communion of saints, 1:355–356
- on divinization, 1:411
- on grace, 1:256
- on Hell, 1:521
- on limbo, 2:668
- on Mary, 2:733, 738, 742
- personalism and, 2:896, 897
- on praeter intentionem, 2:914–915
- on redemption, 2:945, 946, 947
- on salvation, 2:973
- on sin, 2:999, 1000–1001
- on slavery, 2:1007–1008
- Súarez, Francisco on, 2:1043–1044, 1045
- as theologian, 1:281
- theological determinism and, 1:403

Thomas v. Review Board (1981), 1:332

Thomism
- Cajetan (Tommaso de Vio) and, 1:188–189
- Clarke, W. Norris work, 1:341–342
- elements of sin, 2:997
- Gregorian University and, 1:504, 505
- Modernism and, 2:795
- Neothomism, 2:851–855
- Owens, Joseph work, 2:875
- renewal of, 1:304
- ressourcement theology and, 2:950–953
- Stein, Edith work, 2:1039
- theology of the cross and, 1:376

Thornton, Donald, 1:331

Three-Chapter Controversy, 1:271, 364

Three Mile Island nuclear accident (PA) (1979), 1:74

Tiantai School, 1:165, 166, 167

Tibet, Buddhism in, 1:162, 169–172, 170

Tifane, Pierre, Benedict XV (Antipope), 1:113

Tilmann, K., 1:221

Tilton v. Richardson (1971), 1:336

Time, Bergson, Henri Louis on, 1:125

Time and Free Will (Bergson), 1:126

Time (magazine), on John XXIII, 1:306

Timothy 1 and 2, Epistles to, 1:255, 264, 392

Tiso, Josef (Msgr.), 2:1094

Tissa, Devanampiya (king of Sri Lanka), 1:163

Tito, Josip Broz, 1:345, 358

To Live in Christ Jesus (United States Conference of Catholic Bishops), 1:81, 82

Toaff, Elio, 1:91

Toguchi, Audrey, 2:1078

Toher, Michael (Father), 1:419

Tokyo, Japan, martyrs from, 2:899

Toledo, Fourth Council of (663), 1:246

Tolerated excommunicates, 1:449

Toleration Acts of 1639 and 1649 (Maryland), 1:317, 2:1063–1064

Tolomei, Bernard, St., 1:124, 2:1064–1065

Tome to Flavian (Leo I), 1:270

Tondi, Alighiero, 1:505

Tongues. See Glossolalia

Torcaso v. Watkins (1961), 1:320, 335

Torres Morales, Genoveva, St., 2:1065

Torres Padilla, José (Father), 1:511

Tosi, Luigi (Bp.), 1:485

Total institutions (seminaries), 2:984

Totalitarianism, 1:452, 453, 2:666

Tournely, Honoré de, 1:32

Tours, Battle of (732), 1:274

Tours, Council of (461), 1:246

Tous y Soler, José, Bl., 2:1066

Tovar, Juan de, 1:508

Tovini, Moses, Bl., 2:1066–1067

Toward a Christian Theology of Religious Pluralism (Dupuis), 1:421

Toward a Professional Army (de Gaulle), 1:390

Tractatus de anima (Súarez), 2:1045

Tractatus de parvulis trahendis ad Christum (Gerson), 1:218

Tractatus pro clericorum connubio (Ulric), 1:247

Tracy, Spencer, 1:154

Traditional Latin Mass, 1:423, 424, 2:596

Traditionalism, 1:5, 7, 539–540

Un traité cathère inédit . . . (Catharist text), 1:226

Trajan, 1:266

Tran dynasty, Buddhism and, 1:175

Tranier, Jean, 1:113–114

Tranier, Pierre, 1:113

Tranquillitas Ordinis (Weigel), 1:83

Transcendental Thomism, 2:853

The Transfiguration (painting), 2:679

Translatio corporis, in canonization, 1:194

Transmigration of souls, 1:16, 19

Transportation, public, establishment clause cases, 1:334

Transubstantiation, Lutheran perspective, 2:688

Traynor, William J., 1:56

Trčka, Metod Dominik, Bl., 2:1067

Treason Act (1534) (England), 1:3

Treaties of Rome (1957), 1:441, 443

Treatise (Cosmas the Priest), 1:225

Treatise on the Power and Primacy of the Pope (Lutheran text), 2:683

Treaty of London (1915), 2:1089

Treaty of Maastricht (1993), 1:441, 442, 443

Treaty of Paris (1951), 1:441

Treaty of the European Union (1993), 1:441, 442, 443

Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT), 1:64, 78–79, 81

Trent, Council of (1545–1563), 1:290
- call for, 1:288–289
- catechism development, 1:219, 222
- clerical celibacy and marriage,

1:248–250, 249
condemnation of heresies, 1:537
Fernandes, Bartolomeu dei Martiri involvement, 1:462
Gallicanism and, 1:491
on justification, 2:668
Lutheranism and, 2:682–683
on Mary, 2:733
monasticism development, 2:808–809
overview, 1:289
purgatory, 1:21
redemption theology, 2:933, 934–935 seminary legislation, 2:982–983
on sin, 2:1000
Tribunal officers, 1:406
Tridentine Catechism, 1:219, 222
Tridentine Council. See Trent, Council of (1545–1563)
Tridentine Mass, 1:423, 424, 2:596
Trikāya (Buddhism), 1:162
Trinity (bomb), 1:78
Trinity (theology), 2:686, 861
Trionfo della Chiesa ossia istoria delle eresie colle loro confutazioni (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33
Trisong Detsen (king of Tibet), 1:170
Tritius, Ferdinand, 1:249, 250
Trosly, Council of (909), 1:247
Trotsky, Leon, 1:143, 357
The Troubles (Ireland), 1:570
Troxel v. Granville (2000), 2:1019
True Christianity (Arndt), 2:684
True Devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary (Montfort), 1:419
True Devotion to the Passion from the Writings of Battista Varani (Battista da Varano), 1:106
Trullan, Synod of (692), 1:245, 365
Truman, Harry S., 1:154, 344, 345, 346, 2:841, 842
Trumbull, John, 1:45
Trustees, of church property, 1:324–327
Truth, Benedict XVI on, 1:208–210
Truth and Tolerance: Christian Belief and World Religions (Benedict XVI), 1:118
Tsenpo Khoré (king of Tibet), 1:171
Tsong Kha pa (scholar), 1:171
Tunisia, Jewish history, 2:615
Turberville, Henry, 1:219–220
Turin, Council of (398), 1:246
Turkey, 1:310, 442–443
See also Ottoman Empire
Turmel, Joseph, 2:794, 797
Twal, Fouad, 2:883
Two Kinds of Righteousness (Luther), 2:687
The Two Sources of Morality and Religion (Bergson), 1:126
Tyler, Royall, 1:45
Tyrrell, George, 2:796, 797

U

Ubaghs, Casimir, 1:539, 540
Ubi majus periculum (papal bull, Gregory X), 2:885
Uchibori Sakuemon, Paulus, 2:899
Üffing, Maria Euthymia, Bl., 2:1069–1070
Ŭichŏŏn (monk), 1:173
U.K. See United Kingdom
Ukraine, 1:74, 2:820
Ukrainian Catholic Church, 2:1029
Ulfilas (Bp.), 1:271
Ulric (Bp. of Imola), 1:247
Umberg, Johannes B., 1:401
Unam Sanctam (papal bull, Boniface VIII), 1:51, 283
Unbaptized infants, 1:522, 2:668–670
Unbelief, theology of Hell and, 1:518, 521
Unconditional surrender policy, 1:343
Unemployment Appeals Comm'n of Florida, Hobbie v. (1987), 1:332
Unemployment compensation, 1:331–332
Unia, Michele (Father), 2:1075
Unified Silla period, Buddhism and, 1:172–173
Union diplomacy (U.S.), 1:38, 40–41
Union of Brest (1595–1596), 1:292
Union of Užhorod (1646), 1:292
Unitatis redintegratio (decree, Vatican Council II), 1:307, 2:775
United Kingdom (U.K.)
atomic weapons and, 1:84
catechism development, 1:221
European integration, 1:441, 443
Irish nationalism and, 1:569–570
See also Britain; England; Ireland; Scotland
United Nations
Arab-Israeli conflict and, 2:616, 617, 620
Iraq War and, 1:565, 567
Palestine administration, 2:880
Pius XII and, 1:440–441
Waldheim, Kurt leadership, 2:1084
United Nations Committee on Disarmament, 1:81
United States (U.S.)
Arab-Israeli conflict and, 2:617
atomic weapons and, 1:75, 77–79, 81, 82, 84
Buddhism in, 1:178–179
Call to Action Conference, 1:190–192
catechism development, 1:102–103, 220, 221
Catholic K-12 schools, 1:430–434
Catholic population, 1:311
Civil War, 1:38–42, 39, 56
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:246
Cold War and, 1:343, 344–345, 346, 347
Franco, Francisco and, 1:483
higher Catholic education in, 1:427–430, 446
Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:583–584
Jewish immigration, 2:614
John Paul II on, 1:308–309
late modern monasticism, 2:811
Modernism in, 2:796
New Age movement, 2:855–859, 856
Perón, Juan and, 2:892–893
Revolutionary War, 1:42–46, 43
secularism, 2:980, 981
seminary development, 2:984–989
slavery, 2:670, 1013–1015
Society of the Divine Word, 1:408
spread of Lutheranism, 2:684, 685
Vatican diplomatic relations, 1:45, 308, 327–328
World War I involvement, 2:1090, 1091
See also Anti-Catholicism, United States; Church and state, in the United States
United States, Arver v. (1918), 1:329
United States, Girouard v. (1946), 1:329

United States, Reynolds v. (1878), 1:323, 330
United States, Welsh v. (1970), 1:330
United States Catholic Catechism for Adults, 1:223
United States Catholic Conference (USCC), 1:191
United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB)
on atomic weapons, 1:75, 76, 81, 82, 83
catechism development, 1:223
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:233, 234
Catholic Youth Organization and, 1:239
clerical training, 2:988
Jewish-Catholic relations, 2:583–584, 596
mandatum requirement, 2:693–694
on political participation, 2:638
United States Constitution
Article 6, 1:321–322
Bill of Rights, 1:318
establishment clause, 1:318, 334–338
First Amendment, 1:55–56, 318, 328, 329
Fourteenth Amendment, 1:328–329
United States Supreme Court
Boy Scouts case, 1:151
definitions of religion, 1:329–330
First Amendment interpretation, 1:328
Fourteenth Amendment interpretation, 1:328–329 freedom of religious exercise cases, 1:330–334 religious establishment cases, 1:334–338
United States v. Macintosh (1931), 1:329
United States v. Seeger (1965), 1:329
United States Congress, 1:322, 327
Unity, personalism and, 2:894
Unity of the Church, 1:305
Universal role of the Church, 2:974–975
Universalism, 1:319
Universals, 1:280, 2:859–860, 861, 862, 875
Universi dominici gregis (apostolic constitution, John Paul II), 2:885 Universities and colleges
Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities, 1:71–73
Cardinal Newman Society, 1:202–203 ecclesiastical vs. Catholic, 2:692–693
Fellowship of Catholic Scholars and, 1:461–462
free speech and, 1:333
High Middle Ages, 1:280–281
higher Catholic education in the U.S., 1:427–430
Jesuits and, 1:290–291
public funding, 1:336, 337
seminary education, 1:289, 2:981–989
women's education, 1:427
See also Ex corde Ecclesiae (apostolic constitution, John Paul II); Schools; specific universities and colleges
University Consortium for Catholic Education, 1:433
University of Bologna, 1:281
University of Cologne, 1:288
University of Dallas, 1:92
University of Louvain, 1:288
University of Michigan, 1:211
University of Missouri at Kansas City, 1:333
University of Montpellier, 1:281
University of Montreal, 1:150
University of Paris, 1:281, 282
University of Salerno, 1:281
University of Virginia, 1:333–334
Unzen, Japan, martyrs from, 2:899–900
Upper Silesian Hydrogenation Works, 1:89
Uranium, in atomic weapons, 1:77
Urban II (Pope), 1:277
Urban VI (Pope), 1:284, 2:1032
Urban VIII (Pope), 1:107, 133, 195, 291, 2:828
Urbani VIII Pontificis Optimi Maximi Decreta servanda in Canonizatione et Beatificatione Sanctorum (decree, Urban VIII), 1:195
Ursuline Convent (Boston, MA), 1:45, 56
Ursuline Sisters, 1:289, 2:661
U.S. See United States
USCC (United States Catholic Conference), 1:191
USCCB. See United States Conference of Catholic Bishops
Useful Memories of a Useless Life (Curci), 1:381
Ut unum sint (encyclical, John Paul II), 1:308–309, 2:769, 775
Utah, legal considerations, 1:323
Utopia (More), 2:829, 829
Utraquists, 1:284
Utrecht Jansenists, 1:538
Užhorod, Union of (1646), 1:292

V

Vacant sees, 1:406
Vachon, Louis-Albert (Card.), 1:69
Vajrayāna, 1:159, 172, 175, 177
Valdés, Juan de, 1:35
Valdés, José Olallo, Bl., 2:1071
Valdina, John, 1:250
Valerga, Joseph (Msgr.), 2:580
Valerian (emperor of Rome), 1:267
Valeriano Relation (Our Lady of Guadalupe), 1:508
Valla, Lorenzo, 1:415
Valle, Giulia Nemesia, Bl., 2:1071–1072
Values, personalism and, 2:895
Valvano, Melvin (Abbot), 2:812
Van Lieshout, Eustáquio, Bl., 2:1072–1073
Van Orden v. Perry (2005), 1:338 van Steenberghen, Fernand, 1:341
Vanier, Jean, 1:67, 2:1073, 1073–1075
Vanoni, Ezio, 1:399
Varacalli, Joseph A., 2:1018
Vargas, Alonso de (Father), 2:573
Vargas González, Jorge, 1:50
Vargas González, Ramón, 1:50
Variara, Luigi, Bl., 2:1075
Vascanelles, Ferraria v. (1860), 1:327
Vásquez de Herrera, Francisco, 1:135
Vatican. See Holy See; Papacy
Vatican Archives: An Inventory and Guide to Historical Documents of the Holy See (Blouin), 1:211
Vatican City, creation of, 1:301
Vatican Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews, 1:91

Vatican Council I (1869–1870), 1:102, 221, 301, 304
Vatican Council II (1962–1965)
aggiornamento concept, 1:23–24, 306–307
anti-Semitism repudiation, 1:59, 61, 307, 2:582–584, 600, 604
on atomic weapons, 1:80
Benedict XVI involvement, 1:115
on Catholic education, 1:428, 432, 444, 2:692
Catholic-Muslim dialogue, 1:230–231, 232, 233
on celibacy, 1:242
on charisms, 1:256–257
on civilian targets, 1:75
clerical celibacy and marriage, 1:250
on communion of saints, 1:353–354 on continuity of the Church, 1:116
devotion to Mary, 2:763
on dioceses, 1:405
Eastern Europe participation, 1:347
Ecclesia de Eucharistia and, 1:425
on economics, 2:716
heresy and, 1:540, 541
on holiness, 1:258
Legion of Mary and, 1:419–420
on liturgy, 1:307, 423
luminous mysteries and, 2:678
Marian doctrine ecumenism, 2:774–775
Marian scriptural references, 2:717
Mary as coredemptrix, 2:748, 753
on political participation, 2:638
on redemption, 2:933, 947
on religious freedom, 1:87
on salvation, 2:974
on secularism, 2:981
seminary development, 2:986
on sister churches, 2:1003
on slavery, 2:1008–1009
on social communication, 1:307
spiritual maternity of Mary, 2:756–757
Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre influence, 2:1057
theology of Hell and, 1:521–522
theology of Mary and, 2:732, 735, 736–737, 738–739, 741
Willebrands, Johannes work, 2:1086
World Council of Churches and, 1:305
Vatican Information Service, 2:850, 1094
The Vatican Kingdom (Curci), 1:381
Vatican Library, 1:211
Vatican Radio, 2:697–698
Vatican Secret Archives, 1:60–61
Vatican (Web site), 1:5
Il Vaticano Regio (Curci), 1:381
Vaux, Laurence, 1:219
Vedism, 1:159
Vegetative state, life support care, 1:28
Vehementer nos (encyclical, Pius X), 1:418–419
Velitchkovsky, Paissy, 2:820
Venerable, as title, 1:108, 196, 197
Veneration. See Cult
Venerini, Rose, St., 1:463, 2:1075–1076
Venerini Sisters, 2:1076–1077
Venezuela, Christian democratic movements, 1:397
Venial sins, 2:994, 1000–1001
Vera López, Raúl (Bp.), 1:393
Verdict on the Three Chapters (Vigilius), 1:271
Verità della fede (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:33
Veritatis splendor (encyclical, John Paul II) moral relativism, 1:308
sin, 2:1001
slavery, 2:1008–1009
theology, 2:952
virtue, 1:205, 206, 207
Vermeersch, Arthur, 1:505
Verner, Sherbert v. (1963), 1:331–332, 333
Verona Fathers, 1:351, 352
Verot, Augustin (Bp.), 1:102, 220
Vers l'armée de métier (de Gaulle), 1:390
Versella, Francesco, 1:436
Vestry Act of 1704, 1:314
Veuster, Joseph de (Fr. Damien), St., 1:198, 370, 2:966, 1077, 1077–1079
Vianney, Jean-Baptiste-Marie, St., 1:310
Vicar general position, 1:406
Vicariates, parishes grouped into, 1:405
Vicarious moral satisfaction theory, 2:944–945
Vices vs. sin, 2:996, 998
Vico, Antonio (Card.), 1:382
Victor, Jesus Christ as, 2:932, 937, 943
Victor Emmanuel II (king of Italy), 2:1037, 1054
Victor Emmanuel III (king of Italy), 2:1095
Victor I (Pope), 1:266
Videmari, Marina, 1:137
Vienna, Congress of (1814–1815), 1:62, 298, 299, 2:1036
Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations (1961), 1:62
Vietnam, 1:174, 174–175, 359–360
Vietnam War (1957–1975), conscientious objectors, 1:329–330
Vigilius (Pope), 1:271, 364
Vigne, Peter, Bl., 2:1079
Viking invasions, 1:276
Villot, Jean (Card.), 1:371
Vinaya (Buddhism), 1:164
Vincent, Widmar v. (1981), 1:333
Vincent de Paul, St., 1:133, 292, 2:983
Vincentians, 1:302, 2:984, 985
Vindiciae alfonsianae (Redemptorists), 1:34
Violation of sacred species, as excommunicable offense, 1:449
Virgin Birth
Mary-Church parallelism, 2:741–742, 743–744
synoptic Gospels on, 2:719–720, 721, 722, 723, 724–725, 730
Virgin Mary. See entries beginning with Mary, Blessed Virgin
Virginia, 1:54, 313–314, 320, 2:1013–1014
Virginia, University of, 1:333–334
Virginia Bill for Establishing Religious Freedom, 1:320
Virginia Company Charter (1606), 1:313
Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776), 1:320
Virginity, 1:242, 243, 248
See also Mary, Blessed Virgin, virginity of Virtues

confessors of the faith and, 2:967 gravity of sins and, 2:998–999
interconnection of sins and, 2:998
of Mary, 2:734–736 theological, 2:735, 967
See also Cardinal virtues
Vishinsky, Andrei, 1:345
Visintainer, Amabile Lucia, St., 2:1079–1080
Visita al SS. Sacramento (Alphonsus de Liguori), 1:32
Visuddhimagga (ancient text), 1:164
Vitale, Engel v. (1962), 1:335
Vitchev, Kamen, Bl., 1:149, 262, 413, 2:1080–1081
Vithayathil, Varkey (Card.), 1:439, 2:1062
Vitoria, Francisco de, 2:1013
Vocalism, 2:860, 861
Voderholzer, Rudolf, 2:951
Voidness (Buddhism), 1:162
Voisin, Albert, 1:109, 110
Voisin, Fernande, 1:109, 110
Voisin, Gilberte, 1:109, 110, 111
Voisin, Hector, 1:109, 111
Voisin, Marie Louise, 1:109, 111
Volokolamsky, Joseph, St., 2:820
Volpicelli, Caterina, St., 2:1081–1082
Vorgrimler, Herbert, 1:116
Voting rights, anti-Catholicism and, 1:54, 55
Voucher systems, constitutionality of, 1:337
Vrba, Rudolf, 1:89
Vulgate, Latin, 1:188

W

Waldeck-Rousseau, Pierre, 1:416, 418
Waldenses, 1:225, 281, 534–535
Waldheim, Kurt, 2:591, 1083–1085
Wall of separation standard, 1:334–335, 336–337, 337
See also Separation of church and state
Wallace v. Jaffree (1985), 1:335
Walter, Wolman v. (1977), 1:337
Walz v. Tax Commission (1970), 1:336
War. See specific wars
War of the ways (philosophy), 2:862
Ward, Nathaniel, 1:315
Warren, Earl, 1:331
Wars of Religion (1562–1598), 1:292, 2:844
Warsaw Pact, 1:358
Was dürfen wir hoffen? (Balthasar), 1:522–523
Washington, George, 1:43
Washington Department of Services for the Blind, Witters v. (1986), 1:337
Washington Post, 1:68
Watchtower (magazine), 1:330
Watkins, Torcaso v. (1961), 1:320, 335
Watson v. Jones (1871), 1:326, 327
The Way (Escrivá de Balaguer y Albás), 1:437
We Remember: A Reflection on the Shoah (Vatican Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews), 1:91, 2:584, 589
Weakland, Rembert (Abbot), 2:812
Weapons, atomic. See Atomic weapons
Wegestreit period, 2:862
Wegner, Nicholas (Msgr.), 1:154
Weigel, George, 1:75, 83, 566, 567
Weisman, Lee v. (1992), 1:335
Welfare state, liberalism and, 2:666
Welsh v. United States (1970), 1:330
Werner, Frances, 2:784
West Virginia, flag saluting case, 1:330
West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (1943), 1:330
Western Schism (1378–1417), 1:112–114, 284–285, 491
Western Wall (Jerusalem), 2:591, 593, 594, 617, 883
Westminster Confession of Faith, 1:315
Westphalia, Peace of (1648), 1:292
Wetter, Friedrich (Card.), 2:845
Wheel of the Law (Buddhism), 1:159
Wheelwright, John, 1:315
Whitaker, William, 2:655
Whitby, Synod of (664), 1:274
White Monks. See Cistercians
Whitgift, John, 2:655–656
Why the Church? (Giussani), 1:496–497
Widenfeldt, Adam, 2:761
Widmar v. Vincent (1981), 1:333
Wiecka, Marta Maria, Bl., 2:1085
Wiener, Oded (Rabbi), 2:595
Wilhelm II (emperor of Germany), 2:1090
Wilkerson, David, 1:258
Wilkinson, Cutter v. (2005), 1:338
Will, 1:205, 402, 2:999
See also Free will
Willebrands, Johannes (Card.), 2:879, 1085–1087, 1086
William I (king of the Netherlands), 1:95
William III (king of England), 1:316, 317
William of Ockham, 1:283, 2:861–862
Williams, Roger, 1:315, 316, 319
Williams, Rowan (Abp. of Canterbury), 1:52
Williamson, Richard (Bp.), 1:119, 424
Willibrord (missionary), 1:274
Wilson, Burstyn v. (1952), 2:664
Wilson, Ian, 2:990
Wilson, William A., 1:308
Wilson, Woodrow, 1:440, 2:657–658, 666, 1088, 1090–1091
Wilson v. Pres. Church of John's Island (1836), 1:326
Winebrenner v. Colder (1862), 1:327
Winnebago people, afterlife views, 1:12
Winthrop, John, 1:315
Wireless telegraphy, 2:697–698
Wisconsin, 1:323, 324, 332, 431
Wisconsin v. Yoder (1972), 1:332, 333
Wisdom, as charism, 1:255
Wisdom, Book of, afterlife views, 1:20
With Deep Anxiety (encyclical, Pius XI). See Mit brennender Sorge (encyclical, Pius XI)
With God in Russia (Ciszek), 1:340
Witness to Our Good Will (apostolic letter, Leo XIII), 1:46, 48, 49

Witters v. Washington Department of Services for the Blind (1986), 1:337
Witzel, Georg, 1:218
Wives, of clerics, 1:246–247
Wohnout, Helmut, 1:398
Wojtyła, Karol (Card.). See John Paul II (Pope)
Wolcott, Oliver, Jr., 1:318
Wolf, Jones v. (1979), 1:331
Wolff, Karl, 1:547
Wolff, Madeleva (Sister), 1:427, 551
Wolman v. Walter (1977), 1:337
Wolsey, Thomas, 1:2, 2:826
Woman, symbolism of, 2:725, 726
Woman Associated to Priestly Zeal (Alberione), 1:24
Women, symbolism of, 2:727, 729
Women's education, 1:427
Wŏnhyo (scholar), 1:172–173
Woods, Julian Tenison (Father), 2:691
Woodward, Kenneth, 1:380
Words of Institution, during consecration, 1:8, 9, 2:644
Worker Sisters of the Holy House of Nazareth, Congregation of, 2:1051
World Conference on Charity (2006), 1:373
World Conference on Women (1995), 1:442
World Council of Churches, 1:305
World Fellowship of Buddhists, 1:179
World Parliament of Religions (1893), 1:178
World War I (1914–1918), 2:1087–1092, 1088
  battle of Jerusalem, 1:25
  Benedict XV and, 1:260, 440, 2:1088, 1088–1092
  Charles I involvement, 1:260
  conscientious objectors, 1:329
  de Gaulle, Charles leadership, 1:390
  fascism and, 1:452
  Hitler, Adolf involvement, 1:544
  Italian involvement, 1:388
  Jewish history and, 2:615, 616
  Knights of Columbus activism, 2:646–647
  liberalism and, 2:666
  Longhin, Andrew involvement, 2:675
  papacy and, 2:656–657, 1087–1092, 1088
  protesters, 1:237
World War II (1939–1945), 2:1092–1096, 1093
  apostolic delegates, 1:64
  atomic bomb use, 1:74, 77–78, 79
  Christian democratic movements and, 1:398–399
  de Gaulle, Charles leadership, 1:390
  Franco, Francisco leadership, 1:482–483
  Istria struggle, 1:146
  Kennedy family and, 2:641
  Mussolini, Benito and, 2:837
  Pius XII and, 1:343–344, 440–441, 2:906–908, 1092–1096
  Salazar, António de Oliveira and, 2:970
  Stalin, Josef leadership, 2:1028
  Waldheim, Kurt involvement, 2:1083–1084
  See also Holocaust (Shoah)
World Youth Day, 1:118, 309, 310
Worms, Concordat of (1122), 1:277
The Wounded Healer (Nouwen), 2:865
Wyclif, John, 1:283, 284, 535
Wyoming, Blaine Amendment-like provisions, 1:323
Wyszynski, Stefan, 1:347

X

Xavier, Francis, St., 1:293
Ximénez de Cisneros, Francisco (Card.), 1:289
Xuanzang (translator), 1:165

Y

Yad Vashem (memorial), 1:91, 308, 2:590
Yamaguchi, Japan, martyrs from, 2:898
Yasovarman I (king of Cambodia), 1:177
Yatushiro, Japan, martyrs from, 2:898
Year for Priests (2009–2010), 1:310
Year of Mary (1987–1988), 2:768
Yeltsin, Boris, 1:144
Yemen, Arab-Israeli conflict and, 2:617
Yi dynasty, Buddhism and, 1:173
Yijing (monk), 1:174
Yoder, Wisconsin v. (1972), 1:332, 333
Yogācāra, 1:162
Yom HaShoah concert (1994), 2:585
Yom Kippur War (1973), 2:619
Yonezawa, Japan, martyrs from, 2:900
York, Convocation of (1357), 1:217
Young Italy, 2:781
Youth for Christ (CFC), 1:239
Ysho'yahb I (Patriarch), 1:8
Yugoslavia, 1:345, 346, 347, 358, 2:819

Z

Zaccaria, Antonio María, St., 1:289
Zahm, John, 2:796
Zarathustra, 1:19
Zatti, Artemide, Bl., 2:1097–1098
Zechariah, 2:721, 919–920
Zegrí y Moreno, Juan Nepomuceno, Bl., 2:1098
Zeigler, Mark, 2:1073
Zelman v. Simmons-Harris (2002), 1:337
Zen Buddhism, 1:168
  See also Buddhism
Zeno (Byzantine emperor), 1:271, 364
Zephaniah, prophecy of, 2:722
Zhixu, Ouyi, 1:166
Zhiyi (Buddhist thinker), 1:165
Zibo Zhenke, 1:166
Zini, Celestino (Abp. of Sienna), 1:241, 242
Zinoviev, Gregory, 1:144
Zionism, papacy and, 2:877–879
  See also Israel
Zita of Bourbon-Parma, 1:260
Zobrest v. Catalina Hills School District (1993), 1:337
Zola, Émile, 1:416
Zongmi (monk), 1:173
Zorach v. Clauson (1952), 1:335
Zoroastrianism, afterlife views, 1:19
Zubieta, Ramon (Bp.), 1:71
Zumárraga, Juan de (Bp.), 1:508
Zwingli, Ulrich, 1:287, 537